

BOUND BY
MEISTER & SMETHIE
105-107 GOVERNOR ST.
RICHMOND, VA.

Digitized by the Internet Archive in 2022 with funding from Kahle/Austin Foundation

https://archive.org/details/southernchurchma0100rich

DESIGNED FOR THE PROMOTION OF PRACTICAL PIETY. THE DIFFUSION OF RELIGIOUS AND GENERAL INTELLIGENCE, AND THE MAINTENANCE OF THE PRINCIPLES OF THE PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL CHURCH

Southern Churchman

Vol. 100. RICHMOND, VA., JANUARY 5, 1935. No. 1.

1835 1935

ANNIVERSARY NUMBER

100 YEARS OF CONTINUOUS PUBLICATION

THE EPIPHANY.

SOWING THE SEED FOR ONE HUNDRED YEARS

Dear Southern Churchman:

So you are to keep your Centennial. One hundred years of service as a Church Family Newspaper, which long before the Civil War went into thousands of homes South and North! What a medium of holy inspirations has the old-young journal been through the changing years! You synchronize with the valiant determination to conserve what was deepest, richest and eternal in the Evangelical School. Impressive names and personalities arise out of the past: W. H. Wilmer, William Meade, William Sparrow, John Johns, Francis Whittle, Alfred Randolph, D. F. Sprigg, Joshua Peterkin and his apostolic son, the two Joseph Packards, of gracious memory, Beverley Tucker and the boys who under his roof learned to follow the gleam. These are just a few there is room to name.

Your life began, too, with the rise in 1835 of the modern missionary movement of this Church, and none but God knows into how many young hearts your voice dropped the seed that led to a missionary vocation. Then, through all these years you have laid stress upon personal devotion. You have stood for belief in the whole gospel of Christ, and the sweet and reasonable cultus of the Prayer Book, that book which has grown to be what it is through the Christian experience of so many millions.

Your paper has been taken in our family without a break ever since it was founded, and I have known every editor for sixty years. Like a character in Shakespeare, "For several virtues I have loved several women," but nothing that I have learned from other books or journals has ever dimmed my appreciation of a paper, so many of whose children have cause today to rise up and call it blessed.

ARTHUR B. KINSOLVING

Baltimore, Md.

THOUGHTS for the THOUGHTFUL

"Endless the songs ye sing,
Ye choirs ethereal.
Still let the planets ring
Praises imperial!"

The life He lived has never been assailed,
Nor any precept as He lived it, yet
Has ever failed.
—T. Lindsay.

"Ye who now will bless the poor,
Shall yourselves find blessing."

"Give me health and a day," says Emerson, "and I will make the pomp of emperors ridiculous."

Our incense is the worship, which
We offer day by day;
Our gold is service done for those
Who meet us on our way;
Our myrrh is penitence sincere,
And sorrow for our sins;
An offering unto God, which grace
And pardon wins.
—F. G. Plummer.

He chose this way, it may have been
That those poor mothers everywhere,
Whose babies in the world's great inn
Find scanty cradle-room and fare,
As did the Babe of Bethlehem,
May find somewhat to comfort them.
—M. R. Smith.

"The final test of religion is not religiousness, but Love . . . not what I have done, not what I have believed, not what I have achieved, but how I have discharged the common charities of life.—Henry Drummond.

The best the wise men had to give was not their gold, but themselves. The best we have to give is ourselves. What Jesus did with the gold, the frankincense and the myrrh we are left to guess. Holman Hunt pictures Mary handling these priceless gifts years after in the carpenter shop at Nazareth. We do not know. What He does with the gift of life, however, we do know. One who had given his all to Christ said, "I know that He is able to keep that which I have committed unto Him". That gift of life Christ will receive, and thanks be to His name, He will keep forever and forever.—Ex.

Here is a very pleasing definition from "Hare's Guesses at Truth", an old favorite—"a Christian is God Almighty's gentleman". See that you "adorn the doctrines". Graces are as important as gifts.

Small service is true service while it lasts;
Of humblest friends, bright creatures, scorn not one.
The daisy, by the shadow which it casts,
Protects the lingering dewdrop from the sun.
—Wordsworth.

Because in tender majesty
Thou cam'st to earth, nor stayed till we,
Poor sinners, stumbled up to Thee,
I thank my God.

Because the Saviour of us all
Lay with the cattle in the stall,
Because the great comes to the small,
I thank my God.
—G. A. Studdert-Kennedy.

The pagan man is the man whose standard of right does not extend beyond his own interests; and the pagan state is the state whose standard of right does not extend beyond its own interests.—Benjamin Kidd.

To the calmly gathered thought
The innermost of truth is taught,
The mystery dimly understood,
That love of God is love of good,
And chiefly its divinest trace
In Him of Nazareth's holy face;
That to be saved is only this—
Salvation from our selfishness,
From sin itself, and not the pain
That warns us of its chafing chain.
—Whittier.

We should ask ourselves whether anywhere except in Christ can be found the power which will overcome the hatred of nations and classes and individuals. The Christmas Saviour pronounced a special benediction on the peacemakers. His blessing rests upon all endeavors which make for the harmonizing of our discords. To every Christian comes the call to show in all the relations of life that love "which is the very bond of peace and of all virtues".—Canadian Churchman.

The great men are those who have done everything thoroughly and who have never despised anything, however small, of God's making.—Ruskin.

If we first give our own selves to the Lord, then shall we also freely give Him all things. Though all the silver and gold and the cattle upon a thousand hills are the Lord's, yet He has committed these in trust into our hands and we are to administer them as His trustees. This is a high honor He has bestowed upon us, and we should regard and administer it in the spirit of loyalty and love.—Exchange.

Life is a splendid gift. There is nothing small in it. For the greatest things grow by God's law out of the smallest. But to live your life, you must discipline it. You must not fritter it away in "fair purpose, erring act, inconstant will"; but must make your thoughts, your words, your acts, all work to the same end, and that end not yourself, but God. That is what we call Character.—Florence Nightingale.

Personal Notes

The Rev. J. Haller Gibboney, rector of St. John's Church, Tappahannock, Va., has tendered his resignation on account of ill health and will retire to his old home in Wytheville, Va.

CONTENTS

	Page.
Thoughts for the Thoughtful	3
Personal Notes	3
In the Years to Come—Rt. Rev. H. St. George Tucker, D. D.	4
Editorials	5
The Editors of the Southern Churchman	6
The Thousandfold Page—F. W. Neve	11
Kind Words That Help—From the Bishops	12
Christ and the Disciple	14
1835 and Before—The Rev. George McLaren Brydon, D. D.	16
Epiphany Sunday—W. E. Callender	17
Church Intelligence	18
Southern Churchman—News in Retrospect	19
Family Department	20
Children's Department	22

After ten years of service, Prof. Henry N. Ogden, of Utica, resigned as chairman of the Central New York Diocesan Department of Religious Education, and has been succeeded by the Rev. Walter M. Higley, rector of All Saints' Church, Johnson City.

CLERICAL CHANGES.

The Rev. Dudley D. Zuver, aassistant at Christ Church, Short Hills, N. J., resigned as of October 1.

The Rev. Henry A. Link,, rector of Trinity Church, Bayonne, N. J., since 1927, resigned as of December 1.

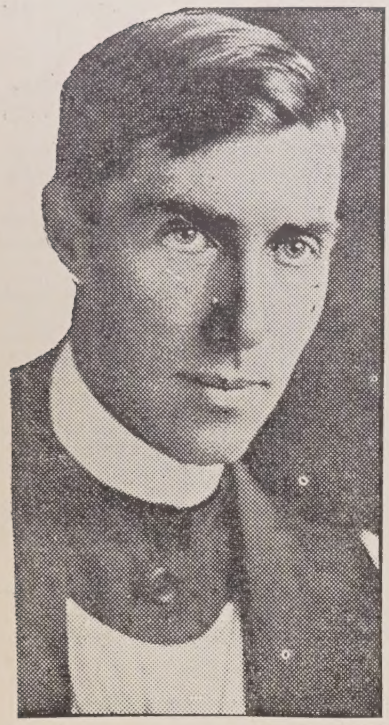
The Rev. Richard W. Baxter, vicar of St. Mark's Church, Phelps Manor, N. J., resigned on January 1.

The Rev. George F. Collard, assistant at Christ Church, Hackensack, N. J., will leave his work at Hackensack in January to become vicar of St. Mark's, Phelps Manor, and Grace, East Rutherford, N. J.

The Rev. Oran Zaebst, assistant at Trinity Cathedral, Newark, has resigned his curacy and has accepted the call to the Church of St. John the Divine, Hasbrouck Heights. Both took effect January 1.

RESIGNATIONS.

The Rev. William J. Wilkie, one of the widely known clergy of the Protestant Episcopal Church in this diocese and for the past seventeen years in charge of the Church of the Holy Trinity, Lansdale, and Emmanuel Church, Quakertown, has announced his resignation to take effect December 30. Mr. Wilkie, who is in his seventy-eighth year, is resigning to go on the retired list after an active ministry of more than fifty-three years.



Mr. Wilkie was born in New York City, July 24, 1857, and is a graduate of the old College of the City of New York and of the General Theological Seminary in that city. He was ordained to the diaconate in 1881. Until 1888 he was Master at St. John's School, Manlius, N. Y. For a time he served as rector of Grace Church, Guilford, N. Y., and for five years was headmaster of Selwyn School, Reading, Pa., after which he was in charge of St. Anne's Church, Middletown, Del. Before coming to the diocese of Pennsylvania to take charge at Lansdale and Quakertown, Mr. Wilkie was in charge of Grace Church and Emmanuel Church, Fleischman, N. Y. While in Delaware, Mr. Wilkie was a member of the Standing Committee of that diocese and also served as a deputy to the General Convention from the Delaware diocese. Mr. Wilkie will make his home in Jenkintown.

DEATHS.

Burial services for the Rev. William Booth Guion, chaplain of Christ Church Hospital, Philadelphia, were held in the chapel of the hospital, the Rt. Rev. Francis M. Taitt, Bishop of the Diocese, and the Rev. Dr. Louis C. Washburn, rector of Old Christ Church, officiating. Mr. Guion, who had been chaplain for the past three years, died suddenly on Thursday, December 27, from a heart attack. He was in his seventy-ninth year. Interment was in the family lot in Brooklyn.

Mr. Guion was born in Brooklyn, November 20, 1856. He was a graduate of St. Stephen's College and the General Theological Seminary. His first work was as a member of the staff of the City Mission, of Minneapolis. In succession he served as rector of St. Luke's Church, New York City; Trinity Church, New Orleans; St. Mary's, Pocomoke City, Md.; St. Matthew's Cathedral, Dallas, Texas; Grace Church, Galesburg, Ill. Before coming to Philadelphia he was at Trinity Church, Pottsville, Pa.

In the Years to Come

BISHOP H. ST. GEORGE TUCKER

Anniversaries furnish ground both for felicitations and for questionings. If the principle of the survival of the fittest be valid, a paper which, like the Southern Churchman, reaches its one hundredth anniversary deserves to be congratulated on the useful service that it has rendered. If it had not during such an era of change as the past century been successfully meeting a real need, it would long ago have passed out of existence.

Survival value in the past, however, does not necessarily ensure continued usefulness for the future. Where this is lacking the feclicitations called forth by an anniversary represent nothing more than the world's polite way of burying its dead. The editors of the Southern Churchman are aware of this danger. The purpose of this centennial number is not to appeal for future support on the ground of past services. We do believe, however, that the record of the past hundred years, as presented in this number, constitutes a claim for consideration of the question whether the paper cannot be made equally useful in the years to come. What we ask of those who recognize the need for a religious journal is that they will give the Southern Churchman the opportunity to prove that it can fill this need.

We realize that if the Southern Churchman is to meet the needs of the present religious situation, substantial improvement will be necessary. Karl Marx's dictum that every social problem is at bottom a financial problem has an element of truth in it, so far as Church papers are concerned. The improvement, both in quantity and quality, that we hope to make in the Southern Churchman, depends in some measure at least upon more adequate financial resources. These can be secured only through an increase in the number of subscribers. Every new subscriber will not only extend the range of the paper's influence, but will help to make it more worth reading.

The aim of the Southern Churchman is week by week to help the Church make explicit all that is implicit in the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ. This necessarily involves helping to promote the practical work of the Church. He that willeth to do the will of God shall know of the doctrine. Each new age inevitably asks of Christ, "Art Thou He that should come or look we for another?" The answer to the question is found primarily not in some new elaboration of doctrine, but in the demonstration that through the Church Christ is still meeting the needs of man. Church papers can help by bringing to their readers the news of Christian activity throughout the world.

We believe also that the Southern Churchman can be useful by helping to arouse interest in our Lord's command, "Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature."

The missionary work of the Church is not only an obligation, but it is a means by which our own spiritual welfare is promoted and the ideal of catholicity is realized. This applies not only to what is called foreign missionary work, but equally to the efforts which are made in behalf of the under-privileged and the un-evangelized in our own country. We hope also to be helpful in carrying out another of our Lord's commands, "Suffer the little children to come unto me." One department of the Southern Churchman is devoted entirely to presenting religious news and instruction suitable for young people. Our ambition is to make the paper of real value and interest to every member of the family, young and old.

The one purpose of those who are responsible for the publication of the Southern Churchman is to aid in the upbuilding of Christ's Kingdom. It has no official connection with any ecclesiastical organization. It is not the organ of any party and it endeavors not to be prejudicial or partisan in its presentation of Christian truth. Its only obligation is one of loyalty to the doctrine, discipline and worship of the Protestant Episcopal Church. This loyalty, we believe, is thoroughly compatible with a sympathetic attitude towards other branches of Christ's Church. Indeed it involves the obligation to use every effort to promote the cause of Christian unity. Holding firmly to this purpose, we pray for God's help and guidance during the years that lie ahead.

We are grateful to those who have helped us in the past and we venture to request the cooperation of those who sympathize with our purpose and who believe as we do that the Southern Churchman may become an increasingly useful means to its realization.

H. St. G. Tucker.

* * *

A CALL OF GOD.

Another year is but another call of God
To do some deed undone and only we forgot;
To think some wider thought of man and good;
To see and love with kindlier eye and warmer heart,
Until, acquainted more with Him, and keener eyed
To sense the need of man, we serve
With larger sacrifice and readier hand our kind.
What shall I ask for the coming year;
What shall my watchword be?
What wouldst Thou do for me, dear Lord,
What can I do for Thee?

Lord, I would ask for a year divine,
Transfigured from above,
Till all the days like heaven's heights
Shine with Thy light and love.

SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN

Catholic for every truth of God; Protestant against every error of man.

EDITORIALS

Vol. 100. RICHMOND, VA., JANUARY 5, 1935. No. 1.

One Hundred Years Old.

We are one hundred years old with this issue. One hundred years is a long time in the history of our Church in America—old as we like to think ourselves. We have only had bishops in this country fifty years longer than this paper has been alive, and while Jamestown and 1607 still are farther from the war of the revolution than we are today, the real and vital strength of our Church dates from a time nearer 1835 than any date before that time.

Names like Bishop Channing Moore seem to us today as far away names, and yet Bishop Moore was the Bishop of Virginia when The Southern Churchman was born. Bishop Meade had only been consecrated "Assistant" Bishop of Virginia five years before and Bishop Moore was to live seven years longer. Both men were leaders in the national Church and both saw that a revival was needed if our Church of ancient heritage was to live.

We like to think that we were a part of the revival that did come. We were born approximately at the time the Domestic and Foreign Missionary Society was born, and always The Southern Churchman has been the friend of missions and missionaries. We were born at a time when men still were provincial in their thinking, and yet the golden opportunities of the new West were visible. The South was mainly agricultural and depended to a great degree upon the institution of slavery. The Southern Churchman, following the example of the great Bishop Meade, felt that institution wrong and un-Christian, and did not hesitate to say so. Later when the issue became a burning political one, the editors pleaded for peaceful ways of abolishing what had been foisted on the South by greedy men. Today her editors of that time are proved right, and popular books call the horrible conflict that ensued "the needless war".

The Southern Churchman could hardly have called herself a "national Church paper for all the family" in those early days, for she was local in the extreme and was meant to serve the South. But she always was a paper for "all the family," and she unblushingly championed the Evangelical doctrines as exemplified in the "Great Awakening". If the Oxford Movement seemed to gain little foothold where The Southern Churchman was read, it was not because she opposed that movement as much as the fact that men knew an awakening had already taken place that stirred their hearts and minds. Modern historians often forget that men of the caliber of Bishop Meade were not the hound-riding, indifferent low churchmen pictured by the Tractarians, but were men who loved the Church to which they owed allegiance, but loved the whole-hearted consecration of souls converted to Jesus Christ as Saviour even more.

The Southern Churchman has always been published in Virginia and the stamp and mark of that sturdy zeal that sent out so many missionaries and that strong and yet sane piety has been a part of her tradition. Virginia had and has a greet contribution to make to the Church as a whole, and those unthinking souls who casually say, "low and lazy" hardly know the truth about the Evangelical tradition which has spread throughout the world. Reality in worship was always greater than form or ceremony.

A story—it may be apochryphal—about another of those sturdy Evangelical souls well illustrates the true temperament which they sought to send forth in this paper. Bishop Francis Whittle was officiating at a certain small town church. The usual buzzing ladies interrupted him as he put on his gown by reminding him that certain Presbyterians, Methodists and even Baptists would be present and urged him to be sure to invite them to the Holy Communion. Bishop Whittle replied that he would make a note of what they said. At the appropriate time, the good Bishop, coming to the front of the chancel said, "I understand there are Presbyterians with us today. I hope none of them will come to the Communion. I am told there are certain Methodists and even some Baptists present. I trust none of them will come to the Communion. I presume there are some Episcopalians present. I would not care to have them come to the Communion. BUT, (and the Bishop's voice rang out), All ye who do truly and earnestly repent you of your sins are most warmly urged not to neglect the Sacrament of the Body and Blood of Our Lord."

That was a lesson never forgotten. It was a lesson in the best type of doctrine of the school to which he belonged. There was only one test and that test was not along lines of names, but along lines of sincerity and reality.

In one hundred years The Southern Churchman has had many ups and downs financially and spiritually. Some editors have been strong, some have been weak. Some have been a bit narrow and some have even been considered too broad. But all have had sincerity, and it is the hope and prayer of the present editorial staff that as we begin another one hundred years of service to the nation and Church, we may have the reality of sincerity and truth and dare to stand always for what we believe true. If we do that, we will live up to the great traditions that have been built for us through the years.

The Editors of the Southern Churchman

In celebrating the centennial of the Southern Churchman, our attention is first attracted to the men who have shaped its policy and guided its destinies through the century.

The paper was started as a private venture by the Rev. William Fitzhugh Lee, son of Mr. Edmund I. Lee of Alexandria. He had graduated from the Virginia Theological Seminary a few years before, but ill health had compelled him to give up active work. From the beginning he had for his paper the backing of the Seminary. In fact, there are reasons to believe that that Institution had more than a passing interest in the development of the Southern Churchman. Certainly, the happenings on "the Hill" were chronicled with much more detail than was the case in later years.

REV. WILLIAM F. LEE,
The Founder and First Editor of the Southern Churchman, 1835-1837.

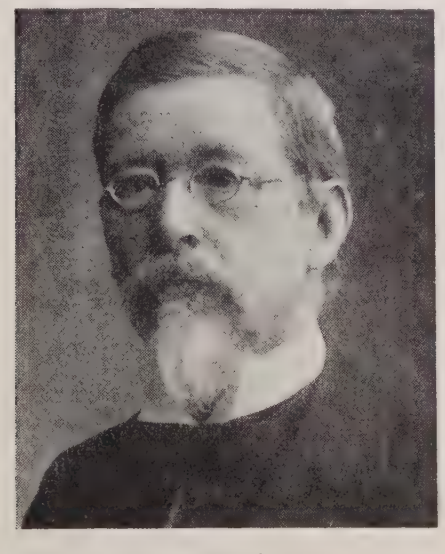
Mr. Lee had circulated a prospectus explaining his motives in publishing a religious journal. So far as is known there is no copy of this pamphlet extant, but we read, however, in a subsequent editorial that the purposes for which the Southern Churchman was established were "The promotion of practical piety, the diffusion of religious and general intelligence, and the maintenance of the distinctive principles of the Protestant Episcopal Church."



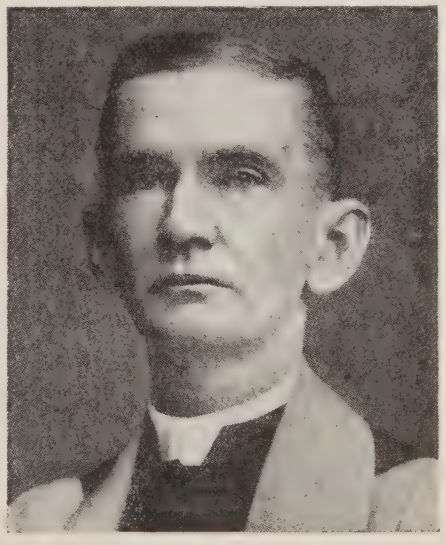
In looking over the first number of the paper, we are immediately struck with the amount of space given to missionary news, not only of the Episcopal but of all Churches. The death of the great William Carey is noticed; items from English Church papers are often copied. The Spirit of Missions, itself only a few years old, contributed largely to this number, the editor searched far and wide for material to make his paper interesting and, it must be confessed, considered his scissors mightier than his pen, and used them constantly in his editorial work. From the beginning he tried to make his readers "missionary-minded," as we say today. That he succeeded is evident. Many letters from missionaries appeared, and increasingly news from foreign lands was printed, as the work of the Church spread. The paper was widely circulated. In an early number we find a protest from a reader against the word "Southern" in its name, as this would seem to imply that its influence and circulation were sectional rather than general.

Bishop Meade gave his whole-hearted support to the Southern Churchman. In early numbers he contributed many articles and some of his sermons. He counselled the editor to present each week some article or story which would be suitable for reading aloud to children and servants. He himself furnished the first of these, a dialogue between two servants as to the validity of the conversion of one of them. If either "Sambo" or "Toney" could have understood a word which was put in their mouths by the good Bishop, he was indeed an exceptional servant.

Mr. Lee, suffering from tuberculosis, soon had to leave Richmond, where he had been publishing the Churchman and go to his father's home in Alexandria.

He moved his office with him and was able to continue his work up to the time of his death in May, 1837. The writer of his obituary in the Southern Churchman says of him: "His popularity as a preacher of the Gospel rendered him universally acceptable. His zeal in the discharge of his sacred duties was of the first order. He possessed a mind of the most vigorous character and a spirit of Gospel industry seldom equalled. He was a firm and decided Episcopalian, but at the same time lived in peace and friendship with other denominations of Christians."

After an interim of a few months the Rev. Zacha



Rev. Dr. Francis Sprigg, 1855-1899.

riah Mead became editor, which office he held until 1843. That he had his doubts about undertaking the work is shown by the following quotation from his first editorial. "The advice was not without a plausible reason which a Right Reverend friend gave to one who had solicited it in relation to his acceptance of the editorship of a religious periodical: 'My dear Sir,' said he, 'if you do not wish to ruin your soul forever, let it alone'."

Mr. Mead inaugurated a "Junior Department". We can early see the hand of Mrs. Editor in the selections chosen for the children, but no record has been kept on earth of the faithful work of the women who have contributed so largely to the success of this feature of the Southern Churchman. Even so, the "poems" chosen to head the column left much to be desired from our present-day point of view. In 1843, Mr. Mead gave up the paper. As there are no numbers for this year in the files to which we have access, we are unable to give the reason for his resignation.

As the paper had been published in Alexandria from the time of Mr. Lee's illness, it was not difficult to call on the professors at the Seminary to lend their aid in the struggle for existence. The editorship was now undertaken by a member of the faculty, Dr. E. R. Lippett. The influence of the Churchman was growing. We find a continued zeal for missions in its contents; many of the alumni of the Seminary who went into foreign lands turned to its columns as a medium for telling the story of their work, and enlisting the interest and aid of their friends at home. The policy of the editors of the paper seemed to be to give news rather than to develop a strong editorial column. Perhaps this were the better plan. News from foreign lands was not as common then as now; Churchmen followed with growing interest the work of the men whom they knew personally; the story was better told by their pens than from the editor's desk. Dr. Lippett was one of the "grand old men" of the Seminary's early days. But unfortunately his strength was not equal to the duties of manager as well as editor, in addition to his teaching; therefore, in March, 1848, he gave up the editorial chair. He wrote in his last number that the step was taken with regret, but was necessary because of the large amount due in subscriptions "to the establishment" which was an embarrassment he was no longer able to carry. He thought the period of his incumbency—four years—had been "fraught with the most powerful influences for evil to the Church of our affections to which, since the age of the Reformation it had been exposed." A feeling, by the way, which was expressed by each of the editors in turn in these early days. Although no financier, Dr. Lippett was a man of the highest qualities. His ministry, as parish priest, editor and professor, extended over a period of forty years. A friend wrote of him after his death: "Of highly cultivated mind, of sound judgment and kindly disposition, gentle and with gentlemanly manners and uniformly elevated Christian sentiments, to have intercourse with him was to be drawn to him." He died at the home of his son in Charles Town, West Virginia, in 1870.

A few weeks after Dr. Lippett's resignation, Bishop Meade announced in his Convention address that the continued existence of the Southern Churchman was assured, and arrangements had been made for the Rev. George A. Smith to assume the editorial chair. Mr. Smith was no stranger to Virginians. He held the proud distinction of being the first gaduate of the Virginia Seminary. Though born in England, he was brought up and partly educated in New York, attendin for a year the General Seminary in that city; he then came to Virginia and finished his theological training under Dr. Keith at William and Mary College, where the Theological Seminary of Virginia was conducted for its first year, 1823. Mr. Smith's active ministry was short. He had to resign his first charge because of some throat affection and thereafter was never able to hold any regular cure for long at a time. He opened a school for boys at "Clarens" on the Seminary Hill, but closed it in order to take charge of the Southern Churchman. He edited the paper with success until he resigned it in 1855, in order to reopen his school. For the rest of his life he stayed in or near Alexandria, helping other ministers as his health permitted. For a while after the war he would, when he was able, take the journey of one hundred and fifty miles to Amherst Courthouse to hold services. He lived until 1889. "Being the oldest alumnus of the Seminary," a writer in the Southern Churchman said of him, "he was made the president of the Alumni Association. It was one of the bright spots in his life year by year to go out to the Hill and there preside at the meeting of the Alumni—His life was his sermon, of the Grace and Power of God."

The Rev. Wm. Meade Clarke, D. D., 1898-1914.

When Mr. Smith gave up the paper, his place was filled by the Rev. D. Francis Sprigg, who continued at the editorial desk for forty-four years. During this time he exerted an influence on the Church in the South which can never be measured. His name was a household word. A native of Maryland, Dr. Sprigg came to the Virginia Seminary for his theological education and graduated in the class with Bishops Young, Lay and Whittle. He held churches in the Diocese and was considered a good preacher. His best efforts, however, were given to the paper. His style was "as a writer clear, vigorous and pointed; he wasted no words and never left a doubt as to his meaning." The story is told of a fellow minister who, knowing of Dr. Sprigg's reputation as a writer of obituaries, was heard to remark that "it added to the terrors of death to know Dr. Sprigg would write one's obituary."

Rev. E. L. Goodwin, D. D., 1914-1920.

During the trying winter of 1860-01, Dr. Sprigg kept his paper free from political discussions. In the issue of April 12, 1861, silence could no longer be maintained. He writes then: "It is with feelings painful in the extreme that we at length have to chronicle the beginning of Civil War." He reminds his readers of the duties of Christian people—"watchfulness, as times of excitement are not times of Grace"; the exercise of patience, and prayer for those in authority.

On May 24, he gives notice that the Seminary was to be closed, as the students were anxious to be at home. This is the last issue of the paper until the following November, when he began publication in Richmond, reducing the paper in size and number of pages as necessity demanded. He explains that the abrupt cessation in May was due to the occupation of Alexandria by Federal troops; and the delay in resuming publication to his expectations that the enemy would soon be driven from the city, or else the war would end. Now he is established in Richmond, and here he stayed, never failing to publish another number until the very day of the evacuation of the capital city.

We could wish that space permitted some quotations from the restrained articles which appeared during the war. As exchanges were few, the editor was put to it to fill his pages with readable matter and yet not discuss the only topic which occupied men's thoughts. In one of the first war numbers there is a prayer "slightly altered," which was suggested for use in the churches in the Confederacy. It had been written by the then Archbishop of Canterbury during the war Philip of Spain waged against Elizabeth in the sixteenth century. Dr. Sprigg recommends it as a "sublime spiritual supplication," but it also shows a familiarity on the part of the writer with the imprecatory psalms.

The summer after the end of the war saw the reappearance of the Southern Churchman which for six months at first was issued only every two weeks. Dr. Sprigg explains that his office had twice been burned, his subscription list had been lost, he had no books, and very poor mailing facilities. He started a new, "New Series, Vol. I, No. 1.", and so far as we know the Churchman has never failed to appear regularly from that day to this. He warns his readers, "the editor not being a politician and the paper being published for Church purposes, the discussion of political subjects will form no part of his plan. There is a Kingdom higher than any of the kingdoms of this world which will be in existence when the head of every earthly ruler lies low in the dust."

So, under this good man, the paper grew again from small beginnings. He had many storms to weather, but so ably did he pilot his craft that it was announced in the Council in 1880 that the Diocese, thinking it could now stand without Diocesan backing, had sold to him its interest and good will in the enterprise. The paper at this time presented the physical aspect which forms the earliest recollections of many of its readers today, a large sheet with the name in enormous letters all across the top of the first page. It presented solid reading straight through to the bottom of the last page. The earliest—and for a long time the only—illustrations were the tiny bells which appeared in the advertisement of the McShane Company and the Bell Foundry Company. Shortly before Dr. Sprigg gave up the paper, he changed its size to that of a magazine of some twenty-four pages, half the size of the former sheets.

When Dr. Sprigg found his editorial duties too heavy for his advancing year, he sold his interests and announced the change in his last issue. "With this number of the Southern Churchman," he writes, "my connection with it ceases— Its good will has been bought by the Protestant Episcopal Churchman Company, who have appointed the Rev. William Meade Clark of St. James' Church, Richmond, its editor—I have been connected with it for forty-four years. Many and great changes have occurred since then, but all in the hands of God." "Few editors," writes his successor, "wielded a stronger pen and the courage of his convictions for evangelical truth was recognized far and wide. Under him the paper grew and prospered and his services to the Church as a writer in its columns are matters of history."

Rev. W. Russell Bowie, D. D., 1920-1923.

The new company owed its existence, we are told, "to the earnest desire of many Virginia Episcopalians to perpetuate as far as possible the old Southern Churchman, so well known for its sound religion and loyalty to the doctrine, discipline and worship of the Protestant Episcopal Church."

The Rev. Mr. Clark is too well remembered by the readers of this paper to need introduction here. The son of the Rev. John T. Clark, he was reared in a country parish in Virginia. He attended the University of Virginia and graduated from the Theological Seminary of Virginia. He came to Richmond as rector of St. James' Church shortly before his election as editor of the paper, remaining at this post for nearly fifteen years, his tenure of office being second only to that of his predecessor. In addition to the work demanded by his large and growing church and his editorial work, Dr. Clark gave his services generously to the needs of the Diocese. He attended six General 1924-1927.

Rev. Joseph Dunn, D. D.

Conventions as Deputy, where his ability was called to the service of the General Church. Active to the end of his life, he was the only editor except the founder of the paper to die in office. In announcing his death in the Churchman, a friend wrote: "A Prince has fallen in Israel. The Rev. William Meade Clark, editor of the Southern Churchman, died at his home in Richmond after a long illness, and now rests from his labors. Soon after the organization of the Southern Churchman Company, Dr. Clark was appointed editor, a position he held to the day of his death. He was not a dilettante writer of idle space-fillers, but these columns always expressed the strong individual convictions of a vigorous and well-balanced mind. He avoided controversy and contented himself with the positive affirmation of essential truths and the advocacy of those things which made for the progress of the Church and the Kingdom of God. His trumpet gave forth no uncertain sound and his words had weight and power—His zeal for the cause of missions and his special interest in the work of the Church among the colored people are known to every reader of the Southern Churchman—With unclouded vision, unconquered and unafraid, he slept upon his shield."

As Dr. Clark's successor the Churchman Company chose the Rev. Edward L. Goodwin, D. D., rector of St. James' Church, Ashland, Va. He was the son of the Rev. Frederick D. Goodwin, L., and the father of the present bishop-coadjutor of Virginia. Like all the clerical editors of the Southern Churchman, Dr. Goodwin was a graduate of the Virginia Seminary. His ministry was spent in Virginia with the exception of two years when he was at Grace Church, Charleston, S. C. He was secretary and historiographer of the Diocese of Virginia for a number of years.

Rev. R. Cary Montague, D. D.
1924-1927.

Soon after Dr. Goodwin had assumed his new duties Europe was plunged into war, and the echoes of the conflict had an almost immediate effect upon the life in America. Dr. Goodwin felt his responsibility keenly; the more so, as it became apparent that this country would sooner or later be involved in the maelstrom. He endeavored to guide the minds of his readers without prejudice to judge the issues before them. A whole-hearted supporter of the President, his editorials at this time speak wise counsel and deep insight into the after affects of so demoralizing a catastrophe. Two members of his staff left the Churchman office for service in France, the remainder carried on without additional assistance. The strain of the years and impaired health made it necessary for him to resign his post in 1923. The Churchman Company elected him consulting editor and his chair was taken by his able assistant, the Rev. W. Russell Bowie, D. D.

Langbourne M. Williams,
1927-1931.

Alfred B. Williams.
1927-1929.

The following tribute was paid to Dr. Goodwin by Dr. Bowie, it also defines the sphere which the Southern Churchman endeavored to fill in the homes of its readers. "It has been many months since Dr. Goodwin was able to come to the office of the Southern Churchman, and it was hard for those who came in and out of the office to realize that it was the same place, when that gracious figure with the dignity and courtesy of an older generation was not there. He had succeeded in the editorial chair the brilliant and witty William Meade Clark. In temperament the two men were very different, but in their devotion to the same ideals for the Church at large for this whole paper they were alike. They made it express the evangelical piety, the human warmth, and the simplicity of religious emphasis which have long been congenial to the spirit of that which has spread far and wide as "Virginia Churchmanship." What the Southern Churchman received from Dr. Goodwin, as it had received from Dr. Clark before him, is an abiding heritage and through all the changing thought and the changing years, those who conduct this paper now can have no higher ambition than to keep the paper true to the sound and sweet ideals which Edward L. Goodwin, like his predecessors, represented."

Dr. Bowie, though rector of the largest church in Richmond, found time to edit the paper for something over a year. He had able assistance and kept the Southern Churchman true to its ideals as he had said he would. In his first editorial he wrote: "The Southern Churchman will continue to stand for exactly what it has been standing for ever since the present editor has known it. It will try to express the simple and vital religion of its evangelical and missionary inheritance, it will remember and try to make its own the motto of the old Virginia Seminary, "Seek the truth; come whence it may, cost what it will." On accepting a call to become rector of Grace Church, New York, Dr. Bowie resigned the paper, but consented to remain on the staff as consulting editor. He was succeeded by the Rev. Joseph B. Dunn, D. D., whose ministry of thirty years was spent in Virginia. He had been an active member of the General Convention since 1910, and brought to his task a sympathetic understanding and love of that type of Christian thought and living which is associated with the name of the Church in Virginia. Although Dr. Dunn had the able assistance of the Rev. R. Cary Montague, D. D., in his editorial duties, illness in his family compelled him to resign in January, 1927.

And now, for the first time in its history, the paper had a layman as editor, Mr. Langbourne M. Williams, the president of the Board of Managers, undertook the editorial duties. His simple faith, his strong upholding of the old ways of Virginia Churchmanship, his vigorous attacks upon all whom he believed to be disloyal to the faith as this Church hath received it are still remembered by our readers. He was ably assisted as editorial writers by Mr. Alfred L. Williams for a period, and by the Ven. Frederick W. Neve, D. D., who still continues the editorship of his own page.

Mr. Williams died in 1931. The Rev. Charles W. Sheerin, rector of Grace and Holy Trinity Church, was asked to assume the editorship and has continued in that position to the present. Among the many duties of his pastoral charge, his leadership of the annual Diocesan Fall Campaign and his wide interests in civic affairs, he has found the time to write strongly and fearlessly of the problems and movements of the life of today.

It will cause sincere regret to many readers that his early removal from Richmond to Chattanooga will necessarily sever his connections with this paper. He carries with him the good wishes of the Southern Churchman in his new work.

We look with satisfaction at the past of the old paper, which has been good. The work of the editors has been strong, incisive and courageous. The South- ern Churchman has always stood for a recognized type of Churchmanship, to which we see people returning today, in a new appreciation of its simplicity and strength. That the paper may still give to its readers the same strong courage and simple exposition of the Faith, is the hope of all those who are now responsible for its continued existence. May its usefulness bless the homes to which it goes, for still another century.

Rev. Charles W. Sheerin,
1931——

THE THOUSANDFOLD PAGE

ARCHDEACON FREDERICK W NEVE D D

A HUNDRED YEARS

To have survived a hundred years, and still
To stand undaunted for the Truth and Right;
When days are dark, to shed a steadfast light,
Is an achievement wrought through good and ill.

So well and deeply rooted in the past,
There should be finer fruit than e'er before,
And from the mine of truth a richer ore,
Proving her right, new centuries to last.

Frederick W. Neve.

The Only True Basis of Unity

Love occupies the same place in the moral and spiritual sphere as the sun does in the physical. St. Paul places love first among the Fruits of the Spirit, not only because love is the greatest of them all, but because the others grow out of it and cannot exist without it. This, of course, is because God Himself is Love, and His greatest works in relation to mankind, such as man's creation, and above all, his redemption by the coming of Christ into the world, are manifestations of the Divine Love, "For God so loved the world that He gave His only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish but have everlasting life." What is more, the Gospel not only proclaims God's love to man, but also teaches that the whole duty of man consists in his love to God and his love to his fellowmen.

Love the Supreme Motive of Human Life.

Love, too, is the supreme motive of human life, because love to God makes obedience to His will a pleasure, rather than a hard duty; that is to say, it brings the will of man into harmony with the will of God. Again St. Paul says:—"Love worketh no ill to his neighbor, therefore love is the fulfilling of the law"; because, as he says again, that all the various duties which we owe to our fellowman can be summed up in that one saying:—"Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself."

The Main Duty of the Christian Church.

The Christian religion, therefore, is based upon love, because, "Love is of God, for God is Love." And it is the chief duty of the Christian Church to manifest this truth as clearly as possible to the world in obedience to our Lord's supreme command to His followers: "A new commandment I give unto you, that ye love one another; as I have loved you, that ye also love one another. By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another." St. John 13:34-35. It is clear that the Christian Church has sadly failed in the fulfilment of this duty, with the result that there has been a very serious loss in her power to influence the world.

The Influence Upon the Heathen of Christian Brotherhood.

It was once said:—"See how these Christians love one another." And this was probably one of the chief reasons why the heathen in the first days of Christianity embraced the Christian religion. It afforded a very strong and convincing proof of its truth, but those words could not be said now as they were then. The present divided condition of Christendom serves as one of the principal hindrances to belief in Christianity instead of serving as an unmistakable testimony to its divine origin.

The First Step to Unity.

As was suggested in a former article, the first step to Christian Unity must be based upon Love. Love is the foundation upon which Christ founded His Church, since the reconciliation of God and man was brought about by the supreme sacrifice which He made upon the Cross, out of love to mankind. We can hardly claim to be followers of the Master if we are not willing to show our love to Him by obeying His express command that we should make manifest to the world our love to one another. It is by no means necessary to delay any longer our duty in this respect by waiting till we have solved all the intellectual difficulties and problems of organization which now keep us apart. There is no reason why we should not enter into a Pact of Christian Brotherhood which would make manifest to the world that although we may differ in opinion on many things, that we are one in our devotion to Christ, and in love towards one another.

Love the Girdle of Perfectness.

Love is spoken of by St. Paul as the "Bond of Perfectness," or perhaps we may interpret it as the girdle of perfection, which clasps together in one the members of Christ's Body. We believe that if we could only get together on the basis of love other difficulties and problems would be much easier of solution, since they could be approached in a more brotherly way. Love is in itself a solvent, and thus able to melt obstacles which intellectual arguments might only serve to harden and make more difficult to remove.

(Continued on page 17.)

Kind Words That Help

And inspire to greater efforts. Letters of appreciation and encouragement commemorative of our one hundred years of work and service for the Church.

OF INESTIMABLE VALUE.

God be Praised for the Centennial of the SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN, a journal that has been of inestimable value to very many families, fulfilling well the mission of a Church paper. One of my earliest memories is the weekly coming of this Churchman to our home, where it had a place by my Bible and Prayer Book. Its columns have been filled with wholesome instruction for the young, as well as spiritual comfort for the careworn and doubting. Its missionary information has been an uplift to the whole Church. Long life to this loyal publication.

Rt. Rev. James R. Winchester,
Retired Bishop, Memphis, Tenn.

STAUNCH LOYALTY.

My acquaintance with the Southern Churchman began fifty years ago with my rectorship of "Old St. John's" in Richmond, Virginia, Easter Day, 1884. I think that I have steadily been a subscriber to the paper since that date.

There seems to be no valid argument against the necessity of what we call Church papers, such as the Southern Churchman.

The Southern Churchman has always made a special appeal to the family and to the young people in it.

I have admired the staunch loyalty of the Southern Churchman to the Protestant Episcopal Church consistently with its practical friendliness towards brethren of other names. On the other hand, the Southern Churchman has not been narrow in its relationship to those within the Church who differ from its views.

For the sake of the Church at large, I wish for the progress as a Church paper of the Southern Churchman through the new century upon which by God's blessing, it is about to enter.

Lewis W. Burton,
Lexington, Ky. Retired Bishop.

A CENTURY OF USEFULNESS.

My heartiest congratulations to the Southern Churchman as it rounds out a century of continuous publication. You have done a splendid piece of work and the Church is the richer because of your contribution to its usefulness. Every week a copy of the Southern Churchman comes to my desk and I keep it in my office where many of my clergy drop in and look at it. I wish they would be contributors to help you, but since many of them cannot do it I am glad to be the medium of their acquaintance with your paper. May you be strengthened for another century of usefulness and blessing to the Church.

Sincere good wishes to you,

Warren L. Rogers,
Bishop of Ohio.

LOYAL TO THE FAITH.

Learning that with the issue of January 5, the Southern Churchman will have rounded out a century of continuous publication, I am taking this opportunity to send felicitations and all good wishes on this important anniversary.

One of my boyhood memories is the assembling of the family for Sunday afternoon reading of the Southern Churchman, and I have been a reader for many years, with much interest and, I trust, with profit.

It is a matter of profound satisfaction to many of us that we have in the South a Church paper, loyal to the faith and edited with ability and knowledge of our people. Also I like to read the news of our Southern Dioceses, which can always be found in your columns.

James Craik Morris,
Bishop of Louisiana.

A TESTIMONY TO WORTH.

Will you permit me to congratulate the Southern Churchman upon its one hundred years of continuous publication?

The allotted span of man was threescore years and ten, and if he lives to that age, his years are a vindication of his physical and moral worth. For a Church paper to have lived for one hundred years is a testimony to its intrinsic and appreciated worthwhileness. I hope that the Southern Churchman may live to be as old as Methuselah.

It is altogether impossible to over-estimate the service of a Church paper in the life and work of the church, and I could only wish that the subscription list of the Southern Churchman, as indeed the subscription list of all our Church papers, was coterminous with the entire membership of the Episcopal Church.

With renewed congratulations, and best wishes,

Faithfully yours,
H. P. Almon Abbott,
Lexington, Ky. Bishop of Lexington.

FAITHFUL SERVICE.

I sincerely congratulate the Southern Churchman on the occasion of its Centennial.

During all these hundred years it has rendered a faithful service to the Church in the South. Facing the problems which confront the Church today a campaign is planned "to reinvigorate the life of the Church and to rehabilitate its general, diocesan and parochial work."

I think this will have to be done by education and not by exhortation, and surely one of the best means of education is the Church paper.

We will not have thoroughly loyal Churchmen until we have thoroughly informed Churchmen.

May the Southern Churchman through many more years carry on its fine work of education and information.

H. J. Mikell,
Bishop of Atlanta.

A STEADY WITNESS.

Naturally you know that whatever I hear that enlarges my hope for the Southern Churchman's increased usefulness is a definite satisfaction. Had I the ability it is one of the enterprises that I should esteem it a high privilege to make financially competent for the good work that waits for it.

When one thinks of the steady witness that that old paper has born to integrity and rightness of living, one cannot but feel grateful that men who are competent have been moved upon to strengthen it and to make it better known.

If by some means the Church could be made able to know the Southern Churchman. I do not believe there would be any further question about its support.

Very truly yours,
A. S. Lloyd,
Bishop Suffragan of New York.

WISDOM WITH AGE.

Please let me express my great appreciation of the Southern Churchman as now edited and published.

Congratulations are due the paper for having lived and worked for a century, but more than that, our thanks are given to God that with age there is also wisdom.

Multitudes of your readers are grateful for your loyalty to the Church, and to the Scriptures, for your helpful editorials, your Home Department, and your news columns.

I read and respect all our Church weeklies, but the Southern Churchman is the one I give most often to those in search of spiritual comfort and information, with a minimum of controversy, concerning the Protestant Episcopal Church.

May our children in the faith read your Bi-Centennial Number and enjoy it as we do your One Hundredth Birthday issue.

Faithfully yours,

E. Cecil Seaman,
Bishop of North Texas.

EXCELLENT SERVICE.

My dear Mr. Sheerin:—

I have just heard that you are to celebrate the one hundredth anniversary of the Southern Churchman, and I beg to say:—

I am glad to make a small contribution to the celebration of your centennial. As a subscriber for forty years and more, I congratulate the management of the Southern Churchman upon its excellent service to the Church in the "promotion of piety and the diffusion of religious and general intelligence", and I assure you of my prayers for God's continued blessing upon you, and I am,

Very sincerely yours,

Thos. F. Gailor,
Bishop of Tennessee.

READ WITH INTEREST.

The Southern Churchman is subscribed for by the Executive Council of the Diocese of Maryland and has its place on the table in the Waiting Room of the Diocesan House. It is read with interest and profit by many persons awaiting appointments or committee meetings.

I cannot recall when I did not know and read the Southern Churchman and commend it to those who wish a combined Church news and religious paper.

Edward T. Helfenstein,
Bishop of Maryland.

In reply to your letter of the sixth: I regret to say that I cannot comply with your request for a word of commendation in behalf of the Southern Churchman simply because I have never been a reader of this publication and do not now subscribe to it. I feel that this is my fault, however, and not that of the paper, for I frequently hear both clergymen and laymen of this diocese refer to its worth with appreciation.

With hearty congratulations upon the completion of one hundred years of continuous publication, I am

Sincerely yours,

Edwin A. Penick,
Bishop of North Carolina.

ZEAL FOR MISSIONS.

My dear Mr. Sheerin:

The Living Church salutes and congratulates the Southern Churchman on its one hundredth birthday.

The year 1835 has great significance for Wisconsin as well as Virginia. In that year Bishop Kemper was chosen as the first Missionary Bishop of our Church and in due time, having surveyed all of the unregenerate parts of the world, he selected Wisconsin as his permanent see and home. In the same year the Southern Churchman was launched with a missionary zeal and enthusiasm that continues to the present day.

May the Southern Churchman have many more years of devoted service to our Lord and His Church.

Very truly yours,

Clifford P. Morehouse,
Editor.

A HELPFUL MEDIUM.

I am interested to learn that on January 5 a special issue of the Southern Churchman will be published, celebrating the one hundredth anniversary of your publication.

I take the liberty of sending you my congratulations, and of saying that we have always found the Southern Churchman very helpful in relation to the advertisements which we have published therein in behalf of our subsidiary corporations.

I hope that the Southern Churchman will enjoy many more years of successful and useful service to the Church.

Very sincerely yours,

Bradford B. Locke,
Executive Vice-President.

ITS PLACE IN THE HOME.

I send to the Southern Churchman on the celebration of its one hundredth anniversary my hearty congratulations; with the hope it may continue to fill the place in the Church for which it was founded. No other Church paper has ever filled the place in the home which the Southern Churchman has, and certainly this is more needed today than ever before.

It was my privilege to enjoy and be helped by it, from my early childhood as it has been with many others. While that is most important to every home that, however, is not all the paper stands for. The Southern Churchman keeps one in touch each week with all matters of interest in the Church and states with fairness the many questions of the present day with a reason for or against, without being partisan or controversial.

I trust it may continue to grow in influence and helpfulness.

Faithfully yours.

W. L. Gravatt,
Bishop of West Virginia.

MAINTAINS THE BEST.

For considerably more than fifty years I have been a grateful reader and student of the Southern Churchman. In all that time I have known no other religious publication which has shown such a combination of evangelical enthusiasm, of thorough-going loyalty to the Church, and of sanctified common sense in dealing with religious and ecclesiastical problems. Particularly I congratulate the new management upon its ability to maintain that which was best in the past history of the paper, and yet to strike a twentieth century note which must inevitably give it a wider influence. May God's increasing blessing be with the Southern Churchman through the years to come!

Ernest Millmore Stires,
Bishop of Long Island, New York.

SATISFACTORY RECORD.

Congratulations upon the celebration of the one hundredth anniversary of the Southern Churchman, and good wishes for the continuance of its splendid work for Christ and the Church.

Satisfactory record of the first hundred years gives promise of increasing ministry for good in the future.

May the clarity of vision and devotion to truth which has characterized the Southern Churchman accompany it as it goes down the years.

Faithfully yours,

Wilson R. Stearly,
Bishop of Newark, New Jersey.

DESERVES GRATITUDE OF CHURCH PEOPLE.

I congratulate the Southern Churchman upon the celebration of its one hundredth anniversary. Such long life and such a useful life deserves the gratitude and appreciation of all Church people. The Southern Churchman has always stood for one of the great tradi-

(Continued on page 15.)

E. Burnand pinx: l original est ladropriete de la Mission de Bale .

Courtesy Young's Art Shop

"Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature."

KIND WORDS.

(Continued from page 13.)

tions of the Episcopal Church in this country, namely, its evangelical character, and has been and is one of the great agents for the preservation of that tradition without which the Church could in no way fulfill its functions.

Faithfully yours,
Cameron J. Davis,
Bishop of Western New York.

AN ADMIRABLE FAMILY PAPER.

I have always felt that the Southern Churchman was an admirable family paper, and am bound to believe that, under your Editorship, it must grow in favor and popularity. It is to be regretted that so few of our Church people throughout the country subscribe to a Church paper which is the only medium by and through which we can give our people information concerning their Church, its needs and its progress.

Wishing you abundant success, and with very cordial good wishes, I am,

Faithfully yours,
James E. Freeman,
Bishop of Washington, D. C.

APPEALS TO FAMILY LIFE.

I congratulate the Southern Churchman on the one hundredth anniversary of its existence. This paper has been for these hundred years a valuable member of the Church press, especially in the features in which it appeals to the family life of our people, and I earnestly hope that it may be supported and be successful in its new enterprise at the beginning of its second century.

Frederick F. Reese,
Bishop of Georgia.

HEARTY CONGRATULATIONS.

I understand that the Southern Churchman is to celebrate its one hundredth anniversary early in January of 1935, and am very happy to join its many friends in extending, first of all, my hearty congratulations for the anniversary, and further the hope that your paper may find its way into the homes of more and more of our people.

Faithfully yours,
Clinton S. Quin,
Bishop of Texas.

COURAGE TO SURVIVE.

We appreciate the courage it takes to survive one hundred years in the field of Religious Journalism and we evidence that appreciation in the number of subscribers you have in this parish.

Cordially yours,
G. I. Hiller,
Rector, Trinity Church, Miami.

A REAL ACHIEVEMENT.

Having learned with great pleasure that you are to celebrate the one hundredth anniversary of the Southern Churchman on January 5, I want to send you my congratulations and best wishes.

The publication of a paper for so long a time is in itself a real achievement. But when I think of the great service to the Church that the Southern Churchman has rendered I am moved by a deep appreciation.

May your second century be even more prolific in good works, and attended by greater prosperity!

Yours sincerely,
Theodore Partrick, Jr.,
Rector, Church of the Good Shepherd.
Raleigh, N. C.

DESERVES SUPPORT.

While I have never been a regular reader of the Southern Churchman, I know something of the place which it holds in the hearts of devoted Church people, especially in the South, and I congratulate you on its one hundredth anniversary.

There is important service to be rendered by the Southern Churchman, and there would seem to be every reason to believe that under its present editorial direction that service will be rendered in such a way as to deserve the encouragement and support of all who have at heart the welfare of the Protestant Episcopal Church.

Please be sure of my earnest wishes for your success.

Faithfully yours,
Charles C. Gilbert.

REPLETE WITH NEWS.

For several years I have been a subscriber to the Southern Churchman, and have always enjoyed reading it. It is replete with the current news of the Church, and its pages devoted to the home and fireside are interesting and refreshing. I congratulate you on its approaching one hundredth anniversary on January 5, and trust it may have many more years of usefulness in the Church.

Faithfully yours,
David Lincoln Ferris.

IS WORTH READING.

Before me lies the Southern Churchman, "Volume 99, Number 51", a fine Christmas number.

The Southern Churchman is rounding the century post along with its contemporary, The Spirit of Missions. At such a time I am reminded that when the pioneers of our Diocese of Southern Ohio came here, this part of the Western country had been but recently a county of old Virginia. Before that, young George Washington had paddled past the sites of our future river towns. Many of our charter members emigrated from the Old Dominion.

So it is with these thoughts of past associations in mind that I rejoice to see the Southern Churchman under your strong Board of Directors and your own admirable editorship, entering its second century.

The Southern Churchman is worth reading. With the betterment which I see you propose, it deserves to double its circulation, and more.

I look confidently to the great help which the Southern Churchman with the other general Church papers will render to the Church in our Forward Movement.

Godspeed to you in the coming years.

Yours cordially,
Henry W. Hobson,
Bishop of Southern Ohio.

AN HONORED PLACE.

I send you a word of hearty congratulation upon the one hundredth anniversary of the Southern Churchman, which occurs January 5, 1935.

The Southern Churchman has an honored place on the table devoted to Church papers in our Diocesan Offices. We are so near Virginia, Maryland and West Virginia that we are fortunate in having a number of our clergy who hail from those states. Also, our parishes have many Southerners in them and the Southern Churchman is read with interest.

Congratulating the Southern Churchman upon its honorable record of a hundred years and trusting that the next century may be one of increasing interest and success, I am,

Sincerely yours,
Alexander Mann,
Bishop of Pittsburgh, Pa.

1835 and Before

By the Reverend George MacLaren Brydon, D. D.,

Historiographer of the Diocese of Virginia.

The year 1835, which saw the first issue of the Southern Churchman, has always been looked upon as one of vital importance in the history of the Episcopal Church. At the General Convention held in that year a definite missionary policy was inaugurated which in its continuance and development to the present day has extended the Church to every section of our country and sent its missionaries in a continuing stream to China and Japan, to Brazil and Africa. That Convention declared that every member of the Episcopal Church was ipso facto a member of its Missionary Society—and it sent out the first missionary Bishops into sections of the United States where Dioceses had not already been organized.

This present year, therefore, marks the Centennial Anniversary of a Church weekly paper and a Church policy. It would be contrary to the genius of the paper not to link the two together.

The Protestant Episcopal Church reached in 1835 the fiftieth anniversary of its organization as a National Church. During that fifty years it had grown from the groups of members of the Anglican Communion in the original thirteen states, disorganized and shattered by the Revolution into a strongly established and well organized body. The four Bishops of 1790, Seabury of Connecticut, Provoost of New York, White of Pennsylvania and Madison of Virginia, had become sixteen Bishops by 1835. New Dioceses had been organized as members of the Episcopal Church, moving into newly settled territory, had established congregations and called ministers from states to the North and East. No effort had been made as yet by the Church itself to undertake the organization of a Missionary field. It is of profound interest to know that prior to 1835, with the exception of Ohio, organized in 1818, and Michigan in 1832, the Episcopal Church had no organization west of the Mississippi nor north of the Ohio.

The twenty years previous to 1835 had been a prosperous period for the Episcopal Church and fertile in the beginnings of new movements. It has been said that the passing of a generation after 1785 was required before the Church could become truly American in spirit. The older generation of Clergy, trained under colonial conditions and ordained in England before 1776, could and did organize the Church in the United States. After the Revolution but not until a new generation of clergy and laity, reared under the conditions of a free America, came into power in the counsels of the Church, did it really begin to spread and grow. The House of Bishops at the General Convention of 1811 in Baltimore consisted of "two old gentlemen sitting before the fire in the rector's study" at St. Paul's Rectory and report was made to that Convention that the Church in Virginia seemed, humanly speaking, to be hopelessly dead.

Between 1810 and 1820, a new generation came into power and the new life began. The formation of Bible Societies and Tract Societies, and the movements which culminated in the establishment of the General Theological Seminary, and, a little later the Virginia Theological Seminary, all had their inception in this decade. One of the first, strongest and most vital movements in the life of the Church in the Southern States, was the organiation of the American Colonization Society in 1816, formed for the purpose of freeing Negroes from slavery and sending them back to establish and develop a free Christian State in Africa. Very little has been written of the work of this Society, but it had a strong and widespread organization, continuing in existence until just before the outbreak of the War Between the States. The Episcopal Church was especially interested in this work. Bishop Meade was for a time its general agent and visited other Southern States in its interests, going on one occasion to Savannah, Georgia, to look after a shipload of native Africans smuggled in to be sold as slaves. The National Congress and some of the States made appropriations to the Colonization Society and, under the Federal laws, more than one ship loaded with Africans, being smuggled into this country, was captured by Federal and State authorities and their hapless prisoners delivered to the American Colonization Society to be returned to Africa. Under this Society, Liberia was established, the first shipload of Negroes being sent out in 1820 and the second in January, 1821—in each case under the charge, as general agent and missionary, of an Episcopal minister, the Rev. Samuel Bacon of the Diocese of Pennsylvania in 1820, the Rev. Joseph R. Andrus of the Diocese of Virginia in 1821.

The interest of the Episcopal Church in Foreign Missions began with Liberia in 1821. The Rev. Benjamin Allen of Philadelphia, writing in 1823 to Mrs. Eliabeth Page of Shelly, in Virginia, said that the Domestic and Foreign Missionary Society of the Protestant Episcopal Church was just establishing a school for children in Liberia and he was writing to groups of ladies in different sections asking them to make garments to be sent to the little Negro children—so early was the Woman's Auxiliary idea born in the Episcopal Church!

The District of Columbia, which then included the towns of Georgetown on the Maryland side at the upper end, and Alexandria on the Virginia side at the lower, with the straggling muddy village of Washington in between, was between 1815 and 1820 becoming a strong center for the Episcopal Church. The new life of the Diocese of Virginia which began in 1814 with the election of Bishop Moore had its center in Alexandria. The Rev. Dr. William H. Wilmer of St. Paul's Church, the Rev. Oliver Morris of Christ Church, and Judge Bushrod Washington were residents of Alexandria, and, aided by the Rev. John Dunn of Leesburg, and the young newly ordained priest, William Meade, were the moving spirits in its revival. Dr. Wilmer was the outstanding clergyman of the group. He was one of the moving spirits in the organization of the American Colonization Society and the Protestant Episcopal Education Society, and beginning in 1816, published in the District of Columbia The Theological Repository, a Church magazine, which continued in existence for a fruitful period of years, being devoted to the interests of the Colonization Society and the education of young men for the ministry. Under his leadership, the Theological Professorship was established at William and Mary College, and when that proved to be a failure, he started the Virginia Theological Seminary in his own rectory at Alexandria, with himself as one of the two professors. He was also the first rector of St. John's Church in Washington, and was the President of the House of Deputies of the General Convention for five meetings, until his death in 1827.

The Church in Virginia was blessed with great leaders during that period: Bishop Moore, the "restorer of paths to walk in," who died in 1841; William H. Wilmer, and William Meade, who became assistant Bishop in 1829. Bishop Meade had been growing in influence and power in the Church in Virginia until, after the death of Dr. Wilmer, he became the outstanding leader among the clergy of the Diocese. He was the greatest of the long line of Virginia Bishops. Dominant in his influence in the Church—an Apostle of righteousness and higher moral standards of life and conduct, his life has made a greater impress upon the Church and the moral life of the State at large than perhaps any other man who ever lived within its borders. He was one of the great leaders of the Evangelicals in the meetings of General Convention and throughout the whole Church.

When the year 1835 dawned and the first issue of the Southern Churchman came from the press, the Church in the United States was just bringing to birth the missionary movement which sent Jackson Kemper as the first Bishop across the Mississippi to Missouri, and three years later, Leonidas Polk as Bishop to Arkansas. Bishop William White of Pennsylvania, the patriarch of the American Episcopal Church, was still living, as was also Chief Justice John Marshall of Virginia, two links still living to bind the Church to the era of Revolution. Bishops Moore and Meade in Virginia were at the height of their influence; the Colonization Society and the Theological Seminary were growing in influence and power; the Church was alive, and straining at the leash, eager to reach out into new fields and a greater sphere of usefulness. How that growth has come, the problems, the strife, the development, of the hundred years since that day has been recorded from week to week in the pages of the century-old Church newspaper.

The Evangelical Churchmanship to whose interests the Southern Churchman has always been devoted, was by long odds the dominant school of thought in the Episcopal Church during the first fifty years. Bishop Hobart of New York, who died in 1830, had been the leader of the "High Church" group in his day, and there are intimations of growing differences of opinion and beginnings of strife between the High Church and Low Church elements appearing in correspondence written years before his death.

The Oxford Movement, beginning in England in 1833 and soon reaching to America, gathered into its fold the High Church group. The historian of today reads with sadness of the rapidly mounting strife and controversy between the two schools of thought, showing in sermons and pastorals and a war of pamphlets, increasing in bitterness until the final withdrawal of the radical Low Church group in the Episcopal Church and the formation of the Reformed Episcopal Church in 1875.

The leaders of the Evangelical School in Virginia and elsewhere were frankly afraid of the new movement. They had seen how, under the Evanglical Movement, the Church had been revived and spiritualized; how, under the fundamental Evangelical thought of the personal, direct approach of the individual soul to Christ as the Saviour of men, souls were being converted and the Church was increasing in influence and power. They were frankly afraid of placing the emphasis upon any other thought than that. They fought the Oxford Movement because they believed its greatest emphasis was placed elsewhere.

Surely the time can never come when that fundamental thought of personal contact of the individual soul with its God will no longer be needed in the Christian Church. The sturdiness of Christian character, the independence of thought, the zeal for winning souls for Christ which have always been characteristics of Evangelical Churchmanship are as much needed in the Church of today and will be as much needed in the future as ever they have been in bygone days.

The Southern Churchman has stood for Evangelical Churchmanship during all the years of its life. It stood steadfast for the Church of our fathers in the bitter days of 1875, where the radical Low Churchmen were withdrawing from the Episcopal Church. It was perhaps due in large measure to the influence of the Southern Churchman that only about 10,000 persons withdrew from the Episcopal Church instead of many tens of thousands: that only three clergymen in Virginia went over to the Reformed Episcopal Church when those radicals were expecting the Diocese to come over in a body.

The old paper has made a great place for itself in the life of the Episcopal Church and has done a great work during its hundred years—may it continue to bear its witness and do a greater work for Christ and His Church in the years to come.

* * *

THE EPIPHANY SEASON.

The Manifestation of Christ to the Gentiles.

The title of today, "Epiphany," dates from 1549, the addition of "or the Manifestation of Christ to the Gentiles" being added in 1662. The collect for today is taken from the Sarum Missal, 1549 (Sacramentary Gregory). The Festival of Epiphany is one of the chief Festivals of the Christian Church, and is observed on the sixth of January as the closing day of the Christmas commemoration. In England it is also known as "Twelfth Day." The name of Epiphany marks it as a day of commemoration of the Manifestation of Christ to the Gentiles. This manifestation has been variously interpreted in different sections of the Church. In the East, where, as its Greek name indicates, this Festival had its origin, it was associated with our Lord's Baptism, as the Manifestation of Christ as the Son of God by the voice from heaven and the descent of the Holy Spirit. From this connection the Feast of the Epiphany became one of the chief days for the baptism of catechumens. It is of interest to learn that not until the latter part of the fourth century the Feast of the Nativity had a distinct celebration in the East on the twenty-fifth of December. In the Western Church the two celebrations of Christmas and Epiphany have always been separated. This Feast is called in the Greek Church "Theophania," and originally commemorated four manifestations, viz.: The Nativity, The Baptism of Christ, The First Miracle at Cana, and the appearance of the Star to the Wise Men. "No man hath seen God at any time." We personally, with our natural eyesight, have not seen Jesus Christ, but as the collect states, we "Know Him by Faith," and so we pray that from our knowledge of Him through faith, we may by our earnest endeavors in this life see Him, not with the eye of faith, but in person in the great Beyond. How well it is for us to remember that as the Saviour of mankind passed the cross to gain the crown, so we must likewise suffer in order that we may come to "those eternal glories" which are prepared for those who, receiving Him in faith today, are looking forward with love and with gratitude to being with Him. The Star to lead us today is the Holy Spirit from whom alone comes the only source of knowledge of that true light "which lighteth every man that cometh into the world."

William E. Callender.

* * *

THE THOUSANDFOLD PAGE.

(Continued from page 11.)

Love the Permanent Basis of Unity.

Love is the only true basis of unity and must therefore come first. No other foundation will last, for Christ Himself has said:—"He that heareth these sayings of mine and doeth them not, I will liken him unto a man who built his house upon the sand; and the rain descended and the floods came and the winds blew and beat upon that house: and it fell and great was the fall of it." St. Matt. 7:26-27. Do we not hear the voice of Christ saying:—"If ye love Me keep my commandments," and, "A new commandment I give unto you; that ye love one another; as I have loved you that ye also love one another." If we will but take that initial step in obedience to our Lord's express command, we believe that He will open the way more and more to a full and complete reconciliation of our differences; but it is our failure to love one another as He has loved us, which is the principal obstacle to reunion and that obstacle must be removed before any solid basis to unity can be established.

CHURCH INTELLIGENCE

"CHURCH OF THE AIR'S" NEXT SPEAKER.

The Right Rev. Henry Wise Hobson, Bishop of Southern Ohio, is the speaker for the next broadcast in the series for the Episcopal "Church of the Air", February 3, at ten A. M., Eastern time, over WKRC, Cincinnati. His subject, "Forward", reflects the spirit of the Forward Movement. Bishop Hobson is chairman of the Joint Commission on the Forward Movement, five Bishops, five priests and ten laymen, representing every part of the country, appointed by General Convention.

"The movement is to be based first of all upon the spiritual life of the Church, and will aim to revive and revitalize such in every branch of the Church. Secondly, it will be concerned with the financial welfare of the Church looking toward a sounder financial structure in the parishes, in the dioceses and in the national Church."

The Commission held a meeting in Chicago in December. Bishop Hobson's broadcast on February 3 will precede a second commission meeting to be held later in the month, in Cincinnati.

* * *

MAKING OF WILLS URGED IN NEW PUBLICATIONS.

The National Committee for Religion and Welfare Recovery, Mr. Walter W. Head, Chairman, yesterday announced the issuance of two new publications in connection with its educational program for "More and Better Wills". The program centers around the observance of December 30 as Stewardship Review Sunday, and of December 31 as Adjustment Monday. The publications are, "Some Leaves From My Autobiography for 1934 and Guide Posts for 1935" and "Have You Made or Recently Reviewed Your Will?"

Discloses Figures on Wills.

In the booklet on Wills, figures presented show that in a recent year in the Borough of Manhattan, New York City, 4,763 letters of administration were granted on the estates of persons who died without leaving wills. During the same year only 2,979 wills were admitted to probate. In other words, about three out of every five persons whose estates passed through the Surrogate's Court failed to make their wills. In an attempt to decrease litigation and serious property losses resulting from failure to leave wills, the booklet offers information about the making and the timely reviewing of wills.

"A will that is out of date may be worse than no will," according to the Committee's statement. "Certainly every will made previous to 1930, or during the early years of the depression, should be carefully reviewed and, if need be, rewritten in the light of the radical economic changes and fluctuating valuations of the past five years. In the making and reviewing of wills, the National Committee for Religion and Welfare Recovery urges a careful consideration of our indebtedness and moral obligations to religious education and social welfare institutions. None of us would care to live in a country or community destitute of churches, hospitals and social welfare agencies. These institutions certainly are worthy of some consideration on the part of any person who has had a life-long enjoyment of their privileges."

Suggests Yearly Personal Inventory.

According to the preface of "Some Leaves From My Autobiography for 1934", "Every good business man takes an annual inventory of his assets and liabilities, income and expenses. All government and trust officials are required to render written reports of their trusteeship. I, too, during the past year, have been entrusted with certain assets of life, money and opportunity. I have had placed at my command 365 days, 8,760 hours, 525,600 minutes. In this regard I am as rich as the richest millionaire. It is fitting that I should make an accounting of my stewardship."

A series of questions follows, with blank space for writing in personal answers. Some of the questions are:

"What is my dominant purpose in life?"

"Have I at any time during the year paused to consider seriously the relationship of this life of mine to my legacies from the past, my responsibilities for the future?"

"What have I done during the year to enrich the lives of my neighbors and of my neighborhood?"

"Am I conscious of racial, religious or nationalistic prejudices?"

"Am I disposed to enjoy all pleasures, luxuries and profits incident to international commerce without recognizing a reciprocal obligation to those whose labors make possible my enjoyment of such pleasures, luxuries and profits?"

The booklet concludes with tables for analyzing the use of one's time and money for various purposes in 1934, and for projecting an orderly progressive program for 1935. Copies of both of these booklets may be had without charge by addressing the National Committee for Religion and Welfare Recovery, Lincoln Building, 60 East Forty-second Street,, New York, N. Y.

* * *

TOYNBEE HALL, LONDON, COMMEMORATES FIFTIETH ANNIVERSARY.

The fiftieth anniversary of the opening of the first settlement house has just been observed. The house was Toynbee Hall, London, opened on Christmas Eve, 1884, an event commemorated this last Christmas Eve by an international broadcast conducted by the National Federation of Settlements.

The settlement movement was founded by the Rev. Samuel A. Barnett, priest of the Church of England, who, in 1873, accepted the vicarship of St. Jude's Church, in the desolate Whitechapel section of East London despite the warning of the Bishop of London: "Do not hurry in your decision; it is the worst parish in my diocese, inhabited mainly by a criminal population."

In view of subsequent events it is interesting to note that it was in the rooms of the present Archbishop of Canterbury, then a scholar of Oxford, that the undergraduates of that university first gathered to support the founding

(Continued on page 24.)

THE EXECUTIVE BOARD OF THE WOMAN'S AUXILIARY.

Seated (left to right): Miss Johnston, Mrs. Cain, Mrs. Carver, Miss Lindley, Mrs. Lucas, Mrs. Brown and Mrs. Kinney. Standing: Miss Pardee, Mrs. Thomas, Mrs. Pierce, Mrs. W. T. Barbour, Mrs. Morrison, Mrs. Ober, Mrs. Happ, and Mrs. Cross. Members not in the picture are Mrs. Paul Barbour, Miss Deane, Miss Brent, Mrs. Glenn, and Mrs. Keeley.

Southern Churchman News in Retrospect

One Hundred Years Ago—1835.

First issue of the Southern Churchman, Friday 2d January 1835.

From The Southern Literary Messenger:

New Paper.

The Southern Churchman, edited by the Rev. William F. Lee, and published weekly in this city, has reached its fifth number. Almost every Christian denomination among us, had the benefit of a paper devoted to its own peculiar interests, except the Episcopalians, until Mr. Lee commenced the publication of the Churchman. There can be no doubt of its success, under the management of an editor of Mr. Lee's distinguished talents and piety.

(Found in the desk of Mrs. Wm. F. Lee, wife of the first Editor, by her granddaughter, Miss Ida Lee Castleman.)

Text of First Sermon Published, "Wine is a mocker, strong drink is raging: whatsoever is deceived thereby is not wise."—Prov. 20:1.

The sermon, by the Rt. Rev. Bishop Meade, delivered before the Convention in Staunton, May, 1834, and published by the request of the same, ran in five issues.

The Liberia Herald of September 26 contains much interesting intelligence, some of which is more cheering from the Colony than anything we have ever before had the pleasure of extracting from the Colonial Journal.

Dr. William Carey, that eminent servant of Christ, departed this life at Serampore, June, 1834. He was in the seventy-third year of his age and had been in India forty-one years. At the end of his first seven years' labor, Dr. Carey stated that it was uncertain whether any of the heathen were truly converted. Yet, in twelve years from that time, the mission embraced twelve stations and 500 church members, and in five years more the membership had increased to 1,200.

Five Prussian divines of the Lutheran Church have arrived at Amsterdam to proceed as missionaries to the heathen. Three of them are destined for the southern part of Africa, the other two for Borneo in Asia.

It is with feelings of deep and painful regret that we are called upon to announce the death of the African Prince Charles Bolio, son of Weah Bolio of Grahway. Charles was one of the two princes sent from Africa to this country to be educated under the care of the Maryland Colonization Society.

The Domestic and Foreign Missionary Society—The Treasurer under date of December 23, reports receipts of $1,429.20. Of this, $700 is from the noble parish of Christ Church, Hartford, Conn.

Intelligence has reached this country that Dr. Morrison of Canton has departed this life. The eminence and usefulness of Dr. Morrison as a missionary of the Cross must be known to most of our readers.

Advices from Batavia also furnish the melancholy intelligence that Mr. Layman and Mr. Munson, the two American missionaries (Presbyterians), who embarked on March last from Batavia for Sumatra were murdered by natives of the Batta Country.

Her Highness the Berum Sumroo has given 150,000 rupees (£15,000) interest to the Bishop and Archdeacon of Calcutta for missionary purposes.

From the Western Methodist we learn that the Rev. Fountain E. Pitts, a clergyman of the Methodist Episcopal Church, has been appointed to South America and expects to leave Nashville early in April for Buenos Ayres. He goes as the pioneer of Methodist missions to that dark land.

The Prussian Government, contrary to the professions of religious toleration, have lately forbidden the Lutherans to meet in prayer, as is their custom, at private houses.

Washington College, Va.: We take pleasure in announcing to the public that Professor Vethake, late of the University of New York, has been elected President of the above institution. It will be recollected that this institution was founded by General Washington himself.—N. Y. Spectator.

Richmond and Fredericksburg Rail-Road: The distance from Richmond to Fredericksburg will be reduced by the Railroad from 67 miles to 58; the time of travelling it, from fourteen hours to three hours; and the journey between Richmond and Washington, from twenty-four hours to eight or nine.

The cost of the trip between Richmond and Washington, now between 10 and 11 dollars, will be reduced to $6.50 per passenger.

The following resolution reported by Mr. Clay will probably be a joint resolution of both Houses of Congress:

Resolved, by the Senate and House of Represetnatives, That Wednesday, the 31st instant, be the time assigned for the delivery of the Oration by John Quincy Adams, before the two Houses of Congress, on the life and character of General Lafayette.

The Army—The returns accompanying the Report of the Secretary of War make the whole strength of the United States Army, including officers and privates, 6,597. According to the organization of 1834, it should have comprised an aggregate of 7,198. The whole number of men enlisted into the srvice from 1st of January to 30th of September, 1834, is 2,111.

The Rail Road from Amboy to Camden, opposite Philadelphia, is now finished the whole distance, down to the water's edge of the Delaware.

The passengers who started for New York from Philadelphia on Monday morning, were obliged to sit in the rail road cars all night, and did not arrive until Tuesday afternoon. When the cars reached the deep cut through which the road passes, a few miles the other side of Amboy, it was found completely blocked up with snow, which had drifted in a mass from twenty to thirty feet in height.

The Potomac froze over on Saturday night, and on Sunday froze so hard that carriages might have passed over it yesterday. The cold still continues. Our navigation is probably closed for the season.—Ib.

Death of Dr. Carey.

Intelligence of the dangerous illness of this eminent servant of Christ had reached this country several months since his death has been daily anticipated—these anticipations have now been realized. Dr. William Carey departed this life at Serampore, June 9, 1834. He was in his 73r year.

Seventy-five Years Ago—1860.

Rome.

A few months ago, one of our American Bishops administered confirmation within the walls of "the Eternal City" —no such act, says the "Church Journal," having been previously performed by a Bishop of the Anglican Communion since the Reformation: "Now the Rev. Mr. Langdon, of the Diocese of Pennsylvania, has been appointed chaplain to the American Legation by our minister, Mr. Stocton, and a regular American parish has been established." This is the first thing of the sort within the walls of Rome. The English Chapel is compelled to keep itself outside the city gate. The reason of the difference is, that, owing to the ex-communication of the Queen of England, Great Britain has no accredited minister at the Court of Rome.

Russia.

The Metropolitan of Moscow, Philarettes, has carried in the Russo-Greek Synod a vote for the immediate translation of the New Testament into the common language of the people, and a general diffusion of the gospel among the poor.

Tennessee.

Bishops Polk and Elliott are now on Sewanee Mountain, arranging to break ground in laying the cornerstone of the University of the South, which has been endowed with half a million of money. Bishop Hopkins, of Vermont, is with them, assisting by his rare taste in selecting the site and laying out the grounds. A number of comfortable cottages were built last fall by the resident engineer, C. R. Barney.

The following touching advertisement appears in the London Record:

WARM CLOTHING for POOR CLERGYMEN with LARGE FAMILIES. will be thankfully received at the Office of the Poor Clergy Relief Society, 345 Strand, London.

University, Virginia.

A correspondent of the Central Presbyterian calls attention to the "Christianity in the University of Virginia." He tells us of a plan by which a library of valuable religious works has been raised partly through the kindness of Messrs. Carter of New York. The library of the University is by no means devoid of sound religious works; but its tone and general effect is, of course, literary. The young men need a library whose tone is eminently religious: a library whose whole literature points to the Word of God—to the world to come—and to the practical duties of this life. These young men need also to be kept in connection with the living Church and with the moral wants of the world at large.

Italy.

The Rev. Edward Everett Hale writes from Florence that in every bookshop and bookstall in the city he found some edition of the Bible for sale, and that there meets in public every evening, in Florence, a society for the study of the Scriptures.

Spain and Portugal.

For longer than a year we have not reviewed the religious condition of

(Continued on uage 24.)

FAMILY DEPARTMENT

JANUARY.

1. Circumcision. (Tuesday.)
6. Sunday. Epiphany.
13. First Sunday after Epiphany.
20. Second Sunday after Epiphany.
25. Conversion of St. Paul. (Friday.)
27. Third Sunday after Epiphany.

* *

COLLECT FOR THE EPIPHANY
(January 6).

O God, Who by the leading of a star didst manifest Thy only begotten Son to the Gentiles, mercifully grant that we, who know Thee now by faith, may after this life have the fruition of Thy glorious Godhead, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

* *

A HYMN FOR EPIPHANY.

The kings of Orient have brought
The treasures of the earth and sea—
Fit presents for the King they sought--
What offering is there left for me?

I cannot bring to crown my Christ
From far Cathay its glittering gold,
Nor Araby's perfumes unprised,
Nor pearls from India's seas unrolled;

Nor of the gold that decks the mind,
The gems of thought or fancy's flowers,
In one fair diadem entwined,
To fitly crown this King of ours.

But I with lowly shepherds come,
With them the herald's hymn I hear;
O make, dear Lord, this heart Thy throne,
And turn to pearl each bitter tear!

—George Elliott, D. D.

* * *

The Quest for the King.

The star that hung in the sky, guiding the wise men to the place where Jesus was, led them to the feet of a King, a Lord. It is not enough this Christmas that we shall learn the lesson of love. We must learn the lesson also of obedience. These wise men were searching for the King, and so are we. These wise men found the King, and so have we. These wise men worshipped the King, and so must we. It is folly to talk about the failure of Christ in the world until we have obeyed Him, until we have made Him our Lord. He said in one place, "Why call ye me Lord and do not the things I say?" And the final triumph of the Son of God on earth shall be when men shall do as He commands. Mary at the feast said to the servants, "Whatsoever He says unto you, do it". And the miracle at that feast was performed when they obeyed Christ. And the miracle of the power of Christ can never come into this world until we have come to Jesus Christ as our Lord.

* * *

The Gifts of the Magi.

These kings of the East represented the very best thought of the world of that day. They were the wise men of their century. They were what we today would call scientists. They were students of the stars. They were prophets looking into the future, watching for the dawn. Tradition says that there were three of them, one an old man leaning on his staff; one a middle-aged man in the strength of his manhood; one a young man with his eyes fixed upon the future. We do not know. We do know, however, that they were men of wealth, of position and distinction, and that they came with their wealth and their wisdom to worship in the presence of the Saviour of men.

It has always been so. Jesus Christ commands and captivates the homage of the best minds of all the ages. The poets sing of Him. The musicians wed His name to melody. The prophets see in Him the fulfillment of all their hopes. The statesmen legislate in His name. The painters strive to catch the beauty of His face. The scientists walks with humility in His presence. It has always been true.

They opened their treasures and laid them at his feet; gold, frankincense and myrrh. If we are careful and thoughtful we may learn something of the discriminating philosophy of their giving. Every word in the story is significant. We are told that they came and saw. They made their own investigation. What they saw is not disclosed to us, but they came over the dry desert paths, following the stars, in order that they themselves might see with their own eyes and understand with their own heart. They did not give without sympathetic knowledge. They did not give because others were giving. They did not give because they wished to quiet their uneasy consciences. They gave because of what they saw; and when they saw they bowed in reverence and gave because of their devotion. Generosity is no substitute for grace. Liberality is not accepted in place of love. They gave for Christ's sake. Our charity and missionary benevolences will wither and fade without adoration and worship. "The gift without the giver is bare." What they gave they gave because it was theirs. They gave appropriate gifts, gifts that were personal—gold from India, incense from Persia, myrrh from Arabia, the gifts that were native to their own land and peculiar to their own people. They gave what they had. They might have brought bronze from Egypt or marble from Greece or manuscripts from Rome; but they brought the gifts that represented themselves.

There is an old tradition told in song and sermon that there was some deep symbolism, some mystic meaning in these gifts of the wise men. We are told that the gift of gold was appropriate as an offering to a king, gold that is the most precious coin in the markets of the world; and I like to think that there is truth in that symbolism. Christ can use the gold and the silver of the market places. He will receive from our hands and pass it on for the service of the world the profits which we have made, the gold which we have accumulated, the wealth which is ours.

The frankincense, we are told, is an offering given to God. Incense is the symbol of worship. It represents the prayers of the saints offered to deity. It speaks of the homage of the heart, of all those sweet and lovely promptings of the spirit that are offered in the tenderness of loving adoration to Him whom we call Lord. There is truth in this symbolism. We bow in reverence before Him and speak of Him as the Wonderful, Counsellor, the Mighty God, the Everlasting Father and the Prince of Peace.

Myrrh was a gift appropriate to suffering. It was the perfume of the dead, the precious fragrance of the dead, filling the world as a prophecy of the sacrifice of Calvary. There are those who, at this Christmas season know what this means, and perhaps the finest and most precious gift which they can bestow upon Christ today is the consecration of sorrow, which hitherto they have kept to themselves, and which may have embittered their lives. The worst of all sorrows is a sorrow that has not been consecrated at the feet of Christ, a sorrow that has left us bitter and cynical and rebellious. All these gifts we, too, as the wise men of old, lay down at the feet of Christ.

"Gold we give as to a king,
Incense as to God we bring,
Myrrh that speaks of suffering."

—Selected.

* * *

For the Southern Churchman.

SHELTER.

Minnie Roberts Dressen.

My heart, tonight, is at home by the fire,
And we blow out the light when the logs burn higher.

Outside the winds in sorrow groan,
Now veering from shrieks to a low bass tone.

All is ice and sleet in the white out of doors,
From a bridge nearby the traffic roars.

My heart beats quicker in the fireglow bright,
And I pray that each heart is at home tonight.

* * *

Out of An Old Coffee Can.

In our office is an interesting young man, commonly known as "Pat". He is quiet and undemonstrative, somewhat sarcastic, and does not invite familarity. I had labored under the misapprehension that he was a sort of temperamental Ishmael, "ag'in the government", whatever that might be. Accordingly, I had inferred that he would naturally be critical of whatever the rest of us were doing, and probably particularly unfriendly to stewardship. What was my surprise, therefore, when we happened to be alone in the office one day, to have him say to me: "I am very much interested in Christian stewardship and in the work of your department. I have had some stewardship experiences of a quite intimate sort."

Concealing my surprise, I said, "I am very glad to know that. Tell me of your experiences."

"One bleak December day in 1889," said Pat, "we laid my father to rest in a little cemetery in Central Ohio. My mother was left a widow with five little children. The oldest, Frank, was sixteen; I was three; and between us were two more boys and a little girl. The relatives gathered about, after the funeral, and wondered what poor Aunt Nan was going to do now to keep her little brood together and keep them from starvation. 'Why, I'm going to the farm,' she said, 'and bring my children up as a Christian family.'" (It appears that the father had been a Methodist preacher, who had somehow acquired a little farm, but unstocked and without money.)

The relatives protested, but the mother stood firm, and three or four days after the funeral the little party sorrowfully took the train for the little farm. The neighbors came, with sympathy and condolences, and said to the mother: "Now, let us help you. Frank's a husky boy; we'll take him and hire him out for $16 or $20 a month and his board, and you take care of the other children the best you can. But don't try to run the farm."

"No," said the mother again, "I must keep my children together, bring them up right, and educate them; and this winter Frank must go to college."

"Go to college!" Was the woman crazy?

So the neighbors went away, saying among themselves: "Of course, Mrs. Mac is a perfectly good Christian, but a plain fool. Anybody can see that."

The struggle began. In the winter term Frank went away to Ohio Wesleyan Universitly. His mother helped him all she could, and he did all he could to help himself. Times were hard. There was little money to be had. The mother was obliged more than once to borrow money of her neighbors, and at that time the interest rate was 8 per cent. and often 10 and 12 per cent.

"One day," continued Pat, "I went to carry the interest money to a good Methodist neighbor from whom mother had borrowed. When I got to his house, I discovered that he had figured compound interest instead of simple interest, and that I lacked fourteen cents of enough to pay in full. So back home I went, through the cold, barefooted, to get the fourteen cents before I could get the interest receipt. Talk about 'child labor'," exclaimed Pat, "I know all about it. I lived it when I was seven and eight years old!"

The struggle went on. By and by another son was sent to college, and at last Pat himself. Three, at least, of the boys went to Ohio Wesleyan, and graduated, and then to Boston University and graduated. It was there I first met Frank. Three sons became Methodist ministers, one a Christian business man, and the daughter a minister's wife. Some record for one family and a poor widow!

"That's a remarkable story," I said. "But what's all this got to do with stewardship? Of course, your mother was actually practicing the very highest form of stewardship, but—"

"Oh," said Pat, "of course mother always gave her tenth. And it wasn't any skimped tenth, either. It was a tenth of her gross receipts. You tell us that the tithe is a tenth of the net income, and that's right; but mother took the first tenth out of all she raised —eggs, butter, chickens, grain, apples, potatoes—without figuring the cost of production, and laid it up for the Lord —no lame ducks or dead calves for the Lord's portion. He always got the best."

"You know," Pat continued, with the glimmer of a reminiscent smile, "whenever I think of the tithe, I can smell coffee. Mother used to put her tithe money in an old coffee can, away up on the shelf, and our church and Sunday School money always smelt like coffee.

"Well, by and by, in that prosperous farming community, they had to build a new church, and here again mother practiced her ten per cent habit—she furnished a tenth of the whole cost of that church. But it was a good investment. For out of that little country church have come seventen ministers, including mother's three, and even the stingy Methodist brother who collected the fourteen cents compound interest at last got grace enough to send his own sons to college to prepare for Christian service.

" But, of course,' I hear some level-headed, practical, 'feet-on-the-ground' brother object, 'all this was hardly rational, fit only for old-fashioned Christians, in a crude and bucolic period of history. This mother was doubtless a good, humble, simple-minded, country woman, and her lamblike sons probably grew up to be plodding, unprogressive, obscure preachers!' "

Well, maybe. Let's see.

It is no mark of genius to doubt or to sneer, nor are all humble, trustful disciples simpletons. This woman is still living, and keeping up with a progressive age. Her practical wisdom was so abundant that she became the oracle of her community, the Solomon to whom the neighbors came with this disputes and troubles, an unofficial judge, a Deborah in this present-day Israel. She became, in the best sense, the "leading member" of her church. She kept up with the times and with her college sons. She was recently elected and served as a member of the General Conference. Her name is Nancy J. McConnell, and this youngest son is hhe Rev. Charles M. McConnell, in charge of an important Home Missions department, and her eldest son is Bishop Francis J. McConnell, whose character and abilities would adorn the record of the Church in any century, and whose career renders lustrous the healthy, sacrificial and full-orbed stewardship of a noble mother.

In ten thousand homes today such stewardship is thriving and bearing fruit.—Stewardship Department, Presbyterian Church, U. S. A.

Mosmiller Flowers

Add to every occasion...The Dinner Party...The Debut...The Afternoon Tea—or for the Birthday—The Newborn Babe or the Convalescing Friend.

Mosmiller Florist

115 E. MAIN ST. RICHMOND, VA.

The Ewart's Cafeterias

EXCELLENT FOOD

REASONABLE PRICES

RICHMOND, VA. 112-114 N. 5th St.

NORFOLK, VA. 112-114 Market St

WASHINGTON, D. C. 522 13th, N. W.

VIRGINIA COLONIAL CHURCHES

An interesting and illuminating series of sketches by qualified writers of the early Churches in Virginia.

$10.00 A COPY POSTPAID.

To students of history, biography and research, this book affords a fund of information as to the amazing effect which Churchmen had on the founding of the colonies and the tremendous part they played in the upbuilding of the nation.

Cloth bound, 318 pages, 35 full page illustrations. Order now from SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN CO., Richmond, Va.

Kohler's

JEWELERS TO RICHMOND SINCE 1856

209 EAST BROAD STREET

Cole's

208 North Fourth St., Richmond, Va.

"WHEN YOU THINK OF PARTIES, THINK OF

Cole's

TRAVEL ANYWHERE—ANY DAY—ON THE SOUTHERN FOR 1½c PER MILE

A Fare for Every Purse

ONE WAY AND ROUND TRIP COACH TICKETS
1½c for each mile traveled
ROUND TRIP TICKETS
*2c for each mile traveled—Return limit 15 days
ROUND TRIP TICKETS
*2½c for each mile traveled—Return limit 6 months
ONE WAY TICKETS
*3c for each mile traveled

Southern Railway System

City Ticket Office, 801-A E. Main Street RICHMOND, VA.

*Good in Sleeping and Parlor Cars on payment of proper charges for space occupied.

Hotel John Marshall

DISTINGUISHED AS ITS NAME
FRANKLIN AT FIFTH STREET

Enjoy the supreme comfort of a stay at the Southland's finest hotel achievement. Dine luxuriously in the Main Dining Room, or at a very moderate cost in the attractive Coffee Shop. The Hotel is within walking distance of the shopping, financial, church and theatrical centers.

Hotel William Byrd

Opposite Broad Street Station

This Hotel is ideally located in the residential section, and just off of Richmond's beautiful Monument Avenue.

Hotel Richmond

Opposite State Capitol

The cafe is unsurpassed for good food, reasonable prices and quick service. Within a block of Federal Reserve Bank, across the street from famous old St. Paul's Church, and a block of the City Hall.

DELICIOUS FOOD—MODERATE TARIFF—CONVENIENT LOCATIONS

FOR THE YOUNG PEOPLE

For the Southern Churchman.

O LITTLE STAR.

Maude F. Mumma.

O little star, you scattered far
Your beams of golden light;
O little star, you carried far
Your message clear and bright!

O little star, you from afar,
Were seen by men of old;
O little star, though small you are,
Your message well you told!

* * *

For the Southern Churchman.

Those Rectory Children.

CHAPTER 2.

M. L. G.

"Here's mother!" shouted Philip and Kent as they dropped a "sick soljer" on the ground and ran around the house. Old Frank (the rectory horse, was named for the Bishop), as they came up, looked around, expecting pats, and when his harness was off, an apple to begin his supper on. "Oh, father, can I drive Frank to the stable?" cried Kent. "Uncle Danger and David are carrying wood." "And can I unhitch him?" Philip put in. "I know how to rub him down as good as—"

"As well as"— mother said, ending in a sort of jerk as father lifted her out of the carriage to the ground, without her touching the step. Father was tall and straight, with a grave face, but eyes that sparkled. Mother was small, and brown and merry. Sometimes she was troubled, but mother didn't like trouble, and set to work to remedy a bad situation so promptly that it seemed to melt before her face.

"Drive him 'round, boys," their father said, "but Uncle Danger had better put him up. Howdy up there!" he called as he caught sight of Winnie waving from the window. "Coming right up!"

And soon they were all together around the fire, Father holding Claire, mother in her big chair with a small boy on each arm. David and Winnie on the low "hassocks" that stood at each end of the fireplace.

"Was it a good missionary meeting?" asked Claire.

"Yes, we had a real missionary there!" mother answered. "A cousin of the Trent ladies. He will speak at service next Sunday so you can hear him, and he has promised to come to dinner with us, and you can see him, too, darling," and mother put out her hand to pat Claire's yellow head.

"Is he a Injun missionary?" asked Kent.

"No, Chinese—all across the world from here, Kent."

"Do he wears a pigtail like in my book?" Philip asked solemnly.

"No, goosey!" cried David scornfully. "He's just gone over there. He's a 'Merican. Some day maybe I can be a missionary to China or to Africa—that's a nice, hot country. I think I'll go there."

"Nothing would make mother or me happier, son, than to have you a missionary. But not to find ease." Father smiled. "You'll read some day of another David who went to Africa. He found great misery there—cruelty and ignorance. It was hard to make the natives understand that he came with a message of hope. Some tried to kill him. But slowly, slowly, he taught them of Jesus. Some believed, and he planted mission stations in a great part of Africa where no Christian had been before. He was found at last on his knees in his hut—his spirit had gone back to heaven as he prayed for Africa."

"I see, father. He had a better reason," David said soberly.

"What David was that? Not Cousin David Morris?" asked Winnie uncertainly.

"No, honey, David Livingstone. He was from Scotland. But besides the missionary we had some news for you and some for Claire here."

"Tell mine first!" begged Claire.

"You may not like it at first, darling, but you'll be glad later. Dr. Carrington stopped us as we were coming home to tell us that he has arranged for us to take you to Baltimore a few days after Christmas. The great doctor he wanted to see you is to be there. Of course, we knew this would happen some time. Don't tremble, my big girl!" Father held her more closely.

"I w-won't," Claire said, "but—but it s-seems so near!"

"Claire's talk shakes, too," remarked Philip, "like this—bub-bub-but. That's funny."

"Hush up, you, Philip!" Winnie cried angrily, for she felt something of the little sister's dread.

"Once before a battle a great soldier was told that his knees were trembling," said mother, "and he answered, 'They would tremble still more if they knew where I'll take them today'. Claire is that kind of soldier—all the braver for being willing to go on in spite of some fears. And now for your news, Winnie," mother changed the subject quickly, "The cedar-picking begins tomorrow night, and you may help this year. So you and David have lessons done, and be ready to start with father. Well, here's Uncle Danger with Claire's tray. Will you bring me my supper, too, Uncle Danger? Claire and I will have ours together if the rest of you don't mind. Now be good boys," as they jumped down from her chair. "Wash your hands and drink your milk."

"A'right mother!" and Kent was off.

"I'd rather wash the milk and drink our—no, I don't 'spose we could." Philip said, "but I don't think the old way's intrustin'."

"Here, get un on father's shoulder!" His father lifted him up as he spoke. "Isn't the world 'intrustin' from there?"

"I'm the king!" shouted Philip. "Run along, David an' Winnie, the king's comin' downstairs on his elephum!"

* * *

How Frogs Spend the Winter.

During mild autumn days when the birds are laboring through the air trying to reach a warmer wintering ground, Mr. Frog is lazily dreaming on the shore of some stream or lake. He is not worrying about long journeys to distant lands. He is enjoying the last warm days of the season and catching the last stray insects.

In a few days or weeks, he will have to leave his sun-bath and make his escape from the winter frosts. Just as a child delays his going to bed for sleep, just so does the frog linger as long as possible on the bank.

He has no fur coat for the cold days; neither does he have warm blood within his veins. He is called "cold-blooded" because he has no internal heating system like the rabbit or man, and he cannot raise his temperature above that of the air or water around him. He knows he cannot stand the winter blasts which will soon blow.

1874-1935

After more than sixty years, the ideals of our founder, Joseph W. Bliley, still guide The House of Bliley in that service of devoted efforts to those who are in sorrow.

The Joseph W. Bliley Co.

Incorporated

Funeral Directors

Third and Marshall Streets
Richmond, Virginia

Phone 2-7267

J. Henry Brown & Son

MEMORIAL CRAFTSMEN
FOR FIFTY YEARS

COMPLIMENT
THE SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN
ON THE ANNIVERSARY
OF ITS
ONE HUNDRED YEARS' SERVICE
TO THE EPISCOPAL CHURCH

Monuments Bronze Tablets
Iron Fencing and Section Enclosures
219-221 West Main Street

Edwin S. Gorham, Inc.

Publishers and Booksellers.
Established 1900.
Church Literature and Art, Bibles, Prayer Books and Hymnals, Devotional Books, Parish Requisites.
Catalogues and Information on request.
18 West 45th Street, New York.

Some Important Facts in English Church History

EXAMINED AND REVIEWED

By

REV. W. P. WITSELL, D. D.

This is an illuminating and instructive review of the history of the Episcopal Church in England from the earliest records, with commentaries on the book with the above title compiled by the Rev. C. L. Wells, D. D., of Sewanee, Tenn.

As a digest of the records of the establishment and growth of the Church; its maintenance and continuity of existence as an independent religious body amid the vicissitudes of early English politics, and efforts of outside interference, this review affords a valuable fund of information to churchmen.

In pamphlet form.
Price, 25 cents

For sale by
SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN CO.
Richmond, Va.

ST. ANNE'S SCHOOL

Charlottesville, Virginia

Thorough preparation for Northern and Southern colleges. Exceptional courses in Music, Art, Dramatics. Also Lower School. All sports, including Riding. Moderate fees.

MARGARET PORTER, M. A., Headmistress

WHAT will you have next fall? The chicks of this spring will be your pullets next fall.

1. Keep Good Chicks.
2. Give them Good Care.
3. Start them on ES-TE-BE Starting Mash.
4. Grow them on ES-TE-BE Growing Mash.

You will make money by this plan. After forty years' experience we know—we know—how to make them.

S. T. Beveridge & Co.

7th and Byrd Streets 2-6507

INCORPORATED 1794

The Mutual Assurance Society of Virginia

RICHMOND, VA.

INSURES BUILDINGS AGAINST FIRE AND LIGHTNING

W. MEADE ADDISON, Principal Agent

G. MOFFETT KING, Secretary

THE

Southern Bank & Trust Co.

Serving Richmond Depositors for Nineteen Years

EXTENDS CONGRATULATIONS TO THE SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN ON ITS ANNIVERSARY OF ONE HUNDRED YEARS' SERVICE TO THE EPISCOPAL CHURCH

MURPHY'S HOTEL

RICHMOND VIRGINIA

An old Richmond landmark that has kept the pace, extends congratulations to the Southern Churchman on its 100th anniversary.

A. GERALD BUSH, Manager

VIRGINIA TRUST COMPANY

RICHMOND, VA.

THE SAFE EXECUTOR

FOR FORTY-ODD YEARS THIS COMPANY'S CHIEF BUSINESS HAS BEEN THAT OF ACTING

EXECUTOR-GUARDIAN

AND

TRUSTEE

Inquiries invited

821 East Main Street

Richmond, Va.

ATLANTIC LIFE Insurance Company

Congratulates the Southern Churchman upon the occasion of its 100th anniversary of continuous publication.

ATLANTIC LIFE is the oldest company domiciled in the South selling ordinary legal-reserve life insurance exclusively. Soundly established and favorably known in Virginia, the Carolinas, and other Southern States, Atlantic Life offers all modern forms of life insurance for protection and investment at low rates.

ATLANTIC LIFE Insurance Company

RICHMOND, VIRGINIA

ANGUS O. SWINK, President

Honestly, It's the Best Policy

THE NEXT HUNDRED YEARS

WITH THIS ISSUE the SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN completes one hundred years of continuous publication and begins a new era. There have been periods of joy when progress was noted in its efforts for service, and times of despair when lack of funds to carry on during periods of financial depression made continuance of the weekly issues seem hopeless. Sustained by the kindly interest and loyal support of its subscribers, and the generous help of good friends in time of trouble, it has weathered the occasional storms of distress, and enters upon what its publishers hope may be another century of work and service for the Church, with confidence and the firm determination to make the SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN a bigger and better instrument of service to God and humanity.

A GREATER PAPER FOR GREATER SERVICE

I have learned with a decided degree of enthusiasm of your ambitious plans for a really great Southern Churchman. Such a paper as you contemplate is, in my judgment, one of the most urgent needs of the Church today.

Its fine background, its dignified age, and its honorable history should constitute for the Southern Churchman a strong basis of appeal to our Church people everywhere. All this should add zest to your renewed vision and to the more generous co-operation which is being promised you.

I know of no blessing in the world of religious journalism which offers so much of enrichment in Christian knowledge and in the life and work of the Church as does the dear old Southern Churchman. There was never a time, perhaps, when a paper of its special characteristics was so needed. I congratulate you upon its one hundredth anniversary, and with confidence and in cordial approval I commend the paper to all our people, especially that portion of our Church family whose proximity suggests natural and cordial ecclesiastical bonds.

I shall hope that every family in the diocese of Southwestern Virginia will insure a full year's reading for 1935 by a prompt subscription. There is no knowledge comparable in importance to information concerning the kingdom of God. I know of no publication that is more capable of giving this knowledge or that is more likely to properly interpret the mind and ways of our Church. May your larger endeavors in behalf of the paper be firmly sustained and carried to a goal of splendid accomplishment.

Faithfully yours,

ROBERT C. JETT,

Bishop of Southwestern Virginia.

DESIGNED FOR THE PROMOTION OF PRACTICAL PIETY, THE DIFFUSION OF RELIGIOUS AND GENERAL INTELLIGENCE, AND THE MAINTENANCE OF THE PRINCIPLES OF THE PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL CHURCH

Southern Churchman

DOMINUS FRUSTRA NISI 1835

Vol. 100. RICHMOND, VA., JANUARY 12, 1935. No. 2.

WORKERS TOGETHER WITH HIM

To be glad of life and the privilege of service;

To ask not for an easier life but for strength equal to my tasks;

To learn to smile though burdens seem heavy;

To remember always that God's pattern of a beautiful life is made up of common-place duties;

To be loyal to the Great Physician and ready to do what He appoints;

To minister from love and leave results with Him;

To prize His honor above worldly success;

To live so that each soul that touches mine, may be stronger for life's battle;

To abide in Him always and rejoice in His will;

This is service, worship, rest.

—Charlotte Aikens.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

From Sir Charles Marston.
13, Queen Anne's Gate, London, Eng.
Essex House
160 Central Park South
New York
December 27, 1934.

Mr. Editor:

I am constrained to write a message for this New Year on the eve of my departure to Palestine. It has become my mission in life to ascertain the reality or otherwise of the Bible. For the past ten years I have been spending money on Excavations in Bible Lands. The time has now come when the work already accomplished, and the results already attained, must be made known. I invite your cooperation.

You will have noticed the rapid advance of modern knowledge, and remarked how it has overturned a great deal of what had previously been taught as assured truth. For example, textbooks on the Science of Physics have been rendered obsolete by the discovery of Relativity. Now a similar fate has overtaken the so-called, "scientific" criticism of the Old Testament. The conjectures and speculations on which this criticism was based, have proved to be unsound, and incapable of sustaining the shocks of recent archaeological discoveries in Bible Lands. For details see my book, "New Bible Evidence" ($2), published by the Fleming H. Revell Company of this city.

The far-reaching effect of the critical collapse can be better imagined than described in a brief communication, such as this letter. The discoveries do not so far prove that the Old Testament, as we understand it, is correct, word for word, or letter for letter; yet they tend to satisfy the suggestion that it is substantially true. And that existing "Scientific" Bible criticism, even as applied to the New Testament, must be regarded with grave suspicion.

In face of the now recognized fact of the Reality of the Unseen, the bogey which has been made of Bible miracles, is also being dissipated. The new science of Psychical Research is throwing a good deal of light on such happenings, and leaders of thought are recognizing that the supernatural is not the incredible or unbelievable, rather is it something we do not yet fully understand.

As you are aware, the Bible has been the basis on which the great civilization of this country was reared. For years a materialistic school of speculative thought has been allowed to confuse our minds as to the substantial reality of its contents. My message—a layman's message—to America today, is that this darkness is passing away, and that the evidence of things "unseen" is no longer to be relegated entirely to the region of Faith.

Charles Marston.

P. S.: My address until March, will be, care Barclay's Bank, Jerusalem, Palestine, after which I plan to return here.

Something Definite Needed.

Mr. Editor:

From the recently issued Living Church Annual, I find reported 305 Negro congregations, with 156 Negro clergy, with thirty Negro clergy either retired or non-parochial. The total number of Negro communicants reported is 45,566. Of this number only 9,648 are reported from the Province of Sewanee. There is a striking contrast of advance between the Province of Sewanee and the Province of New York and New Jersey. Well-nigh thirty years ago (1907), the Province of Sewanee reported 5,949 colored communicants, while that of New York and New Jersey reported 2,489. This latter Province now reports 13,646, in exclusively colored congregations, and there are thousands of colored communicants in white congregations.

Surely, the National Council ought to do something definite tending to render more efficient and self-sustaining the work of our Church in the Southern States. At present there is a steady lapsing of the work in the South, and a steady increase in the North. In the Fourth and Seventh Provinces, where the bulk of Negroes reside, we have a combined communicant list of 11,127 with sixty-three Negro clergy, against 34,439 colored communicants, with ninety-three Negro clergy, in all the other provinces in the North and West.

George F. Bragg, Jr.

Baltimore, Maryland.
December 18, 1934.

THOUGHTS for the THOUGHTFUL

Our hope is in heroic men,
Star-led, to build the world again.
—Markham.

"Faith is trusting God's reason where my reason cannot reach."

Oliver Wendell Holmes said, "Fame usually comes to those who are thinking of something else."

One of the best ways of seeing the world around you is to get out of yourself.—J. A. Duren.

"There is an unspeakable fulness and definiteness in the announcements of Christ, compared with other teachings on immortality."

"Better guide well the young than reclaim them when old;
Better put a strong fence 'round the top of the cliff
Than an ambulance down in the valley."

The love of Jesus is different from any other love in the world. To be loved by Him is to be made a guest in His world, the sheep in His pasture, and children in His home.

"I will lift up mine eyes unto the hills." The vision of God unseals the lips of man. Herein lies strength for conflict with the common enemy of the praying world known as wandering thoughts.

Whatever else be lost among the years,
God still abides, and love remains the same,
And bravery will glimmer through mens tears,
And truth will keep its clean and upright name.
—Grace N. Crowell.

There is no rising of man so interesting to study or so blessed to emulate as that of a sinner into a saint.—Guthrie.

"Happy are they who live each day in the faithful pursuit of duty."

All other religions are concerned with man seeking God. Christianity is the religion of God seeking man. The ethnic faiths that man's quest after God; Christianity is God's quest for man through Jesus Christ. Note how every utterance of Christ's is based on this point of view: How that He always refers to His Father and Himself as seeking men. He has been sent to men. God is in Him, reconciling the world to Himself.—Selected.

CONTENTS

	Page.
Letters to the Editor	2
Thoughts for the Thoughtful	2
Editorials	3
Church and World Problems As Others See Them	4
The Thousandfold Page—F. W. Neve	5
Byproducts—Rev. Louis Tucker, D. D.	6
Messages of Congratulations	7
The Dayspring—A Sermon by Rev. P. T. R. Kirk	8
The First Sunday After The Epiphany—W. E. Callender	9
From the Philosophy of Phillips Brooks—Eunice Wingate Quimby	9
Book Reviews	10
News From the Front	11
Woman's Auxiliary	12
Church Intelligence	13
Family Department	18
Children's Department	20

Southern Churchman

SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN COMPANY
Mayo Memorial Church House,
110 West Franklin Street,
Richmond, Va.

Officers.

President, RT. REV. H. ST. GEORGE TUCKER, D. D.
Vice-President, E. OTTO N. WILLIAMS.
Secretary-Treasurer, MR. JOHN H. COOKE.

Board of Directors.

RT. REV. H. ST. GEORGE TUCKER, D. D.
REV. CHURCHILL J. GIBSON, D. D.
REV. GEORGE P. MAYO, D. D.
REV. CHARLES W. SHEERIN.
MR. CARL H. NOLTING.
MR. ALEXANDER W. WEDDELL.
MR. E. RANDOLPH WILLIAMS.
MR. LANGBOURNE M. WILLIAMS, JR.
MISS SUSANNE C. WILLIAMS.

Voting Trustees.

RT. REV. ROBERT CARTER JETT, D. D.
RT. REV. H. ST. GEORGE TUCKER, D. D.
MR. JAMES M. BALL, JR.
MR. ROBERT B. TUNSTALL.
MR. LANGBOURNE M. WILLIAMS, JR.

Editors.

REV. CHARLES W. SHEERIN....Editor
REV. F. W. NEVE, D. D.,
Associate Editor
MRS. CONRAD H. GOODWIN,
Associate Editor
MRS. R. TATE IRVINE.....News Editor
JOHN H. COOKE..Secretary and Manager

Entered at the Post Office in Richmond, Va., as second-class mail matter.

SUBSCRIPTION PRICE.

$3.00 a year in advance. To the Clergy, $2.00. Six months, $1.50. Total subscriptions, three months, 50 cents; 10 cents a copy. Foreign postage, $1.00 additional.

For the convenience of subscribers subscriptions are continued at expiration unless otherwise ordered. Notice of renewal, discontinuance or change of address should be sent two weeks before the date they go into effect.

RECEIPT OF PAYMENT is shown in about two weeks by change of date on address label. If date is not properly extended after each payment, notify us promptly. No receipt for payment will be sent.

Notice post office address. The exact post office address to which we are directing the paper at the time of writing MUST ALWAYS BE GIVEN. Our mailing list is arranged by post office and not alphabetically.

Make all checks and money orders payable to the Southern Churchman, and not to an individual.

ADVERTISEMENTS.—Rates quoted on request. For classified see head of that department.

Representatives wanted in each Parish; liberal commissions.

News concerning the Church at large always welcome.

SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN

Catholic for every truth of God; Protestant against every error of man.

EDITORIALS

Vol. 100. RICHMOND, VA., JANUARY 12, 1935. No. 2.

The Knowledge of What To Do.

The Collect for the Sunday after Epiphany beseeches God to give us understanding of what we ought to do and the power to accomplish it. All in all that rather sums up the whole work of Christians in the Church.

The understanding of what we ought to do is possibly the hardest problem for us. There are, of course, those easy things which we know almost instinctively —we will not as Christians break the Commandments, nor will we desecrate holy places or things. But in all the problems facing us in this present world, the course of action of the Christian at times puzzles even the best minds.

Is it not in the Spirit of God that real things will be accomplished rather than in the method? Was it not the Irish poet, "A. E.", who claimed that it made little or no difference what form of government we adopted, but rather the cultural growth of the people was important? We believe that Christians could well heed that advice, for we have had a surprisingly quarrelsome way of claiming method as Christian rather than attitudes and things of the Spirit.

Most church quarrels have been over matters of method, or, to use an ecclesiastical term "polity", rather than matters of spirit. Most church denominational names show that it is method that has caused them to separate from other brethren. Presbyterians, Methodists, Episcopalians, even Roman, all denote a difference in method, when as a whole we have more often than not been at one in the more vital things of religion.

In our own Church we have again the same differences in what we delight in calling "schools of thought", but which often have been schools of thoughtlessness. We have those who feel that vestments are essential and those who cling to simple methods. Too often they have quarreled bitterly. The Epiphany collect could teach us much in measuring our methods against the more important Spirit of God.

At present there seems to be an attempt on the part of some to talk about missionary work as "of the order of 281". This is again exhalting the method —when the method of approaching missionary work will reflect the spirit of the members of the Church as a whole. If we loyally adhere to God with earnestness, our Church will reflect in every method His Spirit and we will know what things we should do and how we should accomplish them.

Missionary Causes and The Present Times.

While all who are aware of the spirit in the Church since the last General Convention know that our Church is better off and more united than at any time since the depression, we have not as yet been able financially to catch up to the generous giving that is needed to support great missionary causes. Probably many have felt that it was impossible to pledge in advance in a year that promises much, but no one knows just exactly how much.

Consequently many fine missionary causes will to be reduced, unless some other method is found to gain support. We have just heard, for instance, that in the field where our Church has possibly its greatest success as a missionary Church, several clergy will have to be notified that "there is no work" unless special contributions are solicited.

To a conscientious bishop placed in charge of such work, there can only be one answer. He knows there is work—plenty of work for his clergy to do, but he must find ways and means of support. He has only one method, the method of personal solicitation, and we know of several bishops who will do this hard work during the coming winter in order that the Church may not suffer a loss which will take years to recover.

We hope that our laity and clergy who are asked to help in these special appeals will be broad-minded and make the solicitation as easy as possible. It does not seem right in a country where already in every section more luxuries than for several years are being bought daily, anyone should deny the real Gospel of Christ to be taken away from under-privileged people. Our people in most instances have not "given until it hurts" and probably will not. But until a full recovery is made in our land, we have the opportunity to support much that will be vital in the history of religion, and we trust that those gallant missionary bishops will not be rebuffed in trying to do what they feel God has called upon them to do.

Future Plans.

Since our news editor gave us such nice publicity about our leaving our present residence, we have received a number of letters asking about the editorship of this paper. We will continue to be responsible for this page, and in a few weeks expect to be able to announce that a very able clergyman will become Associate Editor. The new editor's duties will be to select all manuscript material. This scheme, we trust, will continue the policy of a "Church family newspaper for all the nation".

Church and World Problems as Others See Them

MR. ROOSEVELT AND WAR PROFITS.

From "The Guardian," December 21, 1934.

There seems to be no limit to the energy of the President of the United States. We sympathize with his latest intention to tighten up the administration of the criminal law, which has been glaringly lax in some directions. That, however, is a more particularly domestic matter than his intentions about war profits. He wants to make preparations for annihilating the profits that might otherwise be made out of a future war. It will not be easy. There will always be the unexpected circumstances which will put a Government at war in sore straits, and there are always those who can and will make profits out of those who are in sore straits. There is also the other side of the shield. In this country, at any rate, some private armament firms were utterly ruined by the War.

Mr. Roosevelt has appointed a strong committee to recommend legislation, and has put at the head of it Mr. Bernard Baruch, whom President Wilson appointed as his chairman of the War Industries Board. If the committee can propose any measure that could lead to cooperation with Great Britain in control of the manufacture and trade in arms, he will find us most willing to cooperate. We hope that the committee may, but their difficulties will be great. Governments dare not shirk the responsibility of keeping up preparations for defence. In our own case to keep up the Royal Arsenals on a scale that could neglect the service of private firms would be utterly wrong, and no one can comprehensively define armaments when all science and invention are applied to war. But all inquiry is to the good, and Europe may learn from America something that may lead towards the really important object of reducing arms by agreement in time of peace.

THE RECREATION OF THE CLERGY.

By Observer, in "The Record," December 21, 1934.

One is told, primly, that a clergyman is never off duty. On the other hand, to change the metaphor, the bow cannot be always bent. What sports and exercises are permissible to the clergy? I have read somewhere that of old time the game of bowls was much favored by the clergy; but that can only have been true of country clergy and is certainly not conspicuously true of them now. Of present day sports I think we need not reckon cricket and football, for these are part of the parochial machinery. In certain parishes the same is true of lawn tennis. Who has not heard of the vicar's daughters who would not let their father fix on a new curate until they had tested him and found he could hold his own in a four at tennis? Golf is certainly extra-parochial as a rule, and need not be too expensive if the cleric is content to be a five-day member of a golf club and dispenses with caddies. It has the merit of being suitable for men of all ages, and the amount of enjoyment and exercise to be got out of it bears no particular relation to one's proficiency. Hiking, which should in strictness mean walking with a knapsack, is on the whole the exercise of the young, though walking pure and simple belongs to all ages. Cycling holds its own, though the coming of the motor has made it a dangerous sport. Still, it has the advantage of carrying the cyclist away from the ordinary scenes of duty. Motoring is not a form of exercise in the ordinary sense of the word, though it may be allowed to be a recreation. These are the allowable sports which readily occur to the mind as being more or less generally available. Hobbies which are also forms of exercise are multiform. Perhaps some reader will tell me of unusual clerical hobbies. Thus there is a certain retired bishop who is said to make a hobby of cabinet-making and wood-carving, at which he is an expert. Not to go further—the wise cleric will at any rate try to secure some recreation which will take him away from the parish and into the open air for at any-rate one half-day every week.

THE AMERICAN ASSOCIATION FOR THE ADVANCEMENT OF SCIENCE.

From "The Presbyterian Banner,' 'January 3, 1935.

This large body of scientific men and women amounting to several thousands met in Pittsburgh from December 27 to January 2 in their annual meeting, which is an occasion of the first importance to them and to the country and world. It is their annual clearing house where they bring their most recent achievements and results, and present them to the test of their critical audience and send them out into the world. A large number of sciences are represented, many of them unknown even in name a general ago, and many of the titles of the papers read were quite unintelligible to the uninitiated. It was said that there is no one mind in the world that could understand all of them. The world-famous Einstein addressed a small group of mathematicians on a recondite subject when not even all or possibly half of them could comprehend all his mysterious equations and processes and results.

Some people might think that much of this work is quite useless as being simply so much fantastic imagination of these queer people, and that it is all moonshine so far as practical results are concerned. Of course, this is simply our American spirit of wanting to measure everything in pounds and tons or in dollars and cents. Such a view is itself born of simple-minded unacquaintance with these far strange worlds in which these inquiring minds live. They are simple truth-seekers not thinking of and scarcely caring for any practical result, for any new truth is so much added knowledge and extension to our universe and to our mental stature.

But these studies, however remote and abstract and useless they may seem, do have practical results of the most tremendous kind. Science secretes civilization. All our knowledge is rushing towards some application, however unseen and unimaginable it may now seem. All our magic machines are the product of these sciences. Our Wattses and Morses and Bells and Marconis and Edisons and Wrights are the children of these scientists and are simply carrying into execution what these explorers first discovered. Morse could never have invented the electric telegraph had it not been for the work of Franklin and Faraday before him. These men are pushing out the frontiers of the universe in the stars and nebulæ and plumbing its unsuspected depths in atoms and electrons and thus opening doors for the inventors to enter and apply their results.

And as for religious implications and applications, while these scientific men are not primarily thinking of these, yet they also are usually devout men and furnish us with materials which we can build into a grander temple of wonder and worship of the Creator and Lord of all.

SIXTY YEARS A SUBSCRIBER.

I enclose check for $3.00 with pleasure for 1935. I am so glad you will soon celebrate your centennial. I think I am one of your oldest subscribers. I have taken your paper for more than sixty years. Best wishes.

Mrs. William Beattie.

THE THOUSANDFOLD PAGE

ARCHDEACON FREDERICK W. NEVE, D. D.

On the Restoration of Faith in God

"People say, and say truly, that the great trouble with our world at the present moment is that material things and what we know about them, have outrun spiritual things and what we know about them." (Edward S. Martin in Harper's for January, 1935.) The trouble has also been that our learned theologians have been so absorbed in matters of historical and literary criticism that they have failed to realize that we have been marking time on the spiritual frontier. Dr. Lyman Abbott must have realized this, as in an editorial in the Outlook some months before his death, he used these significant words:—"Nothing does this age need more than a rediscovery of the Spiritual Universe." This statement was written some years ago, but the need is even greater now than it was then, because material things have been progressing, while spiritual things have been retiring more and more into the background.

Possibilities of Faith.

One of Christ's most pregnant sayings, was:—"Have faith in God," coupling it at the same time with one of those emphatic sayings as to the tremendous possibilities of faith which seem to open up the way to the possession of a power capable of transforming the world. The words of our Lord constitute a challenge which was eagerly taken up by His followers in the early days of Christianity but which seem to fall on dull and deaf ears at the present day. If spiritual things are to catch up with the front line of material progress and even advance beyond that line, it can only be done by real and genuine faith in God, such as Christ set before His disciples.

A True Witness to the World Lacking.

It is no wonder that faith in spiritual things has failed to so large an extent in the world generally when it sees so few signs of it in those who are supposed to represent Christ to mankind. If there is to be a genuine revival of faith, it must most certainly take its beginnings in the lives of those who profess to be His followers. We can hardly expect the outside world to believe unless we Christians can show such results of our faith as to prove that they came from God, and cannot possibly be obtained from any other source. "By their fruits ye shall know them," was a test which Christ said should be applied to those who made a profession of faith in Him.

Fruits of Divine Origin.

That these fruits were to be of heavenly origin can be readily seen, when we remember our Lord's words to His disciples, on the night before His Death:—"As the branch cannot bear fruit of itself, except it abide in the vine; no more can ye, except ye abide in me. I am the Vine, ye are the branches. He that abideth in me and I am in him, the same bringeth forth much fruit, for without me ye can do nothing." It is evident from these words of our Lord, that as branches of the Vine (that is, Christ Himself), we share in the divine life, which comes to us through Him. Thus the fruit which He speaks of can only be produced by us through receiving this divine life from Him, for He expressly says,—"without me ye can do nothing."

The Divine Life Should Be Manifest In Us.

Lyman Abbott used to define religion, if the writer remembers aright, as "the life of God in the life of man." If the life of God is really within us as the governing and controlling power of our life, then it must manifest itself in such a way as to be apparent to the world, and it is this manifestation of the life of God in us and through us which can alone give convincing evidence to the world that Christianity is from God.

We Must Reflect the Glory of God.

Christ said as much in His Sermon on the Mount when He told His disciples, "Ye are the light of the world. A city that is set on a hill cannot be hid. . . . Let your light so shine before men that they may see your good works and glorify your Father which is in heaven." Can faith in God produce such results as to convince the world that He is manifesting Himself through us; not, of course, to the extent that He manifested Himself through His Son, Jesus Christ, but nevertheless in a measure sufficient to prove that God is with us of a truth, as was the case with the early Christians.

A Want of Faith Means a Want of Power.

That may seem to us impossible, as we look back upon our past experience of our power to do things, but that is because our faith in God has sunk to so low a level that we cannot realize what the power of God can do in us and through us. If Christianity is to catch up with material progress and advance beyond it, we must seek for such a faith in God as will enable us to convince the world that our religion is from Him by manifesting a power and mighty spiritual influence such as the world can neither give nor take away, but which Christ implied would necessarily follow from true faith in God.

* * *

THE CHILDREN OF LIGHT.

"Ye are the light of the world." St. Matt. 5:11.

I do believe Christ can bestow
Upon this earth a sunlit glow,
Which will make life a glorious thing,
And every child of God a king.

Why should we dwell 'midst clouds of fear
When glorious sunlight is so near,
Or in the gloom of doubt be found,
When love encircles us around?

Let us put on our armor bright,
And shine as children of the light;
The shadows soon will fade away,
As at the coming of the day.

For Christ has bidden us to shine,
And thus reveal His love divine,
That all the world may come to see
What life on earth can really be.

Christ brought the Light of Heaven to earth, and by keeping near to Him, His light will shine upon us, and we shall be the means of blessing those around us.

Frederick W. Neve.

Byproducts

The Reverend Louis Tucker, D. D.

Happiness is a by-product. Life is lived in the leisure that follows labor. In like manner, for religious bodies, income is a by-product. Money comes as a result of reaching souls. The whole philosophy of the "Standard of Living," on which modern mass-production is based, is apt to twist off the track into assumption that happiness depends upon the number of things a man possesses—which is not true—and the whole philosophy of Church Organization is apt to twist astray into the assumption that we must maintain the organizations for soul-reaching before souls can be reached—must support Parish, Diocese and General Church before souls can be reached—which is not true either. In the one case we substitute excitement and gratified greed for happiness. In the other, we substitute a gradual drying-up of income, based on discouragement, for cheerful Church expansion.

Our Lord lived in a complex society as careless and, in some ways, as highly organized as our own; and among other problems He met and solved this problem for us. But our Lord was Divine; and, even on the human side, He was a great poet and a genius. Therefore His statement of the solution is cast in parable form and poetically besides, that it may be true for every place and for all time. It had to consist in principles put in the form of pictures and, therefore, capable of more than one interpretation. He even gave the reason for this. It was to prevent persons unfit to apply them from misusing the tremendous energy of His ideas, "That hearing they might hear and not understand," as He puts it.

The basic general principle of His solution is, "Use the agencies you now have to the full extent of their possibilities and of your powers, and you will find no trouble in expanding them. To the worker belong tools. To him that hath shall be given." This general principle He specialized in more than one particular story; and of all the ways of losing energy He seems to have been least patient with that which comes from overlooking and neglecting individuals; perhaps because it is the commonest and hardest to avoid of human failings. His stories of the Lost Coin, of the Lost Sheep and of the Lost Man (The Prodigal), are examples.

Our problem, then, in applying His solution, is to reach and, if possible, to bring back every individual person who has strayed away and become indifferent. Note, every person, not every penny. In the parable of the Lost Coin no comment doubts that the Lost Coin represents a person, not a penny, a soul and not a shilling. Combing the Church for missing contributions can be of only temporary crisis-value, and the crises will be worse each time and will come again and again. The search must be for people, not for pence; but if the people return they bring their pennies with them and so the organization lives.

What is the best practical machinery by which this can be done?

First we must distinguish carefully between profits and prophets. We must not confuse purses with persons. But, secondly, we must acknowledge and teach others to acknowledge the existence of both. Churches must live; and coin, in these hard days, represents care and courage and self-sacrifice, all spiritual things. Therefore, there must be teaching from the pulpit that every one with an income is a trustee for God and owes God part of it. If the income be very small the payment to God may be very small also; but it is payment and not gift and so must never be neglected. No man's heart is opened until his purse is. If he have anything and do not give God some of it, he is still one of the lost sheep. But the amount he gives rests between him and God.

After this careful pulpit preparation from the spiritual side, there should be equally careful report as to what becomes of the gifts. If there be a year-book or a parish paper, this need not all come from the pulpit, but it is essential. The Church, too, has its stewardship and should make real report to every giver.

Then there should be drastic clerical work on the part of the clergy. No one really can tell how many sheep or coins or sons are lost until it is known exactly how many there ought to be. The basis of such book-keeping is the baptized and not the confirmed. Baptized people have souls and incomes as well as confirmed people, and both belong to God. Not only those who come but those who ought to come, not only those who belong but those who ought to belong should be listed and looked up. It is a continuous task. Modern Christians move like the aurora borealis; but it must be done. It is not primarily Priest's work. Parish Secretaries, when there are any, can do it better. But done it must be.

Then the task of personally visiting these people—all of them—and asking them to come to church and to support the church must be divided among members of the parish. The best results come when the canvassers compose at least one-fourth of the parish; that is, when each canvasser has only three families to see. Canvassers do better when they go out in pairs. A pair thus makes six visits. In preparation for the work canvassers should have at least one lecture of information and instruction, one service of prayer for God's help, and one informal parish dinner for the assimilation of facts, not food, and the strengthening of enthusiasm. The essential thing is to find the lost sheep, invite them to come to church, tell them they are missed, talk to them of praise and worship. The good old steady-going flock will come anyhow, but the lost sheep will not come unless they are found and re-converted; and no man is converted until his pocket-book is also. Therefore, every one must be asked to support God's work. Yet, if the emphasis be laid on the support and not on the attendance, the canvass is not done. There can be no re-conversion without giving, but the object is not the giving, but the re-conversion. Sums of money needed may be mentioned. Amounts to be given by the individual canvassed should not be. That is between each and the Lord. If he ask what is his share, tell him the total needed and let him choose it himself.

And here we come upon a paradox. Canvasses for missions, where almost all the talk is about missions, the emphasis unmistakably on missions, produce more money for the support of parishes than canvasses for the parish do; just as canvasses where the emphasis is laid on church attendance and renewal of worhip produce more money for the support of both parish and missions than appeals for support do. The psychology is simple. Canvasses in which the emphasis is laid on worship and on missions do not depend for their success upon the social inclusiveness and heartiness of the local congregation, or on the personal popularity of the local rector, but upon larger and more spiritual things.

When the canvass is finished the sum-total subscribed for diocese and missions should be reported to the Diocese and transmitted as it comes in. The vestry should not guarantee a set sum. What funds has it to make the guarantee? All other monies in its hands are designated by the givers for other uses. Here is

(Continued on page 7.)

Messages Of Congratulation

The following came too late to be published in our Centennial Edition:

GREAT IN ITS TEACHINGS.

Many happy returns of the Centennial. As one of that large group of your readers who remembers The Southern Churchman as an integral part of one's childhood home, and whose interest has gadually advanced backward through its pages from the department "For the Young People" to an appreciation even of leading articles and editorials, it is difficult to imagine a real church home in Virginia without The Southern Churchman. I recall one moment of disappointment, however, when as a boy of thirteen, I first came to Richmond. After the fire engine house and the penitentiary had been located as objects of primary interest, the next request was "Where is the Southern Churchman bulding?" expecting to be shown a structure towering well over anything else in town. Upon being told that the offices were on the second floor of some quite inconspicuous building, my amazement was great. But since then we realize that the greatness of this paper is in that which it teaches, and in those principles for which it has ever nobly stood—"Catholic for every truth of God, Protestant aganst every error of Man." On this positive and progressive platform, may The Southern Churchman grow to ever increasing usefulness and prosperity. We wish you Good Luck—in the name of the Lord.

Frederick D. Goodwin,
Bishop Coadjutor of the Diocese of Virginia.

Congratulations on a century's service for God and His Church.

Robert E. Gribbin,
Bishop of Western Carolina.

I have derived so much help from Southern Churchman and find the Family Department and Thoughts for the Thoughtful invaluable.

Most cordial wishes for another century of unbounded usefulness.

Very truly yours,
B. N. deFoe Wagner.

Warrenton, N. C.

It's cheering to see you launching into the deep with an enlarged, safe-looking ship. It's a good cargo, too, that you have on board each trip.

John E. Shea.

Palacios, Texas.

FROM AN OLD-FASHIONED LOW CHURCHMAN.

In handing you my check for three dollars for a renewal of our subscription, permit me to compliment your management on the success of their efforts to maintain this famous old religious publication throughout these very hard times. You have done very well, indeed, it seems to me.

I also want to assure you of my appreciation as to the ability displayed in the articles which appear in the paper. I am often lost in thought as to how I would set about to edit a religious paper, if I was obliged to do so. The task seems to me a very heavy one, and I want to compliment your staff of editors on what they accomplish under difficulties.

In closing, I must say one word more. While I am very much in accord with the general policies of your paper, and entirely in harmony with its prevailing churchmanship, being an old-fashioned low churchman myself, I am unable to pay any respect to the so-called "liberal" churchmanship which your paper occasionally commends. I think that to call such things "liberal," is little short of insulting to us of another school. Better call them coarse and foolish.

My father and mother subscribed to your paper all their days, and my grandmother on my mother's side, and my grandfather on my father's side, did the same, I think; so that as a family we have been with you about one hundred years, or nearly that.

Accept my very good wishes, and believe me

Very sincerely,
W. A. Robertson.

New York City.

My Southern Churchman has just come; it is such a delightful number. We are all so rejoiced to see the new life it has taken on.

Gertrude W. Barton, President,
Woman's Auxiliary, Diocese of Virginia.

Winchester, Va.

VIGOUR AND USEFULNESS INCREASE AS THE YEARS ROLL BY.

Since 1876, with the exception of two years, I have been one of your subscribers.

An earnest, Christian Churchwoman, my Aunt and God-mother, had subscribed to it for fifty-five consecutive years until 1904, when she joined the Church Triumphant. In my youth I read her copy of the Southern Churchman; so you see it has been my household companion a good many years.

Up until 1836, my relatives and ancestors, Leighs, Towneses and Powells, attended services at Grub Hill Church in Amelia County, Virginia.

During the childhood of our four children, my wife would each Sunday afternoon read to them that department of your paper designated as "for young people."

Often now, after reading my copy, I hand it over our back fence to a good neighbor of mine; he and his wife enjoy it almost as much as we do here at home. Generally, I mark those passages which impress me most, to call his attention to them. In the issue of December 15 last, I marked fourteen passages on nine pages, which I regarded to be of unusual interest.

As your journal grows in years, it grows more and more interesting and instructive; unlike those of us well along in the octogenarian class, its vigour and usefulness increases as the years roll by.

With the compliments of the season and wishing you continued success, I am,

Yours truly,
Armistead C. Leigh.

Los Angeles, Calif.

* * *

BYPRODUCTS.

(Continued from page 6.)

another paradox. The dioceses that demand a guarantee get less money in proportion to sum-totals than those which do not. It is the business of the local parish to see that every baptized person in it either gives, or excuses himself from giving, a contribution for missions. Where that is faithfully done, the Diocese gets more than it could otherwise get from any guarantee.

Through the whole canvass the more search there is for souls the more money is given. Money sought as an end in itself dries up and vanishes. Money as a sufficient support is a by-product of the search for souls.

Who comforted the Lord and rested Him? Probably very few. Perhaps the Blessed Virgin Mary, perhaps St. John. But one person certainly did. She was a certain poor widow who dropped two mites into a contribution box and never knew at all that Jesus saw.

THE DAYSPRING

A SERMON

By the Rev. P. T. R. Kirk, Vicar, Christ Church, Westminster, London.

The coming of dawn-light each morning was of very special significance to the people of Israel. To them, as indeed to us all, it told of the terrors of the darkness and the approach of a new day for toil or pleasure. To a primitive nation, which had not yet learned how to turn night into day, perhaps it meant more in those respects than to us. But there was more in it than that for the citizens of Jerusalem. The watchmen on the walls waited until the first rays of light appeared above the horizon, and then gave the signal that the moment had come when the first sacrifice of the morning should be offered. So we understand the reference in the psalm to "watchmen who watch for the morning". The cry rang through the Temple courts:—"This is the day that the Lord hath made; we will rejoice and be glad in it"; and the daily service began.

The Dayspring as a Metaphor.

We can understand how easily the dayspring came into use as a metaphor for the advent of anything that ended terror, brought relief and gladness, and initiated a new era. It was in this sense that Zacharias is said to have chosen the word in announcing the coming of Jesus. It was the daybreak, long expected, and as it had seemed so long deferred; now it was near. A new revelation was imminent. Old things had passed away; behold, all things were made new! The Christ was coming to those who sat in darkness and the shadow of death—words that depict the ignorance and hopelessness that the world knew in pre-Christian times, and knows still in so far as the message of the Gospel has not reached pagan civilization with its changing power. And he would guide their feet into the way of peace.

There had been the darkest hour which comes before the dawn. Things had possibly never seemed so bad for the Jewish race as just before the first Christmas. The clearest thinkers were confused when they spoke of God; the cry, "How long, O Lord, how long?" was repeated wearily. The Eternal seemed to have forgotten them. They were ignorant of His purpose, stumbling like men in the dark as they tried to discover it. To those who understood, or who thought then that they understood, whatever their misgivings afterwards, the birth of the Promised Baby brought hope back again and belief in a new age of righteousness and divine favor. Now they would know more of God, and watch Him doing His mighty works again in the midst of them. This confidence sustained many who were the first disciples of the Master.

The Message of the Gospel.

To those who receive the message of the Christian Gospel this phenomenon of the daybreak is repeated. Our ignorance, in lands where the preaching of that message is of long history, is not so crass as theirs was who watched for a spiritual dawn in Judaea; but the effect is the same. To know Jesus only as a person in a book, an historical character, is to sit in the darkness of ignorance; there is so much more to learn. As we desire to be taught, more and more knowledge is given, and we find Christ rising in our hearts with light. If your connection with Christianity has not informed you of what God wishes to be to you; if it has not made you understand all He desires you to become and to do, you are still among those who wait for the morning. But, inevitably as the dawn, these are shown to faith. Apart from Him, too, our minds are hopeless; we sit under the shadow of death. Life seems to have no rhyme or reason. We drag through weary hours with no fine motive challenging our efort, until despair comes of our ever seeing anything that will awaken ecstasy and worship. Perhaps you know what that means—the staleness with which task follows task, the fear that the only change your circumstances can know will be for the worse, until your soul shudders with dread, and you cry, "Who will show us any good?"

The Coming.

Into that hopelessness the Saviour comes—comes even as He came to those who dwelt under the shadow of the death on Calvary; their fair plans wrecked, their Master lost. He comes with resurrection-light into saddened homes, comes as the dayspring when hope has gone. This, too, you may know; the experience is given for the asking, and if we linger in the place of fears and morbid moods it is because we have not believed those who proved the promise true, and have not taken Christ Himself at His word.

You have probably seen the picture called "The Hopeless Dawn," where members of a family sit at the bedside of a loved one who is passing away. It has been a long night of watching, and they are tired and sad. As they sit in silence the rays of early morning light are creeping in; but they remain without hope. The hopelessness is not in the dawn, but in the hearts that refuse to accept its message. I would like to see a companion painting, one that might be called "The Hour After Dawn," where the anxious friends have risen to greet the daybreak with good cheer, taking heart of hope again. "When the morning was come," says St. John of one of the Easter appearances, "Jesus stood upon the shore." He is in the dawn, for He is the dawn; how, then, can we be hopeless? Even in the valley of the shadow of death, the Shepherd is with His flock. They are frightened as they press on in the darkness. Grimy devils seem to lurk behind the trees. Spreading roots and unseen pitfalls make the journey perilous. The sound of the wind in the leaves is like the muttering of evil powers. Then day breaks, and what a difference! There are flowers behind the trees, not devils! The holes in the road are filled with fresh spring water, where they may slake their thirst. The whispers in the tree-tops are a song of praise to God. Such security have they when the Shepherd is beside them.

In his play, "The Wild Duck," Ibsen shows a little girl, untaught in Christian truth, who has yet learned the need for prayer. She prays each night for Someone to come near and keep her safe. "But do you not pray in the morning?" she is asked. "Why, no!" is the answer. "There's nothing to be afraid of then!" Our mornings should be filled with the prayer of praise; but she was right. There is nothing to be afraid of when the Lord of Light comes to chase away the shades of night.

The Dayspring! It is a title we are glad to know, for it robs both life and death of their terrors. And I want to say to any who are afraid of life, and even more afraid of death, that in the coming of the Son of God with pardon and grace to any human soul there is the beginning of a new and joyous day.

The Way of Peace.

There is a third office that the daybreak performs; in the reputed words of Zacharias, it guides our feet into the way of peace. Writing in one of his Vailima letters, Robert Louis Stevenson tells of a journey he once made in the darkness of the forest of his South Sea Island. He had struggled along for some distance in a very dangerous manner, standing from time to time on a jutting rock, holding on to a tree with one hand while with a knife in the other he hacked

(Continued on page 11.)

From the Philosophy of Phillips Brooks

By Eunice Wingate Quimby.

In a eulogy at the passing of this "peerless preacher" Dr. Samuel Eliot said that "he would anticipate eternity, so to speak; he would bring it into time, and make it dominant. . . . This was his message of messages, his service of services, that he knit the life of earth with the life of heaven."

His assurance of the proximity of the two worlds appears where he says:

> "We may be near Him at all times—and more than all when we kneel down to pray—as the beloved disciple was when he laid his head upon His breast."

Our prayer for pardon, with true confession, God will answer with an unreserved forgiveness.

Bishop Brooks's philosophy regarding our personal life in relation to others is of immediate interest. The whole of human life, he declares, is in these words of our Lord:

> "For their sakes I sanctify myself, that they also might be sanctified."

We should cultivate ourselves in order that we may serve the world, and increase the kingdom of God. The best which the soul is in itself should be poured upon whatever other soul may need it anywhere.

> "If God gives a man social position, or education, or religious influence, He does it for a purpose; and the cowardice or the modesty with which a man sometimes ignores the fact defeats the purpose."

He urged his hearers to insist that their life's work, whatever it might be, shall itself make them brave, patient, pure, and holy. He would have them work as if, though they could not see Christ, they knew that He saw them.

> "In the heart of society a soul may enshrine itself in God."

No man comes to any worthy quietness, he affirms, who does not find God, and rest on Him, and talk with Him continually. Whatever mercy falls to our lot must be felt warm with the personal love of Him who sends it.

> "Never fear to bring the sublimest motive to the smallest duty, and the most infinite comfort to the smallest trouble."

The Christian may find the hand of Christ in everything, and by the faithful use of everything for Christ's sake he takes firm hold of that hand, and is drawn nearer and near to Himself.

There is a sense in which a man partly can, and a sense in which he absolutely cannot, purify himself. It can only be done by uniting his own will with the will of God.

Bishop Brooks explained the meaning of the contrasts of joy and pain, health and sickness, of doubt and care and disappointment as God's method of completing our life, of filling it out to fulness on its deficient side.

> "Submission is no cry of a defeated man; it is the soul seizing on the right and privilege of being completed after God's pattern."

He defines peace as that sweet and strong condition in which joy and sorrow may have place, but which is greater than either of them. Such peace comes as

> "Faith walking in the dark with God only prays Him to clasp its hand more closely, does not even ask Him for the lifting of the darkness so that the man may find the way himself."

THE DAYSPRING.

(Continued from page 10.)

away at the tough undergrowth that obstructed his path. After he had fought along like this, he came through to the light and discovered that it had all been unnecessary. Quite near him was a decently trodden path; if he had found it before, he might have saved himself all the trouble and risk. In the darkness he missed the true road. Christ comes that we may find the best way. "He who walketh in darkness knoweth not whither he goeth." That was His own comment. When we choose our own paths, we stumble; but guided by Him we may find the ways of pleasantness and peace. No one who did not know God with an intimacy far above that which common men have could possibly effect such changes as we have noticed. In the time of Jesus, religion had grown hard and fixed and conventional. Its worship was formal, its creed was set, and the pride of old thoughts and old ways had made the souls of those who taught unsympathetic to everyone who did not conform to their requirements. God was lost in the maze of religious machinery; but Jesus brought Him back to men. As the first act of creative power was "Let there be light!" so the first impact of the divine life upon men was to restore that knowledge of God which had been dimmed by human sin and error. A thrill came back into religion and the same thrill will change the formality of your worship and your prayers when you allow Him to work the same transformation in your religious thought and experience.

Truth, Beauty and Goodness.

It was not so much what He said. The same things might have been uttered by any other man, but they would have failed to move the heart. When He said them, everything was changed. Do you wonder that when the story of those days was written later, men talked about the light of the glory of God that was in the face of Jesus Christ? It was natural that they should put it that way. They had looked into His eyes in many different circumstances, had see His face in the sunlight of the Galilean days, watched the smile as He took children in His arms, seen the look of deepening compassion as He healed some poor broken body or sorrow-stunned soul. They had seen His face filled with love's tenderness, and had been there when the anger of a heart which hated injustice and hypocrisy blazed through His look. There are faint intimations of truth and beauty and goodness to be found elsewhere, for there is a light that lighteth every man coming into the world; but for the full unveiling you must look to Christ Himself. The difference between the one revelation and the other is the difference between moonlight and the dawn. There is power in His advent, and the promise of greater things to be. "I am the Light of the world," He says; and still He comes to those who sit in darkness and the shadow of death to guide our feet to peace.

News from the Front

A New China Is Coming Into Being.

"In all the five thousand years of China's history the period we are now living in promises to be the most important," said Dr. C. M. Wei, President of China Central College, recently to a group of Episcopal clergy gathered at Bishop's House, Providence, Rhode Island, at the invitation of Bishop Perry. It is his belief that a new China is coming into being before the eyes of a world that seems altogether unconscious of the dramatic event.

"Until lately I, too, despaired of China," Dr. Wei confessed. "I know only too well the criticisms and charges—turmoil, corruption, graft. They said that the Nanking Government controlled only a small part of China. There was truth enough in it, but now it is no longer true. Nanking is growing so strong that it has set aside three provinces for experiments in fascism. More than two-thirds of the country is under the control of Nanking.

"The Government is no longer helpless in face of a foe. A revolting province it will speedily subdue. Not long ago a revolt broke out which, it was generally thought, would take three months to put down. The time taken was three weeks.

"Seven years ago there were only 400 kilometers of good roads in the country. Now there are 40,000. Everywhere fine highways are under construction. And good roads are not the assets in China that they are here. All our motor cars are imported, and in spite of the natural resources in oil, every gallon of gasoline is imported also and sold by foreign countries. The roads are essential politically. They promote the mobilization of troops. They allow the people to travel over the country. They are giving to them a national consciousness. The new education is also making one nation of that vast country of 460 millions of people, one-fourth of all the inhabitants of the earth. The same text books are being used far and wide. One province in the west, which has long been regarded as quite independent of Nanking, yet permits the Central Government to appoint its commissioner of education.

"Our share of natural resources are so vast that they attract foreign capital, and we are glad of investment of this sort if made under fair conditions. At present a national economics council is meeting in Nanking with experts from the League of Nations, and many of the Great Powers. Economically, we are not sure of the future. We may be headed for the same sort of destruction that the western world, and particularly Europe, has been struggling with.

"Our chief hope lies in education and, above all in religion—the Christian religion. Buddhism has no message for modern China. It is deep-rooted in Japan, but it came to China when China was a cultured nation and never was able to affect it deeply.

"Confucianism, the background of our social system, has for twenty or twenty-five years now been in disrepute. At present the Government is trying to revive it, but you can't revive something in the past of a nation that is springing into new life. It is to Christianity that I am looking for the power to control the nation."

After estimating the number of Christians as about three millions, of which the Roman Catholics claim two and a half, Dr. Wei said that the influence of Christians throughout the nation is enormous. In one cabinet over half the members were Christians. Throughout the country the followers of the Nazarene hold important posts, especially in education. "What we need most," he urged, "is more Christian leaders."

He then described the work of China Central College. It was organized upon the recommendation of the Burton Commission, and is the result of bringing together all the Christian colleges in three provinces. Though no under the control of the Episcopal Church, the influence of the Church in the faculty is very strong. It is the only Christian college serving a population of one hundred millions. Five missions cooperate, the Episcopal taking a leading part, and providing the president, the treasurer and the chaplain.

"Confucianism," President Wei said in conclusion, "has prepared the way for Christianity. The older faith is social, teaching that man's relations with man has no meaning except through his relation with his fellows. But the perfect manhood of which Confucianism dreamed can come to fulfillment only through Jesus of Nazareth."

F. W. Jones.

The Widely Loving Society.

Juso, Osaka, Japan, December 2, 1934.

Dear Rev. Bishop Tucker:

Again we have much to be grateful for. Your dear letter of encouragement filled us with deep appreciation and we thank you very much. We are praying without ceasing for God's guidance and directing, with yours and other friends kind assistance in the rebuilding of our Chapel, which is such a necessary part of our social welfare work among the children. We are in the hope that we can "stand and see the salvation of the Lord" in this experience.

I am sure you will be very pleased to hear that Dr. Wood of New York Church Mission House wrote us that he will try to raise $5,000 in America, if we will raise that much in Japan, making a total of $10,000 in all. This sum will enable us to raise up a stronger building that will withstand rough elements.

Behind this church edifice there will be the idea of cooperation and fellowship, as we shall offer opportunity to our friends in Japan to share in the contribution in the rebuilding fund.

Dr. Wood's suggestion and kind sympathy was very gratefully accepted, and we know no way of expressing our deep appreciation to you and all the dear friends there. We certainly will do the very best here and continue in the vineyard rejoicingly.

May we at the same time send you greetings for the happy Yuletide and the coming New Year.

We pray for your happiness and that He may abundantly bless and keep you.

Very gratefully and sincerely,

Uta Hayashi,
Katsue Kobashi.

The Widely Loving Society is an industrial orphanage, founded many years ago by two brothers as a thank offering for their baptism by Bishop Williams. It has from the beginning been managed and supported by our Japanese Christians with occasional aid from friends in this country. It is one of the most beautiful and useful examples of Christian work that I know of. An account of the dstruction of the Chapel in the Osaka typhoon, was published in a recent issue of the Southern Churchman. To rebuild the Chapel so that it will withstand earthquakes and typhoons will cost $10,000. The Japanese are undertaking to raise $5,000 of this amount and we are endeavoring to help them by raising the remaining $5,000 in this country. I shall be glad to receive any contributions that may be made for this purpose and forward them through Dr. Wood to Japan.

H. St. George Tucker.

Deepest Desire to Serve the Lepers of Japan.

Miss Mary Helena Cornwall-Legh, on furlough in England from her leper mission at Kusatsu, Japan, whose return to Japan was extremely doubtful when she left there, has now so much improved in health that she expects to leave England for Japan in January, according to a recent report from England. Her aim and deepest desire appears to be to serve her lepers all the rest of her life. She will be seventy-eight in May.

THE WOMAN'S AUXILIARY

PROGRAM.

The Twelfth Annual Diocesan Institute Under the Auspices of the Woman's Auxiliary, Diocese of Virginia, St. James Church, Richmond, Va., January 22, 23, 24, 1935.

Tuesday, January 22.

9:30 A. M. Holy Communion, Rt. Rev. H. St. George Tucker, D. D.
10:40 A. M. Class on Japan, Rev. Arthur M. Sherman, D. D., Church Missions House.
Class on Japan, Mrs. J. M. Chapman. Diocese of New York.
11:45 A. M. Woman's Auxiliary Conference, Mrs. J. H. Hill, Diocese of Pennsylvania.
1:00 P. M. Lunch, served at St. James' Parish House.
2:00 P. M. Class on Japan, Rev. Arthur M. Sherman, D. D.
Class on Japan, Mrs. J. M. Chapman.
3:10 P. M. Woman's Auxiliary Conference, Mrs. J. H. Hill.
4:10 P. M. Missionary speakers.
5:20 P. M. Business Women's Class, Mrs. J. H. Moore, Diocese of Delaware, and New Provincial President.
Held in the Woman's Auxiliary Room, Mayo Memorial House, 110 West Franklin Street.
5:20 P. M. A Class for men only, Rev. Arthur M. Sherman, D. D., Auditorium, Mayo Memorial Church House.

Note: There will be conferences for the Junior Woman's Auxiliary and the Junior Auxiliary. Time will be announced later.

Wednesday, January 23.

9:30-9:45 A. M. Devotions, "If We Be His Disciples", Mrs. J. H. Moore, New Provincial President.
9:45-10:45 A. M. Class on Japan, Mrs. J. M. Chapman.
Class on Japan, Rev. Arthur M. Sherman, D. D.
11:00-12:00 Noon. Women's Auxiliary Conference, Mrs. J. H. Hill.
12:00. Noon-day Prayers, Rt. Rev. F. D. Goodwin, D. D.
12:10. Conference on Work in the Province, Mrs. J. H. Moore.
1:00 P. M. Lunch in the Parish House.
2:00 P. M. Class on Japan, Rev. Arthur M. Sherman, D. D.
Class on Japan, Mrs. J. M. Chapman.
3:10-4:00 P. M. Conference on Little Helpers, Mrs. Julian Roden.
3:10-4:10 P. M. Woman's Auxiliary Conference, Mrs. J. H. Hill.
4:10 P. M. Missionary Speakers.
5:20 P. M. Business Women's Class on Japan, Mrs. J. H. Moore.
5:20 P. M. Men's Class, Rev. Arthur M. Sherman, D. D.

Note: Lunches will be served at 35 cents a plate, or three lunches for $1.

Thursday, January 24.

9:30-9:45A. M. Devotions, "If We Be His Disciples," Mrs. J. H. Moore.
9:45-10:45 A. M. Class on Japan, Rev. Arthur M. Sherman, D. D.
Class on Japan, Mrs. J. M. Chapman.
11:00-12:00 A. M. Woman's Auxiliary Conference, Mrs. J. H. Hill.
12:00 Noon. Noon-day Prayers, Rt. Rev. H. St. George Tucker, D. D.
12:10 P. M. Conference on Diocesan Work, Rt. Rev. H. St. George Tucker, D. D.
1:00 P. M. Lunch in the Parish House.
2:00-3:00 P. M. Class on Japan, Rev. Arthur M. Sherman, D. D.
Class on Japan, Mrs. J. M. Chapman.
3:10-4:00 P. M. Conferences, How To Use the Lenten Material, Miss Ann R. Estes.
4:10 P. M. Conference, Cooperation of all Diocesan Organizations in their Missionary Work, Rt. Rev. F. D. Goodwin, D. D.
5:20 P. M. Business Women's Class, Mrs. J. H. Moore.
5:20 P. M. Men's Class, Rev. Arthur M. Sherman, D. D.

Note: One delegate from each Branch will be given entertainment. Send in name not later than January 10 to Miss Jellis Scott, Chairman of Hospitality, 110 West Franklin Street, Richmond.

A list of boarding houses in the vicinity of the Church will be secured for those who desire them.

The Pledge Has Been Met.

Miss Sallie Deane, Chairman of the "Chapel Fund" of the Woman's Auxiliary of the Diocese of Virginia, is glad to announce that the pledge for the completion of the Gibson Memorial Chapel in the Archdeaconry of the Blue Ridge, has been completely met.

Some three years ago, at the Diocesan meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary at Grace and Holy Trinity Church, Richmond, Miss Deane presented a plan for the completion of the Chapel, being erected as a memorial to Bishop Gibson of Virginia. It had become a subject of real distress to Miss Deane to see the incomplete condition of the Chapel, standing with the scaffolding still on it for some years. She told the Auxiliary what was in her heart and presented a plan for assuming the completion by the Auxiliary. The plan, well worked out on a three year pledge basis in groups of from five to one hundred dollars, was unanimously accepted. Miss Deane was appointed Chairman of this fund.

When Mr. George Mayo, Principal of the Blue Ridge Industrial School, was notified that the Woman's Auxiliary had pledged $4,000 with interest, he at once borrowed the money and the Chapel was completed that summer and consecrated within the year. So completely was the word of the Woman's Auxiliary accepted, no note was signed, their word being sufficient bond.

Almost every Auxiliary in the Diocese had a hand in raising this fund and the Auxiliary feels real pleasure and satisfaction in having fulfilled its pledge and completed this undertaking. The Chapel is a beautiful stone building and does honor to the memory of the one whose name it bears.

When the Atlantic City triennial of the Woman's Auxiliary received a cable of greetings from the Woman's Auxiliary of the Church in Japan, it was signed by Uta Hayashi. She is President of the Japanese Auxiliary, which has some 3,500 members. She was also, some one from Japan reported, one of the two women who first instigated that monster petition for peace, signed by millions of women all over the world and sent to the League of Nations.

BOOK REVIEWS

REV. STAMO S. SPATHEY, Editor.

NEW TRACTS FOR NEW TIMES: Published by The Morehouse Publishing Company, Milwaukee, Wisconsin. Paper. Ten cents a copy.

No. 7. Statesmanship and Religion: by Henry A. Wallace. Pp. 16.

No. 8. Why Missions? By Edmund L. Souder. Pp. 18.

No. 9. Money-Makers and Moral Man: by Joseph F. Fletcher. Pp. 13.

No. 10. Men and Women: by Mary Willcox Glenn. Pp. 17.

No. 11. The Christian Attitude Towards Property: by Vida D. Scudder. Pp. 13.

No. 12. The New Idol: by Frank Gavin. Pp. 8.

This undertaking reflects much credit upon the Morehouse Publishing Company. An essentially Church publication house, devoted especially to a particular school of Churchmanship, it has entered a field of information and stimulus of thought quite congratulatory. And the fruitage is most commendable.

Mr. Wallace, well-known as identified with the problem of agriculture, presents an able thesis on the above subject.

Tract No. 8 is challenging. Mr. Souder has the core of Missions in this succinct treatise. It would make a commendable sermon for some Sunday of the Epiphany season. No one need plead an excuse for reading it. It will answer some questions irritating the lay-mind of our day. Let every rector who reads this review send a dime for it. It will pay.

Mr. Fletcher illumines our minds on the question of Christian morals and the conduct of business. We have reached an age when the world demands of Christianity that it shall live, if not in the concrete, at least in the abstract, the principles of the New Testament. We miss the pungent illustrations of experimentation in this line, such as the demonstrable Golden Rule Nash plan proved; but the essentials of the motive of Mr. Nash and others of his class are here suggested.

Tract No. 10 speaks its message in the title. How the blush of shame mounts to the cheek of the born-again believer, as he recalls the very thoughts he had entertained regarding the other sex. How wondrously changed is his attitude now, as he regards every woman as his divinely appointed sister! Get this little message and receive its inspiration.

Vida Scudder is so well known in this field of investigation that her very authorship is an invitation to study with her the subject of The Christian Attitude Toward Private Property. Wealth for wealth's sake is becoming increasingly unpopular. But wealth for stewardship raises the standard to a New Testament altitude. Not the possession of wealth, but the abuse of it is the apostolic warning.

Dr. Gavin has analyzed the recently-born Totalitarian State of Russia and Germany as The New Idol. He does not emphasize the Fascism of Italy, since the preservation of religious freedom is the key to Mussolini's popularity. The murder of religious liberty is the death-knell of any national movement. Germany is already, and wisely, finding that truth; though Russia's insanity seems at present to be incurable. Confessedly many points in Sovietism are commendable. The Russian leaders are close students. They are appropriating many of our principles which we poorly exemplify and making them workable; but the hatred of God can go so far only as He will allow. And the rest of the world may hold its breath until the issue is met. How? God only knows.

Kenneth Mackenzie.

THE OLD TESTAMENT AS IT CONCERNS WOMEN: By Marie Wells Clapp. New York. 1934. Methodist Book Concern. Pp. 128. Price, 50 cents.

It is a common fallacy of our generation to think that the Old Testament, transcended as it is by the revelation of the New, has little to say to anyone who has not an academic interest in it. Marie Wells Clapp, in this series of thirteen studies, has done even more than her title suggests. Not only does she reveal the significant contribution which the experiences of the women of the Old Testament can make to the problems of the modern woman; but with a wealth of historic detail and local color she interprets the growing perception of the nature of God and Man contained in it. Students of this author's book will find their appreciation of the message of the New Testament and their inspiration to combat the evils of our time greatly increased.

The studies review the history and literature of the Jews during the six centuries before Christ. The approach is modern as to scholarship. Each study lesson is divided into four sections: The Presentation, giving factual knowledge and the historic and literary setting of the subject; A Student Task; Questions for Discussion; and Additional Notes. The Student's Tasks do not appear to give much opportunity for self-expression. But the Questions for Discussion are quite provocative, and the Additional Notes contain much information of special interest to women, enriched by the gleanings of the author's recent visit to Palestine and her studies made under three great scholars of the Old Testament. It is a book for men and women, teachers and students alike.

Ivy Watkins Smith.

* * *

FIRST SUNDAY AFTER EPIPHANY.

The Collect for today is taken from the Sarum Missal, 1549 (Sacramentary Gregory). Although in a previous year I have given the translation of the original (Latin) of this Collect, yet I feel that whilst it is crisp, yet it is of extreme beauty and power. In the prayers, "We beg, Lord, of (Thy) suppliant people, follow up with heavenly kindness; that they may both see what things are to be done and grow strong to fulfil what they have seen." The crispness does not seem to me to detract, but, on the contrary, adds to the sincerity and the depth of the words uttered. The translation which we use in our service of today is smoother, but the ruggedness of the original adds greatly to its beauty. There is one word in this Collect to which I especially wish you to look, the word, "Fulfil", the Latin for which is "Implenda," and which means, "Do out the duty," and if this is thought out it will bring us to, "Be not weary in well doing" (for in due time we shall reap if we faint not), and that shows us that the real test of faithfulness is continuance, not going by fits and starts, but always having the goal in view and pressing on day by day in the battle of life, if we would be victors. The opening words of this short prayer show us that we must be sincere when we use them, otherwise the word, "Beseech" would be meaningless. Beseeching means that we are in earnest for that which we ask, and here we are asking the Father on High to receive our prayer and to grant that we may perceive and know what things we ought to do. How great is the importance of this petition, how necessary it is that we should first perceive by the leading of the Holy Spirit and having perceived them and being convinced, we add to our prayer the petition that we may have grace and power to carry out that which we are satisfied is right, to "Do out the duty." It is well to bear in mind that it is impossible in our own strength to "Do out the duty," therefore, we must pray for Divine Grace to help us, as has been very well expressed, "Strive as though all depended on you; pray as though all depended on God." If we would expect aid from the Divine Power we must remember that the Divine Power expects our earnest and thorough cooperation.

William E. Callender.

* * *

GREATNESS.

What makes a city great? Huge piles of stone
  Heaped heavenward? Vast multitudes who dwell
Within wide circling walls? Palace and throne
  And riches past the count of man to tell
And wide domain? Nay, these the empty husk!
  True glory dwells where great deeds are done,
Where great men rise whose names 'thwart the dusk
  Of misty centuries gleam like the sun!
In Athens, Sparta, Florence, 'twas the soul
That was the city's bright immortal part
The splendor of the spirit was their goal,
  Their jewel of incomparable heart!
So may the city that I love be great 'Till every stone shall be articulate.

Dudley Foulke.

CHURCH INTELLIGENCE

Definition of the Word "Communicant."

In accordance with the action of the House of Bishops in General Convention at Atlantic City, New Jersey, in October, 1934, notice is hereby given to the Bishops of all Dioceses and Missionary Districts and to all Secretaries of Dioceses and Convocations of the reaffirmation by the House of Bishops of the action of the General Convention of 1913, upon the definition of the word "Communicant," as hereinafter follows: and of the request that this action be made known to their next Diocesan Convention or Missionary Convocation:

" 'The Joint Committee appointed in 1907, and continued in 1910, to report a plan for the uniform registration of Communicants,' respectfully reports that it has given the matter careful consideration, and is of the opinion that the different aspects of the question are admirably covered by the report made in 1907 by a similar Committee of the House of Deputies, to which they beg leave to refer. It will be found on pages 231 to 233 of the Journal of that year. We agree with all that is there said defining a 'Communicant' as one who has received Baptism and Confirmation, or has been formally admitted to the Holy Communion as being 'ready and desirous to be confirmed.' We reiterate that all such should be enrolled and kept upon the Parish Register until death, transfer or discipline removes the name."

"Neglect of the privilege of receiving the Sacrament, long absence, or even departure without a letter is not sufficient reason for erasing a name, as the person may reappear or ask for transfer after many years. His rights as a potential Communicant should be scrupulously conserved. On the other hand, parochial reports should not be padded with misleading statistics. To enumerate all these non-effective members is to exaggerate the real strength of the Parish. Communicants known to have neglected for three years the reception of the Holy Communion, in spite of due and sufficient opportunity therefor, should not be reported for statistical purposes. But, as above suggested, nothing but death, transfer or discipline should justify the removal of a name from the Register."

The above report was adopted by the concurrent action of both Houses of the General Convention of 1913.

Charles L. Pardee,
Secretary of the House of Bishops.
January 1, 1935.

* * *

Church Mission to the Deaf.

The Rev. H. L. Tracy, general missionary to the deaf in the Dioceses of Washington, West Virginia, Virginia, Southern Virginia and Southwestern Virginia, has recently made his annual report to the Rt. Rev. William Loyall Gravatt, D. D., Bishop of West Virginia and Chairman of the Provincial Board of Missions. During the year just closed Mr. Tracy held eighty-nine services, a total of 2,294 attending; nineteen Holy Communions were celebrated, a total of 226 communing; sixteen lectures or readings were given, a total of 682 attending; besides, there were two private communions, two burials, eight baptisms, and 16,008 miles traveled.

Reunions of the deaf—one at Staunton, Va., when an oil portrait of Former Superintendent Bowles was unveiled in January, another at Newport News, Va., in August, and the third at Huntington, W. Va., in September—were attended by the missionary.

State schools for the deaf at Staunton and Newport News, Va., Romney, W. Va., Frederick, Md., and Gallaudet College, Washington, D. C., were frequently visited and addresses given the students.

Probably the most important gathering the missionary attended was the Conference of Church Workers among the Deaf in New York City in July. At this gathering the missionary had the honor to be re-elected treasurer for the fourth time. In this connection, it may not be out of place to state the Conference has about $11,000, contributed by friends of the Church Mission to the Deaf and doubled by a Churchwoman in California. This amount is held in trust by the National Council. It is one-third of the total desired for the Re-inforcement Fund. The income is used to reinforce existing work, to assist in educating and training of young men for the ministry, and to organize additional work. The fund is now functioning, for there is a young deaf Postulant at the Virginia Theological Seminary.

The report does, of course, not mention the vast territory covered by the missionary and the long hops from station to station, ministering to scattered colonies, preparing some for baptism, some for confirmation, or consoling the grief stricken. From the mountainous regions of West Virginia to the south, where the briny deep washes the shores the missionary meets with many a strange experience.

* * *

Distinction Between Emergency Schedule, Challenge, Budget, Objective.

In accordance with action taken at General Convention, the National Council has agreed with each diocese as to the "Objective" which the dioceses should assume for 1935. The total of these "Objectives" with a very moderate margin of safety is only enough to meet the Emergency Schedule of $2,313,115 adopted by General Convention and does not touch "The Challenge" of $386,885, which represents the difference between the budget of $2,700,000 and the Emergency Schedule.

In order to meet even the Emergency Schedule an increase of giving on the part of the dioceses of approximately 25 per cent over their "Expectations" for 1934 was necessary, and a great majority of the dioceses willingly agreed to set their Objective at this advance figure.

Because of the renewed effort necessary to meet these "Objectives" many have thought that in this effort they were meeting "The Challenge." That is not the case. "The Challenge" still remains unaccepted except as to the gifts of a few loyal, devoted members of the Church who have realized the tragic results of the reductions in appropriations, which have been necessary, because the gifts coming to the National Council for missionary work have been more than cut in two since 1930.

* * *

Notes About Schools of the American Church Institute for Negroes.

The Junior College Department of the Fort Valley Normal and Industrial School, Fort Valley, Georgia, was voted grade "A" rating at the recent meeting of the Southern Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools. This elevation of the college department from the "B" rating of last year classes it among the outstanding institutions of the South, qualifying its graduates for entrance into first grade colleges and universities without examination. The School offers standard two-year college training in this department, graduates trained teachers qualifying for the State Junior College and Normal Certificate, and offers vocational training in agriculture, the building trades, and home economics, besides its other departments of high-school and the grades.

All of the graduates of last year from the Bishop Tuttle School, Raleigh, are employed and there is an increasing demand for more trained Negro social workers. The junior class this year numbers eleven.

Conditions at St. Agnes' Hospital, Raleigh, are also flourishing. The hospital has been awarded Full Approval by the American College of Surgeons. The Rev. Edgar H. Goold, President of St. Augustine's College, reports that thirty dioceses are represented in the student body at St. Augustine's College this year, which indicates once more how the Institute Schools are drawing students from every section of the country.

During the past year the St. Paul Normal and Industrial School, Lawrenceville, Virginia, has graduated eighty-five persons as teachers and each one of them is now placed in a teaching position in rural Virginia. One county alone called on the School for forty-five teachers, and three other counties have requested the School to furnish thirteen additional teachers at once, but the School was unable to do so. A Virginia State official, upon being asked the caliber of St. Paul graduates as teachers, recently made the following statement: "Were a list of graduates from all of the Virginia Schools placed before the Superintendent of Schools of Southeastern Virginia, they would choose St. Paul trained teachers every time in preference to any others." There are at the present time about sixty students in the School this year who will graduate and be teachers next year.

The County Teachers Institute at Okolona, Mississippi, is now affiliated with the teacher training department of our Okolona Industrial School. Two splendid meetings have been held this year in behalf of these rural teachers who now feel themselves a definite part of the School. These meetings give them an opportunity to bring their problems and receive assistance and encouragement. This type of service is increasing the influence of Okolona School throughout the entire State of Mississippi and is commended most highly by Church, State and County officials.

The Fort Valley School football team visited the Voorhees Normal and Industrial School, Denmark, South Carolina, and beat the Voorhees team by a score of thirty-one to nothing. Voorhees doesn't feel too sad about it, however, because Fort Valley was the only team that took their scalp during the past football season.

St. Mark's Normal and Industrial School, Birmingham, Alabama, has a larger student body than last year, the number of students in the high school department having doubled. They are all busy raising money for "Institute Day" in every way they can. Some are selling sandwiches, others are making candy, another group is doing manicuring, one group had a children's minstrel show and still another is giving small class parties.

St. Mark's has added a night school class in high school subjects which affords an opportunity for many young people who have had to leave school and go to work to complete their high school course. Twenty-six have been enrolled in these classes, several of whom are practical nurses who cannot get their certificates without completing their high school work.

The Negroes living adjacent to the Institute Schools are taking more and more upon themselves the responsibility of financing the Schools through annual gifts under the direction of Dr. Wallace A. Battle, Field Secretary of the Institute. Through his efforts and the splendid cooperation he has had from our faculties, thousands of Negroes are visiting our Schools and feeling themselves a part of the work for the uplift of their people. The offerings which have been gathered this fall in some cases are twice as large as those of a year ago. Such results are all the more notable at present when economic conditions for the Negro are at their lowest point. But in spite of his abject poverty, the Negro is glad to share in the effort the Institute Schools are making to improve his condition in the future. His example of sacrifice not only means encouragement to those who are endeavoring to assist him, but is absolute assurance that he is determined to succeed.

* * *

PRINCESSES JOIN IN CAROLS.

No small children could have enjoyed themselves more than Princess Elizabeth and Princess Margaret Rose clearly did at the Royal Choral Society's Carol Concert at the Royal Albert Hall last Saturday. It was their first public concert, and the Duchess of York had brought them along. The audience was delighted with the charming picture the group made in the Royal box, the little girls being dressed in bright red coats and white frocks, and the Duchess in blue. They all joined heartily in the choruses, and it was at Princess Elizabeth's special request, I understand, that "The First Nowell" was sung before the Royal party left. She asked Dr. Malcolm Sargent, who was conducting, to do this when he was presented to the Royal party in the interval.

It was noticed that neither of the little Princesses was wearing a hat, as indeed they rarely seem to do when they go out of doors. A great many children follow this healthy fashion nowadays. A controversy has been raging in the Press lately, however, as to the propriety of men going about hatless, but the health aspect has been almost entirely ignored. It all started with a delightful provocative speech which Sir Charles Higham, head of the well-known advertising firm, made in London the other day. He declared that a man who went without a hat in the street was denying himself the most courteous gesture that a man could make to a woman, and added that a hatless man was not likely to get promotion or easily find a job.

Certainly I cannot imagine the clergy, and particularly some of our more exalted dignitaries, making a habit of this kind of thing, though some of the younger curates of my acquaintance indulge in this practice. Though I consider this is better than the wearing of those ugly, old-fashioned "wide-awake" hats that some of the clergy still affect.

It is sometimes forgotten, by the way, that the custom of doffing one's hat to a lady originated in the raising of the vizor by knights as they passed before the ladies on the jousting ground, so that they could be recognized.—Church of England Newspaper.

* * *

CONFERENCE ON CHURCH WORK WITH BOYS.

A week-end conference on Church Work with Boys was held at the College of Preachers, Washington, D. C., December 7-8-9, led by Leon C. Palmer, General Secretary of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, with forty-two workers with boys and young people present, from nineteen dioceses. Among the subjects considered in the six sessions held were: "The Boy As We Find Him Today," "What the Church Through Competent Leadership Could Do to Help the Boy"," "The Faith and Youth Program", "Correlation of Agencies and Programs for Work With Boys", "The Christian Boy's Code—A Project in Character-Building".

The report of the Findings Committee submitted and adopted at the close of the conference, recommended:

(1) The holding of a second conference next year for further intensive study of the problems involved; (2) conferences of similar character in individual dioceses and provinces; (3) the adoption of a plan for correlating Church school classes and Brotherhood Chapters, with the suggested use of the Program Guide furnished by the Brotherhood as curriculum material, and (4) the "Christian Boy's Code" project now being developed under the leadership of the Brotherhood.

NEW YORK.

Rt. Rev. Wm. T. Manning, D. D., Bishop
Rt. Rev. A. S. Lloyd, D. D., Suffragan
Rt. Rev. Chas. K. Gilbert, D. D., Suffragan

Meeting of the Women's Division of the Cathedral of St. John the Divine at the Synod House, January 2, 1935.

Mrs. Edmund L. Baylies, Chairman of the Women's Division, presided at the meeting and made an address to the members of the Division expressing the great satisfaction of all that it is possible to proceed with the work on the North Transept, first because of the greatly needed employment which this is giving to the workmen and the help it is giving to their families, and second because we are all happy to see this progress in the building of the Cathedral.

Bishop Manning expressed the great happiness of all present at having Mrs. Baylies again with us in the chair, and spoke of the progress of the work on the Transept since the last meeting of the Women's Division on November 7, when it was announced that building was to be resumed.

The Bishop spoke of the great help which this employment is giving to the workmen and their families. He stated that the work would be continued so long as the funds now in hand or other funds received for the purpose might make this possible. He said that he knew the members would be much encouraged to hear that since the announcement was made of the resumption of work on the Transept he had received, without any solicitation, new gifts for the further continuance of this work amounting to $9,050—one generous gift of $4,000 with a promise of another $1,000 in a few weeks; one gift of $3,000; one gift of $500; one gift of $50, and a gift of $500 from the Diocesan Auxiliary to the Cathedral.

It should be emphasized that these gifts have all been made voluntarily and without solicitation with the desire to give employment to our fine workmen and to keep them at work.

The Bishop read the following report dated December 27: "Seven carloads of granite have been delivered and also set. This comprises all of the work on the big buttress on the west side of the Transept. It was necessary to have this quarried at once and delivered before the severe weather closed the quarries for the winter, and this was just accomplished in time. Orders have been placed for the exterior granite which is being cut in Peekskill, and forty-two men are employed there cutting this. Also during the fine weather of last week, when it was possible to set stone we had fourteen men working on the job, making a total at that time of fifty-six employed. The limestone blocks for the interior had been ordered and are being quarried in Indiana and in due time they will be received in New York, and the cutting started. During cold weather such as we are having these days, it is not possible to set stone, nor is it good for the building to endeavor to do this until the weather moderates, but we shall take advantage of all reasonably moderate weather to set stone and give employment to as many men as is possible during this winter."

To realize the far-reaching effect of the continuation of the work on the North Transept, the Bishop said, we must remember that quarrymen in the Limestone quarries of Bedford, Ind., are being employed to quarry huge blocks which will in turn be shipped over the railroad to New York, thereby giving work to the employees of the railroad. When this stone arrives in New York, it will give further employment to trucks and truckmen who will haul it to the cutting shops. In this way, the benefit touches many more men than we are able to enumerate.

In conclusion the Bishop read a Christmas message, which he had from the Contractor, saying: "I am sure that it will add to your happiness to know that as the result of the authorization of the continuance of the work on the North Transept, there will be sixty families of workmen who will be happier because of this, for this number of men have already been employed on the work."

Concerning St. Thomas' Church, Mamaroneck.

The Daily Press is always prone to make Church statements sound alarming and the report of the closing of St. Thomas' Church, Mamaroneck, is something like the rumor of Mark Twain's death—slightly exaggerated.

Many have gathered from the announcement that the Church must be closed for repairs, that this fine old suburban parish is in a very bad way. It is true that the heating plant, after forty-eight years of service needs extensive repairs and funds are not immediately available. However, none of the services and activities of this great parish will be omitted and worship will be carried on in one of the two halls of the Parish House. It is true that Endowments have diminished and taxes have increased so that an effort has been made to secure 200 new weekly subscribers.

Our parish is in better shape in many ways than it has ever been. Congregations have been larger; the number of Christmas communions set a record; the Christmas offering was $50 more than last year. So far from being discouraged by their difficulties, the rector and congregation are resolved to make this occasion of the temporary closing of the church for repairs an opportunity for renewed devotions and activities.

F. D. Gifford.

MICHIGAN
Rt. Rev. Herman Page, D. D., Bishop

Annual Christmas Carol Service.

One of the loveliest Christmas customs in the Diocese of Michigan is the annual Christmas Carol service held in St. Paul's Cathedral, Detroit, traditionally on the Sunday evening following Christmas. Three choirs participate in the singing of the carols, under the general direction of Mr. Francis A. Mackay, for many years organist and Master of the Choristers in St. Paul's: the Adult, the Boy, and the Junior Choristers, numbering 225 in all. The Adult Choristers occupy the Chancel, the other two choirs singing from the Cathedral Gallery, and directed this year by Miss Beatrice Torrance, in charge of the Junior Choristers, and Melvin Zeidler, organist of All Saints' Church, Detroit.

Eight groups of carols were sung alternately from Chancel and Gallery, this year at the annual service, held on December 30 at 7:30 P. M. Mr. Mackay has been collecting carols for a number of years, and the 1934 program contained music from ancient and modern sources, including several unusual and quaint numbers. During the Offertory, Yon's "Gesu Bambino" was sung by Master Billy Roosevelt. The annual Christmas Carol service has grown in popularity during the year, until it is not unusual for many to be turned away before the hour of service.

Girls' Friendly Society Program.

The opening of a five-session program to develop leadership, sponsored by the Diocesan Girls' Friendly Society, took place on Tuesday evening, January 8, in St. John's Church House, Detroit. The Rt. Rev. Herman Page, D. D., Bishop of the Diocese, was the speaker, on the subject, "Worship, and Worship Service Building." The course is built around the general subject, "The Temple of God—Christ the Cornerstone," and future topics and speakers are as follows: February 5, "Capturing the Child Mind," the Rev. Charles C. Jatho, rector of St. John's, Royal Oak; March 5, "A Member Looks In," Miss Ellen Cloke; "My Ideal Associate," Miss Mary Richardson, and "An Associate at Work," Mrs. George H. Severance. April 2, "Life's Principles," Mrs. E. R. Breitenbecher, Diocesan President; and May 5, "A View from the Tower," Miss Erie Rose. All the meetings will be held in St. John's Church House, and are open to all members of the Girls' Friendly Society, or other interested girls and women.

Members of the Woman's Auxiliary in the Diocese of Michigan, and interested women from many other parish organizations, attended a tea in Trinity Church House, Detroit, on the afternoon of Tuesday, January 8. There was no business meeting, the program being given over entirely to music and a social hour. A silver offering was taken.

NEWARK.
Rt. Rev. W. R. Stearly, D. D., Bishop.

Stanbury Memorial Guild of Christ Church, Newark.

This Guild has for five years been doing a splendid piece of work amongst the children of the Ironbound District of Newark. It carries on a program of hand work and recreation and character building. The simple refreshments that are served to the children have many times and oft been known to be almost all the food which a child would receive in the course of that day.

Now the Guild is in need of workers. Volunteers are earnestly sought. Here is an opportunity for young women to make a good contribution in a Social Service way. The Guild meets from two to five on Thursday afternoons under the leadership of Miss Minnie Otterbein of 169 Scotland Road, Orange, whose telephone number is Orange 3-7192.

There have been about 150 children in this group. Have you been looking for something worth while to do? Here is your chance. Get in touch with Miss Otterbein.

The Warrior's Shrine Adds Another Stone.

A stone from "the street called straight" in Damascus near the spot where St. Paul was let down from the window, will be blessed and presented to St. Paul's Warrior Shrine, Hoboken, by Archbishop Athenagoras of the Greek Orthodox Church on St. Paul's Day, January 25.

Redecorated Church.

St. Bartholomew's Church, Hoboken, is now one of the most attractive small churches in the Diocese. Under the direction of Mr. Thomas Hyde the church has been entirely redecorated with a lavish use of color which has given the building beauty and distinction.

The redecoration of the Altar is in memory of the Rev. R. T. Thomson, a former rector, and was the gift of the Woman's Guild. A new system of indirect lighting, also a gift of the Woman's Guild, is a memorial to Mrs. Richard William Hawes, who was instrumental in founding the parish. The candlesticks were given by Samuel Spedon in memory of his mother.

Memorial Service at St. Paul's, Englewood.

At 4 P. M. on December 2, a Memorial Service to the late Joseph Russell Lynes, D. D., rector of the parish 1922-32, was held. Beside a memorial tablet in the church a beautiful memorial altar and reredos of carved oak was dedicated by Bishop Coadjutor Washburn in the chapel.

A Half Century.

It has been reported that Mrs. Elizabeth Cherry had been a member of St. John's Church, Newark, for over fifty years—faithful in all her service and in the support of the Church by her gifts and activities.

* * *

SPOKANE
Rt. Rev. E. M. Cross, D. D., Missionary Bishop.

Unique Armistice Day Service: Americans and Canadians Observe Day of Remembrance.

St. John's Cathedral at Spokane was the scene of a unique Armistice Day Service on Sunday, November 11. The Canadian Legion, all of whose members had seen active service at the front, asked the privilege of attending the service at the Cathedral, and suggested to the Dean that to them the only fitting observance of Armistice Day was as a Day of Remembrance. The English custom after Benediction, Reveille Fellowship were also represented at the service, and a delegation of regulars with color guard from Fort Wright were present representing the American Government. The colors of the United States, Great Britain and Canada were carried in the procession, and massed at the entrance to the choir. At the opening of the service both the Star-Spangled Banner, and God Save the King were sung by the great congregation. When Taps were sounded, the colors were dipped out of respect to the departed and, following the Eng the custom after Benediction, Reveille was sounded. The international aspect of the service was especially interesting in view of the fact that last Armistice Day at the Spokane Cathedral a representative of the United States Army, as well as of the American Legion, left the service in protest against a plea for Peace made by Dean Quainton of Christ's Church Cathedral, Victoria, B. C., who was the preacher on that occasion. An even larger congregation crowded the Cathedral to participate in the service this year. In his sermon the Very Rev. Charles E. McAllister, D. D., Dean of St. John's' Cathedral, paid tribute to those who had gvien their lives in the service of their country, and stressed the need for cooperation between English-speaking peoples in the cause of Peace, especially in view of the present negotiations on Naval Armaments in London. The Dean further stressed the value of Christianity as a protection against Communism on the one hand, and extreme Nationalism on the other.

He said: "For sixteen years men have worked for peace and will continue to work. In spite of disappointments, of economic prostration, and of moral laxity, more has been accomplished for the Peace of the world these sixteen years than in a thousand years before." The Dean especially criticized those who cried "Communism" at the church, because of the efforts of Churchmen in behalf of Peace. He pointed out that Communism and extreme Nationalism have adopted the strategy of early Christian missionary enthusiasm, and challenged English and American Patriots to restore the missionary activity of the Christian Church to its place as fundamental to the preservation of national ideals, and the preservation of World Peace. At the end of the service prayers were said not only for the American and British dead, but for all who have given their lives in the service of their countries.

NEBRASKA.
Rt. Rev. E. V. Shayler, D. D., Bishop.

Dedicated Himself to Ideals of High Office.

When Governor-elect R. L. Cochran went to the State Capitol for his inauguration, Thursday, January 3, he arranged wiith Bishop Shayler and the Rev. Garth Sibbald of St. Matthew's, Lincoln, to have a Celebration of the Holy Communion, at which he might dedicate himself to the ideals of his high office. This was successfully carried through, with the Governor and his staff pausing on their way to render this act of worship.

Miss Louise Rich stressed the value of Daily Vacation Bible Schools at a meeting last Sunday in All Saints, Omaha. About one hundred teachers and workers were present to welcome the former Omaha girl, who is now Director of Religious Education for the Diocese of New York.

The Annual Convention of the Diocese will open on Tuesday, January 16, with a dinner for men at the Elks' Club to be addressed by the Rev. Dr. H. Prince of Lake Forest, Ill. Stewart A. Cushing of Chicago will also be a speaker. Dr. Prince will preach the convention sermon the following day, and Mrs. A. J. Ford of the Diocese of Western Nebraska will address the Woman's Auxiliary. She is welcomed in the Diocese through her association with Bishop Bentley, recently as a member of the missionary team, which gave effective service.

Friendship House, the Diocesan settlement work, celebrated its second anniversary on a recent Sunday with Miss Carol Wirts, the Chief Friend in charge. Representatives of several Young People's Groups and city churches listened to a program of plays given by children trained during the year. Miss Wirts contributed a number of harp solos.

Wm. J. H. Petter.

PENNSYLVANIA

Rt. Rev. Francis M. Taitt, S. T. D., Bishop

Dr. Frank Gavin Holding Series of Lectures.

Under the auspices of the Catholic Laymen's Union of the Episcopal Church in the Diocese of Pennsylvania the Rev. Dr. Frank Gavin, Professor of Ecclesiastical History in the General Theological Seminary of that communion and one of the foremost Biblical scholars, will give a series of public lectures in this city on the Bible, which began last Monday night, January 7, and continuing on succeeding Monday nights throughout this month. The lectures will be given in St. Clement's Church, beginning at 8:15 o'clock. Admission will be free and each lecture will be preceded by an organ recital at 7:45.

It will mark the fourth year in which this organization of laymen has provided a series of public lectures, and the series this year on the Bible is being given in connection with the general commemoration of the four hundredth anniversary of Miles Coverdale's translation of the Holy Bible. Dr. Gavin's subjects for the first lecture will be "The Books of History." Other subjects on the succeeding Monday nights in the order named will be "The Books of Prophecy"; "The Books of the Gospel"; "The Books of the Church."

The Church Training and Deaconess House Celebrates Anniversary.

The Church Training and Deaconess House, an institution of the Episcopal Church in this Diocese which is devoted to training of women for missionary service in the foreign and domestic fields of that communion and for parochial and diocesan work, commemorated on January 1 the forty-fifth anniversary of the opening of the school. The Board of Managers of the School gave a tea from four to seven o'clock at the school, when opportunity was given to see the school from every angle. Graduates and special students of this Philadelphia school have gone out to serve as missionaries in virtually all parts of the world. In addition to those now serving in parishes and domestic missionary fields, others are serving in Alaska, Africa, China, Japan, Cuba, Mexico, and in Puerto Rico, Hawaii and the Philippines.

Members of the Board of Managers are as follows: President, Miss Julia U. Sinkler; Vice-President, Miss Ellen Morris; Secretary, Mrs. Howard W. Page; Treasurer, Mrs. Robert F. Jefferys, and Deaconess Jean W. Colesberry, Mrs. George C. Davies, Mrs. John E. Hill, Miss Elizabeth P. Frazier, Mrs. Malcolm E. Peabody, Miss Madeline A. Hart, Mrs. George Woodward, and Mrs. John H. Van Pelt. Miss Ethel M. Springer is the Dean of the school.

West Philadelphia's Convocation.

The West Philadelphia Convocation of the Episcopal Church, comprising the clergy and congregations of that communion throughout the West Philadelphia District, held its winter meeting January 10, afternoon and evening, in historic old St. James' Church. The Woman's Aid of the Convocation also held its meeting, prior to the Convocation, assembling at 4:30 P. M. The business meeting of Convocation was held at 5 P. M., followed by a supper at 6:15, at which Bishop Taitt made an address, and at which missionaries submitted reports, followed by a discussion of other matters relating to the work of the Convocation.

Lt. Col. Louis B. Runk, Treasurer of the Cathedral Church of Christ and Lay Canon of the Cathedral Chapter, conducted the 11 A. M. service January 6, in St. Mary's Chapel of the Cathedral, in Upper Roxborough. Colonel Runk, who is a Lay Reader in the Episcopal Church by appointment of Bishop Taitt, is a communicant of St. Peter's Church, Germantown.

First Service—Gifts.

On All Saints' Day, Thursday, November 1, the Rt. Rev. Francis M. Taitt, Bishop of Pennsylvania, was the celebrant at the first Service of Holy Communion in the newly-erected St. Mary's Chapel of the Cathedral, Church of Christ, in the Upper Roxborough section of Philadelphia. St. Mary's Chapel is the first unit of the proposed Cathedral and other Cathedral buildings which have been planned to occupy the seventy acres of ground acquired by the Cathedral Foundation to be used for Cathedral purposes.

In connection with this first Celebration of the Holy Communion announcement was made that regular Sunday services will be inaugurated in the Chapel. These will comprise Holy Communion, 9 A. M.; Morning Prayer with Address, 11 A. M., and Evening Prayer with Sermon, at 4 P. M. The Service of Morning Prayer will be under the supervision of the Lay Canons of the Chapter and will be conducted by them in cooperation with other laymen of the Diocese. The Clerical Canons of the Chapter will alternate in conducting the Service of Evening Prayer.

The All Saints' Day Service was also marked by an announcement by the Bishop of a gift from the Society of Friends in the form of an historic bench which occupied a place in one of the earliest meeting houses erected in Philadelphia by the Society of Friends, following the arrival of William Penn in Philadelphia in 1628. In announcing the acceptance of the gift, the Bishop said it would be given a position of honor among the treasures of the Cathedral, and he also read a letter from the Hon. George Wharton Pepper, one of the leaders of the Cathedral movement in the Diocese, in which Mr. Pepper gave expression of the appreciation of the Cathedral Chapter for the token of friendliness from the Friends.

"The beauty of Catholic ceremonial and the simplicity and quietness which characterize Friends' Meeting," Senator Pepper said, "are alike in place in a Cathedral. While there may be different degrees of emphasis on the sacramental aspect of religion, there is certainly a universal craving for symbolism in some degree. The gift to the Cathedral of a bench from a Meeting House is essentially the gift of a symbol of simplicity and spiritual reality—an outward and visible sign of the Inner Light by which devout Friends strive to walk. Such a gift should be welcomed as an inspiring addition to the treasures of the Cathedral. In the giving and receiving of such symbolic gifts the essential unity of all sincere Christians is manifested."

Immediately prior to the Celebration of the Holy Communion the Bishop officiated at the Dedication of the Mary Masden Vaughan Memorial Tablet, which is placed in the wall of the south bay of the Sanctuary. The Chapel is a memorial of Mrs. Vaughan, provided for in the will of her daughter, the late Annie Masden Vaughan Watson. In her will Mrs. Watson also directed that her jewelry be melted and used to make an Alms Basin. This basin was used for the first time in the Chapel at the All Saints' Day Service. Every seat in the Chapel was occupied at the service and many were standing. The Rev. James M. Niblo, Canon Residentiary, and who is also rector of St. John's Church, Norristown, read the Epistle. The Rev. Dr. George H. Toop, one of the Clerical Canons, and rector of the Church of the Holy Apostles, read the Gospel. Following the Service, the Bishop and Members of the Cathedral Chapter participated in a ceremony of planting an Ivy.

S. H. Warnock.

WASHINGTON.

Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman D. D. Bishop.

Dr. Roland C. Smith Honored at Memorial.

Memorial services were held Sunday, January 6, at the St. John's Episcopal Church for the late Dr. Roland Cotton Smith.

Dr. Howard Chandler Robbins, formerly dean of the Cathedral of St. John the Divine, New York City, now professor of pastoral theology in the General Theological Seminary, delivered the address. He said:

"Roland Cotton Smith was a pathfinder. He loved to find paths, he loved to explore them, and most of all he loved to make them. At Cottonfield, his summer home in Ipswich, Mass., one of his chief delights was to lay out paths in his garden and to plan new ways of aproach to familiar places. A path through a garden, a way through the woods, or a trail leading to a mountain top had for him at seventy precisely the same fascination that it had for him at seven.

"This was because at seventy he still retained the zest for life and the sense of wonder that make childhood a period of enchantment. Always he was finding paths, always he was exploring them, and always he was happiest when making new ones.

"It was in the blood, for he came of a race of pioneers. His mother was an Appleton of Ipswich; his distinguished father, Dr. John Cotton Smith, was namesake and descendant of that adventurous John Coton who, three centuries ago, broke with Archbishop Laud and the Established Church and fled from Boston, Lincolnshire, to Boston in New England.

"Roland Cotton Smith began his ministry in 1885, fifty years ago, after his graduation from Amherst College and the Episcopal Theological School in Cambridge. The time was ripe, for in his own words 'the pioneer spirit, resting on its conquest of a continent, had not yet got to work in the realm of ideas. The mind was self-complacent and satisfied.'

"His three years in St. Peter's Church, Beverly, followed by four years in Trinity Church, Boston, as the associate of his hero, Phillips Brooks, were seven years of preparation for the sort of ministry he had in mind, prophetic, radical, pioneering in the realm of ideas. But in 1892 the call came to the rectorship of St. John's Church,

Northampton, and there for ten years it was given him to do the work for which the need was most urgent and for which he was ideally fitted, blaze new trails in the realm of ideas for successive generations of undergraduates of Smith College.

"In 1902 in the prime of life and the height of his powers, he came to St. John's Church, Washington, where he ministered actively for nineteen years.

"He accounted the opportunity to preach Sunday after Sunday in the pulpit of St. John's as the greatest privilege that could be bestowed upon one who regarded preaching, the mediation of the Word of God, as his chief vocation.

"Preaching was Roland Cotton Smith's vocation. Here in St. John's in the heart of a city which is itself the heart of a Nation's life, Dr. Smith's preaching received a recognition that extended far beyond the boundaries of the city or even of his own communion."

RHODE ISLAND

Rt. Rev. J. DeWolf Perry, D. D., Bishop

School of Christian Life to Hear Popular Speakers.

The Rt. Rev. Granville Gaylord Bennett, D. D., Auxiliary Bishop of the Episcopal Diocese of Rhode Island, Dr. John Morris Evans, rector of the Church of the Messiah, Olneyville, and Canon Bernard Iddings Bell, three of the most popular speakers in the Diocese, will do the lecturing for this year's School of Christian Life to be held on Monday evenings during January and February, in the parish house of St. Martin's Church, Providence.

The first period—from 8 to 8:40—is Bishop Bennett's, and his suggestive themes follow in order, beginning on January 7: "To Think or Not to Think"; "Disbelief or Adventure?" "God—or What?" "Religion—an Escape or Reality"; "Life's Values—Bestowed or Emerging?" "Christ—Dream or Fulfillment?" "Pain and Suffering"; "Eternal Life—Illusion or Climax?"

Dr. Evans, who has established a reputation for thoughtful appraisals of modern life, especially in terms of science, has been assigned the second period for two evenings, Jan. 7 and 14. He will discuss "Values in the Translations of the New Testament" and "Why Pray in an Age of Science?"

The remaining second periods are given to Canon Bell. His topics are: "The Social Ethics of the Old Testament," "The Social Ethics of the New Testament," "The Social Ethics of the Historic Church," "Problems of Nationality," "Problems of Property" "Problems of Sex."

The School is conducted annually by the Department of Christian Education.

The Rev. Wallace J. Gardner, D. D., of the Chapel of the Intercession, New York City, was the guest speaker at the annual meeting of the Diocesan Altar Guild, held Thursday, January 10, in Grace Church Parish House, Providence.

Community Noon-Day Services in Grace Church.

Preachers from five different denominations will be heard in the Community Noonday Services, for which Grace Church, Providence, has opened its doors, which began January 7 and will conclude March 5. Dr. Clarence A. Barbour, President of Brown University, occupied the pulpit January 7-11; Dr. Arthur H. Bradford, Central Congregational Church, Providence, will preach January 14-18; Dr. W. Earl Ledden, Mathewson Street M. E. Church, January 21-25; Dr. W. Appleton Lawrence, January 28 and February 1; Mrs. Harper Sibley, of Rochester, N. Y., an Episcopalian distinguished for her study of foreign missions, Jan. 29, 30 and 31; Dr. Arthur W. Cleaves, First Baptist Church, Providence, February 4-8; Dr. James V. Claypool, Haven M. E. Church, East Providence, February 11-15; Rev. Frederick A. Wilmost, religious news editor, Providence Journal, February 18-22; Rev. Ralph O. Harpole, Park Place Congregational Church, Pawtucket, February 25-March 1; Rt. Rev. Granville Gaylord Bennett, Auxiliary Bishop of Rhode Island, March 4 and 5.

The services will be broadcast by WPRO, 12:05-12:30 P. M.

Bishop Bennett will conduct a Mission for Young People, in Grace Church, February 17-22.

(F. W. Jones.

GEORGIA.

Rt. Rev. F. F. Reese, D. D., Bishop

New Mission Opened.

The John B. Walthour Church School Mission at Waycross was officially opened on the Third Sunday in Advent. The Mission is named in honor of the Rev. John B. Walthour, who has served as rector of Grace Church for the past several years, but who has resigned, effective January 1, to become rector of St. Andrew's Church, Tampa Florida. Services will be held in the Mission every Sunday afternoon.

Mrs. Angela Oglesby, Secretary to Bishop Nichols of Kyoto, Japan, recently addressed an inter-parochial meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary in St. Paul's Church, Savannah. Mrs. J. H. Parker of Brunswick, a delegate to General Convention, gave a talk on the Convention.

Julia St. Clair Moore.

"Old Church" of Maynesboro, shrine of early settlers, was destroyed by fire recently. The church had recently been restored by the Aemrican Legion, on land granted by King George for an Anglican Church. It had become a Presbyterian house of worship with the advent of the Scotch-Irish settlers, and a Methodist church under the preaching of Bishop Asbury.

Christmas Celebration in Savannah.

Christmas was celebrated throughout the diocese of Georgia with midnight Holy Communion services in many of the parishes, and all had one or more services on Christmas Day. The Church schools presented pageants, carol and manger services and Christmas trees. One had a children's Eucharist on Christmas morning. Junior choirs or groups of carolers from several of the parishes sang on Christmas Eve to the ill and shut-ins. In Thomasville the church, as for the past twelve years, was given a list of those in the city and county who were in need, and a committee from the church solicited funds, clothing and food, and the parish made up any deficit. The committee later distributed this relief.

In Augusta at Christ Church neighborhood House, efforts were made to see that every family had a Christmas dinner, and that the children had a toy in the house.

At Good Shepherd Mission (colored), Pennick, the children of the Church school received presents from a Christmas tree and gave a little play. St. Philip's Church (colored), Hawkinsville, a community Christmas tree with gifts was sponsored again this year by the Church for the benefit of the underprivileged.

All of the Savannan parishes gave out Christmas baskets. The Social Service Department of one gave a Christmas Tree Party with Santa Claus, who distributed gifts to about eighty children, and another gave a manger service, and the gifts were given to fully as many more.

A Christmas party is given every year at the Seamen's Bethel (interdenominational), Savannah, on the Friday before Christmas. This year the junior choir of St. Paul's Church was asked to take charge of the devotional program. The junior choir of the church, vested, processed in and lead in the singing of the carols, and the Rev. George Ferguson, priest in charge of St. Paul's, read the prayers and delivered the address. Following the program, the Woman's Auxiliary to the Port Society serve a hot supper to the men.

Julia St. Clair Moore,
News Correspondent.

NEW YORK.

Rt. Rev. Wm. T. Manning, D. D., Bishop
Rt. Rev. A. S. Lloyd, D. D., Suffragan
Rt. Rev. Chas. K. Gilbert, D. D., Suffragan

From Corporation of Trinity Church.

In order to provide the downtown business men and women of New York with an attractive club headquarters for rest, quiet and recreation, the Rev. Dr. Frederic S. Fleming, rector of Trinity Parish, will open the Parish Hall of Trinity Church in the lower floor of the twenty-five story building of the Corporation at 74 Trinity Place. The Hall has been beautifully furnished, and is complete in every respect.

It will be formally opened on the evening of January 16. There will be a brief service of dedication and the rector and Lawson Purdy, Comptroller of the Corporation of Trinity Church, will make addresses. The Downtown Glee Club, comprising more than 150 male voices, under the direction of Dr. Channing LeFebvre, Organist and Choirmaster of Trinity Church, will sing and the Golden Hill Glee Club, composed of women and also under Dr. LeFebvre's direction, will be present as guests.

Trinity Church itself, at the head of Wall Street, has long been a spiritual haven for downtown office workers, particularly at noon time, and Old Trinity has met the church needs of these people by providing talks and attractive musical recitals at the noon hour. Since Dr. Fleming's election as rector, two years ago, he has become acquainted with these downtown business people and has conducted services and meditations during certain seasons of the year which have attracted them in increasing numbers.

The new Parish Hall will provide a social center for these and others who wish to avail themselves of such a downtown club. The Hall, which is air conditioned, covers more than 5,000 square feet and may be entered from Trinity Place, the street bordering the historic churchyard on the west. The staircase leads to a broad vestibule connecting the men's and women's club rooms. A hostess and a clerical member of the Parish Church staff will be in attendance throughout the day. Books and magazines will be available and eventually occasional programs will be provided between office hours and at dinner time. Already the two Glee Clubs, under Dr. LeFebvre's direction, are rehearsing in the Parish Hall.

FAMILY DEPARTMENT

JANUARY.

1. Circumcision. (Tuesday.)
6. Sunday. Epiphany.
13. First Sunday after Epiphany.
20. Second Sunday after Epiphany.
25. Conversion of St. Paul. (Friday.)
27. Third Sunday after Epiphany.

* *

COLLECT FIRST SUNDAY AFTER THE EPIPHANY.

O Lord, we beseech Thee mercifully to receive the prayers of Thy people who call upon Thee; and grant that they may both perceive and know what things they ought to do, and also may have grace and power faithfully to fulfill the same; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

* * *

For the Southern Churchman.

SPRING AUGURY.

Travis Tuck Jordan.

I love the silence of the winter trees;
The stillness of an empty church at night,
A dusky hearth where glimmering firelight,
Spills quiet shadows dim with memories,
I follow where the deep tranquilities
Of timid stars and rugged hills unite,
The river hushed where moonbeams cluster bright,
Moves slowly with faint rhythmic harmonies.

Within the calm of night's deep quietude;
The stilly fall of snow that leaves no trace
On muffled pools, I hear the interlude
Of distant spring, that hangs in drowsy space;
And know that bravely in a winter wood,
Arbutus lifts her starry coral face.

* * *

A Gospel for the Poor.

The Gospel records show that our Lord's home in childhood was that of the artisan, a class which seems to have enjoyed at least a comfortable competence. It was not poverty but pressure on accommodation that caused His cradle to be a manger. Joseph could not afford to keep the appointed feasts in Jerusalem; he could even travel in time of danger to Egypt and could make a home there; Mary's cousin Elizabeth was married to a priest, and the priests were far above the line of poverty. But it is evident that with the call to His ministry our Lord accepted the abandonment of home and of all profits of industry. Though He was conscious of being Lord and Master of all, though angels ministered to Him in the wilderness, though He accepted homage of worshippers as His birthright, yet did He deliberately cast in His lot with those who were homeless, and accept alms as an indigent, and depend on His Father for the supply of His daily needs. All this He did without bitterness of spirit or class-consciousness. He was prepared to accept the hospitality of Simon the Pharisee, of Matthew, and of Zacchaeus. Lazarus, Martha and Mary, evidently not poor persons, were beloved friends. Nicodemus and Joseph of Arimathaea were in the circle of those who believed on Him. There is not in His utterances that denunciation of the rich as a class which we find in the Epistle of James the Lord's brother. Yet unquestionably He accepted abandonment of worldly goods as indispensable for the work to which He was called, and required it of the inner circle of His disciples "Whoso forsaketh not all that he hath cannot be My disciple". To the rich man whom He loved, He said: "Go, sell all that thou hast, and give to the poor, and come and follow Me." He regarded riches as dangerous to all —"Ye cannot serve God and Mammon."

In fact our Lord at once disappointed and fulfilled the Messianic expectation of the poor. Those who expected in Him an avenger of their wrongs, restitution of goods of which they had been unlawfully dispossessed, restoration to the homes and vineyards of which mortgagers had robbed them, were disappointed. "Who made Me a Judge over you?" "Take heed and beware of all covetousness: for a man's life consisteth not in the abundance of the things that he possesseth. . . . All these things (food, raiment and the like) do the nations of the world seek after: but your Heavenly Father knoweth that ye have need of these things." We never read of our Lord giving alms, though this practice is suggested by the words: "That he should give something to the poor." The good tidings which our Lord brought to the poor was the message of His Father's love for them, His knowledge of their needs, His care for them, and of the Kingdom whereof He had made them heirs: "Fear not little flock; for it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the Kingdom. Sell that ye have, and give alms, make for yourselves purses which wax not old, a treasure in the Heavens that fadeth not. . . . For where your treasure is there will your heart be also."

Christ's gospel to the poor was this. Their poverty was not a token of their Father's displeasure, nor even of His neglect, but of a positive advantage in the soul's struggle for the Kingdom of Heaven.

"The poor ye have always with you." So spake our Lord, when fault was found with her who had broken the alabaster box of precious ointment over Him. He read what was in her heart, the love which could find nothing too costly to express its outpourings. He who had emptied Himself of the glory of the Godhead out of love to fallen man, Who had taken on Himself, voluntarily and deliberately, the lot of a servant, knew as we can never know, the joy of self-sacrificing service. "For the joy that was set before Him He endured the Cross despising the shame." In the same spirit of devotion many costly offerings have been laid at His feet, and we doubt not graciously accepted by Him. Others that have claimed to imitate Mary's devotion have been spurious imitations, because there has lingered in the hearts of the donors a self-exaltation, or desire to exalt a cause fundamentally worldly and selfish. He who accepted Mary's gift could look on Herod's Temple, and say with no sense of regret or pity that the hour was coming in which not one stone should be laid on another. Certainly He asked not for Himself any Throne more glorious than the felon's Cross, and chose as titles, by which He should be remembered, those that made their appeal to the imagination of the poor. He desired to be known as the Lamb of God, the Crucified, the Good Shepherd, the Corner Stone, the Door, the Way, the Corn of Wheat, the Bread and Wine, the Vine, the Light, the Life, the Son of Man. So it came to pass that Christianity triumphed over all contemporary cults, beliefs and mysteries by the lodgment that it made in the hearts of the poor, by its appeal to the unlearned, to the common people, to barbarians. Nor is there any test by which Gospel preachings can be more surely tried than this: "Do they bring Christ as Redeemer to the hearts of the poor?" In an age that looks back —we will not say with contempt, but with a sort of pity—upon the ministry of Evangelicals in our Church, let Evangelicals hold fast more than ever to the call of the poor, whether that call comes from overseas or from our own doors. Let what social revolutions that may, pass over this world's order—the spiritually poor will always be with us, and we must be ready to forsake all that we have, at the Master's call, that with Him we may preach the Gospel to the poor.—Bishop E. A. Knox, in Record (English).

* * *

For the Southern Churchman.

OUT OF THE ASHES.

Mary Channell Stevens.

How have I come to this dark hour of sorrow,
When all I worked for has become my shame?
Is there a hope that in some new tomorrow
That which is lost I may learn to reclaim?

But as my life is still my own shall I
Continue to disgrace it, and defame
Such good as bides there? Or apply
A different method and a nobler aim?

Where may I find the energizing power,
The self-less motive and the cleansing flame?
Once there was One who faced His darkest hour
With this, "O Father, glorify Thy name".

So, knowing Him, I have a great incentive
To serve the aged, guide the blind and lame;
To turn despairing into high adventure,
And live exultingly to glorify His Name.

* * *

The Third Stanza.

The most neglected line in all poetry is the third verse of our hymns. As regular as we sing comes the announcement, "Let us sing number 388; sing, please, the first, second and last stanzes." Almost invariably the third stanza is omitted.

We seem to have a grudge against it. It is the red-headed step-child of our hymns.

I am a champion of this neglected verse. We do wrong to disregard it, and refuse to give it a place in our worship.

I have been looking over some third stanzas in the song book, and I find them to be possessed of some high and holy sentiment; helpful truth which should merit our consideration. It is barely possible that the message of this forgotten verse contains the very words that will strike a responsive chord in some life. Leaving it out, therefore, might prove tragic.

But everybody is in such a hurry these days. Obliged to omit some of the service. Why the third verse every time? Just a habit. And it is a bad habit.

We sing hymns not for the reason that singing is a part of the program. We sing to express our praise, our gratitude, our needs. We preach the gospel in song. To omit any part of a hymn is to destroy the continuity of the message, and probably to leave out something altogether vital.

Our church is using great hymns. We need to sing them more, and to sing all of every one. Few things have the lifting power of song. It lifts us out of ourselves, and makes us to be happy and hopeful again. It is tonic for our fagged lives. It is inspiration to our weary souls.

Our new hymn book will come to us soon. The commission has worked faithfully. They are having the third stanza printed as usual. Study this third stanza. Analyze it. Get hold of its meaning and message, and sing it. Sing the hymn, and all of the hymns, first to last, omitting nothing, but using this agency of song for what it is intended.

Let us sing the third stanza.—Rev. R. L. Holroyd, in Southern Christian Advocate.

* * *

Money.

When my little girl was still a baby we had a neighbor with a four-year-old boy whose name was Robbie. He was so naughty in the stores that more than one of the nearby merchants had actually asked his mother not to deal with them. Robbie helped hmself to fruit, tipped over piles of produce, or annoyed a customer every time he went to the store. He was spanked, scolded and often yanked around by one arm as the mother walked from counter to counter. As I happened to shop at the same time she did, I saw this performance day after day, and it worried me.

There was another child who came into the stores frequently. This one regularly sent up a wail for "cakies," but as soon as he was satisfied he behaved as well as any one could wish. Considering the matter with reference to my own child, I didn't like his mother's method any better than that used by Robbie's mother. To begin with, eating between meals is acceptedly bad for the digestion. Then think of the undesirable habits and attitudes the boy was forming.

So I began to study the situation. "Why are children naughty in a store?" I asked. That led me to question myself further: "Do you like to market?" "Yes, I do." "Well, why do you?" The answer was simple, "Because as I shop I plan meals and compare prices." "What is there in a grocery store for a very little child except fascinating jars, cans and boxes which he is forbidden to touch?" I saw that my problem was to think up some scheme to make my little girl understand shopping.

As the first step, when she was two and a half years old, I gave her a penny bank, and every few days at first, and then at longer intervals, I gave her pennies and showed her how to put them in. It was a great game. Then, when she was three years old I took her to the grocer's for the first time, at an hour when he wasn't busy, and holding her hand, went around the store selecting a few foods that she knew, talking about them to her. When I had the things I needed, I lifted her to the counter so she could see me pay the man all in pennies. Pennies meant something to her. She had seen them many times and had played a game with them. Here was a new game: Give pennies to the man and he will give you spinach and oranges and eggs.

We had played this new game for several months, when one day, while we were at the store, she asked for an apple. I agreed but said we would have to go home for some of her pennies. We made a special trip, and she gave the man her pennies by herself and was given the apple in a bag to carry home. What a day that was for my little daughter! She was so delighted to do her own shopping and to pay the storekeeper, herself. A dozen times that day she tried to coax me or her daddy to "go store". The next day she asked for pennies before we went to the store. For the first week or so I let her have all she wanted from her little bank, but now she knows that she has a limited supply and is beginning to understand that I have, also. She knows, too, that pennies can be saved until you have enough to buy three of anything so you can share with Mother and Daddy. And I feel that we have a sound foundation for the future. Besides this, she behaves exceptionally well in any store and helps me at the grocery by suggesting items for dinner. She is interested in shopping, so of course we have no reason for unpleasant scenes.—Audrey C. Hayden, in National Kindergarten Association. Release.

* * *

For the Southern Churchman.

THOUGHTS.

Charles Day.

For sake of argument I'll say you're right,
There is no higher power that rules the day,
There is no future life to come, no world
To which we go when we must pass our way.

There is no guiding hand that rules the world?
Then tell me this, what makes the flowers grow?
What makes the trees bud forth in summertime?
What makes the seasons come and seasons go?

Ah, yes, I know it's Mother Nature's way,
But what is Nature but the breath of love
That falls like manna on a hungry world
From lips of Him who rules us from above?

And so I wait for you to tell me this,
What is there in a life worth living for
If nothing lies beyond our earthly tomb
But death the sudden closing of life's door?

Ah, no, I am convinced that you are wrong,
No other charms to aching hearts reveal,
The sweetness of the promise God has made
To wipe away each tear, each wound to heal.

* * *

What Would You Say?

President Roosevelt tells us that he received two letters from men asking him to say something that would restore confidence in the country. He wrote and sent to them an identical letter asking them, "What would you have me to say?" One had not answered after six weeks and the other sent an impossible answer. This is a good test for us to apply to ourselves when we are making such demands on others: try answering your own question and write down what you wwould say in such circumstances yourself. For instance, are you demanding some quick and sure solution of the industrial or political situation? What would you say yourself if you were in a position to decide the question? Or are you in a critical attitude towards some serious situation in the church? What would you do about it if you had authority to act in the matter? Or are you criticizing your elders or your pastor? Try answering your own criticism and see how you would come out. We all know how many impossible plans have been offered for a way out of the depression, and very often our suggestions in other matters would not work well or even at all. It is always easier to be critical than correct.—Presbyterian Banner.

For the Southern Churchman.

GIRD ME WITH GLADNESS.

Psalm 30:11.

Martha Young.

Science now teaches that the flowers,
The very leaves rejoice;
May we not feel the rain-drops' song
Keeps time with angel's voice?

Shall we who speak as Jesus spoke,
With blessed human voice,
Fail to be happy when all things
Inaimate rejoice?

* * *

What Christ Thinks.

It is of interest to us what Maeterlinck, with his beautiful mind, thinks of this and that. It is important what Hegel, with his high philosophy thought of death. I like to read the life of Napoleon, and try to penetrate his mighty genius; to read rare old Thomas Carlyle and drink delight of words as he weaves them together with such magical skill. What spiritual strength one gathers from the rich words and noble teachings of Ruskin's Essays, Browning's and Wordsworth's poems, the confessions of St. Augustine, Thackery's immortal books and the great tragedies of Shakespeare! But we who are so hungry for truth in this unlighted world of ours, after reading these mighty wielders of the pen, are still hungry of heart, and we turn as little children to hear what Jesus thinks and says about the Truth. None other who knows is so eager to reveal. O Christ, wilt Thou not teach us the Truth as we pass this way?—Southern Christian Advocate.

* * *

For the Southern Churchman.

DOUBTS.

Anne Reiley Nesom.

Here, Lord, I cast my doubts
Before Thy feet;
They are doubts of Thee,
Blest Paraclete;
All joy, O Lord, is mine
Through trust in Thee,
But shades of wayward self
Envelop me.

When dawns the hour of prayer,
Or love a task
Appoints me that fills
My empty flask,
The serpent from the grass,
Attention caught,
Suspicion hisses low,
"Servest for naught?"

Lord, is it even so?
Remove this pain;
The truth I seek to know;
Serve I for gain?
Since goodness follows me
Through all my days
Should not my heart and hands
To Thee give praise?

Lord, smite the tempter down;
My soul release
From doubts that rob my life
Of strength and peace.
The will to do Thy will
Some good should serve;
From paths of Thy decree
Let me not swerve.

* * *

They were not the last of the wise men who have come to worship this Child. A long line of scholars, scientists, poets, prophets have come through all the centuries from every land to bow before this same Child. Still are they coming in increasing numbers. Paths worn deep with millions of feet now converge upon Bethlehem from every quarter of the world.

FOR THE YOUNG PEOPLE

THE FLIGHT INTO EGYPT.

Thou wayfaring Jesus, a pilgrim and stranger,
Exiled from heaven by love at thy birth,
Exiled again from Thy rest in the manger,
A fugitive child 'mid the perils of earth,—
Cheer with Thy fellowship all who are weary,
Wandering far from the land that they love:
Guide every heart that is homeless and dreary,
Safe to its home in Thy presence above.

—Henry Van Dyke.

* * *

For the Southern Churchman.

THOSE RECTORY CHILDREN.

Chapter 3.

Snow.

M. L. G.

All the next day it snowed. First a few big soft flakes, then more and smaller ones, until the air was thick with them. Claire's sofa was pushed over to the window so that she might watch the first snow of the winter. She could look up through the falling flakes to the sky, dark gray beyond the whiteness; or through the bare trees of the driveway, where each branch and twig was gathering a white blanket over it; or down to where Philip and Kent were hopping about like two jumping-jacks, turning their faces up to feel the tiny cold touch of the snow, or walking about on mittened hands, their feet in the air, for pure joy. Old Roy, the big collie, enjoyed the play as much as the children. He was everywhere at once, bounding over, under, and around the little boys; and the air was full of barks and shouts.

"It looks fun," said Claire, smiling suddenly as Kent, Philip and Roy tumbled into one wriggling heap on the ground. "O Mother, Kent's overshoe's off again. Roy has it! Run, Kent! Look, Roy dropped it right at his feet. Isn't he a smart dog, Mother?"

Mother opened the window. "Put it on, son," she called. She gathered a little drift of snow from the window sill and put it on the dark sleeve of her dress. "See here, Claire, how pretty the flakes are—no two alike, yet all six-pointed."

"Weren't there ever two alike, Mother?" Claire asked, when there was left only a damp spot.

"Not so far as has been known," her mother answered. "I believe there never were."

"I don't see how God could think of so many," Claire wondered; "couldn't there be any seven-sided ones?"

"No, every flake must have its six sides, no more nor less."

"Doesn't God ever give out of ideas for them?"

"No, honey. He never gives out of anything!" Mother said cheerfully. "Do you want to know a little Christmas secret? Kent's overshoe reminded me. Your Aunt Mollie wrote to ask what they want for Christmas from the city. She thought of boots for all the boys. I think they'd be fine presents. She'll get them big, to do for several winters. Do you think Winnie'd like boots, too, or what?"

"Oh, yes, boots, too!" said Claire eagerly. "I'd want them—if I could run."

"Now as for your present from Aunt Mollie," Mother said quickly, "that is about the best Christmas secret I know this year."

"Better than boots?"

"Just wait—I'm sure you'll think so!"

"Will it keep, Mother, so—so I can have it after we come back from the hospital?" The hospital lay always in Claire's thoughts, like some dark cloud.

"It will, indeed, as good as new. Now mind," as the little boys rushed in, with bright cheeks and damp mittens, "Don't tell about the B's."

"Mother, we soon can make a snowball!" cried Philip. "If the snow keeps on. A big one, big as this." He leaned over to make a snowball of himself, turned an unexpected somersault and brought up sitting by the fire. "That big," he said, pleased with himself, "an' rolls like that, too."

"Could you see us, Claire?" Kent asked, holding his little cold hands to the fire, "An's what's B's, Mother?"

"B's are Christmas secrets," said Claire.

"Bees sting—zip, zip!" Philip put in.

"Not this kind, Phil."

"'Cause they're Chris'mus bees, Mother?" Kent asked, anxiously.

"Well, these B's have tongues but no sting," laughed Mother. "But you must wait until Christmas to know more."

By dark the snow lay thick over all the world that Claire could see from her window. Father and Uncle Danger had cleared a path around the house and to the wood-house and stable. David and Winnie had studied their lessons for the next day, and were to go with Father to the cedar-picking.

"Father's going to use the sleigh!" cried David, running into the kitchen, where Aunt Cindy, the cook, and Uncle Danger were finishing their supper. "He says I can help you get it out and harness Frank. Can we use the bells, Uncle Danger?"

"Yessuh, dem bells jus' tunin' up duh th'oats to sing," answered the old man, shuffling into his big coat.

"Ring, you mean, don't you, Uncle Danger?"

"Ring or sing, dey's tunin' up, dey's tunin' up," Uncle Danger took up his lantern, lighted it and led the way to the stable.

Soon Frank was harnessed to the sleigh, and the bells tinkled as they climbed in.

"Can I drive 'round, Uncle Danger?"

"Better lemme, honey, disyuh horse he mought feel skittish, what wid de snow an' de bells. You slip yussef over, let Uncle Danger tek charge."

* * *

A Little Bag of Salt.

Stanton was late getting home from school. There were so many interesting things to see that he forgot the days were getting shorter and he must hurry. There was the little flock of birds feeding in a sheltered spot where he had scattered grain on the way to school. There was the gray squirrel whose home he had been trying for weeks to discover. Only an hour ago he had found it in an old walnut tree.

Suddenly Stanton remembered that Sister Anne had promised to make cocoanut fudge after supper, and he started for the house on the run.

Anne met him at the kitchen door. "Did you bring the salt, Stanton?" she asked. "We're going to have baked potatoes for supper, but there isn't any salt to eat on them."

Stanton hung his head. "Oh, I forgot to stop at the store," he faltered. "And mother said she'd need the salt early in the morning for her butter, too. I'm sorry. I'll run right over to Jimmy's and borrow a little bit."

"Not until after supper," answered Anne. "It's all ready, so we'll have to get along without the salt."

There was orange shortcake for supper, and Stanton liked orange shortcake, so he didn't hurry about leaving the table. When he did get up, he noticed that it would soon be dark. Hurrying into the pantry, he picked up the first bag he saw, and five minutes later he was running across the back lawn.

The snow that had fallen early in the week had melted a little, then frozen, and Stanton's shoes made a loud, crunchy noise as he hurried down the lane, across the bridge over Mile Brook, then up the long hill to Jimmy's house.

Jimmy had a new puzzle, and Stanton stopped to try his luck at putting it together. When he finally started for home it was really dark, except for the stars shining overhead. Stanton wished that he had remembered to get the salt at the store in town instead of having to borrow it of Jimmy's mother.

"I guess I'll go through the south pasture, then I won't have to cross the brook again," Stanton said to himself. "It'll take longer, but I don't like to go past all those juniper trees at night." So he climbed the fence into the south pasture. Soon his shoes were again making that crunchy noise on the crusted snow.

Suddenly Stanton stopped stock still and listened. What was that noise behind him? Some one must be following him. He could hear feet on the snow. Perhaps it would be safer to run.

So Stanton started to run, but the snow was slippery in places, and he came very near falling flat on his back. He couldn't hear the feet so plainly now, but he didn't dare look behind him to see whose feet they were. And he didn't want to call Jimmy for help, for Jimmy would think he was a "fraid-cat".

Three minutes passed. Then a surden thought caused Stanton to stop in the middle of the pasture. Why, Jimmy might have forgotten something important he wanted to tell him and be trying to overtake him now. He would think he was running away from him. He guessed he'd better call back to him, after all.

So Stanton put his hands to his mouth and shouted, "Whoo-oo! Whoo-oo! Jimmy, are you there?" But no one answered, so Stanton trudged on for five minutes more. Then came the sound of feet on the snow, louder than ever this time. What should he do?

Stanton wanted to scream, but he didn't. Instead, he thought of the little song his class had sung so many times, "God Will Take Care of You All Through the Night". It was night now, and up from Stanton's heart went a little prayer that God would take care of him. Then he noticed that the stars looked friendly and he felt better. He was almost at the end of the pasture. In a few minutes he would be home. If only the feet making that crunchy noise on the snow didn't come too near! If he only dared look around and see whose feet they were! Why, he didn't care. He would look right now.

And Stanton looked. A moment later he broke into a merry laugh; for there only a dozen rods away from him were Snowball and Molly and Trude and Woolly, Jimmy's father's sheep. All at once Stanton realized that his bag of salt had grown very light, and, feeling of it, he found a small hole. The salt had gone slowly through this, and the sheep had smelled it and followed him.

But how did they get into the south pasture? Did he leave the gate to anything open? It was bad enough to make father and mother and Anne eat their baked potatoes without salt without being to blame for this, too. And how was he going to get the sheep home? Was there enough salt left to tempt them?

Stanton had sometimes helped Jimmy salt the sheep, so now he scraped what salt he could from the bag and started back. "Co-day! Co-day! Co-day!" he called and Snowball and Molly and Trude and Woolly followed him. Halfway across the south pasture Jimmy came hurrying to meet him.

"Oh, Stanton, you're a good friend to bring the sheep home," he exclaimed. "We turned them into the long shed just before supper, and I forgot to fasten the gate. I was scared for fear they'd get into the road. Thanks a lot. But how did you ever do it?"

"With the little bit of salt that was left in my bag," answered Stanton. Then he went on to explain about the hole. "I guess I'll have to borrow a little more salt for the butter," he said soberly. "Next time I'll remember a lot of things I forgot tonight."

"Guess I'll remember some things, too," returned Jimmy. "I'm thankful the sheep are all safe."—Zion's Herald.

* * *

For the Southern Churchman.

Mother Goose's Dilemma.

William Allen Ward.

Old Mother Goose was the prize fowl in Farmer Smith's barnyard. But Farmer Smith always did like a practical joke, and, knowing Mother Goose was a rather dull thinking, although good-natured creature, determined he would have some fun. So, Farmer Smith, who lived only a short way from the big city, decided he would visit the zoo and talk to a friend he knew there.

Meanwhile Mother Goose, with a few low honks, waddled away to the barnyard and found a nice place to lay her eggs, for she was to keep them warm for awhile, and then she would have some pretty goslings. So, Mother Goose began to lay an egg almost every day, hoping soon to have at least a dozen on which to sit, giving her twelve goslings, if things worked out as she planned.

When Farmer Jones returned from the zoo visit he brought into the barnyard a funny looking collection of eggs. A friend in the zoo gave the farmer a duck, a swan egg, a peacock egg, and one great big egg that he wouldn't tell the farmer the name of.

"Just wait and see," the zoo keeper said to his farmer friend. "It will surprise you even as much as it will surprise old Mother Goose."

Once at home the farmer added a hen's egg, a turkey's egg, and a guinea's egg. He also found a quail egg and a pigeon egg, all of which was added to the collection.

Poor Old Mother Goose completed laying her eggs and started sitting on them. One evening, the farmer came while Mother Goose had slipped away for a moment to get some water to drink. Farmer Smith removed the goose eggs and placed that funny egg collection in their places. Mother Goose never did watch her business affairs very well and she did not notice any difference when she returned.

One day Mother Goose heard a strange "cheep . . . cheep." "Why, it isn't time for my eggs to hatch!" Mother Goose exclaimed in astonishment, "What in the world has happened? Things are turned upside down, and, besides, I never did see such a big egg as the one in the middle on which I am sitting . . . there is something very strange, indeed, about this setting of eggs . . . something strange, indeed."

Then Mother Goose took a look at the little fellow that was going "cheep . . . cheep . . . cheep." "I wonder if I am going crazy," thought Mother Goose, "or is this creature I see really a chicken!"

"Cheep . . . cheep," again said the little fellow. Mother Goose removed her specs for a better look. Then, out came a very funny looking fellow, indeed! This little fowl, which happened to be a turkey, was very proud of himself, as he strutted along. Next came an ugly bird, indeed—but in months to come it would be a lovely and graceful swan. Then came a fussy little guinea fowl!

Pretty soon out come a tiny pigeon and a quail, which soon was to chirp: "Bob White . . . Bob White."

All the eggs were hatched save one and this one egg was giving Mother Goose a lot of trouble. It was so big and took so long to hatch. But Mother Goose was persistent and stayed at her job. One morning there was a hoarse cheep and Mother Goose took one look and fainted. A monster fowl, if ever one, hatched!

Mother Goose could not stand the strain any longer. Only one gosling had been hatched. There also had been a duck that insisted on saying "Quack, quack."

Mother Goose called her gosling and hastened away. Meanwhile the farmer laughed. "Just look at that ostrich!"

But the farmer didn't know what was in store for him. With Mother Goose vanished to a far side of the barnyard Farmer Smith had to feed and water and furnish shelter for the orphaned ostrich, duck, swan, chicken, turkey, pigeon, quail and all the rest of the mixed brood.

* * *

For the Southern Churchman.

TO THE PESSIMIST.

F. J. Earl.

Look up, my friend,
No need to see
One half you do
Of misery.

Sufficient if
You see a bit,
Enough to be Aware of it.

Look up the truth,
Then close your fist
And work, no more
A pessimist!

* * *

For the Southern Churchman.

SERPENT THOUGHTS.

Gertrude Leib.

When Moses threw his rod away
In obedience to his God's command
He shrank in fear when he beheld
A serpent wriggling in the sand.

Pick up the serpent, handle him!
Trembling the man obeyed.
The snake became a rod again
And Moses was unafraid.

So anger, fear, distrust and hate
Will never more annoy
If you learn to pick up serpent thoughts
And all their harm destroy.

Are You a COLDS-SUSCEPTIBLE?

Do You CATCH COLD Easily?

At the first warning sneeze, stuffiness or nasal irritation, quick!—apply Vicks Va-tro-nol—just a few drops up each nostril. Its timely use helps to prevent many colds, and to throw off colds in their early stages.

Do Your Colds Hang On AND ON?

Don't take chances with halfway measures. Rub on Vicks VapoRub—standby of two generations for relieving colds. Its direct double action—by stimulation and inhalation—helps to end a cold sooner.

WELCOME NEWS FOR COLDS-SUSCEPTIBLES!

These twin aids to fewer and shorter colds give you the basic medication of Vicks Plan for Better Control of Colds. You'll find full details of this unique, clinically tested Plan in each Vicks package.

VICKS PLAN FOR BETTER CONTROL OF COLDS

Classified Advertisments and Notices

All notices and advertisements, excepting positions wanted, will be inserted in this department at a rate of 20 cents per agate line each insertion. Special raes to contracts of any length. A rate of 15 cents per line is made to persons seeking positions. No advertisement accepted for less than 50 cents.

Copy for this department must be received not later than Tuesday of the week in which it is intended that the first insertion shall appear.

SPECIAL NOTICES.

CHURCH VESTMENTS.
Cathedral Studio, Church embroideries, Altar and Pulpit Hangings. Stoles from $6.50. Burse and veil from $10. Surplice from $8. Send for complete line of pure Irish linens by the yard. Silks, fringes and gold thread. Embroidered emblems ready to appy. Altar Guild Handbook, 50c.
50c.
L. V. MACKRILLE
11 W. Kirke St., Chevy Chase, Washington, D. C.
Telephone Wisconsin 2752.

CHURCH LINEN.
FINE IRISH LINEN specially selected for Church use. 36 inches to 54 inches wide, cut any length. Sample of 12 qualities on request. Mary Fawcett Company, 812 Berkeley Avenue, Trenton, N. J.

RAZOR SHARPENER.
SHARPENS ANY STRAIGHT RAZOR, or safety razor. Guaranteed by manufacturers, and I guarantee it to please you. 50 cents per cake, or 3 cakes for $1.00. I take subscriptions for all magazines published at publishers' rates, or less. Sold by a wheel chair invalid. Edward P. Broxton, R. F. D., Blythe, Ga.

FOUNTAIN PENS.
A FOUNTAIN PEN AT A 1933 VALUE, with the Spencerian quality and smooth writing ease famous for seventy-five years. Guaranteed. Points fine and medium. Colors, gloss black, green and gold, Burgundy, blue and black, grey pearl. Price $2.00. Sold by a shut-in wheel chair invalid. Edward P. Broxton, R. F. D., Blythe, Ga.

DEATHS

MRS. JOHN C. KUNKEL.

MRS. LOUISA SERGEANT KUNKEL, widow of John C. Kunkel, and long active in church, charitable, and civic affairs of this city, died at her home, 17 South Front Street, Harrisonburg, Pa., December 31st. Mrs. Kunkel was born May 21, 1857, the daughter of Colonel William Sergeant and Eliza Espy Sergeant. She and Mr. Kunkel were married on June 15, 1887, by the Rev. R. J. Keeling, rector of St. Stephen's Church, this city. Her husband died December 3, 1914.

Mrs. Kunkel was a lifelong member of St. Stephen's Cathedral. At the time of her death she was president of the Woman's Auxiliary of the Cathedral. She was a member of the board of managers of the Home for the Friendless, and a member of the Civic Club, the Wednesday Club, the Country Club of Harrisburg, the Art Association of Harrisburg, the English Speaking Union, and the Historical Society of Dauphin County.

She is survived by a son, John C. Kunkel, Jr., a vestryman of St. Stephen's Cathedral; two sisters, Miss Mary Sergeant and Miss Sarah Sergeant of Carlisle, Pa.; and a cousin, Mrs. W. W. Galbraith, of Harrisburg.

The funeral service was held in St. Stephen's Cathedral, January 2nd, the Very Rev. J. Thomas Heistand, Dean, officiating, assisted by Bishop Wyatt Brown. The burial was in the Harrisburg Cemetery.

MRS. WILLIAM C. VAN HOOK.

MRS. WILLIAM C. VAN HOOK, nee Miss Ethel Fairfax, passed away into the Sweet Paradise of God at her home, Corsicana, Texas, December 3, 1934. She was a daughter of the late Dr. Ferdinand Fairfax, of "Cameron", King George County, Va., and was born May 8, 1860. She consecrated her life at an early age to God and served Him faithfully to her life's end. Beautiful in face, figure and character, she was loved, honored and admired by all who knew her. She laid down the burdens of life and fell peacefully to sleep in the arms of her Saviour. It can be faithfully said of her, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant, enter thou into the joy of thy Lord". She leaves a husband, three sons and two daughters, and six grandchildren, all of Corsicana, Texas, and one sister, Mrs. A. M. Chandler of Montross, Va.

"Father, in Thy gracious keeping,
Leave we now Thy servant sleeping."

HOWARD R. SHEPPARD.

By the death of HOWARD R. SHEPPARD on December 24th, the Evangelical Education Society of the Protestant Episcopal Church lost one of its most efficient and esteemed members. Always distinguished by the fidelity of his attendance and the sanity of his counsels, he was the inevitable selection for the Treasurership, when that office became vacant by the death of Alfred Lee in 1927.

The burdens of this office he bore cheerfully in the recent hard times and to the entire satisfaction of the Board.

His sudden death is felt by all its members to be the loss not only of an important official, but also of a valued friend and of a sincere Christian, who fought valiantly for the truth as it is in Jesus, and also adorned his profession by the friendliness, integrity and sincerity of his life.

CADL E. GRAMMER,
CHARLES H. LONG.

Personal Notes

Clerical Changes.

The Rev. Francis B. Wakefield, Jr., has assumed charge of Holy Trinity Parish, Gainesville, Florida, beginning on January 1, 1935. His residence is 1316 West Union Street, Gainesville. It is expected that he will also take charge of several adjacent mission stations after his parish work gets under way. The Rev. Mr. Wakefield has been rector of St. Mark's Parish, Palatka, and St. Paul's Mission, Federal Point, since the year 1927. His present field became vacant on October 1, 1934, when the Rev. Wm. S. Stoney accepted a call to Grace Church, Morganton, North Carolina. The parish has been ministered to during the past three months by the Rev. Merritt F. Williams, Student Chaplain at the University of Florida.

The Rev. J. Aubrey Cragg has been appointed by Bishop Taitt to succeed the Rev. William J. Wilkie, who has recently resigned his charge of the Church of the Holy Trinity, Lansdale, and Emmanuel Church, Quakertown, Penn. Mr. Cragg is one of the younger clergy of the diocese; he is a graduate of the Philadelphia Divinity School; he was ordained to the diaconate in 1933, and last June was advanced to the priesthood. For the past fourteen months he has been serving as assistant to the Rev. Dr. Charles E. Tuke at St. John's Church, Lansdowne.

* * *

The Rev. Guy D. Christian, vicar of St. Alban's Church at Marshfield, Wis., has accepted appointment as priest-in-charge at St. Luke's Episcopal Church in South Glastonbury. The Rev. Mr. Christian expects to take up his new duties about the middle of January.

He was born in Galveston, Texas, September 8, 1880. He studied at Richmond College, Richmond, Va., at Virginia Theological Seminary and at General Theological Seminary in New York. He was ordained a deacon in 1908 and a priest in 1909.

He began his parish work as curate at Grace Church, New York, in 1909, going from there to Nome, Alaska, where he remained until 1915, when he went to Oxford, England, for a year. He returned to Alaska in 1916, and was dean of Holy Trinity Cathedral at Nome until 1920, when he came east to serve several Philadelphia churches in temporary positions. He also spent some time in parish work in Kansas and in Oregon, lecturing and writing, before going to Wisconsin in 1929.

* * *

President James Rowland Angell announced that the Rev. Dr. William Adams Brown of New York City, Senior Fellow of the Yale Corporation, has resigned and that the successors of Yale's original trustees have elected in his place Bishop Sherrill of Massachusetts. Bishop Sherril entered Yale College at the age of sixteen, and was graduated with the class of 1911.

The Rev. Edmund N. Joyner, now retired, who has for several years been living at Hickory, N. C., has removed to Lenoir, where formerly he was in charge of St. James' Church for a number of years. The Rev. Boston M. Lackey is now the acceptable rector of that church.

The Rev. Thomas E. Dudney, rector of the Church of the Good Shepherd, Jacksonville, Florida, for the past year, has resigned his parish on account of ill-health, his resignation taking effect on December 31, 1934. The Rev. Mr. Dudney and his family will spend the remainder of the winter at Ormond Beach, where he and his family are staying with the Rev. James G. Glass, D. D., who is Mrs. Dudney's father. The Bishop of the Diocese is arranging for services in the Church of the Good Shepherd week by week, the clergy of the diocese assisting him in these ministrations.

Ordinations.

The Rev. Joelzsie Howard Thompson, deacon, was ordained to the Sacred Order of Priests on December 19, 1934, by the Rt. Rev. Thomas Casady, S. T. D., Bishop of Oklahoma, in St. Philip's Church, Muskogee, Okla.

The Rev. Alvin S. Hock preached the sermon, the Rev. Hugh J. Llwyd presented the ordinand, the Rev. Shirley G. Sanchez read the Epistle, the Rev. James N. MacKenzie read the Gospel, and the Rev. P. M. Casady acted as the Bishop's Chaplain. These presbyters also assisted the Bishop in the laying on of hands.

The Rev. Mr. Thompson will continue as Vicar of St. Philip's Church, Muskogee. His address is 522 North Seventh Street, Muskogee.

The institution of the Rev. Charles H. Urban as rector of St. Barnabas' Episcopal Church, Philadelphia, took place on Wednesday night, January 9. Bishop Taitt officiated. Mr. Urban, who was elected to the rectorship, succeeds at St. Barnabas the Rev. Henry Surart Paynter, the latter accepting a call to Trinity Church, Coatesville, Penn. Mr. Urban is a graduate of the University of Pennsylvania and the Philadelphia Divinity School. During his university years he was prominent in athletics and played on the football team in 1927 and 1928, and also represented the University in Intercollegiate wrestling bouts. Prior to coming to St. Barnabas, Mr. Urban was assistant to the Rev. Stan-V. Wilcox at St. Paul's Church, Chester.

Albert King Hayward was ordained deacon by Bishop Wyatt Brown of Harrisburg, in St. Luke's Church, Mount Joy, Penn., the Sunday after Christmas, December 30. Canon Paul S. Atkins of St. John's, York, Penn., presented the candidate and preached. The Litany was said by the Rev. Harry G. Hartman of Lancaster, Penn. Holy

CONFIRMATION PAPERS

By
CANON F. E. HOWITT

1. Confirmation and Baptism.
2. Baptism and the Christian Covenant.
3. The Baptismal Covenant—Repentance.
4. The Baptismal Covenant—Faith and the Faith.
5. The Baptismal Covenant—The Faith.
6. The Baptismal Covenant—Obedience.
7. The Lord's Supper.
8. The Means of Grace.

A series of informing pamphlets compiled by Canon F. E. Howitt. They have an inestimable value in instructing those who contemplate membership in the Church, and for impressing the already confirmed with the sacredness and meaning of this holy ritual.

Price, single pamphlet, each..... 5 cents
Complete set of eight.....25 cents

Order from

SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN COMPANY
Richmond, Va.

CREOMULSION

Your own druggist is authorized to cheerfully refund your money on the spot if you are not relieved by Creomulsion

BRONCHIAL TROUBLES

Communion was celebrated by the Bishop. The Rev. Mr. Hayward will be in charge of St. Luke's, Mount Joy, and St. Elizabeth's, Elizabethtown, Penn.

The Rev. Alvin Brooks Potter was ordained priest, on December 16, 1934, by the Rt. Rev. Edward M. Cross, Bishop of Spokane, in the Cathedral of St. John the Evangelist, Spokane, Wash. Bishop Cross preached the sermon, the Very Rev. Charles E. McAllister presented the ordinand. The Rev. Mr. Potter will be assistant of the Cathedral of St. John the Evangelist, Spokane.

Deaths.

The Rev. Philip M. Kerridge, rector of St. James' Church, New London, Connecticut, was found dead in a chair in his study the morning of December 16. Gas was flowing from an unlighted log in the fireplace.

He had attended a concert in New Haven and evidently was asphyxiated soon after returning home. The medical examiner reported the death as accidental from gas poisoning.

Born in Chatham, Ont., the son of James and Jean Kerridge, he received the degree of Bachelor of Laws from the University of Michigan in 1892, and studied for holy orders at Berkeley Divinity School. He was ordained deacon in 1898 and priest in 1900. In 1902 he married Sarah Agnes Briggs, of New York City.

The Rev. Mr. Kerridge was assistant at Grace Church, New York, from 1898 to 1900; rector of St. Paul's Church, Providence, and St. Peter's Church, Manton, R. I., 1900 to 1902; Pro-Cathedral, New York City, 1902 to 1904; rector of Trinity Church, Easton, Penn., 1904 to 1910, when he became rector of the church here.

He is survived by four sons, Markham and David of New York City; Louis, living in Pennsylvania; and Charles, in California.

The funeral service for the Rev. Dr. Horace Percy Silver, who died December 15, was held in the Church of the Incarnation, New York, December 18, in the presence of more than 1,000 persons.

Dr. Silver, a prominent clergyman, had been seriously ill for many months. He resigned as rector of the Church of the Incarnation April 19.

The combined choirs of the Church of the Incarnation and of its chapel sang Dr. Silver's favorite hymns The flowers sent filled every available space. The casket was draped with the American flag.

For the Church

R. GEISSLER, INC.
450 SIXTH AVE. NEAR 10th ST. NEW YORK
Church Furnishings
IN CARVED WOOD AND MARBLE · BRASS · SILVER FABRICS + WINDOWS

CHOIR VESTMENTS

Cassocks, Cottas and Caps. Special low prices. Samples and prices on request.
Poplin Canterbury Caps, $1.00 each.
Paper Patterns for Choir and Church.
Vestments for sale.

HENRY HAYTER, 8205 Riverside Drive, Box 618, Rte. 1, St. Petersburg, Fla.

THE PERSONAL RETIREMENT POLICY

(An Investment-Insurance Contract)

issued by the

CHURCH LIFE INSURANCE CORPORATION

Provides a guaranteed life income for the insured beginning at age 60 or 65, with life insurance protection for a beneficiary in the meantime. It is available to individuals not over 50.

These policies and all standard forms of insurance and annuities are available to the clergy, lay officials, and lay workers of the Protestant Episcopal Church and members of their families.

Inquire of the

CHURCH LIFE INSURANCE CORPORATION

20 Exchange Place New York

Educational

The General Theological Seminary

CHELSEA SQUARE, NEW YORK

The next Academic year begins on the last Wednesday in September

Special students admitted and Graduate Courses for graduates of other Theological Seminaries.

The requirements for admission and other particulars can be had from THE DEAN, 1 Chelsea Square, New York, N. Y

SHENANDOAH VALLEY ACADEMY

Certificates accepted by universities, colleges, West Point, Annapolis. The Academy's experienced teachers, cultural atmosphere, limited numbers, military discipline enable it to prepare boys to succeed in college. For catalogue write: Col. B. M. Roszel, Supt., Winchester, Va.

ST. MARGARET'S SCHOOL

TAPPAHANNOCK, VIRGINIA.

A Church School for girls. Boarding Department limited to 70. Colleeg Preparatory Course and Intermediate Grades. Athletics. Very moderate cost.

Country life and simplicity without isolation. Beautiful grounds on Rappahannock River. Three dormitories for different stages.

EDITH LATANE, Headmistress.

ST. CHRISTOPHER'S

A Church Boarding and Day School

Healthful, beautiful and historic surroundings. Boarding Department limited to 50 boys. Rate, $650. Reduction to sons of clergymen and missionaries. Illustrated catalogue on request.

REV. C. G. CHAMBERLAYNE, Ph. D., LL. D., Headmaster, Richmond, Virginia.

The Virginia Theological Seminary

ALEXANDRIA, VIRGINIA

For catalogue and other information, Address THE DEAN

The Beckford School

WOODSTOCK, VIRGINIA.

A school for younger boys. Second grade through Junior High School. On modern farm in Shenandoah Valley. Summer camp. Limited enrollment. Fifty dollars monthly.

EDMUND BURKE WHELAN, Headmaster.

The Bishop Payne Divinity School

The accredited Seminary of the Church for training colored men for the ministry. The curriculum covers the full course for Deacons and Priest's Orders. The degree of D. D. awarded.

For catalogue and information, apply to Rev. F. G. Ribble, M. A., D. D., Dean Petersburg, Va.

The Episcopal Theological School

Cambridge, Massachusetts.

Affiliated with Harvard University. Dean H. B. Washburn, 3 Mason Street.

Bishop Manning of New York officiated, assisted by the Rev. Dr. Howard Chandler Robbins, Dr. Silver's predecessor as rector of the Church of the Incarnation.

Others who took part in the service were the Rev. George A. Robertshaw, assistant at the Incarnation; the Rev. Nicholas M. Feringa, vicar of the Chapel of the Incarnation; and the Rev. Arthur McK. Ackerson, assistant at the chapel.

Among those present were Bishop Freeman of Washington, Bishop Stires of Long Island, Bishop Lloyd and Bishop Gilbert, Suffragans of New York; Bishop Knight, Coadjutor of New Jersey, and Bishop Creighton, Suffragan of Long Island. The Very Rev. Dr. Milo H. Gates and many of the other clergy of the Diocese of New York and nearby Dioceses were present. There were special delegations from the General Theological Seminary, headed by the Very Rev. Dr. Hughell Fosbroke, dean, and from the National Council, the trustees of the Cathedral of St. John the Divine, the standing committee of the diocese of New York, St. Luke's, Hospital, the House of the Holy Comforter, the Army Relief Society, and several other organizations with which Dr. Silver was closely conected, as a member or director or trustee.

Interment was in the West Point Military Cemetery. Dr. John W. Wood, executive secretary of the Department of Foreign Missions of the National Council; Samuel Riker, senior warden of the Church of the Incarnation, and Thomas S. McLane, junior warden, accompanied Dr. Silver's two sisters and brother to West Point. The Rev. Mr. Robertshaw took the committal service.

Dr. Silver was three times nominated as bishop, and twice elected. The election as Coadjutor of Kansas was not confirmed. Dr. Silver refused the election to Wyoming and withdrew his name when nominated as Coadjutor of Texas.

The Rev. Walter H. Larom, rector emritus of St. Luke's Church, Saranac Lake, New York, died December 8, at his home near Valley, Cody, Wyoming, after failing health of several years.

He had made his home at the Tepee Ranch for the past ten years, since his retirement from the active ministry.

The son of Walter and Sarah Emerson Larom, he was born September 6, 1858, in New York City, studied at St. Stephen's College and the Berkeley Divinity School, and was ordained deacon in 1883 and priest in 1884.

The Rev. Mr. Larom was assistant at St. Thomas' Church, New Haven, Conn., from 1883 to 1884; rector of Grace Church, Stafford Springs, Conn., 1884 to 1886; Santa Clara, New York, 1886 to 1887; All Saints' Church, Hudson, New York, 1887; assistant, St. Andrew's Church, New York City, 1888 to 1889; rector, St. Luke's Church, Saranac Lake, 1889 to 1909, and archdeacon in the Diocese of Albany from 1908 to 1920.

Survivors are his widow and a son, Henry Van Bergen Larom.

The funeral service was conducted by the Rev. Alexander E. Pawla in Christ Church, Cody, December 10, with burial at Valley Cemetery.

$1000.00

Will be spent in introducing BURTON'S PURE VANILLA among the Church Guilds. Write for full information. BURTON BROS. CO., Inc., Richmond, Va.

Royal Laundry

and

BAND BOX DRY CLEANERS

UNEXCELLED LAUNDRY

and Cleaning Service

Richmond, Virginia.

DO TRY OUR

DAILY SPECIALS

Mrs. Cook's Delicious Food in Economical Portions.

MRS. COOK'S

Richmond, Va.

Neighbors of St. Paul's.

L. T. CHRISTIAN

FUNERAL DIRECTOR

Boulevard-Park and Patterson Avenue

Richmond, Va.

Office Never Closed

Prices to meet depressed conditions

Edwin S. Gorham, Inc.

Publishers and Booksellers. Established 1900.

Church Literature and Art, Bibles, Prayer Books and Hymnals, Devotional Books, Parish Requisites.

Catalogues and Information on request.

18 West 45th Street, New York.

Some Important Facts in English Church History

EXAMINED AND REVIEWED

By

REV. W. P. WITSELL, D. D.

This is an illuminating and instructive review of the history of the Episcopal Church in England from the earliest records, with commentaries on the book with the above title compiled by the Rev. C. L. Wells, D. D., of Sewanee, Tenn.

As a digest of the records of the establishment and growth of the Church; its maintenance and continuity of existence as an independent religious body amid the vicissitudes of early English politics, and efforts of outside interference, this review affords a valuable fund of information to churchmen.

In pamphlet form,

Price, 25 cents

For sale by

SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN CO.

Richmond, Va.

MARY BALDWIN COLLEGE

FOR WOMEN

The college with a background of culture and scholarship. Accredited; endowed. A. B. degree. Music, Art, Dramatics, Secretarial. Educationally efficient, socially selective, spiritually sincere. Riding, sports. Catalogue.

DR. L. WILSON JARMAN, President

Box K, Staunton, Virginia

DESIGNED FOR THE PROMOTION OF PRACTICAL PIETY, THE DIFFUSION OF RELIGIOUS AND GENERAL INTELLIGENCE, AND THE MAINTENANCE OF THE PRINCIPLES OF THE PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL CHURCH

Southern Churchman

DOMINUS FRUSTRA NISI 1835

Vol. 100. RICHMOND, VA., JANUARY 19, 1935. No. 3.

HIS WINGS

"Your heavenly Father knoweth that ye have need of all these things."—Matthew 6:32.

Thy heavenly Father knoweth thy need of all these things—
Then why shouldst thou be fearful, and chafe, beneath His wings?
And stir, and look about thee, some other way to see,
As if thou couldst not trust Him to do the best for thee!
Thy heavenly Father knoweth thy need of all these things—
Canst thou not cease thy striving, and trust, beneath His wings?

Didst ever know a father, a loving father true,
Who would not for his children do aught that he could do?
Then how much more thy Father, who gave Himself for thee,
Shall freely give thee all things that for thy good shall be!
Thy heavenly Father knoweth thy need of all these things—
Protected by His presence, be still beneath His wings!

For He, thy Father, knoweth—yes, knoweth all thy needs—
The One who clothes the lily, whose hand the raven feeds,
Knows all thy little worries, each anxious wave of care,
Thy need of food and shelter, and raiment fit to wear;
Thy heavenly Father knoweth thy need of all these things—
Draw closer to His bosom, and rest beneath His wings!

Cast all thy care upon Him, for He doth care for thee,
And dear art thou unto Him—more dear thou couldst not be!
Fret not because He leadeth in ways thou canst not know;
The path He's trod before thee, and knows which way to go;
Thy heavenly Father knoweth thy need of all these things—
Then, trusting in His wisdom, rejoice beneath His wings!

—By E. Margaret Clarkson.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Another "Floral Offering".

Mr. Editor:

I did not know you were about to have a birthday celebration, or I would have sent our floral offering ahead of time: as it is, please accept it now with our very best wishes for a long life and reasonable prosperity.

Without always being able to see eye to eye with the Southern Churchman: with the thought that Southern Churchmanship is in reality a more spacious and varied type than that represented by the paper: still I have long read it with pleasure and profit.

We still miss Mr. Williams, though; he was the most colorful and entertaining editor to disagree with who ever nailed his name to the mast-head. In spite of his thorough-going fundamentalism, we need more like him in the Church. Too many Episcopalians are sure that they have left their point of departure, and they are tolerably certain that they have not arrived, and they do not know just where they are in between. It is a trifle difficult to persuade people to join a procession when the marchers themselves seem a little uncertain where they are going or whether the goal is worth the struggle.

With best wishes,

H. D. Bull.

Georgetown, S. C.

THOUGHTS for the THOUGHTFUL

The chief tragedy of a man on this planet is not poverty or sickness or failure or death. The chief tragedy of a man is the inability to realize that he is a transient guest of God on this earth, that his real and permanent dwelling place is not here but elsewhere.—Selected.

There is no truth which has not its corresponding duty, and no duty that has not its corresponding truth. He who lives by the Word of God continually sees new truth, and accepts the duties that arise therefrom.—Phillips Brooks.

If a thing be beautiful, even the autumn of life is beautiful also.—Plutarch.

Detachment from the world must combine with a warm attachment to the men and women who live in it.—Inge.

Justice in judgment is a much-needed Christian virtue. A modest slowness in forming opinions denotes a really fine and strong character.—Exchange.

Victor Hugo said that the strongest force in the world is an idea that has come to its day. The day of Christian Stewardship is not yet fully here, but it is on its way.

They who seek the throne of grace
Find that throne in every place;
If we live a life of prayer,
God is present everywhere.
—Oliver Holden.

Waiting upon God continually will abate your unnecessary cares, and sweeten your necessary ones.—John Mason.

The secret of the perseverance of the wise men is not hard to find. It sprang from this, that they were following a star. Had they been guided by anything less than that, they would have sunk down wearied long ago.

If the wish is wakened in our souls to be ever in His presence, let us go to Him, this moment, and ask Him what to do, and how to feel, believing that He is more ready to hear than we to pray.

"The foolish fears at what may happen,
I cast them all away.
Among the clover-scented grass,
Among the new mown hay.
Among the husking of the corn,
Where drowsy poppies nod,
Where ill thoughts die and good are born,
Out in the fields with God."

"Who is a free man, who?
He who finds his chief delight
In keeping God's commands:
He who loves whate'er is right,
And hath to sin no bonds:
From every law but one set free—
The perfect law of liberty:
This man hath freedom true!"

A child likes to be in the presence of its earthly parents, even though they take no notice of it, and is happy simply because he is with them. How much more ought we to be joyous in our Heavenly Father's presence.—Andrew A. Bonar.

The mighty hills and mountains,
The ocean and the land
Are held within the hollow
Of His creative hand.
His strength has not abated,
His grace and love abound,
And none of all His promises
Has fallen to the ground.
—Selected.

* * *

The Postman's Confidence.

A postman was telling me what a sense of security he felt in his work of delivering the mail. "Why," said he, "all the resources of the government are pledged to support me in carrying on my work. If I have only one small post card in my bag, no man dares to molest me in its delivery. All the Federal police powers of the United States, including the army and navy, would be thrown into action if necessary to secure the safe delivery on that post card." And that led me to think how confidently you and I may set forth with our life, our personality, our equipment, such as it is, to deliver the flaming truth of the Gospel. The word of our Lord is just as much for us today as it was for the disciples, when He said: "All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth. Go . . . and, lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end."—The Sunday School Times.

* * *

A CAROL.

O Little Son of Mary,
Watched with a mother's love,
God's own sweet Gift and Offering
Sent from the Home above.

O Son of Man most lowly
Born in a rocky cave,
Sharing our joys and sorrows,
Tender, yet strong to save.

O Son of God most Holy,
Both human and Divine,
Make Thou a birthday present
Of this poor heart of mine.

O Little Son of Mary,
O Son of Man today,
O Son of God Almighty
Come in my heart to stay.
—A. Causton in Record (English).

CONTENTS

	Page.
Letters to the Editor	2
Thoughts for the Thoughtful	2
Editorials	3
Church and World Problems As Others See Them	4
The Thousandfold Page—F. W. Neve	6
Can We Follow General Lee?—H. H. Smith	6
Hope—William Tyler Olcott	6
Preaching Today and Tomorrow—Rev. Joseph M. Waterman	7
Second Sunday After The Epiphany—W. E. Callender	8
A Look at Our Statistics—Alexander B. Andrews	9
Messages of Congratulation Continue to Come In	10
The Odd 365th Day	10
Book Reviews	11
The Woman's Auxiliary	12
Church Intelligence	13
Family Department	18
Children's Department	20
Personal Notes	22

Southern Churchman

SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN COMPANY
Mayo Memorial Church House,
110 West Franklin Street,
Richmond, Va.

Officers.

President, RT. REV. H. ST. GEORGE TUCKER, D. D.
Vice-President, E. OTTO N. WILLIAMS.
Secretary-Treasurer, MR. JOHN H. COOKE.

Board of Directors.

RT. REV. H. ST. GEORGE TUCKER, D. D.
REV CHURCHILL J. GIBSON, D. D.
REV. GEORGE P. MAYO, D. D.
REV. CHARLES W. SHEERIN.
MR. CARL H. NOLTING.
MR. ALEXANDER W. WEDDELL.
MR. E. RANDOLPH WILLIAMS.
MR. LANGBOURNE M. WILLIAMS, JR.
MISS SUSANNE C. WILLIAMS.

Voting Trustees.

RT. REV. ROBERT CARTER JETT, D. D.
RT. REV. H. ST. GEORGE TUCKER, D. D.
MR. JAMES M. BALL, JR.
MR. ROBERT B. TUNSTALL.
MR. LANGBOURNE M. WILLIAMS, JR.

Editors.

REV. CHARLES W. SHEERIN....Editor
REV. F. W. NEVE, D. D.,
Associate Editor
MRS. CONRAD H. GOODWIN,
Associate Editor
MRS. R. TATE IRVINE.....News Editor
JOHN H. COOKE..Secretary and Manager

Entered at the Post Office in Richmond, Va., as second-class mail matter.

SUBSCRIPTION PRICE.

$3.00 a year in advance. To the Clergy, $2.00. Six months, $1.50. Total subscriptions, three months, 50 cents; 10 cents a copy. Foreign postage, $1.00 additional.

For the convenience of subscribers subscriptions are continued at expiration unless otherwise ordered. Notice of renewal, discontinuance or change of address should be sent two weeks before the date they go into effect.

RECEIPT OF PAYMENT is shown in about two weeks by change of date on address label. If date is not properly extended after each payment, notify us promptly. No receipt for payment will be sent.

Notice post office address. The exact post office address to which we are directing the paper at the time of writing MUST ALWAYS BE GIVEN. Our mailing list is arranged by post office and not alphabetically.

Make all checks and money orders payable to the Southern Churchman, and not to an individual.

ADVERTISEMENTS.—Rates quoted on request. For classified see head of that department.

Representatives wanted in each Parish; liberal commissions.

News concerning the Church at large always welcome.

SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN

Catholic for every truth of God; Protestant against every error of man.

EDITORIALS

Vol. 100. RICHMOND, VA., JANUARY 19, 1935. No. 3.

Baptism in the Modern World.

In England, Baptism is sometimes referred to as "the poor man's sacrament". This is because Baptism can be obtained at any hour that is convenient, while the average celebration of the Lord's Supper comes at hours not convenient to many workingmen. But Baptism is more than the poor man's sacrament, for it is the sacrament that even the sceptical cling to and bring their children to the Church at least for that one time.

Possibly, there is a paying of tribute to tradition in the universality of this custom, and maybe amongst the poor there is even a superstitious element that it is dangerous to risk death without Baptism. But the fact remains that in our Church we have the advantage of touching families at that time even in larger degree than at marriage. For many marriages are held by civil authorities and ministers of other churches, but children are always brought back to the mother church.

There is a danger that we take the Baptism too lightly. With many society people it is the occasion for a social gathering and nothing more. With others it is often a matter of routine. We cannot help but wonder if that is not so because our clergy are seldom heard in their sermons mentioning Baptism, let alone preaching a whole sermon on the subject.

Sometimes we are accused by our neighbors of being the perpetuators of the superstitions of the dark ages by continuing infant Baptism. If we do not ever make mention of the teaching of the Church, it may be because we are afraid of the subject, but that would call for an honest inquiry from every member of the Church. To most of us in this modern world who have thought upon the subject at all, Baptism represents endowing our children with a spiritual heritage just as we would try to endow them with the best physical heritage in our power. We still believe that the Christ is understood by little children better than by adults and we want our children to know that we give them the best that we have in religion as well as in physical things. It is as reasonable to ask children whether they wish to be educated as it is to ask them whether they care to be baptized.

But we do need more thought and teaching on the subject, and the Second Sunday after Epiphany might be a very good time for such a subject to be discussed.

The Use of Church Equipment.

It is a matter of common knowledge that during the years preceding the depression many churches overbuilt. Parish houses and even churches were erected at great cost and many of the churches have been suffering from having to pay for the inflated cost during the lean years that followed.

While most of us have learned the lesson of too much equipment, there remains the almost moral problem of whether or not we are using our equipment properly now that we have it. Its use will greatly determine whether or not church property will be taxed in the future.

For the average parish no program can possibly use a parish house all of the time, and since most of the reason given for the building of elaborate equipment was an argument for religious education, there will be many hours when this equipment will have no active use in the regular program of the parish. On the other hand many of the social agencies, both private and governmental, need equipment and need it badly. Surely this tax-free property of the Church could be volunteered for use for social service programs.

The well-equipped kitchens of many of our churches, used often only a few times a year, would be ideal for home demonstration agents and for those who wish to teach domestic science. We know of several parishes that have recruited many children who had no Sunday-school connection, by first attracting their attention through the domestic science teacher, who was glad to have the equipment of the parish. Training schools for leaders of Boy Scouts and Girl Scouts would be much better if they could utilize the facilities of a good parish house. There are literally hundreds of ways in which the parish house could be of community value.

But even beyond social service work, there is a use for the parish house in its idle hours. Community musical organizations are often confined to the limits of a private home and consequently their influence for culture and good is limited by lack of room. With the musical heritage of the Episcopal Church, the free-will offering of a place to meet would be a definite contri-

(Continued on page 8.)

Church and World Problems as Others See Them

The Fascist Attitude.

From "The Witness," January 10, 1935:

If there are those who may still have illusions about the attitude of the Fascist state toward religion they certainly ought to be put straight by the decision of a Nazi court sitting in Cologne on December 20, expelling from his professorship at the University of Bonn the most noted living Protestant theologian, Dr. Karl Barth. No action which the Fascist state has taken more vividly reveals its true attitude toward religion and the Church. By the testimony of the presiding judge, Dr. Barth's original refusal to swear an unequivocal oath to Adolf Hitler was not the chief reason for his dismissal. He had declared his willingness to reconsider the oath on the basis of an interpretation issued by the Brotherhood Council of the Confessional Church, which declared that every Christian in swearing by the name of God explicitly limits his obedience to acts which he can justify as a Christian. However, the prosecuting attorney informed the court that the interpretation of the oath by the Church is inadmissible, because German citizens are expected to recognize that in taking an oath to obey Adolf Hitler they do so regardless of any and all religious scruples, principles or teachings. This is the logical Facist neo-pagan viewpoint and agrees exactly with the prosecutor's contention that theological as well as other faculties are simply state institutions, entirely subject to the will of the state in all matters. Consideration of the oath being disregarded because of this ruling, the whole prosecution rested upon two other charges brought against the distinguished theologian. It was said that he omitted to use the Hitler salute before and after his classes, and second, that in a conversation last year in Berlin, Dr. Barth has stated that there could be a difference of opinion between equally good Christians on matters such as concentration camps and the cause of the Reichstag fire.

The defense which Dr. Barth made was that theological faculties had a special relationship to the Church and that the totalitarian demand of Herr Hitler for complete allegiance did not extend to the theological professor's functions as a teacher of the Christian religion. Quite obviously, the decision which was rendered, and the arguments which preceded it, reveal the fact that the earlier promises of Hitler to respect the independence of the Churches and the Christian religion are to be consistently disregarded. The Civil Servants' Act of 1932 will most certainly be invoked against others as it has been in this instance against Germany's leading theologian. The judgment is a boomerang in the eyes of discerning Christians everywhere. That which is unworthy of confidence is not Dr. Karl Barth, as the court declared, but the Fascist state.

Crime.

From "The Chronicle," December, 1934:

Recently the Attorney General of the United States called together in Washington a conference of all those agencies which by nature are interested in the detection and prosecution of crime. The step thus taken was of momentous import. It not only indicated on the part of the federal government a determination to arouse a public interest in the vital necessity of suppressing the tremendous amount of crime which has developed in this country, but also an equal determination to discover through common council of the most effective means for meeting the evil.

Crime is no longer purely sporadic and individual. As if taking their cue from successfully planned organization in legitimate business present day criminals in many cases have found it to their advantage to organize the execution of crime with the greatest of care and coordinated action. In this matter they have been helped by the development of fast automobiles and by the possession of machine guns. In many instances they have been better equipped with arms than the officers of the law who have pursued them.

Crime has become a business; whereas a generation ago banditry concerned itself with a few thousand dollars, now the figures frequently amount to hundreds of thousands, and the number of criminals has increased in each case almost proportionately.

Many factors have entered into the creation of the present great crime problem. Undoubtedly, the war with its social disruptions contributed its part to the breeding of a criminal class by the development of a spirit of recklessness and a contempt for law and order. Unquestionably, too, prohibition added its bit by offering alluring opportunities to the criminally minded in the manufacture and the sale of illicit liquor. But perhaps more basic than either of these contributing and possibly initial stimuli to crime has been the corruption of those who held offices of trust in the administration of our government, national, state and city. With the huge sums of money available from bootlegging it was easier than ever to buy that vicious thing called "protection." Crime was thus able to protect itself by purchasing immunity from police, and even the courts.

That the other major offenses, such as organized banditry and kidnapping should have developed partly as a result of the elimination of much of the profit of the bootlegger and the need of new means of acquiring great wealth with the minimum effort, is merely another way of saying that slipshod enforcement of the law was an outgrowth of the corruption which had eaten its way into our system of government.

Crime has now reached the point of being a national menace, and unless some drastic steps are taken to meet it, we shall find ourselves in the powerful clutches of a Frankenstein over which we have no control.

The situation calls for an immediate remedy. It demands that our police system shall be freed from political influence so that it may function without fear of let or hindrance. The police force by and large is as decent as any similar number of men elsewhere in society. Those members who are crooked should be expelled. Again, it should be so fixed that it would be especially unhealthy for any lawyer to engage in any practices which looked toward shielding the criminal and our courts should be so organized that judgments could not be made in favor of the criminal class.

Last but not least the criminal should be stripped of his romantic halo. Too many have in their hearts a sort of dime-novel worship for the criminal as one who bravely holds the world at bay. He is in a way a sort of revived Robin Hood.

This hero-worship and even worse than this, that messy sentimentalism which is ready to weep over the murdering thief as a wandering sheep lost from the fold should be absolutely wiped out and the American public brought to recognize that the criminal is a menace to the social order and should be exterminated as one would a poisonous reptile.

When we have come to see that our courts and our police force function dispassionately and without any taint of corruption and when we see to it that maudlin sentiment does not bend those in power toward over-tenderness toward the criminal class, then we shall be in a fair way toward solving the crime problems. Whatever other difficulties there are will prove to rest in the proper correlation of city, state and national agencies for the prosecution of crime.

THE THOUSANDFOLD PAGE

ARCHDEACON FREDERICK W. NEVE, D. D.

The Right of Eminent Domain in Relation to Religion

Our scientific friends and advisers seem to have a strong aversion to the term "supernatural" on the ground that so many events and circumstances, which were formerly attributed to the supernatural, are now susceptible of a natural explanation. This, however, does not cover the whole ground, as may be seen from what follows. To begin with ourselves, from a Christian point of view, human beings have a supernatural character by means of which they transcend the physical world in which they find themselves. Prayer, for instance, is a supernatural act, because by means of it we are enabled to draw near to God and to hold communion with Him. In the next place we believe that we have immortal souls, which so far from being destroyed by death, are set free to enter upon a higher life. Christianity is, therefore, a supernatural religion, because a Christian life cannot be carried on and exercised without transcending our natural environment.

The Right of Eminent Domain.

It has occurred to the writer that the law, or Right of Eminent Domain, can be applied to the religious life with advantage, as it seems to make more clear our relationship to Nature and also to God Himself. The Right of Eminent Domain is defined as an "incident of sovereignty," that is to say, that while a private individual is protected by law in the enjoyment of his property, the state, by virtue of its sovereign power, can do what no private person has the power to do, that is, take possession of property for some public use, provided that just compensation is granted. Thus the state's right of Eminent Domain seems to override the law of trespass, and the other rights which ordinarily pertain to the possession of private property. A striking illustration of this right may be seen in the removal of several hundred families in the Blue Ridge by the State of Virginia, in order to transfer the land formerly owned by these people to the Federal Government as a National Park.

Man's Dominion Over Nature.

Can we apply this principle to ourselves in our dealings with Nature? Man exercises a sovereignty over Nature by means of which he is able, to a certain extent, to control her operations and direct them to his own ends. He is able, as it were, by the right of Eminent Domain, to suspend Nature's laws and exert the law of his own will and intelligence to raise her to a level which she could not possibly attain to by herself, no matter how much time was allowed her to do so.

An Illustration.

At one time, and not so long ago, the idea of a machine, heavier than air, being made to rise above the earth and travel for hundreds of miles through the atmosphere, would have seemed as impossible as walking upon water. It would have semed at that time that in either case the law of gravitation was being abrogated. We have learned, however, that in the case of the airplane there is no breach of natural law, but simply the suspension of one law by the exercise of another, and it is possible that some time in the future, the law of gravitation may be suspended in order that we may be able to walk upon the water. What man's sovereign power has been enabled to accomplish in one case it may be able to do in the other.

The Supreme Prerogative of the Creator.

We now rise to the consideration of the supreme sovereignty of God over all Creation. If in the lower degrees of sovereignty, which we have already mentioned, the right and prerogative of Eminent Domain is seen to operate; to deny to God, Himself, the supreme Ruler, the same right and prerogative, would seem to be the height of unreason. To God, Himself, every order and degree of existence must be seen to be perfectly natural, that is according to its own nature, as endowed by Him. He must have reserved to Himself the right of Eminent Domain by which He can express His will and direct His creation towards the higher ends which constitute the divine purpose.

The Incarnation an Example of This Divine Prerogative.

Thus the coming of Christ into the world, and the whole redemptive work wrought by Him in His life and death was for the eternal good of His creatures, and therefore fully justified the exercise of His sovereign right of Eminent Domain. Without breaking them He brought the laws of nature, including those of human nature, into harmony with the supreme law of His own beneficent purpose.

God's Mighty Works Not Contrary to Nature.

The coming of the Son of God into the world was a miracle, because it was entirely outside the ordinary course of Nature. And this may be said, too, of His own mighty works, especially His Resurrection. But it did not necessarily follow that they were contrary to Nature, for just as man is, as we have seen, able to raise Nature above herself till she acts as his servant in the fulfilment of his own ends, so, too, God, as the Supreme Ruler of all things, can and has exercised the sovereign right of Eminent Domain in raising His creation to higher and more perfect ends, the ultimate destination of which we are unable to foresee at present.

* * *

HIS WILL AND OURS.

We can be what we will to be,
If it be God's will too;
We can be what we will to be,
And make this earth anew.

It is through us He works His will,
And seeks to bless mankind;
It is through us He works His will,
And shapes things to His mind.

So let us think His thoughts until
We see His plan divine:
So let us think His thoughts until
His will is yours and mine.

Frederick W. Neve.

Can We Follow General Lee?

By H. H. Smith

With a just pride Confederate soldiers boast that they "followed Lee." Can we follow him today? Can we follow Lee in his attitude to war? "War, of which he was so supreme a master, was to him abhorrent, only possible as a dire necessity, in defense of home and friends," says a writer. On Christmas Day, 1862, just after his great victory over Burnside, at Fredericksburg, he wrote to his wife: "But what a cruel thing is war, to separate and destroy families and friends and mar the purest joys and happiness God has granted us in this world, to fill our hearts with hatred instead of love for our neighbors, and to devastate the fair face of this beautiful world! I pray that on this day when only peace and good will are preached to mankind, better thoughts may fill the hearts of our enemies and turn them to peace."

In one of his letters during the war, Lee said: "The loss of our gallant officers and men throughout the army cause me to weep tears of blood, and cause me to wish that I could never hear the sound of a gun again."

Lee was a most humane commander, respecting the rights of non-combatants and "observant of the most advanced rules of civilized warfare." With respect to his treatment of his soldiers, what higher compliment could be paid him than this: "It was indeed always as a parent, not merely as a military superior, that Lee believed in controlling and disciplining his army." What was the result of this strange way of conducting the stern business of making war? Well, it worked—and caused the editor of the London Times to write: "Lee has never been surpassed in the art of winning the passionate love of his troops, and, as with all generals of a high order, his lieutenants looked up to him with perfect confidence, and saw in his commands a presage of victory."

Now, let us contrast this way of handling soldiers and conducting war with that of an Austrian officer, who, several years ago, said: " 'Live and let live' is no device tor an army. Contempt for one's own comrades, for the troops of the enemy, and, above all, fierce contempt for one's own person, are what war demands of every one. Far better is it for an army to be too savage, too cruel, too barbarous, than to possess too much sentimentality and human reasonableness. If the soldier is to be good for anything as a soldier, he must be exactly the opposite of a reasoning and thinking man. The measure of goodness in him is his possible use in war. War, and even peace, require of the soldier absolutely peculiar standards of morality. The recruit brings with him common moral notions, of which he must seek immediately to get rid. For him victory, success, must be everything. The most barbaric tendencies in men come to life again in war, and for war's uses they are incommensurably good."

These words were quoted by Professor William James, in one of his books, more than thirty years ago. If any one should contend that these brutally frank words do not apply to present-day methods of warfare, let him be reminded that it is certainly true today that "the most barbaric tendencies in men come to life again in war." With soldiers of the type just mentioned, there is no problem of moral evil connected with war; but the moral evil of war weighed heavily on the soul of Lee. As individuals, as a nation, can we follow Lee in his attitude to war?

Can we follow Lee in adversity? A Northern writer says: "Hardly anything in the man's character is grander than the way in which he instantly adapted himself to new circumstances and began to work as a loyal and devoted citizen, even when the United States still refused him the rights and privileges of citizenship."

After the war, when some one, talking with Lee, "wondered what was in store for 'us poor Virginians,' the General replied with an earnest, softened look: 'You can work for Virginia, to build her up again, to make her great again. You can teach your children to love and cherish her'."

Impressed by these noble words, no wonder the New York Herald said: "Displaying neither bitterness nor regret over the irrevocable past, he conquered us in misfortune by the grand manner in which he sustained himself, even as he dazzled us by his genius when the tramp of his soldiers resounded through the valleys of Virginia."

Can we follow Lee in his attitude toward the North? After the war, Lee counselled that all bitterness be put away, "advising old soldiers and others to submit to all authorities and become law-abiding citizens." When a lady cherished some bitterness toward the Government, he said: "Madam, don't bring up your sons to detest the United States Government. Recollect that we form one country now. Abandon all these local animosities and make your sons Americans."

Referring to these lofty ideals, Gamaliel Bradford, of Massachusetts, author of "Lee, the American," says: "Abandon all the local animosities and make your sons Americans! What finer sentence could be inscribed on the pedestal of Lee's statue than that? Americans! All the local animosities forgiven and forgotten, can we not say that he, too, though dying only five years after the terrible struggle, died a loyal, a confident, a hopeful American, and one of the very greatest?"

* * *

BISHOP VINCENT DIES.

Bishop Boyd Vincent died at 8:35 P. M., Monday, January 14, at his residence, 1603 East McMillan Street, Cincinnati. He passed away in his sleep, after being unconscious all day. Bishop Hobson was absent at Washington at the time, in the interest of the Forward Movement. Mrs. Hobson remained with Bishop Vincent for the last two days, and up to the moment of his death. The funeral was held at 2 P. M., Wednesday, January 16, in St. Paul's Cathedral, Cincinnati, where Bishop Vincent was consecrated forty-six years ago. Bishop Hobson was in charge and accompanied the body to Erie, Penn., Bishop Vincent's old home, where the interment took place. Bishop Vincent attained the age of eighty-six years and ten months.

Gilbert P. Symons.

* * *

HOPE.

Turmoil and strife, the din of day unending,
Rumors of war, and cries of discontent,
Hover like clouds of utter doom impending,
A sword of wrath above is imminent.
Fearful the hour, the tide of doubt is sweeping,
Encompassing the bulwarks of our faith,
We sense an evil apparition creeping,
That haunts our days like visions of a wraith.

Be not downcast! Let hope be ever constant,
Like mountains meet the tempest undismayed.
Your night is filled with friendly stars remonstrant,
Orion faces Taurus unafraid.
Let not the dread of storms oppress your mind,
For He who rules the calm controls the wind.

William Tyler Olcott.

Preaching---Today And Tomorrow

By Joseph M. Waterman, S. T. D.

PART I.

In the fall of 1933 a questionnaire was sent to one hundred professors of homiletics and leading preachers of all denominations.

The following questions were asked:

1. What is the trend of preaching?
2. What form seems to be the most effective?
3. Is any improved form in the process of development?
4. What are a few of the most important factors in effective preaching?
5. By what means may preaching be improved?

An explanation seems to be in order regarding the questions. After a number of years of copious reading and study, these questions appeared in the mind of the writer. Naturally one who asks questions has answers to propose. But would other men have the same answers?

The next difficult was to frame question in such a way that the answer was not indicated. Again a question may be asked for the purpose of obtaining information and not for confirmation of the questioner's ideas.

Since the whole field of preaching is under discussion, these five questions cover a wide range. As some men stated in their replies, it would take a volume or more to answer them fully.

In the field of medicine, for example, improved methods usually come from the research laboratories and the universities. The doctors in the making will practice in the future what they learn today.

Likewise in the ministry the first indications of new developments or improved methods of preaching should be looked for where men are in the process of being trained.

The writer has reserved his own comments on these questions to the last. The thoughtful and painstaking answers which have been received from busy men have been examined with pleasure, with profit, and with gratitude.

Replies were received from sixty-three clergymen of the following denominations:

Baptist, five; Congregational, four; Unitarian, one; Episcopal, twenty (ten bishops); Lutheran, three; Methodist, eight; Presbyterian, ten; United Brethren, one; Universalist, one; from professors in undenominational seminaries, eight.

Question one is a difficult question to answer. It is a general question and the answer is an opinion. It was asked for the purpose of information. There may or there may not be any trends of preaching. And this does not raise the question of whether these trends are improvements.

From a careful study of the answers, the following general opinions are noted:

1. While the contents of sermons has not changed, the emphasis of the subject matter seems to have changed from doctrinal to ethical. Sermons emphasize the practical side of religion, that is the problem of how to put Christian principles into practice. The emphasis on the social aspects of religion is pronounced.
2. Sermons tend to be shorter and more concise.
3. They are becoming more conversational in tone and more natural in presentation.
4. There is a definite trend toward extemporaneous preaching.
5. The formal and oratorical sermon is definitely in the discard.

II. What form seems to be the most effective?

The majority stated the expository form seemed to be the most effective.

III. Is any improved form in the process of development?

The majority answered no.

IV. What are a few of the most important factors in effective preaching?

1. The character, personality and life of the preacher was considered of most importance and sincerity was mentioned by practically all.
2. Knowledge of the needs of men especially through pastoral work.
3. Careful preparation.
4. Definite aim.
5. Simplicity.
6. Knowledge of psychology.

V. By what means may preaching be improved?

1. By consecration, meditation, prayer and study on the part of the preacher.

(a) Studies particularly mentioned were—

(1) Study of the Bible.
(2) Study of the needs of men.
(3) Study of literature.
(4) Study of model preachers.
(5) Study of psychology.

2. By hard work.
3. By improved training in the seminaries.
4. By improved knowledge and use of the voice.

There are a few observations which seem in order:

1. The sincere interest in the subject of preaching was manifest in all replies.
2. All replies welcomed any suggestion or information.
3. All replies mentioned at some place or other the personality of the preacher demanding that the preacher present to his hearers the Christian life in the flesh—his flesh.
4. Most replies emphasized extemporaneous praching, conversational in tone, direct and personal.
5. Most replies emphasized the need of a definite aim for all sermons.

PART II.

Since a number of those who made reply to these questions asked the writer to express his ideas, these are included as giving the general impression derived from observation, reading and study.

I. What are the trends of preaching?

1. Sermons are tending to become briefer and more concise.
2. The delivery is definitely extemporaneous.
3. The delivery is becoming more conversational in tone.
4. The emphasis of the subject matter is on the practical application of Christian principles to life.
5. The introductions have become shorter and more skillful.

II. What form of preaching is most effective?

1. Dr. Fosdick's plan of the project method.

III. Is any new form in the process of development?

1. Dr. Fosdick's plan.

IV. What are some of the most important factors in effective preaching?

1. The man behind the sermon—

(a) His sincerity.
(b) His enthusiasm.
(c) His conception of his task and opportunity.

(d) His idea of the needs of men.
(e) His experience of God.
(f) His ideals in preaching.
(g) His preparation of himself.
2. The definite object of the sermon.
3. The psychological approach to the hearers.
4. The ability of the preacher to organize his thoughts in orderly fashion.
5. The simplicity and clarity of expression.
6. The proper use of the voice.

V. By what means may preaching be improved?

1. By better training in the seminaries.

(a) The method of training needs to be entirely reorganized. There are some things which may be taught in class work, such as: structure, development, purpose, introduction, etc. Students need more individual practice under criticism.

(b) More courses in preaching are needed in the seminaries, such as—
(1) The sermon as a part of English literature.
(2) The principles of voice production.
(3) Drill in outline making.
(4) Psychology of preaching.
(5) The use of the Bible in preaching.
(6) The pastoral background of preaching.

2. By more opportunities to improve his preaching after he has finished his seminary courses.

(a) By summer schools, where he preaches under guidance.

(b) Analysis and criticism of sermons by correspondence.

3. By a clearer conception of the purpose of preaching and the ideals of good preaching.

4. By a more profound consecration to his task. By understanding that the man who preaches must—"practice what he preaches."

* * *

THE ODD 365TH DAY.

(From the Journal of Calendar Reform.)

There is a Chinese story about a farmer who at his death left eleven sheep to his three sons, with the following bequest: that to his eldest be given one-half the number of sheep, to the second son one quarter, and to the youngest two-thirds of the remainder.

This strange division greatly perplexed and distressed the sons, until a distinguished mathematician showed them a way of solving their problem. He told them to go to a neighbor and ask for the loan of one sheep. With this borrowed sheep the sons now had twelve animals, which they could distribute in accordance with the wish of their venerable father. The eldest son received one-half the number, or six sheep; the second son received one-quarter, or three sheep; the youngest received two-thirds of the remainder, or two sheep. When the borrowed animal had thus performed its duty, the sons returned it to their neighbor.

The Chinese story illustrates one of the problems that confronts calendar reformers. Their problem is: How can the calendar of 365 days be evenly divided into its various parts?

By a somewhat similar process to that used in the Chinese story, the odd 365th day is temporarily removed, so that the problem may be solved. The year now consists of 364 days, a number which is suitably divisible. The 364 days may be divided into equal quarters of 91 days and equal halves of 182 days. They may be divided into exactly 52 weeks of seven days each, giving 13 weeks to each quarter and 26 weeks to each half year. The 12 months, apportioned into quarters of 3 months, on a basis of 31, 30 and 30 days, provide months of exactly 26 weekdays throughout the year.

With the problem thus satisfactorily solved, the odd 365th day—like the borrowed sheep in the Chinese story—is returned to the calendar and placed at the end of the year, thus completing the perpetual and changeless calendar.

* * *

SECOND SUNDAY AFTER THE EPIPHANY.

The collect for today is taken from the Sarum Missal, 1549 (Sacramentary Gregory). The words "after the Epiphany" were added in 1552. In 1604 the word "Peace" was altered to "grace." The original was restored in 1662, and the words "Through Jesus Christ our Lord" were added in 1662. When we look at the opening words of this collect we must realize that we are acknowledging the Superior Authority of God ("Almighty and Everlasting God") and this acknowledgment is a supreme act of faith. Our acknowledgment of the superior authority of Almighty God inspires us in our prayers, for we know when we make our acknowledgment that it is the real justification of our prayers. Not only do we acknowledge His supremacy over all and His omnipotence, but through Jesus Christ we are entitled to call Him "Our Father." This brings with it a clear understanding that not only is He the One of power, but also the One of Love. A word which is also of great interest is that of "Govern" which carries with it, not only the idea of a Ruler of a multitude, but also, the thought of the family. The head of the family is presumably the ruler of the family (although at the present time the head of the family seems to have lost out) and, using a common expression in regard to the father, was to speak of him (not to his face) as the Governor. Going back to earliest times, we find amongst the Romans that, what we would now call the Tutor, was then known as the Governor, and that brings us to the term in daily use of "Governors"; these also being responsible for the training of those committed to their charge to carry through their school, college, and very often university days; in a rather strained sense we might also speak of the Governor as the protector. In this collect we appeal to Almighty God, and as our Governor we request Him to govern all things in heaven and earth, the hosts above and we who are alive on earth, to teach and to train us in our duty to Him as our Father and to assist and watch over us in our endeavors to fulfil our duties to our fellowmen. Notice also the words, "Grant us Thy peace." The desire of humanity is for peace and so we pray that peace may be vouchsafed to us. Peace can only come to us if we endeavor to do that which is right, the knowledge of our endeavors for good, helping us in attaining that peace which passeth all understanding.

William E. Callender.

* * *

EDITORIALS.

(Continued from page 3.)

bution to the cultural development of the community.

Our plea is simply not to wait for people to ask, but to volunteer that which we already have.

An Announcement.

It is a great pleasure to be able to announce that beginning February 1, 1935, the Rev. Samuel B. Chilton will serve this paper as Associate Editor. His particular work will be the selection of manuscript material and he may be addressed in care of the Southern Churchman.

Mr. Chilton was educated at the Virginia Polytechnic Institute, the University of Virginia, and the Theological Seminary in Virginia. He is rector of St. Paul's Parish, Hanover, Virginia, and is an examining chaplain of the Diocese of Virginia.

A Look At Our Statistics And A Fortcast

By Alexander B. Andrews

(Editor's Note: For many years Mr. Andrews, an attorney of Raleigh, N. C., has studied statistics in regard to our Church. His forecasts have always been interesting. The "Living Church Annual" editorially has urged our Church to have better statistics and we believe Mr. Andrews' work has in the past proved of interest to our readers.)

On December 17, 1934, I received the Living Church Annual for 1935, which, on pages 523, 529 and 533, gives the total statistics of the Episcopal Church as of October 1, 1934, which had been compiled from the official diocesan journals, whose reports closed as of December 31, 1933.

This showed 6,392 clergymen, 1,363,414 communicants, and 2,039,902 baptized persons and that the contributions were $30,576,429.30.

On pages 523 and 533 a comparison is made between the statistics of the current year 1934) and the preceding year (1933), which shows a gain of thirty-six clergymen, 21,609 communicants, and 25,057 baptized persons, and a decline in aggregate contributions of $3,465,190.61.

While it is entertaining to contrast the statistics and figures of one year with another, each of which are in the past, and speculate upon how it happened, yet it is more entertaining to take stock of the present and envisage the future in the terms of the year, or series of years, just past.

Would it be possible to forecast in advance the figures that are to be set forth in this annual compilation as of October 1, 1935, which would appear in the 1936 Living Church Annual?

Under date of January 4, 1934, I prepared and put in writing a review of the 1933 statistics, contrasting them with a prior forecast for that year, and made a forecast of the figures to be compiled as of October 1, 1934, and which would appear in the 1935 Living Church Annual, which is just out.

In the attached table, just immediately following, there is set forth in column one (A) the forecast made January 4, 1934, and in column two the actual statistics compiled as of October 1, 1934, and in column three how much the forecast was over or under. This table is as follows:

THE PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL CHURCH, U. S. A.

COMPARISON OF FORECAST AND STATISTICS AS OF OCTOVER 1, 1934.

FORECAST MADE JANUARY 4, 1934. COMPILED STATISTICS PUBLISHED DECEMBER 17, 1934.

	A Average Forecast Jan. 4, '34	B Actual Statistics Compiled Oct. 1, '34	C Forecast Over or Under
Clergy	6,314	6,392	— 78
Ordinations:
Deacons	174	184	— 10
Priests	178	157	+ 21
Candidates	511	491	+ 20
Postulants	439	456	— 17
Lay Readers	4,119	4,054	+ 65
Parishes and Missions
Baptisms:
Infant	48,388	53,166	— 4,778
Adult	11,832	12,796	— 964
Not specified		193
Total	61,324	66,155	— 4,831
Confirmations	70,898	72,562	— 1,664
Baptized Persons	1,973,011	2,039,902	—66,891
Baptized Persons (A)	2,020,813	2,039,902	—19,089
Communicants	1,315,501	1,363,414	—47,913
Communicants (A)	1,342,604	1,363,414	—20,810
Net gain	18,175	21,609	— 3,434
Marriages	14,013	21,650	— 7,637
Burials	49,620	50,493	— 873
Church Schools:
Teachers	61,442	61,502	— 60
Scholars	506,826	510,309	— 3,483
Contributions	$28,553,792.61	$30,576,429.30	$2,022,626.69

Of the above figures, the worst out of line in the forecast in a percentage way is the number of marriages which was forecasted at 14,013 and were actually 21,650.

The aggregate contributions were missed by $2,022,626.69, which is about six and one-half per cent. The number of infant baptisms of 53,166 was underestimated by 4,778. The number of communicants was underestimated by 20,810, which is one and one-half per cent. The number of baptized persons was underestimated by 19,089, which was slightly under one per cent. The number of Sunday-school teachers was underestimated by 60, which is one-tenth of one per cent. The number of Sunday-school scholars was underestimated by 3,483, which is two-thirds of one per cent.

To properly contrast the figures for 1934 with those of prior years, they should be reduced to percentages or ratios, as was done in the monograph "Fifty Years of Statistics," in order to give the relativeness of the absolute figures of one year contrasted with another, when the membership of that year is considered. The drop in the total contributions to the Church from $46,005,492.52 in 1929 to $30,576,429 in 1934, can best be approximated by working out on a percentage basis, as the total number of communicants gained 96,398 from 1929 to 1934.

These per capita percentages (the contributions being divided by the number of communicants) work out for the past nine years as follows:

Total Contributions: Per Capita Basis 1926-1934.

Year.	Contributions.
1926	$36.396
1927	37.255
1928	37.680
1929	37.046
1930	36.183
1931	34.364
1932	30.594
1933	25.805
1934	22.787

Examining the above table it will be seen that in 1929 the contributions aggregated $37.046, and in 1934 only $22.787, which is a decline of $14.259.

What would be the forecast for the future? Is it possible now to forecast these figures, working them out by any rule, or does one merely have to guess, and, if so, what would be your guess?

By working out the figures, in the light of experience of the past three years, it is possible to give such a forecast, which is as follows:

FORECAST FOR OCTOBER 1, 1935. MADE DECEMBER 19, 1934.

	Clergy	Communicant	Average
Clergy		6,412	6,412
Increase
Ordinations:
Priests	139		139
Deacons	177		177
Candidates	475	464	469
Postulants	437	445	441
Lay Readers	4,046	4,027	4,036

(Continued on page 10.)

Messages Of Congratulation Continue to Come In

Many Articles Are Thought-Producers.

Dear Sir:

One of my earliest recollections was Mother's calling us in on Sunday afternoon to listen to the Children's Page of the Southern Churchman. It was a stand-by in our family for many years, and as we grew older, we came to appreciate the other sections, so that many articles that have stuck in my memory as thought-producers for ten, fifteen and twenty years come from your paper.

Today, when the Southern Churchman is coming back to its old form, "getting its stride", as we used to say on the athletic field, I seldom find an issue that I could miss without a real loss. Even if it is not read on time, its comments on events in the Church are always worth reading, while its main articles are without a peer.

I am probably prejudiced in its favor, but today I feel I could do without any magazine on my table with less loss than I would feel if the Southern Churchman were not there.

Randolph F. Blackford.

St. James' Church, Leesburg, Fla.

Visitor For 100 Years.

Dear Editor:

I have received and read through the centennial publication of the Southern Churchman. I read many of the congratulations which you received, all of them express my appreciation of the splendid good work that the paper has accomplished. I am writing this letter to state a fact—which I doubt whether there is any one now living who can vouch for, from actual observation, and even I cannot vouch for every statement I shall make, but I feel sure I shall not be far wrong. (Statement): The Southern Churchman has been a constant weekly visitor in my family for one hundred years. Should it please God to prolong my life to the twenty-second day of net month, February, I shall have reached my ninety-sixth birthday, and I feel sure the Churchman came into my family four years before I came into this world. My father, the Rev. John Cooke, was one of the first graduates of our Theological Seminary, when it was established and conducted in the town of Alexandria. After his graduation, he was sent to St. Martin's Parish, where he commenced his ministerial work, and I feel sure he must have subscribed to the first issue of the Southern Churchman, though I have no certain proof of that. My earliest recollection of the Churchman is that my mother used to read the children's stories to my younger brother and myself. I have been reading it ever since I could read intelligently, and, with the exception of the four years of the War Between the States, I have been a constant reader of this most exalted, uplifting and upbuilding publication. May it continue to live for many more centennials, and carry on the good work in which it is engaged.

Yours most sincerely,

J. Churchill Cooke.

Beaver Dam, Va., Jan. 7, 1935.

Useful to Bible Teacher.

I have a Bible class of young married women and business women. Like most Episcopalians, they do not read the Church papers, but fortunately their teacher does and couldn't get along without the Southern Churchman.

Miss A. H. Davis.

Lynchburg, Va.

"It Is Thrilling."

Mr. Editor:

If possible, please send me another copy of the anniversary number, it is thrilling. In my life of eighty-three years, it has been a weekly visitor to the Hunter family, and later to me, and I am glad to have the picture of Dr. Sprigg, who baptized me when rector of Trinity Church, Martinsburg.

Mary Lou Hunter Doll.

Chambersburg, Pa.

Has Been An Inspiration.

Dear Southern Churchman:

I congratulate you upon your one hundredth anniversary. It has been an inspiration to my wife and me for the last fifty-six years, ever since we married. We have had it in the hands of our children, grandchildren, and now a great-grandson, nine years old, will enjoy the clippings from it, as he does not live in Macon. May you continue many more years doing good in the world.

Sincerely,

Macon, Ga. W. S. Payne.

The Southern Churchman has come to this home for three generations. We could not well do without it. Dr. Neve's Editorials are worth the price.

Mary Randolph Lane.

Port Haywood, Va.

Proud Of It.

Dear Southern Churchman:

The anniversary number is beautiful. I am proud of it. I was in Ashland when Dr. Sprigg was editor. My mother was living in King George County, and took the paper when edited by the Rev. W. F. Lee. I have reared my boys on it, the eldest, now fifty-five years, no wonder I am eighty-four!

God bless the Southern Churchman.

Mrs. N. T. Hynson, Sr.

Washington, D. C.

* * *

FORECAST FOR OCTOBER, 1935.

(Continued from page 9.)

Parishes and Missions	8,062	8,010	8,036
Baptisms:
Infant	54,413	54,259	54,336
Adult	13,762	13,029	13,395
Not specified
Total	68,092	67,907	67,999
Confirmations	76,569	74,969	75,769
Baptized Persons	2,086,589	2,068,114	2,077,351
Communicants	1,397,485		1,397,385
Net gain
Marriages	22,820	21,499	22,159
Burials	51,027	50,837	50,932
Church Schools:
Teachers	62,394	62,222	62,308
Scholars	516,783	515,150	515,966
Contributions	$26,396,827.20	$26,119,721.24	$26,258,274.22

Frankly, the forecasting of the contributions at $26,258,274.22 for 1935, when in 1934 they were $30,576,429.30 looks ridiculous. Yet, as this method of forecasting is based upon the experience of one, two and three years, respectively, when the per capita amount of giving was steadily declining, it gives this result as the approximation, as shown by the trend of the three years' experience. It is probable that there are other figures in the forecast that should be revised upwards, and some of them downwards, especially in the light of the experience of the times in which these figures are written, between now and a year hence, when the new figures are released. However, it is thought that the figures regarding the personal statistics are reasonably approximate.

BOOK REVIEWS

REV. STAMO S. SPATHEY, Editor.

WORD STUDIES IN THE OLD TESTAMENT: By B. A. M. Schapiro, Managing Director of the Hebrew-Christian Publication Society. Art Paper. Pp. 28. Published by the Author, 678 Bible House, New York City. Price, 50c.

A distinguishing feature of the conversion of well-informed Jews to the Christian faith is the readiness and whole-heartedness with which the Holy Scriptures are accepted as the verified Word of God. Moreover, the prophecies regarding our Lord Jesus are immediately embraced with zest and zeal.

Mr. Schapiro stands in this class. His education and culture in the Jewish religion became the groundwork of this noteworthy feature. His career as a Jewish Christian has been conspicuous for keenness of penetration; and unction in his presentation of the Word of God "which liveth and abideth forever." For this he has paid a heavy price; but the difficulties he has encountered are forgotten now in the honor with which God has crowned his labors and sacrifices.

In addition to the many books he has written in defense of the Christian faith, and which have been a tower of strength to myriads of believers, he has cherished for years the hope of issuing this series of Word Studies in the Old Testament. He defines it as including the careful translation and interpretation of the Hebrew; and no living man could be better capable of this work, for he has made that language the every-day speech and study of his entire life.

Those who read the original will find the text fully treated; those not versed therein, will have no difficulty in this challenging path of exegesis. Personally, I am disposed to regard the Introduction as more than worth the modest price he has set for this remarkable contribution to Biblical knowledge. Indeed, standing alone, it offers an education in the study of the Judaic mind; a clear exposition of the Jewish nature; a convincing answer to the Jewish problem. Any wide-awake servant of God can make a sermon from that portion of this commendable product of the author's brain and heart. His hearers will be interested, and I believe, thrilled.

Those who know Mr. Schapiro intimately are aware how frequently he is inclined to punctuate his remarks by pithy and pungent illustrations from the Talmud and other rabbinical writings. The reader may be prepared for a rich treat, in anticipation of this rare product of his prolific pen.

Mr. Schapiro has no wealthy supporters in this monumental undertaking. He longs to win the approval and sustaining interest of the many who may be minded to stand with him in this effort. If those who find it a wealthy of knowledge will encourage others to purchase this volume, the united effort will enable him to issue the coveted Volume II. His heart is burning to publish it; but he must have the support of interested friends. In the second volume, much that is necessarily informative regarding the opinions of numerous critics, who have examined and approved the work, will be excluded. Hence, more space will be available for the body of the study.

Send him the so-reasonable sum of fifty cents. Get the book; make it a subject of sincere investigation and devout appropriation. Whether you be clerical or lay, you will be illumined, inspired and quickened in your conviction of the truth of the glorious revelation of our God and Saviour Jesus Christ in the Old Testament Holy Scriptures.

Kenneth Mackenzie.

THE STORY OF CHRISTMAS: By R. J. Campbell, D. D. Published by The Macmillan Company, 60 Fifth Avenue, New York City. Pp. 288. Price $3.00.

This is the most comprehensive account of Christmas we have ever seen. It is composed by the able Canon of the Chichester Cathedral, England, with eight beautiful pictures from the best artists of the world. The author, whom we better call compiler, has drawn his materials from many sources, ancient and modern. He begins with "How the Story Began," with a fine exposition of the Gospel records of the Nativity. The chapter on "Non-Christian Christmas Customs" is a record of the old English and Teutonic customs of how those people celebrated certain festivals similar to the Christian Christmas and how Christianity borrowed from them, and transformed their customs into our present Christmas festival. Much of the material is borrowed from Frazer's Golden Bough.

The eighth chapter is a good text book for "Nativity Plays". The author gives the text of three plays, one short and the other two in full. The next chapter is the record of Christmas carols and songs taken from many sources and ages which makes the book an anthology of Christmas verse. The book is a history with its sources quoted of one of the most influential events in the history of mankind. It should be in every Christian home as a source of information of the birth of Him who has sanctified all other births.

Spathey.

* * *

News from the Front

They Now Own a Piano-Player.

On December 19 and 20, the Mexican Convocation was held at San Jose de Gracia, with the first native Bishop residing—Bishop Efrain Salinas y Velasco. All the clergy were present except two priests, too ill to attend. The chancel looked striking with green palms, lilies and baby's breath, and the grouped clergy in white with purple stoles.

Bishop Salinas y Velasco celebrated Holy Communion and was assisted by the two oldest priests in Mexico—the Rev. J. Carrion and the Rev. J. Perez. The sermon was delivered by the Rev. J. Roberdo from Quadalajaia. About four hundred people attended the convocation and services.

The Rev. Charles W. Hinton, from Long Island, New York, was presented as priest-in-charge of Christ Church, the only parish in Mexico City for the English-speaking people.

Alfonso Gomez, a student from St. Andrew's, Guadalajara, is now attending Divinity School in the Seminary of the Pacific, California.

The Church School, formerly known as Hooker School, is now divided into Colegio Duggs and Casa Hooker. The school will be under Srita. J. Romero, and the house under Srita H. Reyes. The school expects to reopen this month with a full curriclum for kindergarten, grammar and commercial high studies. The house, let us hope, will also be filled with boarding students.

The School of the Sacred Name, a former kindergarten and commercial night school, has had to be disbanded, due to lack of funds.

In all Mexican Churches, midnight services of thanksgiving were held on December 31. The offerings are to be devoted towards the mission quota of 1935.

While in the States I had the pleasure of preaching in several churches in and near Philadelphia, Penn., with the happy results of returning with sufficient money to purchase a used player-piano for my parish, San Pedro Marter. It was purchased, a player with fifty rolls and a rubberized cover, in time to celebrate the New Year. I wish you could have seen the faces of those Indians when we first played it! They just lit up with joy and smiles, while crude sandals seemed to itch to slide into a waltz. Aztec Indians, maybe, but their gratitude once earned will endure forever. At our fiesta on December 31, they danced to the piano and the children presented several short numbers. Just to think—a humble, adobe-brick village, waterless, dusty, ancient—to own a player piano! They trot, in groups, over to the parish hall and peep into the windows just to see if it is really there!

Wishing you a Happy New Year, I remain,

Yours sincerely,

Jose F. Gomez.

January 3, 1935,
Villa Obregon, D. F.,
Mexico.

THE WOMAN'S AUXILIARY

Missionary Institute of the Diocese of Virginia.

Among the outstanding leaders at the Missionary Institute of the Diocese of Virginia, January 22, 23 and 24, will be the Rev. Arthur M. Sherman, Mrs. J. H. Moore, Mrs. A. M. Chapman, and Mrs. J. H. Hill.

The Rev. Arthur M. Sherman, S. T. D., is one of the noted leaders of the Church, who has given life-long service in the mission fields of China, prior to his election in 1931 to the position in the National Organization of Secretary for Missionary Education in the Department of Religious Education, National Council. A native of New Jersey, following his graduation from Princeton in 1895, and three years later from the General Theological Seminary, he volunteered for missionary service in China. In the ensuing years he came in close contact with the great movements of modern China, frequently finding himself in the midst of successive wars and revolutions, which have wrecked the country during the past twenty years. After various experiences in charge of mission stations, he ultimately was made President of Boone College, Central China University, Wuchang, where he served until chaotic conditions forced the closing of his institu tion, among others. He then engaged in missionary work in Honolulu until 1931, when he was elected to above mentioned position. There are probably few men in the United States with a more intimate knowledge of the internal affairs of China than Dr. Sherman.

An important feature of the Institute will be the series of three lectures given by Dr. Sherman to men only at the Mayo Memorial House at 5:20 P. M. Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday, January 22, 23 and 24.

The subject of these lectures will be "Understanding Japan." He will survey the religious, political, social, moral and educational conditions there today.

He will be glad to answer questions about Japan, which the men may raise and time will be allowed for such discussion.

Mrs. Alfred Madison Chapman was graduated from Dickinson College, Carlisle, Penn., A. B. Degree (majored in History and Social Science). Attended George Washington Law School, Washington, D. C., 1924-26; was graduated from the Dickinson School of Law, Carlisle, 1927; received LL. B. degree. Also received from Dickinson College M. A. degree.

She served as Mission Study Class leader for two years at the New Wilmington Missionary Conference of the United Presbyterian Church. Has attended Church conferences and interdenominational conferences at Northfield, Mass.

Was a member of the faculty of the Provincial Conference held at Orkney Springs, June, 1934.

Has been an active member of the Woman's Auxiliary of New York since 1928, serving in different capacities on the committee.

In 1932 was appointed by Miss Laura Boyer as Educational Secretary of Manhattan and the Bronx.

In 1933 was elected Vice-President in charge of Education; has direct supervision of the 1921 Parish Branches in that Diocese.

At present is an active member of the Japan Committee, also an associate of the Japanese Student Group, which provides an opportunity for Japanese students to have some social contacts with Christian homes in New York City.

From Bishop Cook's Letter in News Letter of Province of Washington.

Upon the election of Mrs. J. H. Moore, as Provincial President of Province 3:

"Church people of Delaware are greatly pleased that the Woman's Auxiliary elected Mrs. John Hamilton Moore to be Provincial President to succeed that loyal and efficient servant of the Church, Mrs. Pancoast. It is natural I should have deep personal interest in this election, for my friendship with Mrs. Moore goes back over the years to the time when, as rector of St. Mark's Church, San Antonio, Texas, I found her an active worker in that parish. Her services in the Church have given her a wide and varied experience. She is a Bible student of exceptional ability and has for years been interested in Religious Education. As a devoted Daughter of the King, she has long acquaintance with the spiritual activities required of the members of that organization. In West Texas, she has been the honored Diocesan President of the Woman's Auxiliary, and since coming to Delaware has been chosen National Chairman for Older Members of the Girls' Friendly Society. We, of Delaware, are proud of this new honor which has come to her, realizing, as we do, that as in the past she will use the opportunities of her office to serve the Church and promote its work."

Her early training included study in St. Mary's College, Dallas, under the late Bishop Garrett; also under Archdeacon Stuck, when he was dean of St. Matthew's Cathedral, Dallas, Texas. Has done educational work under Bishop Cook, Bishop Stevens, Bishop Huston, when they were rectors of St. Mark's Church, San Antonio, Texas.

Conducted classes at Peninsular Summer Conference and at Tappahannock and in Diocese of Texas. Was on one of the Field Department teams—that of Bishop Thomas of Brazil, visiting Dioceses of Pittsburgh and West Virginia.

Mrs. J. H. Hill is known throughout the National Church for her work in education; she has been a delegate to the Peace Conference in Geneva; she is now President of the Woman's Auxiliary of the Diocese of Pennsylvania, and is a recognized authority on the workings of Woman's Auxiliaries.

Woman's Auxiliary of Diocese of Delaware Hears Bishop Bentley.

The Diocesan Branch of the Woman's Auxiliary held its Epiphany meeting in Old Swedes Church, Wilmington, on January 10. The speaker was Bishop Bentley, Suffragan Bishop of Alaska, who told of the services of the many devoted women who had gone to that field. Mrs. Frederick Baker, Diocesan President, presided.

Woman's Auxiliary of the Washington Diocese Golden Anniversary Memorial Fund.

This fund was started at the fiftieth anniversary of the organization of the Woman's Auxiliary in the Washington Diocese. The purpose of it is to use the interest to educate a woman for the mission field, preferably one from our Diocese. It is a memorial to members of the Auxiliary who have passed to "Higher Service."

One branch of the Auxiliary has adopted the plan of sending a gift in memory of a member in place of sending flowers to the family. I am sure this will appeal to many of us.

The fund has reached the sum of 1,577.24. It is hoped that those wishing to make a memorial gift which will be a living, working one, will remember this fund.

Esther H. Harding,
Treasurer.

CHURCH INTELLIGENCE

ZIONISTS TO OBSERVE JANUARY 20 AS PALESTINE DAY.

Zionist Organization Calls on Men of All Faiths to Join Observance.

Men of all faiths have been urged to join in the observance on January 20 of the first annual Palestine Day, which will be observed throughout the country under the auspices of the Zionist Organization of America. The purpose of Palestine's Day is to "pay tribute to those ideals out of which arose the decision of statesmen of the world to approve the establishment of the Jewish National Home in Palestine, and also those ideals which led the Jewish pioneers to undertake the effort to restore their ancestral Homeland."

A statement by the Zionist Organization of America declares: "It is our earnest hope that Palestine Day, in view of its significance to Christians as well as Jews, will be observed by men of all faiths throughout the country."

Palestine Day will coincide with the convening of a National Conference on Palestine to be held in Washington, D. C., on January 20 and 21. These will be attended by representatives of Jewish organizations who will gather for the purpose of mobilizing American support for an accelerated rebuilding of Palestine. A request has been forwarded to Governors of various states asking their cooperation in the observance of Palestine Day by designating January 20 as Palestine Day within their State, and asking citizens of all faiths to mark the day with appropriate exercises touching on all phases of Palestinian life—ancient and modern.

* * *

FOR ALL CHURCH PURPOSES.

The sum of $30,417,501 was given by Episcopal Church members in the United States for all Church purposes, parochial, diocesan, and general, in 1933, according to the annual report of the United Stewardship Council, which summarizes the giving of twenty or more communions.

The distribution of this thirty million between the local parish, the diocese, and the general Church (i. e., its national and missionary work), may be considered from three points of view:

1. Totals. Of the thirty million, there was given:

For parish work	$26,835,133
For diocesan work	1,830,777
For the general Church	1,751,591

(The third item is exclusive of trust funds and legacies.)

2. On a per capita basis. The average per capita was $15.52. Each person gave:

For the local parish	$13.69
For the diocese	.93
For the general Church	.89

(Support of the episcopate is included in the first item.)

3. Each dollar given was divided as follows:

For the parish—88 cents.

For diocese and general Church, the diocese receiving a little over half—12 cents.

* * *

YOUNG CHINESE GENTLEMAN ENCLOSES CHEQUE FOR TEN THOUSAND DOLLARS.

The Rt. Rev. Frederick R. Graves, D. D., Missionary Bishop of Shanghai, tells the story of the gift of an Alumnus of Mahan School for a Memorial Fund for his beloved teacher, Dr. B. L. Ancell:

"One late October morning a young Chinese gentleman called upon me and handed me a cheque for ten thousand dollars and this letter:

" 'As a pupil and student of the late Dr. B. L. Ancell, I wish to establish an endowment of ten thousand dollars for the Mahan School in Yangchow to be known as the Benjamin L. Ancell Memorial Fund, and I hereby request you to be its sole trustee.

" 'The annual interest derived from the fund is to be placed at the disposal of the principal of the Mahan School provided that two hundred dollars of it be set aside to provide for four annual scholarships of fifty dollars each (or two of one hundred dollars each) to be known as the Benjamin L. Ancell Scholarships and to be awarded to the students of Mahan School. I leave it to the faculty of the Mahan School to decide as to how and when these scholarships should be awarded.

" 'In the event of the Mahan School being suspended for more than one calendar year (i. e., twelve months) or its being definitely closed, the annual interest from the memorial fund, at your discretion, may be devoted to other works in which the late Dr. Ancell was interested.

" 'I wish that my name as founder of this memorial fund be not announced during my lifetime without my consent. Both Mrs. Ancell and Mr. S. C. Kuo of Nanking know about this, but they have agreed to keep my name to themselves.

" 'I enclose herewith a cashier's cheque of the Continental Bank for ten thousands dollars.'

"The writer of this letter is one of the first boys Dr. Ancell educated when he opened Soochow Academy as missionary-in-charge of that station. The donor has wisely provided that in case of anything occurring to cause the closing of the Mahan School the fund will be at the disposal of the Diocese of Shanghai for any form of mission work. It is unnecessary to point out the confidence expressed in the Church and its work through naming the Bishop of the diocese as sole trustee."

* * *

THE ABBEY MONUMENTS.

Once again the question of dealing with monuments in Westminster Abbey has cropped up. The Abbey is over-crowded already with statues, busts, and other monuments. There is little space for more monuments and none at all, I believe, for more burials. One reason for this is that two or three centuries ago, monuments and even burials were granted for persons of no great importance, even in the eyes of the contemporary public. Every one who wanders round the Abbey must have wondered how certain of the tablets and statues came to be where they are. There is one tablet in the cloisters which certainly cannot claim to be that of a distinguished person, and yet ought never to be removed, for it has touched the hearts of passers-by ever since it was erected. I refer to that which bears the simple inscription to "Jane Lister, deare childe." However, the congestion exists, and from time to time the public demands an Abbey burial or monument to some newly-deceased notable.

A solution discussed some years ago was that of erecting a separate chapel or other building on vacant land belonging to the Abbey and using it as a sort of national shrine of heroes; but it was objected that such a building would not be the Abbey itself. Now it seems to be proposed that the Abbey should be cleared of monuments to undistinguished persons, though it is not obvious what should be done with the discarded statutes and tablets. If this suggestion were adopted, the task of selection would be very invidious, and in particular cases would arouse heated controversy. I see no satisfactory method of solving the problem. Meanwhile, one means of checking further congestion of the space in the Abbey, and at the same time of securing permanent public approval of the selections for new monuments, would be to impose a regulation that in future no monument should be erected in the Abbey until the person commemorated had been dead at least ten years. Those ten years would give pause for reflection.—The Record (English).

* * *

HISTORY OF BROTHERHOOD OF ST. ANDREW.

George H. Randall, long connected with the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, is engaged in writing the history of that important and well-known organization. It will be called "The Story of the Brotherhood" and already Mr. Randall has issued a preliminary edition.

Those interested in the complete book and those who have interesting details about the history of the Brotherhood are requested to write Mr. Randall at the national headquarters of the Brotherhood, 202 South Nineteenth Street, Philadelphia.

* * *

MOUNTAIN BOYS AND GIRLS DELIGHTED.

"Teacher! Teacher! I have read the little red book, and can repeat all those verses, too," said little Bessie, as she raised her hand in excitement, and was given permission to speak by the faithful teacher in one of the mountain schools of Eastern Kentucky.

Bessie was only one of the 89,848 boys and girls in the 3,100 mountain schools of the South and the Ozarks, who had received a copy of the Gospel of John (Horton's edition, with helps) sent to them by The Bible Institute Colportage Association of Chicago during the past four months. Of this large number, the teachers reported that 17,302 had read the Gospels and memorized nine selected verses, and to each of these was given a copy of the Pocket Treasury, consisting of thirty choice Chapter of the Bible, twenty-five familiar gospel songs, and other valuable material as a reward.

So many of these mountain teachers were delighted with the interest taken by their boys and girls in reading the Gospels and memorizing the verses in order to earn a Pocket Treasury, and wrote to the Association that their pupils were eager to memorize additional Bible verses, so they could secure a New Testament.

One of the teachers wrote: "I have never found anything which my pupils enjoyed more. They very quickly committed to memory the nine verses of Scripture, and read the Gospel clear through. . . . They are very anxious to receive the Testaments and are wondering what they must do to receive them. I do not think anything could be more helpful to our school, a rural school especially, than this type of work. . . . Please send the fifty Pocket Treasurys soon. We are anxiously awaiting them."

In order to secure a New Testament, it was required that the boys and girls commit to memory and repeat to their teachers twenty-eight important Bible verses printed in a Colportage tract, entitled, "Four Things That God Wants

You to Know." Since the beginning of the fall term, no less than 8,699 of these mountain boys and girls have memorized the required number of verses, and to each one a beautiful New Testament, bound in suede, has been sent by the Association and they are delighted with them.

* * *

THE NEW METROPOLITAN OF CANADA.

Bishop Richardson, of Fredericton, has been elected as Metropolitan of Canada in succession to the late Archbishop Worrell, who held that office before becoming also Primate of All Canada. In Bishop Richardson's new title the word Canada is used in its older sense. It embraces the provinces of Quebec, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, and Prince Edward Island.

* * *

FORWARD!

This is the theme of a nationwide broadcast, Sunday, February 3, at 10 A. M., E. S. T., in the Episcopal Church of the Air of the Columbia Broadcasting System, when the spirit and purpose of our Church-wide Forward Movement will be defined by the Rt. Rev. Henry Wise Hobson, D. D., Bishop of Southern Ohio, Chairman of the Joint Commission on a Forward Movement.

Hear this message over Station WKRC, Cincinnati; WABC, New York, and others of the Columbia Broadcasting System.

THE KING'S FAMILY.

There is no human bond so precious as that of the family. There was deep significance in the reiteration of the word "family" in the address of the King of England carried by international broadcast throughout the British Empire and the world on Christmas Day. This broadcast was unique in radio history as a two-way broadcast; in answer to the messages going out from London there came return messages from every part of the Empire—near by in England, Wales, and Scotland, and also from Canada, India, South Africa, Australia, and other "uttermost" points. King George spoke the closing word, and in far-off New Zealand the Duke of Gloucester, third son of the King, heard his father's voice. Noting that Christmas Day, "with its hallowed memories, is the festival of a family," the King expressed the hope that all who were listening to him, in whatever part of the world they might be, would remember that they "are bound to me and to one another by the spirit of one great family." He spoke of the "restless and troubled" world, and the still unsolved problems, then said: "I am convinced that if we meet them in the spirit of one family we shall overcome them." Christians who were listening could not but think of Paul's prayer in Ephesians 3, before the King ended his message; and their hearts rejoiced as they heard this Christian Monarch close with Paul's own words as he said: "I commend you to the Father of whom every family on earth is named. God bless you all."—Sunday School Times.

* * *

NEW YORK.

Rt. Rev. Wm. T. Manning, D. D., Bishop
Rt. Rev. A. S. Lloyd, D. D., Suffragan
Rt. Rev. Chas. K. Gilbert, D. D., Suffragan

St. Bartholomew Celebrates Its One Hundredth Anniversary.

Of unusual interest to the people of New York as a whole, to the City's religious activities in general, and, to the Episcopal Church in America in particular, is the celebration of the one hundredth anniversary of St. Bartholomew's Parish, now under way, begun Sunday, January 13, and concluding with the services to be held on Sunday, January 20.

Starting in 1835, when the first church was erected at the corner of Great Jones Street and Lafayette Place, by "certain gentlemen living in the Bowerie—a congregation of faithful men," and where the parish worshipped for thirty-seven years; following through the years of 1872 to 1918, when the church moved to Madison Avenue and Forty-fourth Street; and, now housed in its third edifice, with its multiple Community House interests, in the magnificent, architectural group on Park Avenue and Fiftieth Street, St. Bartholomew's has been a most outstanding power in helping to direct the higher educational, humanitarian and spiritual welfare of the citizens of New York City and its environs. This celebration, therefore, is more than of interest to the Episcopalians of New York—it is an event that stands as a veritable monument in the city's history.

Starting Sunday, January 13, there was the usual early Holy Communion and Junior Congregation services, and at the eleven o'clock Morning Service the Rt. Rev. Bishop Manning of New York preached the sermon. At this service there were rendered the outstanding compositions of its former organists, Leopold Stokowski and Arthur Sewall Hyde, while an Anthem, composed for the occasion by Mrs. H. H. A. Beach, who composed the World's Fair Anthem, was also rendered.

Following the usual Evensong at four o'clock, there was a Tea in the Community House, and at 8 P. M., the usual Swedish service, followed by an informal hour in the auditorium.

On Monday afternoon, the Junior Woman's Auxiliary gave a tea in the Community House.

One of the high lights of the celebration was the parish reception, held on Tuesday night, January 15, an invitation affair, when the members of the parish were shown the entire activities of the Community House. The Sketch Club and the Clay Modeling Group were at their work, in the basement of the church, while their finished products were displayed in one of the many lounges of the Community House. The swimming pool was alive with bathers, while the instructor was showing the junior classes the proper method of life-saving tactics. Badminton was in full swing in the gymansium. The billiard tables were surrounded by the more skillful of the club's cueists. The devotees of bridge were seen engrossed in their faith of the value of small bits of cardboard in certain combinations. All in all, the members of the parish were amazed at the zeal with which the eight hundred club members enter into the spirit of what is available in this "House of Discovery", as one of the late rectors, Dr. Norwood, was happy to term the privileges that the Club offered to its members, whose average age is around thirty years.

On Wednesday, January 16, the St. Margaret's Society met, followed by a luncheon, while in the evening, the St. Elizabeth's Society held its service and informal gathering.

Of especial interest to many of the parishioners was the Holy Communion in the Chapel, Thursday at 10:30, following which there was the unveiling of the bust of Dr. Norwood, by Mrs. Elizabeth Randolph Gardner. In the afternoon there was held the Woman's Auxiliary Tea, at which was shown the moving picture, "A New World", which was shown at the General Convention.

Probably the most outstanding of all the weekly events was the presentation of the pageant, "The Vision of Bartholomew," a very colorful, musical dramatization staged in the chancel of the church, and played by two hundred of the young society members among the parishioners. The words of the pageant were written by Mr. Leonard Young, the dramatic instructor of the Community House, and the music by the present organist, Dr. David McK. Williams. The first presentation, on Friday night, was strictly an invitation affair, but the pageant will be repeated on Sunday afternoon, January 20, at 4 P. M., for the people of other churches and from out of town. The gorgeous costumes for this entire cast of two hundreds have all been made at the Community House, under the direction of Miss L. C. Field.

On Sunday, January 20, there will be the usual services, but at the 11 A. M. Morning Service, there will be a greeting from a former rector, Dr. Parks. A presentation of the "Book of Remembrances" and the Centennial Endowment Fund will follow. The preacher at this Morning Service will be the present, and St. Bartholomew's seventh rector, Dr. George Paull Torrence Sargent.

* * *

Half-Hour Meditations.

On Tuesdays, from January 8, 15, 22 to 29, the half-hour meditations at Trinity Church, at Broadway and Rector Street, are being given by the Rev. Royden K. Yerkes, D. D., Professor in the Philadelphia Divinity School; and on Thursdays, January 10, 17, 24 and 31, by the Rev. Frank Gavin, Th. D., Professor in the General Theological Seminary. These meditations begin at 12:30, and conclude at one o'clock, and take place in the All Saints' Chapel of the Church. It is understood that these meditations will continue, with other leaders, until Holy Week.

Series of Lectures.

On Wednesday evenings in January, at the Church of Saint Mary the Virgin, a series of lectures by distinguished clergymen of the Church are being given. The subjects and lecturers are:

"Catholic Worship," by the Rev. Franklin Joiner, rector of St. Clement's Church, Philadelphia.

"Catholic Action," by the Rev. Robert Scott Chalmers, rector of Grace and St. Peter's Church, Baltimore.

"Catholic Living," by the Rev. Spence Burton, Superior S. S. J. E., D. D., rector of the Church of St. John the Evangelist, Boston.

The Rev. Henry F. Kloman recently resigned as rector of Emmanuel Church, Cumberland, Maryland. He has been the special noon-day preacher at Grace Church, New York City, from January 8 through January 18.

Night Club For Young Men and Women.

The Church of the Transfiguration, "The Little Church Around the Corner," of which the Rev. Randolph Ray, D. D., is rector, is starting a Thursday Night Club for young men and young women. This Club meets every Thursday night, and is for young men and young women, whether members of the parish or not.

E. F. K.

RHODE ISLAND

Rt. Rev. J. DeWolf Perry, D. D., Bishop

Church Army Captain Ordained Deacon.

Sydney Ralph Peters, a former member of the American Church Army group, doing work in Rhode Island, was ordained to the diaconate by the Most Rev. James DeWolf Perry, D. D., Bishop of Rhode Island, Sunday, January 13, in St. John's Chapel, Ashton. Immediately after the ordination, Mr. Peters asummed charge of the parish.

Mr. Peters was one of the English Church Army captains who came to this country to prepare the way for an American Army, which later conducted its training center in Providence in the Bishop McVicar House, loaned by the Diocese. The young Englishman was active in diocesan work. One summer, while the parish of Holy Trinity, Tiverton, was vacant, before the coming of the late Dr. Herbert B. Gwyn, he conducted services and assumed general charge of parochial affairs. He conducted missions in the diocese, notably with the Rev. William Pressey, rector emeritus of St. John's Chapel, Ashton, at Trinity Church, Pascoag.

After leaving Rhode Island with the Church Army, Captain Peters did rural work in New York State. He married Miss Eleanor Lee Woodcock of Pennsylvania, a teacher in St. Agnes' School for Girls in Albany. He remained in the United States doing Church Army work for three years. Transferred back to the charge of the Bishop of London, he has recently finished a four years' course in King's College, including his theological training. Returning to the jurisdiction of Bishop Perry and the Diocese of Rhode Island, Mr. Peters was presented by the Rev. Mr. Pressey, retiring rector of his new parish. The Rev. Irving A. Evans, rector of Christ Church, preached the sermon.

F. W. Jones.

Interpretations of "Hard Sayings".

When the Old Testament says that Elijah, fleeing to Cherith before the Jordan after he had prophesied against Ahab, was fed by the ravens, the meaning is, the old Hebrew prophet in exile was fed by a tribe of nomads called "the Ravens". This was one of several statements brand new to his audience that Dr. John Morris Evans, rector of the Church of the Messiah, Olneyville, a scholar and translator himself, made Monday night at the School of Christian Life, conducted by the Department of Christian Education in St. Martin's Parish House.

Some of Dr. Evans' interpretations of other "hard sayings" of the Bible, some of them the quoted translations of noted scholars, are: For, Be ye therefore perfect even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect—"Be ye therefore all inclusive even as your heavenly Father includes all."

For, "Lead us not into temptation," as the Lord's Prayer surprisingly expresses it, "May we not fail in the test."

For Christ's injunction in the Garden of Gethsemane, "Watch and pray that ye enter not into temptation"—"Awake and pray that ye may fail not in the approaching trial."

For those passages which picture Jesus "in anger" read now, "in distress of soul".

Dr. Evans, whose topic was, "Values in the Translations of the New Testament," waded into the thick of the battle, which is now raging between Professor Charles C. Torrey of Yale and Professor Donald W. Riddle of the University of Chicago about the original text of the Gospels.

In brief, the controversy, which if it should be decided in Dr. Torrey's favor will, according to The Christian Century, destroy centuries of progress in finding out just what was going on in Palestine nineteen centuries ago, is this:

Dr. Torrey, with the world of Biblical scholarship shaking its head and sometimes its fists, declares that the four Gospels were all written in Palestine, in the Aramaic language which Jesus spoke, within ten or, at most, twenty years after His death. Later they were translated, the Yale professor explains, into the Greek language and have come down to us in this form.

Dr. Riddle, on the other hand, argues that the account of what Christ and His disciples said and did was committed to memory and years later, when Christianity had ceased to be centered in Jerusalem, and was taking root in the Graeco-Roman world, it was put into the Greek language. Dr. Evans, who has completed a translation of the Gospels after working seventeen years on it, is also convinced that Dr. Riddle is right. And, by the way, the Rhode Island scholar announced, that now that the big controversy is on, he will not take his translation to the printers until he has had the benefit of the battle.

"During the last fifty years we have learned more about the early days of Christianity," the lecturer said, "than we have learned in all the centuries that have gone before." He spoke of the need of understanding it as more the product of the Graeco-Roman world than of Palestine, after the death of Christ. The sciences of geography, archaeology, and sociology, have greatly helped. "Form Criticism" is the latest word in Biblical criticism, putting "Higher Criticism out of date." Dr. Grant, dean of Seabury Theological Seminary, Dr. Evans declared, has done one of the finest pieces of work in this field. By making use of all these scientific aids, he has attempted to find out what was back of those stories, epigrams and statements that came into being before they took form in written language. Working in the idioms then of the two languages, Greek, which was written, and Aramaic, which was spoken, he and his contemporaries are making Christ and His disciples live again. It is a personality approach now, and it glows with the living presence of Jesus of Nazareth."

CHICAGO.

Rt. Rev. George Craig Stewart, D. D., Bishop.

Plan Chicago Centennial.

Plans are in the making for a great Centennial Celebration for the Diocese of Chicago in 1935. It is expected that within the next thirty days Bishop Stewart and the Centennial Committee will announce the plans. These are expected to embrace a plan for re-financing all of the obligations of the Diocese and the creation of a revolving fund of considerable proportions.

The Diocese of Illinois was founded in 1835. When the Dioceses of Quincy and Springfield were formed, the Bishop of Illinois selected the Diocese of Chicago, then formally erected, as his diocese.

The Centennial organization is now in process of formation. It is expected such will be semi-permanent in form and will embrace a program extending at least over a five year period. The whole plan will be submitted to the Diocesan Convention in February for approval.

Grace, Oak Park, Convention Center.

Grace Church, Oak Park, has been selected as the meeting place of the annual convention of the Diocese of Chicago, according to announcement by the Ven. Winfred H. Ziegler, chairman of the committee on arrangements. The dates are February 5 and 6, with the pre-convention dinner on February 4 in charge of The Church Club, and the Woman's Auxiliary meeting on February 7 at Grace Church.

The selection of a west-side parish for the convention is in line with the plan of holding the annual conventions in different parts of the city. Last year it was held at St. Paul's on the southside; previously at St. Luke's Pro-Cathedral, Evanston, and at St. James, centrally located.

Glorious Christmas in Chicago.

It was a glorious Christmas in the Diocese of Chicago, judging from reports from various parts of the diocese. Increased attendance, frequently increased offerings and generally increased devotion—these characterized the Christmas season in the city.

At the Cathedral Shelter, Canon David E. Gibson presented a class of forty-five for confirmation to Bishop Stewart on the fortieth anniversary of his connection with the Cathedral organization. Sumner Chapel was crowded to overflowing for the festival service. After the service, the Bishop and Canon Gibson greeted personally 1,056 men who had gathered in front of the Shelter and were given Christmas dinners. A total of 388 families, averaging five to a family, were provided with baskets for Christmas by the Shelter; 2,400 at the Bridwell were remembered, and 1,200 at the County Jail.

Reports from other institutions of the city were equally striking. The Midnight Services Christmas Eve proved more popular than usual, record congregations being recorded at St. Luke's Pro-Cathedral, Evanston, where the Bishop was the preacher and celebrant; at St. Chrysostom's, St. Paul's, and other parishes.

Indications pointed to more liberal givings also through the Diocese. In the business world in Chicago, virtually all of the large department stores reported marked increase in sales over last Christmas.

One of the unusual features in a civic way was the broadcasting of Christmas carols along Michigan Avenue from Tribune Tower by Radio Station WGN. Also carols were sung and Christmas messages given in a huge State Street demonstration the day before Christmas.

Leaders Express New Year Hope.

Church leaders in Chicago expressed a hopeful outlook for the year 1935 in the following terms:

Bishop George Craig Stewart: "There are plenty of reliable intimations that 1935 is going to mark a big stride forward to solid ground."

Mrs. Hazel Seabury Cotsworth, president, the Woman's Auxiliary: " 'The Light is shining on the road ahead.' It is easy to see the dullness of the road we travel; always we should look forward to some big opportunity of unusual service. Let us remember that we shall see light on the road today if we but look through the eyes of the Master. So shall we have a happy new year."

John D. Allen, president, the Church Club of Chicago: "The year 1935 should see a definite further rebound from the depression feeling. Whether business is good or bad, the year should bring added confidence. The bugaboo of fear has been conquered. The time for new ventures and added growth is at hand. The laymen of the Diocese of Chicago are going forward in 1935."

Paul T. Bruyere, president, Chicago Assembly, Brotherhood of St. Andrew: "Uncertainty and criticism appear but hopefulness and confidence abide. We enter 1935 convinced that the solution of the problems of our times is under way."

Mrs. Theodore W. Robinson, president, Chicago Church Mission of Help:

"It would take a remarkable intellect to fathom the changes which are taking place in society today, but as Church people we not only hope but firmly believe that we are in a state of progress with an upward trend. It takes faith, courage and strength to climb an uphill road, but let's not stand still and worry about it. The Church is full of glorious opportunities and 1935 should see some of these fulfilled."

Leigh H. Hunt, president, Gamma Kappa Delta: "The young people are ready to launch forward to new gains in 1935. We young people are far from discouraged. We are rather imbued with the thought of courage and advance. We would be up and doing. 'Forward with Gamma Kappa Delta' will be our motto for 1935."

J. E. Boyle.

LONG ISLAND.

Rt. Rev. E. M. Stires, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. J. I. B. Larned, Suffragan.
Rt. Rev. F. W. Creighton, S. T. D., Suffragan.

Zion Church Activities.

Two presentations of the moving picture, "The New World," at Zion Parish House, Douglaston, L. I., took place Wednesday, January 9, at 6:30 P. M., for the children and young people; at 8:30 P. M. for the rest. There was no admission charge, an offering to cover expenses was received.

"A bit o' luggage we leave behind us —the Church!" laughingly shouted the British General Howe upon the evacuation of this New York territory during the American Revolution. Well, that bit o' luggage is our Church still, and a great story it has to tell from its first appearance with the Cabots in 1497, to its more permanent settling with John Smith at Jamestown, Virginia, in 1607, when it began its sturdy and steady work and developed a character of its own. Despite the Revolution, this Episcopal Church without "Episcopoi," or bishops, found in Washington and many other of the leading colonials, a laity to whom The Church was a treasured responsibility. So the Church gathered up the loose threads of its life and through the changes and chances of much of good and evil fortune comes to us today. And here we are! This moving picture is a delightful series of dramatic and colorful episodes, past and present, in its history.

1935 Programme.

Eight Friendly Wednesday Evenings at Zion Church, Douglaston, L. I., the Rev. Lester Leake Riley, rector. Before the hospitable blazing hearth of our Parish House Guild Room these neighbors come to chat with you—a conversazione—upon some topic of personal experience. Come and bring your friends.

January 9.

The New World—an eight reel motion picture, giving a visual interpretation of the history of the Protestant Episcopal Church in America, produced under the auspices of the Religious motion Picture Foundation in cooperation with the historical committee of the Diocese of New Jersey.

January 16.

Happenings in Mexico—by the Rt. Rev. Dr. Frank W. Creighton of Garden City, our Bishop-Suffragan, and one time missionary Bishop of Mexico.

January 23.

Helping People Out of Trouble—by Miss Dicy Dodd, the Little Neck-Douglaston secretary of the Queens Family Welfare Society.

January 30.

Friendly Wednesday Evening Parish Dinner at 7:30 P. M., in Parish House. $1.00 a plate. Make reservations now to the rector. Guest Speaker: "The Social Significance of Strikes," by Elinore Morehouse Herrick, Director, New York Regional Labor Board.

February 6.

Fountain Square to Times Square—Cincinnati Speaking! by Henry C. Wright of Douglaston, director, Queensboro Tuberculosis and Health Association.

February 13.

Doctor Johnson and His Circle—An Eighteenth Century Ramble—by Dr. Hamilton J. Smith of Port Washington, of the editorial staff of The Oxford Press.

February 20.

1935-1880—A Spotlight on my Generation—by Charles J. Post of Bayside, Commissioner of Conciliation, U. S. Department of Labor.

MICHIGAN

Rt. Rev. Herman Page, D. D., Bishop

Cathedral Fellowship Meeting.

At the regular monthly meeting of St. Paul's Cathedral Fellowship, Detroit, held a dinner on the evening of January 17, the speaker was Dr. Walter L. Finton of the Jackson Clinc. Dr. Finton's topic was "The Alaskan Peninsula and Its Giant Bears," and he told of an amazing 10,000 mile trip taken in the interest of science, on behalf of the University of Michigan, to secure specimens of mammals from that country. He showed the spellbound audience the only moving picture ever taken of a charging giant, grizzly bear, as well as many other intensely interesting moving pictures and stills.

The Cathedral Fellowship is open to all men and women, regardless of Church affiliation, and is rapidly gaining in popularity, according to the Very Rev. Kirk B. O'Ferrall, D. D., Dean of the Cathedral.

HARRISBURG.

Rt. Rev. Wyatt Brown, D. D., Bishop

Social Legislation Considered.

The Central Committee on Christian Social Service of the Five Dioceses of the Episcopal Church in Pennsylvania, held a meeting at the Diocesan rooms in Harrisburg, on January 10, to consider social legislation to be presented at the 1935 State Legislature.

The Committee voted to work for the re-introduction of the "hasty marriage bill" (Laubach), which prohibits marriage with less than three days' notice of intention, and the "homestead mortgage bill" (Gartner), intended to protect the wife's interest in the family estate. It endorsed the plan of organizing public welfare work on a county basis under County Welfare Boards; urged the carrying out of a State building program that would include adequate construction at the State institutions; and recommended the maintenance of good school conditions, approving the plan of consolidation of small districts; also the maintenance of the present high level of administration in the State Library at Harrisburg. It urged adequate appropriation for old age pensions and for assistance to the blind.

Sub-committees were appointed to study and present recommendations regarding anti-lynching; workmen's compensation; unemployment insurance, and selective sterilization of mental defectives.

The officers of the Central Committee are the Rev. Canon Paul S. Atkins of York, chairman; Honorable Clinton Rogers Woodruff, Director of Public Welfare of the City of Philadelphia, advisor; Miss Ethel M. Springer, Dean of the Church Training School, Philadelphia, secretary.

The members are the Bishops of the five dioceses, ex-officio; also from the Diocese of Harrisburg, the Rev. Canon Hiram R. Bennett, Mrs. J. Heiges, the Rev. Squire B. Schofield and Canon Atkins; from the Diocese of Bethlehem, the Rev. E. A. Heim, the Rev. R. P. Kreitler, Hon. Wm. C. Freeman and Mrs. George M. Keiser; from the Diocese of Erie, the Rev. Philip C. Pearson, Mrs. Albert Rockwell, Mrs. Harriet Powell, the Rev. Frederick B. Atkinson; from Pittsburgh, Mr. John C. Sheriff, the Rev. M. S. Ashton, Mrs. Henry Braun; from Pennsylvania, the Rev. Stanley R. West, Mr. George R. Bedinger, Miss Ethel M. Springer, Hon. Clinton Rogers Woodruff.

SOUTHERN OHIO.

Rt. Rev. Henry Wise Hobson, D. D., Bishop.

Cincinnati in 1937.

Twenty-four years ago the Diocese of Southern Ohio was host to General Convention in Cincinnati. That convention was epoch making. References are constantly being made to the convention of 1910.

In the face of the huge crowds which made the Atlantic City Convention the largest gathering of churchmen on record and in the face of financial stringency, it was a daring thing for Bishop Hobson and our clerical and lay delegates to offer Cincinnati for 1937.

The offer was taken up enthusiastically. Cincinnati is one of the cities well placed to make a reasonable center of our National Church. When last we entertained General Convention we did it to the outspoken satisfaction of all.

We do not expect the vast throngs of visitors which made Atlantic City so memorable, but we believe we can take good care of all who come.

It will mean a tremendous amount of work merely to provide the facilities for entertainment and for the meetings of Bishops, Deputies, Woman's Auxiliary, and the various subsidiary interests attendant upon General Convention.

Every parish and mission in the Diocese must from now on become General Convention "minded." We can promise to each a Bishop, a missionary, and other notable visitors.

Our Bishop expects to call upon men, women, and youth for hard, disciplined work to prepare for the convention and see it through to the satisfaction of all comers. The physical task is an enormous one if all details are to be anticipated and all emergencies met.

But more important even than material preparations is the opportunity to make spiritual preparation. With God's help, we, in Southern Ohio, can, if we will, create such an atmosphere by a renewed discipleship to Christ as will make miracles possible at the convention of 1937. Let us set ourselves now to make that spiritual preparation. This requires a new and passionate devotion to the cause of Christ's Church. It means that members must move up from nominal to actual membership. Harmony must take the place of faction —wherever faction may be. We must study, pray and work together as never before.

Cross of Honor to Dr. Keller.

At the Grand Chapter of the Order of the Sangreal recently concluded at St. Stephen's Church, Chicago, the Grand Cross of Honor for 1934 was awarded to Dr. Keller, Chairman of our Department of Social Service, and Director of the Cincinnati Summer School for Candidates, the citation reads:

"William S. Keller, physician of Cincinnati, Diocese of Southern Ohio; because for years he has devoted his home, his skill and his utmost energy to acquainting future clergy of the Church with the depths of human misery and need; unfolding to students of theology the reality and horror of evil, and therewith nerving their arms and steeling their courage to the struggle against evil, that they may bring the countless souls in extremity the healing compassion of the Christ."

The Cross of Honor will be presented to Dr. Keller at a special service by Bishop Hobson.

EAST CAROLINA.

Rt. Rev. T. C. Darst, D. D,, Bishop.

"Nothing of the Driver or the Potentate About Him."

On Sunday, January 6, the Feast of the Epiphany, the Rt. Rev. Thomas C. Darst, D. D., celebrated the twentieth anniversary of his consecration as Bishop of East Carolina, by celebrating the Holy Communion and preaching in St. James' Church, Wilmington, N. C., the Rev. W. H. Milton, D. D., rector.

Using as his theme, "I thank God and take courage," Bishop Darst pointed with pride to the record of the Diocese and the support given him by its members, who, he added "have given the Bishop strength to go forward."

Bishop Darst, who was consecrated in St. James' Church, January 6, 1915, took occasion to pay tribute to the Rev. W. H. Milton, D. D., rector, to whom he said a large part of the splendid leadership of the Diocese is due. He also paid tribute to the late Robert Strange, his immediate predecessor, and to Bishop Watson, who was the first Bishop of the Diocese.

He stated that since his consecration he had confirmed 7,262 persons; ordained forty-two deacons and forty-two priests. He also stated that twenty-six new churches and parish houses have been built in the Diocese in the last twenty years and included in these are twelve places in which there was no church before.

The next morning the local paper, after reporting at some length his sermon, paid tribute to the Bishop in the following editorial:

"A Bishop Has An Anniversary."

"Yesterday marked the twentieth anniversary of the consecration of the Rt. Rev. Thomas C. Darst as Bishop of East Carolina, an event celebrated by a special sermon by the prelate at Saint James' Church.

"The Star-News, often critical, sometimes cynical and occasionally accused of radical views, takes this occasion to felicitate the Bishop and to add its own humble appraisal of his two decades' work in the vineyard of the Lord, with particular emphasis on that part of his anniversary sermon which declared that his prayer at consecration was to be kept "simple", in order that he might persuade and lead his flock rather than drive it.

"We admire that expression, particularly when coming from a high ranking Churchman, for it is our belief that such sentiment is indeed the fundamental of religion. Bishop Darst is outstanding as a leader of the Church, and one who is perhaps more loved than any clergyman in North Carolina. The reason is not hard to find. There is nothing of the driver or the potentate about him. In his ecclesiastical robes he is human and understanding. Without them he is a man of such lovable character as to command and hold the respect of all who come in his contact, and as such he does more to spread religion than scores of lesser lights who may dwell for hours on the threatened end to a sinful life.

"So, on this occasion, Bishop, we congratulate you and commend you as a gentleman who almost perfectly typifies what we consider an exemplification of a Christ-like life, and we wish for you many years more in the active service of a cause to which you have contributed so materially."

MARYLAND.

Rt. Rev. E. T. Helfenstein, D. D., Bishop

The Rev. H. F. Kloman Resigns: His Successor Not Chosen.

The Rev. Henry F. Kloman, rector of Emmanuel Church, Cumberland, announced yesterday that his resignation, tendered early in 1934, is now effective. When the resignation was offered, Dr. Kloman explained that it would take effect any time during the year.

He came here eight years ago, succeeding the Rev. Ambrose H. Beavin, who went to Florida. The Rev. Mr. Kloman said that he was not retiring and that he would spend several weeks' vacation in New York, hoping that some active parish work may develop elsewhere for him.

Before coming to this city, he held a pastorate at Salisbury, Md., and prior to that time was dean of the Cathedral at Fargo, South Dakota, for seven years. He is a graduate of the Virginia Theological Seminary and served eleven years as rector of St. Stephen's Church at Portland, Maine. Serving as chaplain in France with the A. E. F. during the World War, he participated in the engagements at Chateau Thierry and the Argonne, and rose to the post of chaplain of general headquarters at Chaumont. He is now a major in the Reserve Chaplain Corps.

No successor has been selected by the vestry of Emmanuel Church, but it was said at least seven clergymen are under consideration for a call. Judge Albert A. Doub is chairman of the board of vestry.

Services last Sunday were conducted by the Rev. Morgan Cilley, rector of St. Stephen's Church, Romney, W. Va. A regular pastor will not be called for at least six weeks, and in the meantime services will be conducted by the Rev. Mr. Cilley and by the Rev. L. H. Ewald, rector of Holy Cross Church in the South End.

Dr. Kloman has received an invitation to be the special preacher at the noon-day services to be held during the next two weeks at Grace Church in New York.

DELAWARE.

Rt. Rev. Philip Cook, D. D., Bishop.

Memorial is Dedicated.

One of the finest and most beautiful stained glass windows in this part of the country was dedicated in St. John's Episcopal Church, Wilmington, on Sunday, January 6, to the memory of the late Bishop Leighton Coleman, for nineteen years Bishop of the Diocese of Delaware previous to his death in 1907.

Bishop Cook officiated at the dedication service. The window is the gift of Mrs. H. Belin du Pont of Ardmore, Penn., a member of St. John's Church, and a niece of Bishop Coleman.

Bishop Coleman's favorite text, "Steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord," which friends say might have been written of him, forms a feature of the background part of the memorial window. Particularly interesting to the several hundred men, women and children who inspected the window after the services was the pilgrim hat and walking staff of St. Paul depicted in one section of the window, for Bishop Coleman was known throughout the Episcopal Church and to thousands of others whom he met in his rambles in the East and South. He "covered" the Diocese of Delaware a score of times in his nineteen years as Bishop, on foot, visiting intimately with farmers and others who "put him up" for the night.

Old Christmas Celebrated.

In St. George's Chapel, Indian River, a church in the midst of a rural section of Delaware, "Old Christmas" is celebrated each year. The Feast of the Epiphany brought a crowded church for the evening service in this parish almost two hundred years old, the Rev. Joseph Wood, rector of the Church of St. John the Baptist in Milton, Delaware, is also in charge of St. George's Chapel, and had written the pageant, "The Leading of the Star", which was given by members of the Church School.

There are no electric lights in the building, oil lamps being used, but on this occasion the church was lighted with candles.

Rowena Brown.

MASSACHUSETTS

Rt. Rev. Henry K. Sherrill, D. D., Bishop
Rt. Rev. S. G. Babcock, D. D., Suffragan Bishop

Confirmation Service.

Bishop Sherrill visited Grace Church, Everett, Mass., on the morning of the Feast of the Epiphany, preached to a congregation that filled the church, confirmed thirty-one children and adults, presented by the rector, the Rev. William H. Pettus, who has presented three hundred and twenty-eight persons for confirmation in six years. There were eighty persons in the two choirs at this service.

Wm. H. Pettus.

NEW HAMPSHIRE.

Rt. Rev. John T. Dallas, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. E. L. Parsons, D. D., Bishop.

The Liberal Evangelicals in New Hampshire held their third meeting of the season in St. Paul's Church, Concord, on December 11, the Rev. B. N. Lovegren, rector. The topic of discussion, as set forth in the hand-book, was, "Our Ministry in Confirmation," and was led by the Rev. E. B. Maynard, rector of Grace Church, Manchester. Discussion was free and helpful, and the meeting was a pronounced sucess. The next meeting is to be held at St. Paul's School with the Rev. Charles T. Webb acting as host, and the Rev. L. W. Hooder of Berlin leading the discussion on "Our Ministry in Marriage." The motion was carried unanimously that a joint meeting with the Catholic Club of New Hampshire be sought and Mr. Lovegren was empowered to make the necessary arrangements.

SOUTH CAROLINA

Rt. Rev. Albert S. Thomas, Bishop

Assistant in Rural Field.

Mr. Austin B. Mitchell, Jr., a candidate for Holy Orders from the Diocese of West Virginia and a student at DuBose School, Monteagle, Tennessee, is working for the three winter months in the rural field in Georgetown County, South Carolina, under the direction of the Rev. H. D. Bull. Mr. Mitchell is the seventh theological student in the past six years who has worked in this field, the others having been from DuBose, Sewanee, and the General Seminary. Of this number, four have since

(Continued on page 22.)

FAMILY DEPARTMENT

JANUARY.

1. Circumcision. (Tuesday.)
6. Sunday. Epiphany.
13. First Sunday after Epiphany.
20. Second Sunday after Epiphany.
25. Conversion of St. Paul. (Friday.)
27. Third Sunday after Epiphany.

* *

COLLECT FOR SECOND SUNDAY AFTER THE EPIPHANY.

Almighty and Everlasting God, Who dost govern all things in heaven and earth; Mercifully hear the supplications of Thy people, and grant us Thy peace all the days of our life; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

* * *

THE CONVERSION OF SAINT PAUL.
(January 25.)
The Collect.

O God, who, through the preaching of the blessed Apostle Saint Paul, hast caused the light of the Gospel to shine throughout the world; Grant, we beseech Thee, that we, having his wonderful conversion in remembrance, may show forth our thankfulness unto Thee for the same, by following the holy doctrine which he taught; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

* * *

FOR ST. PAUL'S DAY.
January 25.

To Thee, O God of all the earth,
Who lovest all the sons of men,
We offer thanks for those that served
Thy living truth with voice and pen.

We dwellers far from Israel's land
Whose sires of old ne'er heard the Word
Give thanks to Thee for all Thy saints
That brought the Glad News of the Lord.

In hunger, thirst, in perils oft,
From cruel men and savage beast,
On stormy seas, through deserts lone
For messengers that never ceased,

We thank Thee and for valiant Paul
Who, summoned by Thy dazzling grace,
Carried with joy the love he learned
To men of alien heart and race.

Long hushed that voice, long stilled that tongue
That led the Roman, taught the Greek,
But in the Scriptures men have found
Through Paul the Saviour whom they seek.

So help us, Lord, in Thy great train
To run the errands of Thy choice,
Our skill is naught, yet do Thou use
The witness of our pen and voice!

—E. A. D., in Canadian Churchman.

* * *

Long Ago.
M. F. G.

In preparing for the centennial number of the Southern Churchman, which appeared two weeks ago, we have found in old issues of the paper so many articles, poems and stories which awakened old memories, that we have decided to recall some of them to our readers, and also to sketch lightly the development of the Family and Children's Departments.

The Southern Churchman, for sixty years appeared on a sheet as large as the morning paper is today. The first number contained an announcement that "a small portion of the paper will be devoted to select advertisements." The first man to take advantage of this offer was James C. Walker, who "respectfully informs the public" that in his book shop on Main Street, "he is prepared to receive and execute orders for Prayer Books, Pamphlets, circulars, etc., on moderate terms." One of the next advertisers was a dentist, who gave as references the names of several ministers, doctors, and a member or two of the House of Delegates. Subsequently an advertisement appeared from the R. F. & P. Ry., announcing that trains would soon begin running on the new road, cutting the time necessary for reaching Washington from Richmond from twenty-four hours to eight or nine. Later still, there is the statement of the formation of a company intending to run steamboats between Liverpool and New York. The time necessary for the run would be about fourteen days. It is interesting to note that this trip has been little bettered for freighters in the past century.

While there was from the first, a column under various headings intended for "Domestic Reading," the Family and Children's Departments, as we know them, developed much later. There was general reading throughout the paper, and always one story or article which might be read to younger members of the family and the servants. One subject which was emphasized repeatedly was the responsibility of Christian people to give religious instruction to their servants, looking toward the ultimate freeing of that race. The work of the Colonization Society was constantly chronicled. The growth of the Church's work in its African mission was news eagerly sought and published. We wish it were possible to give in full the obituary of an old servant printed in 1835. As it is quite long, we can only give a bit of it. This slave died in the one hundred and ninth year of her age. "This old woman," says the writer, "was a remarkable instance of the propriety of the early instruction of children in the Church Catechism and such other things as she was capable of learning, which she retained to the day of her death, and she has often stated to the writer of this, that it was the only pleasure and consolation she had in being able to repeat what she had thus learned from her old mistress in her childhood—Having been taught while Virginia was a British Colony she always in her prayers remembered the king and royal family, seeming to consider that as part of her religious duties which she never could be induced to give up." The Communion was administered to her in her cabin a few days before her death, by the minister of the parish, who conducted the funeral services for her later.

Anecdotes of Queen Victoria as published in the English press were of great interest in Virginia, and soon appeared in the Southern Churchman, as they did, we suspect, in every paper in the land. The first one told of her distress when she was called upon for the first time to sign a death warrant, and her joy when she found she had the power to commute the sentence to deportation for life. The stories of the good queen continued to be published throughout her life-time. Another quotation from an early issue may be of peculiar interest at this time. It is the sentence passed on a kidnapper in Delaware, and is as follows: "Four hours in the pillory; sixty lashes on the bare back, four years' solitary confinement, and then to be sold into slavery for seven years, and fined $1,500." After that the criminal was freed.

The Family pages developed under various headings—"Family Reading, Family Circle, Family Page, Family Department," and the Children's likewise. The poetry was from the first issue a feature of the paper. The first "poem" published was entitled "The Breaking of the Sixth Seal, being a calm and melancholy picture of the mind of a Condemned Infidel." The first selections for children were more or less appropriate, generally less so, but they pointed a moral, or portrayed the results of wrong living, with force. The following examples of these "poems" may be interesting to our readers:

"Lord, how delightful 'tis to see
A whole assembly worship Thee;
At once they sing, at once they pray,
They hear of heaven and learn the way."

Sometimes the sterner note was struck; as in the verses beginning:

"I am but a little child,
Very sinful, very wild."

Or the voice of temperance was raised:

"When Rechab's sons refused the wine
Tho' tendered by a prophet's hand,
Admonished by a voice divine,
The seer addressed the abstemious band."

Again, we find a morbid tendency in the food meted out to young minds quite characteristic of the times. Some verses were entitled "Lines on the Death of an Infant Accidently Poisoned." Others began:

"Death has been here and borne away,
A sister from our side."

But the worst of these could not, we believe, have deceived any child:

"I knew a boy whose infant feet had trod
Upon the blossoms of some seven springs,
And when the eighth had come around, and called him out
To revel in its light, he turned away,
And sought his chamber, to lie down and die.
'Twas night, he summoned his accustomed friends
And in this wise bestowed his last requests.

" 'Mother, I am dying now,
There's a deep suffocation on my breast,
As if some heavy hand on my bosom pressed,
And on my brow I feel the cold sweat stand,
Say, Mother, is this death?' "

But enough of the poetry, except to say that it so improved during the course of the century that we frequently see now poems by such a well-known writer of child-verse as Nancy Byrd Turner, and others, who understand psychology of young minds.

The serial was tried out soon after the war, and evidently proved popular, for it soon became a feature of the paper. These stories, like the poetry, were often morbid, as may be imagined from the titles, but they served a purpose. Many an elderly person in the church today can remember the thrill of listening Sunday afternoon to the weekly installment of these stories, the names will recall to them the dark attics, the lame little boys, the little girls dying of tuberculosis, or an elder sister taking the place of both parents to her younger brothers and sisters, around which the stories developed. "Pilgrim Street," "Thoughts and Feelings of a Child," "Daddy's Boy," "True as Steel," "Peep Behind the Scenes," "Dickory Dock," "Stupid Cris," and many others. But containing much that we have learned to deplore today as reading for the young, three generations were raised on these tales which have not altogether been found wanting, and perhaps a little of the roughage of the past might not be a bad thing mixed with the balanced rations fed children today—but not the morbid.

As the Southern Churchman continues its journey towards a second centennial a new serial is starting. We hope that "Those Rectory Children" will prove vigorous, and will be followed by many other tales which will be read to the children and grandchildren of church families for yet another century. God bless the Southern Churchman.

* * *

An Unexpected House Guest.

Do you like surprises? I do, too. I had one of the biggest surprises last Saturday that I have had in a long time. And it was such an unexpected surprise, too, if I may be allowed to speak of it that way.

All week we hadn't been out to our little place in the country, but on Saturday a group of young people were going to have a steak supper. So we hurried out to have the house opened up and everything in readiness before the crowd arrived.

As we went into one of the rooms something fluttered over by the window—something quite large and brown. We had found wrens and jorees and other birds in the house several times before, but never had we seen a bird that large. I went over close to the window and it made a pitiful attempt to fly across to the other window and get out.

Then I realized that my uninvited visitor was an owl. I had never seen a regular woods owl that close up and I wanted to see it better. I realized that it could not fly very well in that room with the bright light, so I closed the door and in just a few more attempts I had caught it.

Have you ever tried to catch and hold an owl? I never had before and didn't know how hard it would be to handle. Before I knew it one of my fingers was held tight in its sharp bill and I had to work to get it out without leaving a piece. But the owl was more frightened than I was. I could feel its trembling body and could see the terrified look out of those great, big, yellow eyes.

As I held it in one hand I began stroking its head. I held it close up to me and petted it. And, would you believe it, in just a few minutes that owl was perfectly calm and its little heart ceased its poundings. Its great big eyes began to droop. I continued stroking its head and back gently, and then I realized that my new-found friend was apparently going fast asleep. It looks for all the world like our baby sister when mother holds her close and rocks her gently and her eye-lids flutter and then slowly close in sleep.

My first thought was that I should take it outside and turn it loose so that it might go back to its home. But I knew the young people would like to see it, so I put my new friend in a box on the back porch, put some water and grains of cereal inside and left it for awhile. I hadn't the slightest idea what to feed an owl, but I believed this one must be hungry and when we're hungry we will eat things that otherwise might not appeal to us. I remembered hearing somewhere that there was a barn owl that feasted on mice, but I didn't know whether my owl was a barn owl, and certainly I didn't have any mice for its diet. If it was a screech owl, I surely didn't know what to feed it.

When the young people arrived they were as excited as I over getting that closeup view of a wild, woods owl. I never realized that they were so pretty. This one was a beautiful soft shade of brown, with little touches of darker brown or black, and just a hint of gold in its feathers. With its big yellow eyes it was all dressed up in the real autumn shades.

Finally, when the party was over, we took the owl out to the front and put it down on the ground. For a moment it flopped around and when it realized that it was free, lifted its wings and rose from the ground. There in the moonlight we watched it soar in one graceful flight across the field and pause for a rest in a young walnut tree.

I do not know where my friend is now but the next time I hear a screech owl calling on a quiet evening I'll have a hard time trying not to believe that it is my owl. And I believe its song will be one of rejoicing because it made some new friends among that group of young people—young people who set it free to live once again in its home in the woods.—Mrs. A. B. Brown, in Christian Index.

* * *

The Kingdom Appointed.

One truth our Lord taught His disciples that they either would not or could not learn. They longed for an earthly, while He taught them again and again of a heavenly kingdom. So bent on being big in an earthly kingdom were they, that no sort of teaching could or did reveal to them that He was building, not a temporal, but an eternal, not a physical, but a spiritual kingdom.

After Jesus plainly told His disciples that He was going up to Jerusalem there to be bound, crucified, killed, James and John, two of his most intimate companions, disputed over who should occupy the highest place in the kingdom that they still believed He would establish. And then, after rebuking them and plainly revealing that His was a spiritual kingdom, they failed to comprehend. Nor was this all. He went to His death on the cross and came back a resurrected and glorified body, and still they failed to grasp the kind of kingdom that He would establish. So, one of the very first questions they asked Him, when gathered together after the resurrection, was: "Lord, wilt Thou at this time restore again the kingdom of Israel?" They were still looking for an earthly kingdom. Nor was this all. He had told them as plain as language could that His kingdom was not of this world, and that "He would appoint to them a kingdom". Again and again had He told them of the kind and character of that kingdom. His disciples did not, maybe they could not, grasp the teachings of their Lord in this one particular.

And even His disciples to this day, in a large measure, either cannot, or will not grasp the fact that His kingdom is not of this world, but is a heavenly, spiritual kingdom, a kingdom of humble, redeemed, righteous souls. We admit there is an "other worldliness' about this that many of us may not relish, but it is there all the same. Those who in the early church, and in the late church, have turned the world upside down, and right side up, have been those who have in their minds and hearts this feeling and spirit of "other worldliness." Peter and Paul, Huss and Luther, Calvin, Wesley, O'Kelly and Moody all lost out in terms of earthly kingdoms and rulership, and their lives mean little or nothing viewed in the light of worldly powers, pursuits and possessions. They, like Abraham of old, "went out, not knowing whither he went". By faith they, like he, "sojourned, looking for a city which hath foundations whose builder and maker is God. They were pilgrims here, but had their eyes fixed on an inheritance promised them, not of this world's goods, but of that world to come, of which they firmly believed that they themselves were a part.

They fought a good fight. It was the fight of faith, that, through conflict, trial and hardship, they might establish in the hearts and souls of men and women on earth the kingdom of heaven—a spiritual kingdom.

There are earthly tasks and there are heavenly. The heavenly task is spiritual, and has to do with the establishment of righteousness, and that rulership of righteousness, in the lives of men and women here on earth. Those who dwell in this spiritual kingdom may or may not wield great power in the world, may or may not have much of this world's goods, but theirs is the fruit of the Spirit: "Love, joy, peace, longsuffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance: against such there is no law."

The kingdom our Lord is establishing in the world is not an earthly, perishable kingdom. It is a heavenly, spiritual, imperishable kingdom.—Christian Sun.

* * *

A Story of Medical Missions.

A missionary physician in one of China's hospitals cured a man of cataract. A few weeks later forty-eight blind men from one of China's wilds, each holding on to a rope held in the hands of the man who was cured, came to him. Thus in a chain they had walked two hundred and fifty miles to the hospital, where nearly all were cured. What a pathetic procession those blind men must have made! Yet it is typical of the willingness of the world to come to a man who has something genuine to give them.—The Record of Christian Work.

* * *

The Bible in Bali.

The charming island of Bali has attracted attention both for its beauty and interest.

The first attempt to give the Bali people the Bible in their own language was recently completed by Missionary Vielhauer of the Basel Mission, who has published the New Testament, translated by him in spite of many difficulties. For example, they have no word for "river" and are compelled to say "water." They have no words for colors and can distinguish only three, white, red and black. They have no word for "light," although they have one for darkness. In John 8:12 Mr. Vielhauer was compelled to translate, "I am as the sun and enlighten the world." For the idea of God, he found only a word that has a disturbing connection with woods. The people of Bali think of divinity only as a forest spirit. As there was absolutely no word for "spirit" the translator was obliged to say "breath." These examples might be multiplied.—Watchman and Examiner.

* * *

"I am in the best service for the best of Masters and upon the best of terms."—John Williams.

FOR THE YOUNG PEOPLE

DIVINITY IN RETROSPECT.

From far to east came wise men to the king
Inquiring Him of whom the angels sang.
The king uneasy, planned the Babe to slay;
The sages, God-controlled, returned another way.

And Joseph from Judea, Spirit-led,
Took Jesus till His enemies were dead.
Returning then from far Egyptian scene,
The Christ child soon became the Nazarene.
His life obedient to His parents spent
Was yet directed by God's Spirit sent,
And passed through Jordan, tempting ground and grave,
And rose again, a sin-cursed world to save.

Today, with name of Jesus on our lips,
To lands in darkness speed a thousand ships;
Proclaim abroad the living Lord of earth,
Till every man through Him shall have new birth.

—L. P. Manis, in Western Recorder.

* * *

For the Southern Churchman.

THOSE RECTORY CHILDREN.

Chapter 4.

Cedar-Picking.

M. L. G.

Winnie was sitting between Father and David, kept warm with a hood over her brown curls that made the sleigh bells sounds far away. A big robe was firmly tucked around them, and a lantern fixed to the sleigh in front of David lighted the way ahead. It was colder, the stars shone frostily. When they came to the pine-woods the trees on each side, Winnie thought, might have been two strips of black paper, cut in points at the top, between the dim white of the road and the dark, star-trimmed sky.

"Cold, little daughter?" Father asked.

"No, just my nose and cheeks. I like it!"

"It's a good thing the big boys cut enough cedar and gathered the running-pine before this snow," Father went on.

"Next year I'll be in the big boy's class and I can go with them to gather the greens," said David.

"I'm glad to be big enough to go to cedar-picking, I never was before!" and Winnie sighed with pleasure.

Many lights shone through the church yard trees from the windows of the Sunday-school room. Other horses welcomed Frank with little snickers. They stamped their hooves, making little soft noises.

"Run in, children," said Father, "I'll see to Frank."

Inside was warm as outside was cold. The air was spicy with the fragrance of cedar. Every lamp was lighted, making dazzling spots from their bright metal reflectors. The two big egg-shaped stoves shone redly. The talk and laughter came in a muffled roar through hood and curls to Winnie's ears, as she and David stood a little dazed, just inside the door. She pulled off her hood and heard suddenly above the noise,

"Those Rectory children. More bother than help. I myself always say—"

In an instant she had slipped outside the door. She ran down the walk, the snow squeaking under her feet. Father was just turning in from the driveway.

"What! Out again? And no head?"

"Oh, I forgot. Let me go in with you, Father."

This time it was better. She stayed close by Father as he went from group to group, seeing that all had enough cedar and helping the big boys—among whom was David, happy to be included in their group, and working as hard as any to bring in and cut the cedar. She grew gradually less timid and went contentedly about, with her arms filled with cedar. Some had little gray, blue berries on it. It tickled her cheeks and caught in her curls.

"Bring us some, Winnie, please."

"And we're next. We're almost out."

Winnie's eyes shone happily. She hurried to bring more. It was delightful to see the great ropes of cedar grow under the expert hands of the ladies. Quick fingers gathered the stems together, wrapped them with cord to the cedar-rope, reached for more. There were others to take the cedar Winnie brought and make the little bunches ready for the wrapper.

"You're the smallest person here," said kind Mrs. Pace, as she took an armful of cedar from Winnie, "But I declare you've worked as well as any!"

Winnie watched her flying fingers, smiling. The room seemed a haze of lights, pleasant talk, warmth and cedar fragrance. She leaned against a pillar, and her eyes closed.

"Come over here, child!"

Winnie started, wide-awake and with her heart beating uncomfortably. This was the voice that had sent her out of the door at the first. She made her way over to the tall lady who had called. This lady was wrapping, and keeping three others busy handing her little bunches. Her cedar-rope was the longest of all, beautifully round and full.

"If you come to cedar-picking you must work, not stand around doing nothing. I myself always say children can work if they've a mind to. Pick up that ball of cord. Now carry away those sticks, no cedar left on 'em."

Winnie fairly ran with her armful of sticks. This time she did not leave Father's side.

Soon the wreaths were all made, and the beautiful green star, as tall as Winnie herself. This was to have white narcissus woven into it. Miss Lydia and Miss Mary Hollingway had been tending their narcissus bulbs with care for several weeks, in the little parlor back of their millinery shop, that their blooms might be just ready to weave into the star.

"Father," said Winnie sleepily, as old Frank seemed to fly along the homeward road, through the pines, "Who is a tall lady, with a tall face?"

"Well, that might be Miss Parmenter. Why, honey?"

"She herself always says children can work if they've a mind to," answered Winnie soberly.

A queer, choking sound came from Father's direction.

"Yes, that was Miss Parmenter without doubt," he said, and choked again.

Winnie saw David, nodding by her side. The bright stars, the green Christmas star, Miss Parmenter, the lantern making a yellow light on the snow, Frank's hoof with snow flying from it, all mingled in her mind. She leaned her hooded head against Father and slept.

"Fair Weather and Foul."

"I haven't see your friend Emily since I've been here. The last time I visited you folks you and Emily were together so much, and I got much interested in her. She seemed to be putting up such a plucky fight against obstacles."

Anne Downing, successful reported, and life-long friend of Mildred's mother, had always been "Aunt Anne" to Mildred, a delightful person to whom one could talk freely, sure of sympathetic understanding.

"I don't see as much of Emily as I used to," Mildred replied, her face clouding. "The fact is, she has become a pretty important person up at school, and—" She paused not quite sure how to go on.

"Why, Emily didn't seem to me at all the sort of girl who would desert old friends for any such reason as that," said Miss Downing in surprise.

"Oh, Emily hasn't deserted me exactly, but she's busy. You know she's working part time at the library—mother helped to get her that job last year when she needed it so much—and then she's a hard student, and with outside activities, her time is all taken up. She doesn't need me the way she did when she was a stranger here, and having a hard pull to stay in high school at all."

A light dawned on Miss Downing as as she looked at Mildred's moody, downcast face. "What activities is Emily in?" she asked.

"Well, for one thing, she's secretary of The Story Club," said Mildred.

"Does she make a good secretary?"

"We've only had one meeting so far—the first one, yesterday afternoon—but the minutes were awfully clever, written in rhyme." Mildred smiled half-reluctantly.

"I suppose you were proud of her," said Miss Downing, in a matter-of-fact voice. "I remember how proud you were of her when she took two or three old dresses and made one smart new one out of them; how you helped her plan and sew, and how pleased you both were with the results, and how you contrived to ge her the school books she needed."

"She doesn't have to do these things now," said Mildred. "She makes enough at the library, so that she can buy the clothes and books and things she needs."

"But she still needs her friends," said Miss Downing quietly.

"Oh, she has plenty of friends. Everybody likes Emily."

There was a short silence, and then Miss Downing said slowly: "You often hear folks say, 'Oh, she's only a fair-weather friend!' meaning that she's the sort of friend who will stand by when things go smoothly, but deserts when trouble comes. But I've often noticed that just the reverse is quite as apt to be true. Folks will stand loyally by a friend who is having trouble—they will do everything they can to comfort and help; but it's a true friend indeed who is willing to share a friend's triumphs, as well as the troubles. Envy is so likely to come in and stir up discord."

Mildred looked up quickly. "I guess that's just what it is," she said honestly. "But how in the world would I go about sharing her triumphs, Aunt Anne? I haven't any right to them. I don't want to shine in reflected glory."

"Of course you don't," replied her friend. "But just now you told me Emily did a fine job on the minutes for the Story Club. Did you tell her you thought so?" Mildred shook her head somewhat shamefacedly, and Miss Downing went on, "Why don't you try that way of sharing? It will increase her pleasure and make you happy, too. That's a good chance to see if my experiment won't work. Just try it and see."

"All right, I will. I'll call her right up," said Mildred impulsively.

She came back a few moments later, her expression a droll mixture of pleasure and surprise. "I'll say it worked," she said. "Emily was so pleased—and the funny part of it was that I began to be pleased, too, as I talked to her. And Emily said—what do you think—that she cared more about what I thought than what any of the other girls thought. She said—I'm almost ashamed to repeat this, but you wanted to know exactly how the experiment worked. 'Mildred, you stood by me through thick and thin when I was having trouble; and it means an awful lot to have you stand by now when things are going better. You need someone to stand by in bad times; but, oh, good times wouldn't amount to a thing if your best friend didn't stand by then, too.' I'm going down to study with her tonight," she added, her face so full of happiness that Miss Downing was glad she had suggested her simple and effective experiment.

"I think you and Emily are laying the foundation for a friendship that will last for you just as your mother's and mine has lasted for us," she said.

"Friends in fair weather and foul," nodded Mildred.—Girls' World.

* * *

GOOD-NIGHT PRAYER.

Our Father, you have given me
So much of love and joy today
That I am thinking joy and love
To other children far away.
Wherever they lie down to sleep,
Happy and tired with work and play,
Yellow and brown and black and white—
Our Father, bless us all tonight!

—Amelia Burr.

* * *

The Scarry Eyes.

This is a true story from Shug the Pup, a book written by Feza M. Reynolds. It shows how we are sometimes too easily frightened, especially in the dark.

Everybody was up early at the Brown home. Even Billy, who usually slept late, was wide-awake and up long before daylight. Aunt Hattie and Anna and Baby Junior were leaving for home on an early train, and mother had promised Ted and Billy they might go along to take them to the train.

Billy was all aglow with excitement. He rushed out to the kitchen and washed for breakfast without even having to be told to do so.

Just before they sat down to breakfast, father started out to the well to get a bucket of water. As he opened the door, he stepped back with an exclamation of surprise. The boys came running to the door, but father motioned for them not to come too near. He walked cautiously out across the porch.

Mother and Aunt Hattie and Uncle Bob all came to the door and looked out. In the darkness they could discern a shadow form of some horribly shaped animal, with two fiery eyes that fairly gleamed in the darkness. It moved slowly back and forth, at bay, as it seemed, but for the most part kept its eyes fixed on them.

It appeared to be about the size of a large dog, but it had the most hideous head imaginable. The children cuddled up against mother, and for a moment all were quiet.

"What on earth is it?" Uncle Bob asked.

"Bring my flashlight," father replied in a low voice. His eyes were becoming more accustomed to the darkness, but still he could not make out what it was. Mother soon returned with the flashlight. Father took it and walked out a little nearer the object, throwing the full force of the light upon it. After the first gasp there was silence for an instant, broken by a roaring laugh from Uncle Bob. The rest joined in, for there stood Jenkins, a big hound belonging to a neighbor, with the remains of Mrs. Brown's "meat grease keg" on his head. It was a wooden nail keg, that she kept out in the woodshed to put old scraps of meat in. The hound had found the woodshed door open and had pushed the lid off. He had managed to get his head caught fast in the keg, and in his effort to get away, he had broken out the bottom, so his eyes shown through.

After a good deal of coaxing, the men caught the dog and removed the keg. At once he bounded over the fence and started for home as fast as he could run.—Selected.

* * *

Sacajawea, the Shoshone Indian Girl.

Every school boy or girl knows the story of Pocahontas, but how few know the more heroic story of Sacajawea, the Shoshone Indian girl? Except for her service and devotion Lewis and Clark would have perished by the way, through the treachery of natives or have been lost or starved in the fastnesses of the great Rockies.

This orphaned girl, captured from her own tribe by the hostile Sioux people and carried far from home, compelled to marry a treacherous half-breed Frenchman, accompanied these pioneers from the Dakotas to the Pacific Ocean and back, carrying her baby on her back, and, by her knowledge of Indian traits, was able to save them alive from the attacks of suspicious savages, not once but many times. This journey, which saved to the United States the great Northwest was more thrilling and as dangerous to person as that of Livingstone through Africa, and without the aid of this marvelous young Indian woman, would, without doubt, have failed.—Exchange.

* * *

Practical Faith.

What mighty works might be accomplished by prayer if we all used the faith of the orphan girl, Kara, in India. Fearing slavery, she appealed to a missionary—a teacher from an adjoining village—to take her home with her. The teacher said, "We have no vacant room and no money to build more." Kara's sad look, although too proud to cry, appealed to the teacher, who said, "You pray to God to enable us to take you. I, too, will pray." On reaching home that night the missionary found a letter from America containing ten dollars. With this encouragement a messenger was sent early next morning for Kara. It was a long day's journey, but at noon he returned with Kara. The girl said simply: "Why we both prayed to God, so I thought I might as well start." She was half-way there when the messenger met her.—The Expositor.

* * *

There is a Chinese legend that says: "If you plan for a year, plant grain; if you plan for a century plant trees; if you plan for eternity, deal with souls."

follow this plan for better

CONTROL OF COLDS

For FEWER Colds
VICKS VA-TRO-NOL

At the first warning sneeze, sniffle, or nasal irritation, quick!...apply Vicks Va-tro-nol—just a few drops up each nostril. When used in time, Va-tro-nol helps to prevent many colds, and to throw off colds in their early stages.

For SHORTER Colds
VICKS VAPORUB

If a cold has already developed, apply Vicks VapoRub over throat and chest at bedtime. Mothers of two generations have learned to depend on its poultice-vapor action to help shorten a cold—and without the risks of "dosing."

Build RESISTANCE to Colds—by following the simple health rules that are also a part of Vicks Plan for Better Control of Colds. It has been clinically tested by physicians—and proved in everyday home use by millions.

(Full details of this unique Plan in each Vicks Package.)

VICKS PLAN FOR BETTER CONTROL OF COLDS

Classified Advertisments and Notices

All notices and advertisements, excepting positions wanted, will be inserted in this department at a rate of 20 cents per agate line each insertion. Special raes to contracts of any length. A rate of 15 cents per line is made to persons seeking positions. No advertisement accepted for less than 50 cents.

Copy for this department must be received not later than Tuesday of the week in which it is intended that the first insertion shall appear.

SPECIAL NOTICES.

CHURCH VESTMENTS.

Cathedral Studio, Church embroideries, Altar and Pulpit Hangings. Stoles from $6.50. Burse and veil from $10. Surplice from $8. Send for complete line of pure Irish linens by the yard. Silks, fringes and gold thread. Embroidered emblems ready to appy. Altar Guild Handbook, 50c.
50c.

L. V. MACKRILLE
11 W. Kirke St., Chevy Chase, Washington, D. C.
Telephone Wisconsin 2752.

CHURCH LINEN.

FINE IRISH LINEN specially selected for Church use. 36 inches to 54 inches wide, cut any length. Sample of 12 qualities on request. Mary Fawcett Company, 812 Berkeley Avenue, Trenton, N. J.

RAZOR SHARPENER.

SHARPENS ANY STRAIGHT RAZOR, or safety razor. Guaranteed by manufacturers, and I guarantee it to please you. 50 cents per cake, or 3 cakes for $1.00. I take subscriptions for all magazines published at publishers' rates, or less. Sold by a wheel chair invalid. Edward P. Broxton, R. F. D., Blythe, Ga.

FOUNTAIN PENS.

A FOUNTAIN PEN AT A 1933 VALUE, with the Spencerian quality and smooth writing ease famous for seventy-five years. Guaranteed. Points fine and medium. Colors, gloss black, green and gold, Burgundy, blue and black, grey pearl. Price $2.00. Sold by a shut-in wheel chair invalid. Edward P. Broxton, R. F. D., Blythe, Ga.

HELP WANTED.

WANTED, MOTHER'S HELPER. YOUNG woman, pleasant, well-bred, intelligent, to help with work and care of child. to help with house work and care of child. Christian background, intelligent understanding of children essential. Write fully. Mrs. Howard Blake, 1527 44th Street, N. W., Washington, D. C.

DEATHS

MISS LELIA SINCLAIR BAIRD.

Fell asleep on the afternoon of December 29, 1934, MISS LELIA SINCLAIR BAIRD, daughter of the late Captain Edward R. and Virginia Barron Baird. She had suffered for the past year from a heart affection, but not once did her buoyant spirit fail. Her simple faith and high standard of Christianity carried her safely over all the rough places. It is hard to associate death with such a radiant personality. She was gifted with a rare magnetism, and her hosts of friends, both white and colored, will miss her joyous outlook on life. It was a very real help and inspiration to all around her. She took a keen interest in young people, always sympathizing with them in their hopes and aspirations.

She loved "God's great out-of-doors"—all animals and growing things. Her's was a heart of pure gold, and there was no one too lowly or insignificant for her to befriend or cheer on their way.

One might truly say, that she never did a wrong to anyone, and left this world "loving each, and loved by all."

She was tenderly laid to rest in the old cemetery at Epping Forest, where several generations of her people sleep.

V. B. B. B.

MARGARET WILMER MEADE.

Died, at the age of eighty, on January 5, 1934, at her home in Charlottesville, Va., MARGARET WILMER MEADE, daughter of the late Rev. Richard Kidder Meade, rector of Christ Church, Charlottesville, from 1837 to 1869; granddaughter of Bishop William Meade, of Virginia; and great-granddaughter of Colonel Richard Kidder Meade, Washington's aide-de-camp. The late Bishop William Cabell Brown was a first cousin.

Miss Meade's life work was teaching. A school long conducted by members of the Meade family, known as the Piedmont Academy, still lives in the hearts of the community through the Piedmont Alumnae Association. From her youth until her last illness she taught in the Sunday School of Christ Church. It would be impossible to overestimate her influence on the lives of the hundreds of girls who were her pupils and who learned from her the Christian virtues and a love of the Church.

Miss Minnie, as she was affectionately called, was active in every form of Church work, setting a high example in attendance and service. Her sweetness and gentleness and faithfulness were proverbial. She radiated love and was beloved by all in parish and community. She leaves a blessing that will endure.

CHURCH INTELLIGENCE.

(Continued from page 17.)

been ordained and are at work.

The activity of the student helper usually centers about two country churches north of Georgetown, Prince Frederick's, Pee Dee, and Saint Peter's Mission, Snow Mill. In each of these centers services are held frequently; they preach, assist with Sunday Schools and Young People's Service Leagues, and visit the people. There is a great deal of Christian social service work of one sort or another to be done. Also the student assists occasionally in the other two churches: Prince George Church, Winyah, Georgetown, and All Saints' Church, Waccamaw.

Under this plan, which has been worked very satisfactorily, the students gain a great deal of practical experience in Church work in the Southern rural field, and the churches benefit by having more frequent services, closer supervision, and more adequate pastoral care.

H. D. Bull.

PITTSBURGH.

Rt. Rev. Alexander Mann, D. D., Bishop.

Pittsburgh Council of Churches.

In connection with the Week of Prayer, planned by the Pittsburgh Council of Churches, the Rev. Dr. William Porkess, rector of St. Stephen's Church, Wilkinsburg, Pa., was invited to give a radio message, Thursday morning, January 10, at eleven o'clock. His subject was, "The How of Prayer." The Station used was KDKA, Pittsburgh, short wave W8XK.

J. S. L.

OHIO.

Rt. Rev. W. L. Rogers, D. D., Bishop.

Parochial Mission.

The Rev. Franklyn Cole Sherman, rector, Grace Church, Cleveland, will conduct a ten days' parochial mission at Grace Church, Oak Park, Illinois, the Rev. Harold Holt, rector, beginning Sunday, January 20. There will be informal mission services every evening, followed by a conference, and daily celebrations of the Holy Communion and conferences in the mornings. A mission was conducted by the Rev. Mr. Sherman in this parish in January, 1934. The results were so beneficial that a second mission was planned at once.

CHILDREN'S DEPARTMENT.

(Continued from page 21.)

In Search of a King.

All is quiet in the little house in Bethlehem where Joseph and Mary have found shelter for themselves and the Holy Child. Perhaps it was the house of the village carpenter, some relative of Joseph, and from whom he himself had learned his trade in earlier years. All was quiet, for it was nighttime. The only sound was the soft breathing of the sleepers, and one of them is God Incarnate. Suddenly there is a loud knock on the outer door. Joseph hastens to open it a crack and look out. In the starlight he sees camels or other beasts of burden and a group of men. Joseph is a friend of God. He lives always with a feeling of the closeness of unseen things. He is not greatly surprised that these strangers know of the royal lineage of Mary's Son or that they should desire to see Him. He throws open the door and bids them enter the humble abode. He hastens to awaken Mary that she may bring forth her Child that these visitors may see Him. With all the natural dignity of the independent poor the Holy Family is in no way embarrassed by this visit from men of wealth and culture. You can see the same courtesy and hospitality in the remote places of our own land. Mary, in her simple habit, and the tiny Babe in His swaddling clothes, and Joseph, in his neat but rough, working dress, are a great contrast to the three kings in their gorgeous robes as they fall down on the rough earth floor, perhaps in the midst of straw and shavings, to offer their gifts. They, too, live with the sense of the closeness of a supernatural world. They are not put off at finding the little King in a cottage instead of a palace; wrapped in swaddling clothes instead of purple and fine linen; a weak Baby instead of a mighty king. How that little Child's eyes must have sparkled at the sight of the bright gold, for he was a real child. From the charcoal brazier, that gave a little warmth to the room, hot coals are taken and placed in the censer, and the sweet smoke of the incense sprinkled on goes up before the divine Infant. Mary is, no doubt, happy that her little Child should receive His due; but her happiness receives a check, for the third gift is a pot of myrrh. As the lid is removed the bitter odor brings to her the recollection of death and the funerals of friends whom she had helped to embalm with that same substance. What a strange gift to bring to her Child! Was this another warning like that which Simeon had given her? "A sword shall go through thine own soul on account of this Child."

We love the story with its touch of tragedy. Who can help loving a little child like the Holy Child that Mary bore? If this is God, then I can love Him. My poor heart is big enough to take in this little One, even though I cannot see how I am to love the Eternal, the Infinite, the Lord and Creator of all. This little Child is He. He makes Himself small so that I can comprehend Him. He makes Himself weak so that I may know that He needs me and my poor help to carry out His purposes.—Rev. R. F. Palmer, in Canadian Churchman.

* * *

What Milo Decided.

By Ina E. Lindsley.

Milo and Frank were making animal-books. They had a box of cut-out colored animals, ready to be pasted on the white sheets of their books.

"Oh, I want that one," cried Milo's little brother, Donnie, pointing to a big brown camel that wore a bright-blue saddle with gold fringes on it.

"No," said Milo sternly, while he grabbed the paper camel and put it back in the box with the rest of the pictures. "We will need all our animals to fill the books."

Little Donnie watched wistfully. He wanted to have an animal-book of his own, but Milo told him he was too little. "Why, you can't even cut out pictures right," the older boy said. "If you tried to paste them, you would spoil the pages in the book. Run and play with your blocks."

A few minutes later the little boy came back. He looked at the big brown camel again. "Let me put him in my barn," he begged.

Milo shook his head. "You might spoil the brown camel," he said, "and then Frank and I couldn't put the picture in the book."

"Look!" cried Frank just then. "I have made one page of bears, and another of lions. Now I am going to put in this bif elephant."

"See this funny page," said Milo, pasting the last picture down. "That was a monkey in a bright red coat and cap."

Presently Milo and Frank became tired of pasting. They decided to go to Frank's house to play in the attic. "If Donnie sees us, he will want to go with us," suggested Milo. "And it is a bother to have to wait for the little fellow."

When Donnie wasn't looking, the boys slipped around the corner of the house and darted through the alley toward Frank's house. "It is easy to run away from Donnie," Milo panted. "I suppose he is beginning to call us now."

The boys played in the attic until they heard big drops of rain pattering on the roof above their heads. "I may as well stay now until it stops raining," Milo declared.

"It was a big rain," the boy thought on the way home a half an hour later. There were pools of water standing in the street.

Milo was opening the door at home, when he suddenly remembered the pictures and animal-books that he and Frank had left out in the yard. In hurrying to slip away from Donnie they had forgotten to take them in. "Oh, our animal-books!" the boy exclaimed. "They will be spoiled now."

"S-s-s-sh," warned his mother, lifting her hand. Pointing to the couch, where Donnie lay asleep, she added, "He brought your things in when it began to rain, and he slipped down with the big load and bumped his head."

Milo glanced at his little brother, with the red bump still showing on his forehead, and then at the books and the box of pictures that were safe and dry on a chair near-by.

"Donnie thinks his big brother is wonderful," mother said to Milo. "And because he loves you so, he would do anything to help you."

Milo listened soberly. He loved his little brother, too. But he was remembering now how often he forgot to help the little fellow.

The next minute he was opening the picture-box. He took out the big brown camel with the blue saddle, and placed it where his little brother would see it as soon as he woke up.

"He can have that camel," Milo said. "Donnie is too little to make an animal-book, but Frank and I can make one for him."—Story World.

Personal Notes

The Rev. Gardiner C. Tucker, of Mobile, Alabama, was guest of honor at a dinner given by his Churchmen. He is eighty-three years of age, and has been rector of St. John's Church since 1885. He still runs this large parish without an assistant. He has three sons in the ministry, Gardiner L. Tucker of Houma, La., Irwin St. John Tucker of Chicago, and Royal K. Tucker of Brunswick, Ga.

The Rev. Welles M. Partridge, "Father Partridge," itinerant missioner, was the preacher at St. Thomas' Church, Isle of Hope, Georgia, the Rev. Robert H. Daniell, vicar, on Epiphany Sunday. Father Partridge and his dog, Spot, have been spending several days in Savannah on their way to Florida.

Clerical Changes.

The Rev. Robert H. Gamble, in charge of Christ Church Parish Missions of Fairmont, West Virginia, will become priest-in-charge of Holy Trinity Mission, Logan, W. Va., of the Diocese of West Virginia, to become effective January 29, 1935. New address, Holy Trinity Mission, Logan, W. Va.

For the Church

An old Richmond landmark that has kept the pace. In the heart of that portion of the city most interesting to the traveler.

Write

A. GERALD BUSH, Manager.

January Selection of the Religious Book Club . .

GOD AND THE SOCIAL PROCESS

By LOUIS WALLIS

author of Sociological Study of the Bible.

A timely and constructive book showing how social forces, like those operating in the critical world-epoch of today, transformed early Hebrew paganism into the monotheism of Church and Synagogue.

PROFESSOR E. A. ROSS, University of Wisconsin, writes:

"Your book is so interesting that I could not put it down. I think throughout you show a very fine appreciation of modern sociological analysis. Your sense of the values of different social phenomena is very keen."

392 pages, cloth-bound, $2.00; postpaid, $2.15

The University of Chicago Press

CREOMULSION

Your own druggist is authorized to cheerfully refund your money on the spot if you are not relieved by Creomulsion.

COUGHS

The Ewart's Cafeteria

EXCELLENT FOOD
REASONABLE PRICES

Richmond, Va.
112-114 N. 5th St.
Norfolk, Va.
112-114 Market St.
Washington, D. C.
522 13th, N. W.

R. GEISSLER, INC.
450 SIXTH AVE. NEAR 10th ST. NEW YORK
Church Furnishings
IN CARVED WOOD AND MARBLE · BRASS · SILVER FABRICS + WINDOWS
EST. 1877

CHOIR VESTMENTS

Cassocks, Cottas and Caps. Special low prices. Samples and prices on request.
Poplin Canterbury Caps, $1.00 each.
Paper Patterns for Choir and Church.
Vestments for sale.

HENRY HAYTER, 8205 Riverside Drive, Box 618, Rte. 1, St. Petersburg, Fla.

Church Furnishings
Gold, Silver and Brass
Church and Chancel Furniture
Write for Catalogue
for Episcopal Churches
W. & E. SCHMIDT CO.
308 Third Street, Milwaukee, Wis.

FLOWERS BY WIRE EVERYWHERE

Mosmiller Florist

115 E Main St.
424 E. Grace St
RICHMOND, VA.

CONFIRMATION PAPERS

By
CANON F. E. HOWITT

1. Confirmation and Baptism.
2. Baptism and the Christian Covenant.
3. The Baptismal Covenant—Repentance.
4. The Baptismal Covenant—Faith and the Faith.
5. The Baptismal Covenant—The Faith.
6. The Baptismal Covenant—Obedience.
7. The Lord's Supper.
8. The Means of Grace.

A series of informing pamphlets compiled by Canon F. E. Howitt. They have an inestimable value in instructing those who contemplate membership in the Church, and for impressing the already confirmed with the sacredness and meaning of this holy ritual.

Price, single pamphlet, each..... 5 cents
Complete set of eight.....25 cents

Order from

SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN COMPANY
Richmond, Va.

Educational

The General Theological Seminary

CHELSEA SQUARE, NEW YORK

The next Academic year begins on the last Wednesday in September.

Special students admitted and Graduate Courses for graduates of other Theological Seminaries.

The requirements for admission and other particulars can be had from THE DEAN, 1 Chelsea Square, New York, N. Y.

SHENANDOAH VALLEY ACADEMY

Certificates accepted by universities, colleges, West Point, Annapolis. The Academy's experienced teachers, cultural atmosphere, limited numbers, military discipline enable it to prepare boys to succeed in college. For catalogue write: Col. B. M. Roszel, Supt., Winchester, Va.

ST. MARGARET'S SCHOOL

TAPPAHANNOCK, VIRGINIA.

A Church School for girls. Boarding Department limited to 70. Colleeg Preparatory Course and Intermediate Grades. Athletics. Very moderate cost.

Country life and simplicity without isolation. Beautiful grounds on Rappahannock River. Three dormitories for different stages.

EDITH LATANE, Headmistress.

ST. CHRISTOPHER'S

A Church Boarding and Day School

Healthful, beautiful and historic surroundings. Boarding Department limited to 50 boys. Rate, $650. Reduction to sons of clergymen and missionaries. Illustrated catalogue on request.

REV. C. G. CHAMBERLAYNE, Ph. D., LL. D., Headmaster, Richmond, Virginia.

The Virginia Theological Seminary

ALEXANDRIA, VIRGINIA

For catalogue and other information, Address THE DEAN

The Beckford School

WOODSTOCK, VIRGINIA.

A school for younger boys. Second grade through Junior High School. On modern farm in Shenandoah Valley. Summer camp. Limited enrollment. Fifty dollars monthly.

EDMUND BURKE WHELAN, Headmaster.

The Bishop Payne Divinity School

The accredited Seminary of the Church for training colored men for the ministry. The curriculum covers the full course for Deacons and Priest's Orders. The degree of D. D. awarded.

For catalogue and information, apply to Rev. F. G. Ribble, M. A., D. D., Dean Petersburg, Va.

The Episcopal Theological School

Cambridge, Massachusetts.

Affiliated with Harvard University. Dean H. B. Washburn, 3 Mason Street.

Ordinations.

The Rev. Edward R. A. Green, deacon, was ordained to the priesthood by the Rt. Rev. Herman Page, D. D., Bishop of Michigan, in St. Peter's Church, Tecumseh, Michigan, on the morning of Thursday, January 17. A luncheon to which the clergy of the diocese had been invited was served in the parish house following the service. The sermon was preached by the Rev. C. L. Ramsay, rector of St. Paul's Church, Jackson, and the Candidate was presented by the Ven. Leonard P. Hagger, Archdeacon of the Diocese.

Mr. Green is a native of Michigan, having entered the ministry from St. Paul's Church, Lansing. He was educated at the Michigan State College and the Seabury-Western Theological Seminary at Evanston, Illinois. He was ordained to the Diaconate by Bishop Page last June, and assumed charge of St. Peter's Church, Tecumseh, on September 1.

* * *

Deaths.

The Rev. Ambrose D. Gringg, a retired clergyman of the Missionary District of Kyoto, Japan, died on December 19. After his graduation from Yale Divinity School in 1878, Mr. Gring went to Japan as a missionary of the Reformed Church in the United States. In 1891 he was ordained to the diaconate of the Episcopal Church, and in the following year to the priesthood by Bishop Rulison of the Diocese of Central Pennsylvania. During his preparation for the ministry of the Episcopal Church he was in charge of the church at Forrest City, Penn. In 1892 he returned to Japan and for several years served in Kyoto in connection with Holy Trinity Mission. As the work in the great central city of Kyoto developed, Mr. Gring moved forward to the West Coast and for the latter years of his service in Japan he did pioneer work in West Coast cities, such as Kanazawa, Miadsu, Kayo, Maizura and Obama.

In 1908 Mr. Gring retired to the United States, taking such occasional duty as his health permitted. All of the stations on the West Coast in which he served are now under the care of Japanese clergy, while Holy Trinity Church, Kyoto, has become the chapel for St. Agnes' School, the congregation which formerly used it having transferred to a new and more advantageous site elsewhere in the city.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LITERATURE

Following the Improved

INT. UNIFORM LESSON TOPICS

QUARTERLIES and PAPERS

Samples on Application.

Address

UNION GOSPEL PRESS

Box 6059 Cleveland, Ohio

NOTICE—The "Bible Expositor and Illuminator," an Advanced Quarterly of 192 pages, in monthly parts but still a Quarterly, price 30 cents a quarter. $1.00 a year, payment with order.

Sample lesson on application.

Divinity School

Of the Protestant Episcopal Church in Philadelphia

42nd and Locust Streets

Graduate Courses in Theology. Privileges at the University of Pennsylvania

Address: The Rev. G. G. Bartlett, D. D Dean.

CAUTHORNE PAPER COMPANY

The South's Most Progressive Paper House

ALL GRADES OF PRINTING AND WRAPPING PAPERS

Richmond, Va.

This paper is printed on paper supplied by the Cauthorne Paper Company.

PARKER'S HAIR BALSAM

Removes Dandruff-Stops Hair Falling

Imparts Color and Beauty to Gray and Faded Hair

60c. and $1.00 at Druggists.

Hiscox Chemical Works Patchogue, N. Y.

Royal Laundry

and

BAND BOX DRY CLEANERS

UNEXCELLED LAUNDRY

and Cleaning Service

Richmond, Virginia.

L. T. CHRISTIAN

FUNERAL DIRECTOR

Boulevard-Park and Patterson Avenue

Richmond, Va.

Office Never Closed

Prices to meet depressed conditions

Edwin S. Gorham, Inc.

Publishers and Booksellers.

Established 1900.

Church Literature and Art, Bibles, Prayer Books and Hymnals, Devotional Books, Parish Requisites.

Catalogues and Information on request.

18 West 45th Street, New York.

Some Important Facts in English Church History

EXAMINED AND REVIEWED

By

REV. W. P. WITSELL, D. D.

This is an illuminating and instructive review of the history of the Episcopal Church in England from the earliest records, with commentaries on the book with the above title compiled by the Rev. C. L. Wells, D. D., of Sewanee, Tenn.

As a digest of the records of the establishment and growth of the Church; its maintenance and continuity of existence as an independent religious body amid the vicissitudes of early English politics, and efforts of outside interference, this review affords a valuable fund of information to churchmen.

In pamphlet form,

Price, 25 cents

For sale by

SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN CO.

Richmond, Va.

When answering advertisements mention this paper. Thus you will aid us in securing more advertising patronage.

DESIGNED FOR THE PROMOTION OF PRACTICAL PIETY, THE DIFFUSION OF RELIGIOUS AND GENERAL INTELLIGENCE, AND THE MAINTENANCE OF THE PRINCIPLES OF THE PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL CHURCH

Southern Churchman

DOMINUS FRUSTRA NISI 1835

Vol. 100. RICHMOND, VA., JANUARY 26, 1935. No. 4.

St. Thomas' Church, Bath, North Carolina.
Built 1734.

THIRD SUNDAY AFTER EPIPHANY.

ST. THOMAS' CHURCH.
Ada Satterthwaite Bragg.

The Old Church stands a monument
To the good men of the past,
Showing us the way of life
That is moving on so fast.

Many of us are trying
To move faster than we should,
With only time for moving,
And none for being good.

Once, as down through the ages
That seemed drifting by so slow,
This old church was deserted,
With never a man to go.

Inside its battered ruins,
And there was none to tell
Of the work of our forefathers,
Who had builded it so well.

So it sheltered the cattle
Of all the neighborhood
From the wintry winds, a trying
To do the world some good.

The bell had been all broken,
So that it wouldn't ring.
Death had silenced the voices
So that they couldn't sing.

God sent men to repair the Church,
His Kingdom to represent.
When fixed as it was builded,
We will then be content.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

"Fireproof."

Mr. Editor:

During summer vacation from the Virginia Seminary in 1911, I assisted the Ellis family in moving from Elkton, Va., to the Settlement House at Yancey, Va. Joe, Junior, and I operated a spring wagon in carrying loads to the new headquarters of the West Blue Ridge Mountain Mission. One load consisted of barrels, boxes and bales of old papers and magazines. Mrs. Ellis was averse to finding storage for these in the new house, so en route some fell by the wayside. Going over the same road next day we discovered that all the scattered magazines and papers had disappeared except the Southern Churchman.

Some time later I was calling on the late Bishop Gibson in Richmond and told him the above story. He laughed heartily and said: "I never knew before than the Southern Churchman was fireproof."

Thank you for sending me a copy of your anniversary number. I congratulate you on surviving all the struggles of the past century, and hope that in the century ahead you will always be "Fireproof" against all depressions, both financial and spiritual.

May your good motto: "Catholic for every truth of God; Protestant against every error of man" become the motto of the whole Church.

Rev. G. V. Bell,
Diocese of Maine.

* * *

"Carry to the friends of peace in America my greetings. We need to be reminded of our common baptism of one free faith at a time like the present when we are trying to unite in the essentially religious task of establishing, if possible on a permanent basis, the peace of Mankind throughout the world!"—Prime Minister Ramsey MacDonald.

Jesus was forever breaking fences down, that from the north and the south and the east and the west men might come into the Kingdom of God.

THOUGHTS for the THOUGHTFUL

"Jesus is the way; He is the only way; the way out, the way up and the way on."

"God hath kindled thy Light.
Let some bright beams fall on the world
Around thee, ere thou die."

No one is so little qualified to criticize as the habitual critic.

"He who has learned how to pray aright has discovered the secret of a holy life."

The facts of life confirm the hope,
That in a world of larger scope,
What here is faithfully begun
Will be completed, not undone.
—T. E. Ruth.

Thy eye can make the world dark or bright for thee; as thou look'st on it, it will weep or laugh.—Ruckert.

Any nobleness begins at once to refine a man's features; any meanness or sensuality, to imbrute them.—Thoreau.

"We shall see no great further advance in public righteousness without a great advance in personal holiness."

"Our business is not to defend the truth but to proclaim it."

"There are times in history when decisive and courageous action is the only safe course to pursue; when it is high time that what is said to be desirable should be done, and done without delay. —Why need we be patient if we believe that the Holy Spirit presses on the hearts of men?"—Rev. H. H. L. Shepard.

"If you go to church, the minute the service begins you will hear prose that is lovelier than any music that has been written. Shakespeare and the Elizabethans wrote prose that is lovely enough, but the sheer aesthetic pleasure which an intelligent man can get out of the whole of Shakespeare's works is as nothing to the delight which he will find in the English Prayer Book."

CONTENTS

Poem—St. Thomas' Church	2
Letters to the Editor	2
Thoughts for the Thoughtful	2
Editorials	3
Church and World Problems as Others See Them	4
The Thousandfold Page—F. W. Neve	5
Two Hundredth Anniversary of St. Thomas' Church, Bath, N. C.—By Rev. George MacLaren Brydon, D. D.	6
The Church and the New Leisure—Rev. Harry Watts	8
Book Reviews	11
News From the Front	11
Third Sunday After The Epiphany W. E. Callender	13
Young People's Service League Page	12
Woman's Auxiliary	12
Church Intelligence	13
Family Department	18
Children's Department	20
Personal Notes	22

Southern Churchman

SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN COMPANY
Mayo Memorial Church House,
110 West Franklin Street,
Richmond, Va.

Officers.

President, RT. REV. H. ST. GEORGE TUCKER, D. D.
Vice-President, E. OTTO N. WILLIAMS.
Secretary-Treasurer, MR. JOHN H. COOKE.

Board of Directors.

RT. REV. H. ST. GEORGE TUCKER, D. D.
REV CHURCHILL J. GIBSON, D. D.
REV. GEORGE P. MAYO, D. D.
REV. CHARLES W. SHEERIN.
MR. CARL H. NOLTING.
MR. ALEXANDER W. WEDDELL.
MR. E. RANDOLPH WILLIAMS.
MR. LANGBOURNE M. WILLIAMS, JR.
MISS SUSANNE C. WILLIAMS.

Voting Trustees.

RT. REV. ROBERT CARTER JETT, D. D.
RT. REV. H. ST. GEORGE TUCKER, D. D.
MR. JAMES M. BALL, JR.
MR. ROBERT B. TUNSTALL.
MR. LANGBOURNE M. WILLIAMS, JR.

Editors.

REV. CHARLES W. SHEERIN....Editor
REV. F. W. NEVE, D. D., Associate Editor
MRS. CONRAD H. GOODWIN, Associate Editor
MRS. R. TATE IRVINE.....News Editor
JOHN H. COOKE..Secretary and Manager

Entered at the Post Office in Richmond, Va., as second-class mail matter.

SUBSCRIPTION PRICE.

$3.00 a year in advance. To the Clergy, $2.00. Six months, $1.50. Total subscriptions, three months, 50 cents; 10 cents a copy. Foreign postage, $1.00 additional.

For the convenience of subscribers subscriptions are continued at expiration unless otherwise ordered. Notice of renewal, discontinuance or change of address should be sent two weeks before the date they go into effect.

RECEIPT OF PAYMENT is shown in about two weeks by change of date on address label. If date is not properly extended after each payment, notify us promptly. No receipt for payment will be sent.

Notice post office address. The exact post office address to which we are directing the paper at the time of writing MUST ALWAYS BE GIVEN. Our mailing list is arranged by post office and not alphabetically

Make all checks and money orders payable to the Southern Churchman, and not to an individual.

ADVERTISEMENTS.—Rates quoted on request. For classified see head of that department

Representatives wanted in each Parish; liberal commissions

News concerning the Church at large always welcome.

MURPHY'S HOTEL
RICHMOND VIRGINIA

An old Richmond landmark that has kept the pace. In the heart of that portion of the city most interesting to the traveler.

Write

A. GERALD BUSH, Manager.

SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN

Catholic for every truth of God; Protestant against every error of man.

EDITORIALS

Vol. 100. RICHMOND, VA., JANUARY 26, 1935. No. 4.

Social Security and The Church.

The Third Sunday after Epiphany has been chosen by the Church as a day in which to emphasize Social Service. Surely this is right, for any ideas of real social service have been born since Christ gave Himself to the world and in the actual serving of people we realize the practical in the Christian religion.

Ideas of service still are those which the saints of old recognized as coming from the Christ. Methods have changed with the changing years, but the inspiration to service remains the same. In fact, the only permanent thing in social work is the inspiration, and the only permanent good would seem to be that which comes from a religious sense generated by the Spirit of Christ.

To the average parish, social service often seems to be a hard part of the program to actually work out. Possibly this is because we think of social service as being only effective with a certain class of people, when in reality the whole race is in need of good social service. Maybe the rich man can pay for that which the poor man must accept from the endowments or charity of others, but such work as "family service" is certainly not limited to any group and many of our wealthiest people in America today need servicing as much as the poorest of our poor.

To the ordinary parish, with very limited means of support, there comes a question whether any actual servicing should be done at all. Inadequate means and artless service have often done more harm than good. But in every American community there comes the opportunity to cooperate and interpret the work of the agencies, either private or governmental, and in the work of cooperation and interpretation the Church can play a great role. Few families ever need servicing that do not need servicing along spiritual lines, while today many good people need teaching in the very funamentals of real living. Until the mass of Americans can feel real security of life, most of our evil problems of every kind will remain unsolved. Any very ordinary parish can do great work for the Master in this cooperation and interpretation.

Of course, the security of the client will never be realized until the security of the trained social worker is assured. If more sermons were preached on the need of trained workers and more sympathy expressed by Christian ministers for this great group, the security would be a fact—and in such work lies our greatest opportunity in the Church today.

Boyd Vincent.

The death of Bishop Vincent, our oldest bishop in point of consecration, reminds us of the great progress which this Church has made in the last fifty years, and which in many ways was the result of Bishop Vincent's leadership.

Coming from a family that has been notable in educational and religious leadership, Bishop Vincent has been called by some the first modern bishop. Possibly this was because he was one of the first to realize that the better business methods being introduced into America could be consecrated to the use of the Church as well, and certainly he was one of the first bishops to insist upon survey and inquiry rather than sentiment in the promotion of new work.

Bishop Vincent has been called a "broad" churchman, and in the true meaning of that word he could be so classified. For his broadness was of the type that with honest inquiry tried to find that which was best in all schools of thought. He was not narrow enough to discourage a sisterhood, but he never allowed such orders to be merely little domestic refuges for church millinery to be displayed.

It was Bishop Vincent who saw the change in city populations on the way long before most men realized the new era. He carefully saw to it that his leading downtown church in his largest city should assume a new leadership along lines of real development that would make it a force in the newer city's life, and it is not taking away from the wonderful ministry of Dr. Frank Nelson to say that much of his success was due to the influence and sympathy of Bishop Vincent.

The fine leadership being displayed at present in the Diocese of Southern Ohio had its first inspiration in the episcopate of Bishop Vincent. A real morale based upon fellowship and realization of a common task was ever present in the ministry of his diocese, and petty jealousies and quarrels amongst his clergy were conspicuous by absence. More and more it has been realized that such a spirit is the truer Christian spirit and that ministries of real meaning and accomplishment can be the result when true fellowship and service are always present. The Church owes much to Bishop Vincent for a demonstration of this reality.

Church and World Problems as Others See Them

The Naval Talks Adjourned.

From "The Record", December 28, 1934.

The "conversations" between representatives of Great Britain, the United States and Japan on the subject of the limitations of their respective navies have been adjourned indefinitely. The official view is merely that no decision has yet been reached, but the obvious crux is that Japan demands a parity of naval strength instead of her proportion of three to five of the other two. It must not be forgotten that the army and navy of Japan are directly responsible to the Emperor alone. In other words they are practically independent of the Japanese Cabinet. They are full of patriotic zeal, and have the memory of their defeat of Russia, and more recently of their having successfully flaunted the directions of the League of Nations in regard to Manchuria. That the present naval treaty will be denounced seems almost certain, but the consequent line of action is not clear. We ourselves must consult the Dominions, for we cannot now expect them to accept without consideration any line of foreign policy which affects them. It is to some extent reassuring to remember that the Four-Power Pact, under which Britain, Japan, France and Italy agreed to respect each other's insular possessions in the Pacific, still remains in force as does also the Briand-Kellogg Pact by which Japan, as well as the other signatories, agreed not to resort to war as a matter of policy.

A Great Day for Jesus Christ.

From "The Presbyterian Banner", January 17, 1935.

The recent meeting in Dayton, Ohio, of the Federal Council of Churches was unusually well attended and its deliberations and results were accounted of great importance. This united body of Protestantism supported by about thirty denominations speaks for Protestantism more representatively than any other body and its president for the time being speaks with a degree of authority above that of any other Protestant minister. The retiring president this year was President Albert W. Beavans, of the Colegate-Rochester Divinity School, and in his address he delivered a message that made a deep impression and set a goal to be kept in view in these changing times. A brief quotation will show its main theme: "This should be a great time for the Church of Jesus Christ. Other organizations may fear change and may plead for the status quo; the Church never can if it is true to its best. No institution should feel the thrill of a period of change as should the Church. Its golden age is in the morrow. It was taught by its Founder to abound in hope, continuously to struggle, believing that a better goal can be attained. A great block of Christians in any society ought to exert a terrific tension within that society, pulling it away from things as they are and in the direction of things as they ought to be. If that result is not achieved, it is pathetic; if it is attained, it is normal." He urged that the united churches should seize upon the plastic and changing situation in our civilization and swing it toward the purpose and the will of God. "The forces that are wrecking American civilization are not respecters of denominations. There is no method that will work to conquer them that should not be used by all."

The principle and ideal contained in this picture of the work and need of the church in this plastic and perilous time will be admitted all around, but the difficulty and the point of differences in our churches will be the concrete goals and methods of its application. Just what should the church do and how should it set about doing this thing that "will swing it toward the purpose and the will of God?" The difficulty starts with this ultimate goal, for who can tell us so that we shall all agree as to what is "the purpose and the will of God?" The danger that has always beset and divided the church is in determining and deciding this very point. The Roman Catholics say that the Pope will tell us this, and Protestantism has any number of popes that will kindly offer us the same service.

This difficulty, however, is not fatal but is one that attends human endeavor in all fields. Just now are we not perplexed and almost paralyzed with any number of discordant "plans" for leading us out of the depression? The church has far more harmony and unity in its field than has politics or sociology or psychology. The main thing for us as Christians is to unite and concentrate on the central objective of the church and not be drawn off and our forces divided and dissipated on side issues.

Dr. Beavens refers to the Founder of our faith and we look into the gospels to see what he was doing. He kept largely aloof from political and sociological affairs that were surging around him like a boiling sea and fixed his attention and teaching on the inner life of man more than upon his circumstances. The Sermon on the Mount was his platform and plan for his kingdom and the opening beatitudes embodied its essential elements. Over and over again He taught that His Kingdom was not of this world and was not meat and drink, work and wages, but is within us as a state of mind and heart.

The church should concentrate upon this spiritual goal and teaching and preach the gospel of repentance and obedience and righteousness and peace. As we read the topics of the sermons announced in our churches and the volumes of sermons issuing from the press and read the deliverances of many church assemblies we cannot but wonder whether the church is not drifting off from its main message and mission into subordinate fields where it does not speak with authority and where its voice is lost in a confusion of words. In its own field the church has a great opportunity to propagate and emphasize the fundamental spiritual principles that underlie and promote all human welfare.

Morals of the Movies.

From "The Living Church", January 19, 1935.

Walter Lippmann, that keen observer of the contemporary world, has hit the nail on the head in a recent article on the movies in his syndicated column, Today and Tomorrow. He points out that censorship, whether that of law or of public opinion, inevitably tends to concern itself with the minutiae of mechanical rules, and by its very nature is powerless in the indefinable but highly important realm of taste. "I would rest reform of the movies," he says, "on this basic principle: that audiences shall have a greater freedom to choose their pictures and that artists and producers shall have greater freedom to make pictures." Under the present system, with a few large producers controlling the industry and enforcing their dicta through the pernicious methods of block-booking and blind-sellings no such freedom of choice is possible. The Legion of Decency has already accomplished a good deal by making the public conscious of the menace of the movies, and by enforcing with some semblance of success a minimum standard of decency. If it is to consolidate these gains and make further progress, it must cut deeper and attack the very foundation of the present monopolistic status of the industry. It is another chapter in the old struggle between the overpowerful corporation and the long-suffering public.

THE THOUSANDFOLD PAGE

ARCHDEACON FREDERICK W. NEVE. D. D.

The Children of Light

An Interpretation.

I do believe Christ can bestow
Upon this earth a sunlit glow,
Which will make life a glorious thing,
And every child of God a king.

There is every reason to believe that if Christ, as the Light of the World, were allowed to fill it with His Light, the world would be a very much better and happier place than it is now. For Christ came into the world to manifest the Love of God, and the Love of God is the sunshine of the soul. If that sunshine were always present with us in such a way as to make us constantly conscious of its presence, our lives would be lifted to a much higher plane, and we should be far happier than we are now.

The Love of God Ever Present.

This should certainly be the case, for the light of God's Love is always shining, whether we are conscious of it or not. We know, for instance, that no matter how gloomy the day may be, the sun is still shining above the clouds, and that if we were above them there would be nothing to prevent us from seeing the sun and rejoicing in its light. And so it is with the Love of God as revealed to us in Jesus Christ. "Jesus Christ, the same yesterday and today and forever," is the eternal manifestation to us of the divine love, though clouds of doubt or despondency may hide the light of His Presence from us. We know that this is not due to the withdrawal of His Presence, but that we have allowed something to come in between Him and us, leaving us in the shadows and not in the light.

Why should we dwell 'midst clouds of fear
When glorious sunlight is so near;
Or in the gloom of doubt be found,
When love encircles us around?

Why indeed? The clouds which hide the rays of the sun from us are due to circumstances over which we have no control. Even though the Weather Bureau can predict for us what the weather is going to be, there is no power even there to prevent the clouds from forming, or to drive them away, so that we can see the sun. The clouds, however, which hide from us the Heavenly Light are of our own creation, and we are responsible for the fact that the glory of the divine love is obscured and no longer shines into our hearts. We may say that these clouds of doubt and despondency are, after all, due to circumstances which we have done nothing to bring about. But nevertheless we are responsible for allowing these circumstances to disturb and weaken our confidence in God, and our assurance of His constant love for us, no matter what our circumstances may be. The consciousness that love encircles us around should serve as a shield of faith, which should protect us from the doubts and discouragements which assail us.

Let us put on our armor bright,
And shine as children of the light;
The shadows soon will fade away,
As at the coming of the day.

If we refuse to allow our faith in Gods love to be dimmed and obscured, it serves as a shield to protect us from doubt and discouragement, and at the same time it will shine out and reflect the light of the divine Presence, and thus bear witness to the world that our religion is a reality which cannot be weakened by any discouragement which we may have to meet with.

For Christ has bidden us to shine,
And thus reveal His love divine,
That all the world may come to see
What life on earth can really be.

In this verse we come back to what was stated at the beginning. There is every assurance that Christ has the power to enable us to walk in the light of His Presence, which means in the consciousness of the Love of God as a perpetual experience. This being so, it is our duty as well as our wonderful privilege, to make manifest to the world what life can really be when lived in His Presence.

A Place in the Sun.

What the world needs more than anything else at the present time is more of the Heavenly Light of the Love of God, as reflected from the lives of Christ's followers. As Christ manifested it so may they, though of course in a lesser degree. So far as this spiritual sunshine is concerned, we are living now rather in the twilight than in the full light of day. What Christians have the power to give to the world is such a measure of the spiritual sunlight as will make this earth a very different place from what it is now. Life may be made a glorious thing, and Christians are the ones who must lead the way to this happier and more blessed experience. If they could manifest it to the world, there is no question but that the world will want to share it, just as the world turned to Christianity when it saw in it the possibility of a higher and more joyous and blessed life than its own.

THE OMNIPRESENCE OF LOVE.

If God is Love, then love is everywhere,
And sheds the glow of dawn on black despair,
Turning the night of gloom to daylight fair.

If God is Love, then love doth ever wait
Upon man's need; it is fair Eden's gate
Through which he flees and finds a happier state.

If God is Love, then sins that bar the way
To His own presence, soon must pass away
When man doth humbly turn to God and pray.

If God is Love, then love doth seek to share
The sorrow and the burden of man's care,
For Christ the King of Love, the cross did bear.

If God is Love, then death itself must be
Not foe, but kindly friend to set us free,
That man the blessedness of God may see.

Frederick W. Neve.

Two Hundredth Anniversary of St. Thomas' Church

Bath, North Carolina.

Historical Address Delivered September 20, 1934.

By the Rev. George MacLaren Brydon, D. D.

I feel very keenly a sense of privilege in speaking today on the two hundredth anniversary of this old building. Standing as it does removed from the throbbing centers of the life of today, small and severely plain as contrasted with the architecturally beautiful and elaborately furnished church buildings of modern erection, it shines with a spiritual beauty and glory which make it sacred and a thing apart. It is not merely a relic of by-gone days. In its aged and weathered appearance after the storms of two hundred years, in its grass covered church yard, where lie the bodies of men and women who lived and labored, who fought and died to establish and develop the abounding life which we have inherited; in the memories of the stirring events of war and calmer days of peace which became vocal through all the silences of its aged walls; it speaks in commanding voice of the things that are eternal—of the faith in which our forefathers lived, and which has been the lantern to our feet, the soul of the developing and growing civilization of our American people. One can indeed look back beyond the day when the foundations of this building were newly laid, back to the establishment of the parish, back to the first church at Jamestown, back to the little church building erected of logs on Roanoke Island, in which the first American-born English child was brought to its baptism into the Christian faith, and realize that they are all evidences of one great fundamental and abiding fact—the establishment in the life of the American branch of the English-speaking people of the Mother Church of the Anglo-Saxon race. St. Thomas' Church does not stand alone in bearing witness to that fact. Through the Tidewater Counties of all our Southern States from Maryland to Georgia stand the occasional church buildings of the colonial era and the many, many sites where stood the churches of the earlier days which served their generations and crumbled to their fall, all of them speaking to the passing generations of the Church which brought the Christian religion along with the first English settlers, the Church as it had been developed under the genious of the English race. We can with truth speak of it as the Mother Church of all the Southern Colonies. It was here in our American life from the beginning, in days when all the settlers acknowledged allegiance and looked to it for spiritual guidance and strength and learned from its formularies the eternal principles of justice and righteousness and truth. In the passing of the years, wave after wave of spiritual emigration have carried many of her children out from under her ministrations to form the newer and frequently more populous denominations and sects of our modern life. And while we can truly thank God for the work they have done in preaching the Christian faith and extending the Master's Kingdom among men, in helping to form the Christian character and ideals of our people, in holding up the Christ in fields in which it has not been permitted to us to labor; can we not look upon them as fellow-laborers today in one common field, sharing in one common task of bringing men to God? The task first given to the Mother Church alone—call it the Church of England—of the Colonial period, the Episcopal Church of our independent national existence, has been divided now among many workers: but the Mother Church still stands in our life with its renewed and growing strength, with its memories of past vicissitudes, failures, weaknesses, successes, with its old, old churches as evidences of its continuing existence, with its ages-old forms of prayer and praise, the expression of nineteen hundred years of Christian faith. The Old Church still has its work to do, and a constantly growing field in our own generation. It still has its contribution, and an essentially important one to make to the advancing Christian civilization. With its roots in all the racial Christian past it can, nay it must, look forward with faith and earnest prayer to ever greater and widening fields of usefulness and ministration to all people in the days to come.

It could not but happen in the case of two great adjoining sister states as Virginia and North Carolina formed of the same stock that there should be in the passing of the years many and varied lines of inter-relationship and mutual influence and reaction. It is interesting to note the number of these cases in the colonial period as indeed in later times to our own day where ministers of the Church spent part of their lives in the one Colony and part in the other. Such a one was John Garzia, the first minister who served in this old building. He came to Virginia in 1724, and became the minister of Elizabeth City Parish, Norfolk County. After serving in Virginia for ten years he came to this Parish of St. Thomas in 1734 and remained for ten years, serving for five years as incumbent of the parish and for the remaining five, adding the duties of an itinerant missionary of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel. We know so little of his record. You have his chalice that he gave to this church, one of your most precious relics. We know that he died in 1744, as the result of a fall from his horse while visiting the sick. And that is all we know. He was of foreign birth and upbringing; his name would indicate that he was a Spaniard. The Rev. George Whitefield, writing to the Bishop of Oxford in 1741, after visiting churches in North Carolina, said: "Mr. Garzia can scarce speak English." We may think of him, therefore, as laboring during his twenty years' ministry in America under the handicap of a language which did not come easily to his tongue. He was not the only minister who suffered from that handicap. The Rev. Lewis Latane, the Huguenot priest of Essex County, graduate of Oxford though he was, suffered during a long and faithful ministry from the inability to speak English with fluency. And doubtless other Huguenot clergy who came to the charge of parishes in America had the same difficulty. There was in the ministry in Virginia another Spaniard, Anthony Gavin, a former Jesuit priest and noted for his missionary labors in the mountains of Virginia, who came about the time that John Garzia went to North Carolina. Perhaps John Garzia, also, like Anthony Gavin, had been in the priesthood of the Roman Catholic Church and had been converted to the Protestant faith. In spite, however, of their difficulty in using the English language our Church owes a debt of gratitude for the faithful labors of the foreigners who came into its ministry.

It is a noteworthy fact, and one from which we have suffered for many years, that the real history of the colonial period of our Church in the Southern States has never been written. My experience of over twenty years' work in searching out facts from original documents bearing on the record of the Colonial Church in Virginia has shown how sadly our history has been misstated and how utterly at variance with the facts revealed by countless documents are the generally held opinions of conditions in the Colonial Church. The belief, for instance, generally accepted for the past hundred years that the vast majority of the clergy of the Church of England who came to Virginia and other Southern Colonies in which the Church was established were men of unworthy and sinful lives, and that vital religion was dead wherever the Established Church was predominant; whereas we have today abundant records to show how strong the Church was in the affections of the people, how widespread was its work and how comparatively few were the actually unworthy ministers. Because most of the clergy in parishes in the Northern Colonies were Tories during the American Revolution, it is commonly held that the clergy in the Southern Colonies were Tories also. A prominent writer on American history in a lecture delivered a few years ago stated boldly that "most of the clergy of the Church of England in the Northern Colonies were Tories, and while some of the clergy in the Southern Colonies sided with the American Cause, their characters were such and they were held in such low estimation that nobody cared especially which way they sided." (I quote from memory.) The actual facts as to Virginia, as shown by actual record, are that considerably over 80 per cent of the clergy in the new Commonwealth were loyal to the American Cause, and they were held in such high estimation and their influence and services were considered of so great value that in twenty of the sixty counties in the state the rector of a parish or some other minister living in the county was elected by the people a member of the County Committee of Safety. I wonder if what was true of Virginia was not true also in greater or less degree of the other Southern Colonies in which the Church was established.

These misconceptions have attained such widespread belief in part at least because of the partisan statements of historians of other religious bodies which have entered into the life of our Southern States. But in far greater measure they are due to the fact that our first Church historians, living in a period when our people were uninterested in the preservation or study of historical records, had comparatively few historical documents and records available from which to draw their inferences and conclusions as compared with the far greater amount which has been brought to light since their day. Bishop Meade did invaluable service in publishing data from the records which were available. And his earlier confrere, the Rev. Francis L. Hawks, did a service for which the whole Church should always be profoundly grateful in publishing histories of so many of our dioceses of Colonial origin. But beyond bare statements of facts drawn from the records available to these writers, all their deductions and inferences, the pictures which they drew of conditions could be formed only from the documents made available to them and to the traditions handed down from father to son which came to their ears. As far as Virginia is concerned, we now have available a very far greater mass of documentary record than what he could make use of and consequently can draw from these original sources a picture infinitely more creditable to the Colonial Church than the one that he and Dr. Hawks drew. I cannot but think that early documents and records brought to light in the past seventy-five years in the Carolinas and Georgia will, when carefully studied and digested by competent students, show the Colonial Church in fairer light and reveal a far worthier record than what is usually believed of it today.

We cannot rest content that this stigma of unworthiness and moral failure should rest forever upon the Colonial history of the Church in our Southern States. Every diocese in these states owes it to the reputation and honor of our Mother Church to raise up sons qualified as students to give the time to searching out all possible records in order that eventually her true history may be written.

The turning point in the life of the Church in America was the organization in 1701 of the first and greatest missionary society of the Anglican Church, the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts, commonly known as the S. P. G. Prior to that date, or rather from 1624, when the London Company was dissolved, until 1701, there was no organization in England interested in selecting and sending to America the best equipped ministers. No one in authority in England with whom a minister facing the problems of a missionary field, might correspond as of right. The England which is today the wisest and ablest administrator of Colonial dependencies among the nations, was then engaged in developing her first colonies and was making the mistakes both in civil and ecclesiastical administration which eventually lost to her her first thirteen colonies—and by which she learned a better way. The whole development of the Church was at first of the most haphazard kind. It was established by law in Virginia and parishes were formed by civil authority, but there was no directing hand in ecclesiastical affairs. There was usually a lack of ministers, because no individual or group in England had authority to select the best type of ministers or to arouse an interest in Church affairs in the colonies. The Church grew in Virginia, because the legislature established new parishes as population increased, but then left it to the individual parishes to secure ministers as best they could. One can easily understand that misfit ministers sometimes came to the colonies alongside of others of worthier character. And with equal clearness it can be perceived that the Vestries found it necessary to protect their parishes from unworthy ministers by refusing to induct but simply employing their parsons from year to year. Little by little the idea prevailed that parishes in America were under the ecclesiastical jurisdiction of the Bishop of London, but it was not until about 1685 that the Bishop of London appointed any one with powers of a commissary to look after Church affairs and attempt to administer ecclesiastical discipline in any colony in America. With the appointment of Commissaries, slender as their actual authority was at best, with the establishment of William and Mary College in 1693 for the education of ministers, and the organization of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in 1701, Church matters in America began to show great and continued improvement and parishes began to be established in practically every American Colony.

The S. P. G. never took any part in the support of parishes in Virginia, because there the Church was strongly established, but with the exception of that colony it has been the nursing mother of the Church throughout the rest of the colonies, and to her the Church in the United States owes the strength which enabled it to organize as a National Church after the Revolution.

(To be continued.)

* * *

SOLI DEO GLORIA.

There is no love so great, so pure,
As that which made my Lord endure
The agony of pain and grief
To give my cursed soul relief,
That made Him shoulder all the blame
Of my transgression, guilt and shame.
He—sinless—suffered in my stead
To raise again my humbled head.
To Him—whom angel hosts adore—
Be praise and glory—evermore.

—The Banner.

The Church And The New Leisure

By the Rev. Harry Watts, Chairman Social Service, Diocese of Colorado.

A paper read at the Episcopal Social Work Conference.

The easiest course would be to take a thoroughly pessimistic line. It would be easy to show that in the average city parish, while one-half of its people are suffering not only physical needs, but also the slow demoralization resulting from the unwanted leisure of what one writer calls "the spiritual prison of unemployment," the other half has probably only the vaguest idea of what is meant by "the new leisure." It would be easy to generalize on the Church's social conservatism, and her deadly fear of disturbing the status quo. It would be easy to assume that the Church is not using one-tenth of her resources, whether in man-power or in bricks and mortar, in the endeavor to meet this staggering problem of which we have been so suddenly made aware. In fact, when I wrote to some thirty or forty of the Diocesan Departments of Social Service in the endeavor to secure some helpful data for this paper, in a large majority of cases the replies which I received sounded just such a negative note. And yet, I think such a pessimism would be unwarranted and unfair, at least in part; for, when one considers the enormous size as well as the great complexity of the whole problem, when one sees how even the experts are pretty generally completely bewildered by it, one takes courage in the conviction that usually it is Church people who are most keenly aware of it, and who are in the front ranks of those who are trying to find a solution (si sic omnia!)

For, to say that the problem is difficult and complex is the most common of commonplaces. Consider briefly some of its aspects: In the first place, this "new leisure" is not really "new", after all. We have always had a certain percentage of the population—people who, as the result of unemployment, etc., had more leisure than they knew what to do with. It is merely that in the last hundred years or so this percentage has steadily increased, while in the last five years it has assumed such proportions that it could no longer possibly be ignored. Perhaps we in Colorado have been conscious of this fact a little longer than most other communities, because for twenty-five or thirty years our population has included a considerable number of health-seekers, unable to work, or able to work only part time, and we have had to discover methods of preventing or arresting the demoralization consequent on such enforced leisure. (In parenthesis, let me add that groups of our Church people have been working in this field for many years, and in some cases have rendered really distinctive service.)

Again, we shall no doubt agree that the "new leisure" is a menace to the more privileged classes, equally with those who are less privileged. It would be pleasant to believe that good homes and cultural surroundings would solve the problem. Actually, almost any priest of experience will tell you that children of good homes are the very ones who most of the time are to be found elsewhere—if they are to be found at all! He will also admit, I am sure, that very frequently the behavior problems in his Sunday School and other youth organizations are concerned more with those children who enjoy what are called "advantages" than with the very poor, and that in all probability a far greater number of the children of our "best families" would find themselves in the Juvenile Court, were it not for the social or political influence of parents and friends. What it amounts to is simply that they are able to virtually buy those types of demoralizing amusement which land their less fortunate neighbors in the Juvenile Court.

Third, as Maude Royden points out in a recent article, the problem of enforced leisure concerns two entirely different types of worker. She divides them roughly into "mechanics" and "artists", those whose normal work is mechanical or repetitive, and those for whom it is creative. For the former class, the problem is being constantly aggravated because, as Professor Jacks pointed out two years ago in the "Survey", "mechanization has reduced the area in which skill and creativeness are possible, while increasing leisure time." Obviously, then, the problem is entirely different for these two classes, since the one has an infinitely greater wealth of interior resource on which to draw in leisure hours than has the other. Thus, it is significant to read, for instance, in the "Forum" for May, from the pen of an artist, that the Public Works of Art Project financed by the CWA is not only giving employment to some 2,500 unemployed artists, but is also improving immensely the quality of the art which is being produced in America. Further, any well-rounded plan for meeting the "new leisure" must take into account, of course, the various age groups concerned—that, for instance, the problems and methods of adolescent education (if education is the real object of leisure-time activities) are quite different from those of adult education.

Fourth, the Church has to squarely and honestly face the fact that in the case of millions of people today any talk of the creative use of leisure is quite futile, even if it does not smack of hypocrisy, until their plain subsistence needs have been adequately met; in other words, the emotional security provided by properly-used leisure and recreation must go hand in hand with economic security.

Fifth, since it is only very recently that most people have been made acutely aware of the tremendous scope of the problem, as yet comparatively little has been done towards the development of an adequate and recognized technique for dealing with it.

Sixth, there is all the uncertainty as to the future extent of leisure, whether or not hours of labor will constantly shrink, whether we are to plan for a long period of widespread unemployment, or whether another boom is on the way to mitigate the secondary evil of enforced leisure.

Finally, where and how can the Church best utilize its resources? It seems probable that if those of her benefactors who lived fifty or one hundred years ago were living today, their benefactions would more frequently be for the building, equipping and staffing of fine parish houses, community centers, etc., rather than for hospitals and sanataria. And yet, who would venture to assert that twenty-five or fifty years hence, those same parish houses and community centers will not be obsolete from the standpoint of the most vital community needs and the Church's endeavor to meet them. As it is, I imagine that all over the country we are faced with the problem of parishes possessing more or less adequate parish houses, many of which are not paid for, and certainly most of which cannot possibly be operated on a full-time scale, simply because of lack of funds. In many cases, such parishes have actually had to restrict the uses of their parish houses, in order to keep the bricks and mortar paid for and to bring the operating cost within the limits of a straitened budget. As the Chairman of the British National Council of Social Service said, "Finding things to do costs money."

I mention these factors in the problem of the new leisure not because they are not quite familiar, not to discourage or confuse, but merely to point out how complex a problem it is, and how large a job the Church faces if she really wishes to undertake it.

(b) What is the Church Doing?

Anything like a complete appraisal is impossible, because I for one cannot possibly know all the leisure-time projects in which the Church is engaged all over the country. Further, I take it that the purpose of this paper is not the presentation of a statistical report. However, certain general facts seem pertinent.

Rather generally, as emphasized by the National Department in its pamphlet issued this year for Social Service Sunday, efforts are being made to utilize more intelligently parish house facilities, etc., for clubs, classes, entertainments, etc. Where these facilities are sufficiently extensive, they are being used virtually as community centers. This is true notably in some of the stronger dioceses, e. g., New York, Philadelphia, etc. In many cases, our own neighborhood and settlement houses are caring for many more people than formerly. Most parishes are making more or less systematic efforts to provide useful, if only occasional, employment for as many people as possible. Greater efforts are being made to increase the scope and effectiveness of summer camps and conferences. Almost every congregation, of course, furnishes board members and volunteer workers for the various agencies and institutions in the community which are engaged in the promotion of leisure-time activities. Most important of all, however, one has the impression that the Church is really becoming wide awake to the extent and seriousness of the need, and to her own responsibility in meeting it. At least, there are many church people in every community who are unwilling to throw up their hands and say the job is too big and there is nothing the Church can do about it.

(c) The remainder of my paper has to do with some simple and perhaps obvious suggestions regarding the Church's place and opportunity in meeting the problem of the New Leisure:

1. It needs to be emphasized again that in this as in other fields of social service, the Church's greatest opportunity, as indeed her primary function, is a spiritual one. When all is said and done, her contribution to the making of Christian character by the worship of God is her own peculiar job, and ultimately will do more to solve the problems of society than anything else. To be specific, the resources, as well as the discipline and restraints, of Christian character, must surely be the best possible weapon with which the individual can meet the dangers of his leisure time, whether enforced or not. Not only so will he be inhibited from harmful and demoralizing pursuits, but he will almost certainly find his capacity for what is wholesome and creative far greater than that of the non-Christian.

Here, for instance, is a widower in his forties with several children. Increasing periods of unemployment since his wife's death have made him rather desperate and intolerably bored. What has he to restrain him from, or offer him any alternative to, companionships which are inevitably going to ruin him and his family, except the intellectual and spiritual resources of his faith? When in the first or second century, a Roman slave was brought by baptism into the fold of the Church, what was it that compensated him for the unrelieved monotony, drabness, and often demoralizing character of his daily occupation (for we know that work itself can be just as demoralizing as its lack!) Surely, it was the wealth of resource which he found within the Body of Christ.

Again, the Church's first concern, as well as her greatest pride, has always been the sanctity and integrity of the Christian family and home.

While what I said awhile ago about the failure of many homes today to meet the problem of leisure is perfectly true, yet surely that is because there is something fundamentally pagan or un-Christian in the attitudes and conduct of the individuals composing them. Can the Church then do anything more valuable in the cause of the constructive use of leisure than to increase her vigilance over the homes of her people, and her solicitude in the maintenance of the highest Christian ideals in family life? May it not be, indeed, that in many cases we need to concentrate on methods of keeping people at home, if they be Christian homes, rather than to multiply organizations for taking them elsewhere? I repeat, then, that the Church's first and greatest opportunity has to do with the creation and enrichment of Christian character, and I feel rather sure that her chance of success in what seem to be more tangible and concrete projects will rest ultimately upon her fidelity in this fundamental responsibility.

2. The Church's opportunity in the use of the Parish House. Granted that the traditional uses, while having many merits, are quite inadequate in the face of the enormously increased need for leisure-time activties that are creative and recreative, how shall we proceed?

Until very recently most of us have been content to use our parish-house facilities, rather sparingly, for the working out of leisure-time programs which were usually imposed from above on certain comparatively small and exclusive groups of people. Usually, again, these groups have been composed largely of Church people, with perhaps a minority of others who were well-disposed to the Church. Again, whether consciously or not, we have been inclined to exploit the opportunity thus offered, for the specific benefit of the Church and our parish records. Consequently, it is not surprising that the mass of people in the neighborhood have not flocked to our doors and that, as some of us are being made rather acutely aware, the Church is pretty generally suspected by them of having ulterior motives behind her philanthropy. I think we need to study rather carefully the results of recent questionnaires on such subjects as "How do people themselves prefer to spend their leisure?" It is surely rather significant that in the case of one such questionnaire not one person mentioned religion! I am convinced, after talking with unemployed people, social workers, etc., that if our parish-houses are to justify their existence in the eyes of the community, as well as the enormous expense of their maintenance, this whole method must be changed. I realize that in what I am about to suggest I am very apt to be misunderstood, and that I may seem to be contradicting what I have just said about the primary function of the Church being a spiritual one—the same sort of contradiction that many of us objected to so strongly in "Re-Thinking Missions". But it does seem to me that if we are to make any sort of contribution to the needs of the (perhaps) unchurched masses in the community through the medium of the parish-house on anything like a large scale, we shall have to make a quite sharp distinction between the function of the Church, qua Church, and the function of the parish-house. What I mean is that the Church building should represent, altogether, our worship, our convictions, and our witness to the Christian Faith, while the parish-house should represent, primarily, our free contribution to the social needs of the community, with no strings attached, and without any attempt or desire to exploit the misfortunes of those who come within its doors. I would have the parish-house, then, where it is humanly possible, open throughout the week as a recreational, educational and occupational center for voluntary groups of all ages—very much as the public school buildings are frequently used.

I am rather well acquainted with one church where this experiment has been tried with remarkable success, so remarkable, in fact, that within the last year it has been subsidized by Government funds as being indispensable. It happens to be a Methodist church, it is true, but the relation of the church building to the parish-house (or community buildings, or whatever you prefer to call them) is exactly what I have outlined. This community center is open to any group that cares to use it, and the only conditions are that its activities shall be constructive and cooperative, and properly supervised. The great variety of groups which are included is simply amazaing—clubs and classes in the arts and crafts, labor organizations, self-help groups, etc. In fact, it is really a community center. I have known personally of many instances of individuals being literally salvaged from a wrecked morale by its ministrations. For instance, just the other day I met in its office a man with every outward sign of self-respect and happiness. His story is characteristic: Two years ago he and his family were on the verge of starvation, and he himself was desperate, sullen and morose. By means of one of the self-help groups at Grace Community Center he learned a trade, and during these two years he has not only been able to keep his family off the rolls of public charity, but has also found himself and his happiness in a creative and congenial occupation.

And, as a matter of fact, when our Young People's organization in Denver, about a year ago, wished to volunteer for service of this character, I encouraged them to cooperate in this particular piece of work, rather to initiate a program of their own. As a result, a number of them have been giving a regular amount of time each week as leaders in clubs and game rooms, and as teachers in various classes, and the young woman who is in charge of our particular section of the whole enterprise has been placed on salary as a full-time worker.

All this, as you are well aware, is in line with the type of thing that is being attempted in the more-up-to-date community centers—those which operate, with certain modifications, of course, on the same pedagogic principle as the progressive school. This principle of substituting creative work for regimented activities and pre-digested amusements emphasized for many years by L. P. Jacks, is even more valid and I think can, therefore, be used with even greater freedom, in the case of adults than with children. Therefore, it ought to have a significant bearing on the use of the parish-house for purposes of adult education. And so, a very thoughtful article in the British "Contemporary Review" about a year ago makes the bald statement that "mere recreation and club rooms are almost worse than nothing"—and the writer goes on to point out that most people, after all, find their greatest satisfaction in their "unpaid work". Some of you may remember the tremendously significant words of Dr. Cutten in "The Threat of Leisure"—"the proper use of leisure has created every civilization which has ever existed; its improper use has killed each one in turn." Cannot the Church make her contribution, in a practical way, to the solution of the problem of the new leisure by such a use of her parish-houses and the leadership and volunteer service of her people? I repeat, I realize there are great difficulties. I realize that in organizing and aiding such voluntary groups and in initiating such a program of leisure time activities, we shall need all the wisdom and patience and tact and delicacy in the world. I realize that we shall have to face the discouragement and disillusionment which inevitably come when the first flush of enthusiasm is over, and when particular projects fail completely. I realize that many parishes having fine parish-houses are in localities where there seems to be no need for the kind of thing I have been speaking of. Above all, I realize that in most parishes we shall find ourselves face to face with the double problem (a) what Carlyle calls the most ignoble vice of mankind—inertia, if not active opposition, and (b) the difficulty of financing the plan. And yet, in regard to the latter, I believe we shall find many laymen sympathetic with the inclusion of an appropriation for such work in the parish budget. And after all, if the Church has made Social Service a part of the Church's Mission, then the social needs of the neighborhood have a claim on the alms and interests of our people, equal with that of all the other types of service represented in that Mission. Or is my reasoning heretical? Be it noted that I say "equal with" and not "superior to".

Quite deliberately, I have devoted much of this paper to the use of the parish-house, since that seemed to be what the Department (very rightly) wishes to emphasize. I must therefore state my remaining suggestions as briefly as possible:

3. I imagine that in most cities, with a large share of material relief now being administered by the Federal Government, the Community Chest is going to find it necessary to shift the emphasis more and more to character-building and leisure-time agencies. Here again, then, it seems to me that the Church has an opportunity to lead the way in the necessary job of interpreting the functions of the Chest and of helping to clear away the misunderstanding and prejudices which so commonly exist regarding those functions, of seeing to it that such character-building and leisure-time agencies are what they ought to be, and of giving them every possible cooperation. A recent article in "Recreation" states that, especially for the sixteen-twenty-one year old group, the facilities for wholesome recreation are all too limited, and generally all too meagerly equipped and staffed. What the Church may not be able to do directly, she can at least facilitate other agencies in doing.

4. I am sure it will help all of us greatly if every Diocese will undertake such a survey of parish-house facilities and their uses, and of what is actually being done already, as the Diocese of Southern Ohio and one or two others have already undertaken. I am sorry to say that this is one of the many things we have not yet done in Colorado, but I intend that it shall be done as soon as possible, so that we may have some sort of realistic picture of our needs, our accomplishments and our opportunities.

5. In conclusion, I venture to suggest that we badly need to seek the cooperation of the Department of Religious Education, particularly in the matter of revising and enlarging our understanding of the meaning and the full scope of Adult Education, along such lines as I have already indicated; and in making available for parishes practical suggestions which will help them in initiating progress for leisure-time activities that will be really constructive and creative.

* * *

EPIPHANY.

Lo, the star that led the way,
To the place where Christ was born,
Ushered in the eternal day—
Heralded the endless morn!
Morning star of gospel light
Of the day that knows no night!

Then appeared the beauteous dawn,
Dawn of faith for nations far;
Kneeling near the infant form
They who saw the wondrous star—
Lo, they greet the eternal light
Which doth break upon their sight!

Now, throughout the wakening years,
Hear the world's great morning song!
Lo, the Christ, the Sun appears—
In His light the nations throng!
Far and wide his spreading rays
Wake their great and endless praise!

A. C.

BOOK REVIEWS

REV. STAMO S. SPATHEY, Editor.

NOTES ON MENTAL PRAYER: By F. P. Harton. Paper. Pp. 12. Published by The Macmillan Company, New York. Price, 15 cents.

This is not a pamphlet of ordinary caliber. Its size is not an index to its value. The author has a message. The fact that it has been thought worthy to reprint this from the well-known English publication, "Theology" is sufficient to command attention.

Was there ever a time when prayer has become a so-essential factor in life as now? On all hands, sincere people are asking, What next? Who can solve the perplexing problems pressing upon us? Where can rest be found? The author undesignedly, answers these pressing questions.

Prayer, not that ejaculatory petition which comes from the recognition of some imminent danger; not the perpetual saying of prayers; but the cultivation of the prayer-life is the aim of the writer. The directions are simple, the experience familiar with all who would "Walk with God to pray." Many well-seasoned Christians will respond to the suggestion that attitudes and special places, though helpful, are not necessary. But that prayer should be the sense of God as always near, to respond, to inspire, to guide, to comfort, to bless.

Kenneth Mackenzie.

REUNION: By the Rt. Rev. Frank E. Wilson, D. D. Paper. Pp. 14. Published by The Morehouse Publishing Company, Milwaukee, Wis. Price, 10 cents.

This is a reprint from The Living Church of April 14, 1934. If there could be in so small compass a solution of the perplexing problem of Church unity, we might expect a learned bishop of the Church to set it forth in this message. But Dr. Wilson is not expecting to do that. His treatise is a suggestion for thinking minds to settle. "Our unhappy divisions" are a distress to us who love our brethren of the other communions. The author thinks we should not be satisfied with unity, but look and work for uniformity. The Quadralateral of Lambeth half a century ago is treated in brief; and conclusions drawn therefrom which appear in a possibly new light.

Kenneth Mackenzie.

EPISCOPAL BISHOPS IN INDIANA. A Churchwoman's Retrospect: By Sarah S. Pratt. Art Paper. Pp. 83. Published by The Pratt Poster Company, Indianapolis, Indiana.

All who would have a treasurable memento of the Bishopric of the Diocese of Indiana will do well to apply for this treatise. It is informative, educational and inspirational.

Kenneth Mackenzie.

PELOUBET'S SELECT NOTES: By Wilbur M. Smith, D. D. 1935. Published by The W. A. Wilde Company, Boston, Massachusetts. Price, $2.

A beautifully bound volume, with colorful illustrations creates an interest in this book that increases after careful examination of its contents.

Especially useful to Sunday-school teachers and religious instructors, it can also be used to study and acquire a better knowledge of the Bible. Lessons are outlined and illustrated with pictures and maps to follow the course. The book is divided into four, three months' courses, namely, "Life and Letters of Peter." This teaches the life of Peter and his experiences in following Christ, bringing in history of that period. "Some Great Christian Teachings" is a course that proves the truth of God, the Divinity of Christ, and the beginning of sin and the way to overcome it. This is an important course to most people, as the doubts and conflicting ideas on the truth of the Bible are banished when convinced that there IS a God to whom we can look for comfort and aid, and there IS Christ who suffered for us and whose only compensation was the joy of welcoming those who turn unto Him with trust and hope and love in their hearts. How necessary it is to be sure of the faith which we profess to believe! And the best way to prove our belief in the truth of God and to become more firmly convinced of it, is to teach it to others who are walking in greater darkness than ourselves. To honestly desire to be a Christian is half the battle. To have a deep, whole-hearted yearning to teach others to be Christians is proof that we have progressed and see light ahead for our success and the salvation of man.

"Some Representative Men and Women of the Bible" and "Later Prophets and Leaders of Judah: From Isaiah to Malachi" are the last two courses. These deal mostly with the Old Testament and the reader will find much that can be applied to our present-day problems. God and His truth never change, and man's greatest work is to acquire this beautiful creed of love and usefulness which is the only road to eternal and perfect happiness.

L. L. C.

* * *

News from the Front

Notes of the Fall Season, Christ Church Mission, Anvik, Alaska, Rev. Henry H. Chapman, in Charge.

About the middle of September, Miss Chandler and the children gathered in the vegetables from the mission garden. It took three or four days to harvest them all. At evening prayers on the last day we sang the "Harvest Home" hymn, and said the Collect for Thanksgiving Day. It seemed appropriate to express our gratitude then, rather than wait another two months until Thanksgiving Day.

We had vegetables to give away. We sent a sack of carrots to St. Mark's Mission, Nenana, and a sack of lettuce to the crew of the river steamer. Three neighbors also had boxes of vegetables. The rutabagas were huge. Mr. Chase said that if they had been left in the ground much longer we would have had to use the tractor to turn them over. We have plenty of food for the winter, and only twenty-nine children. Two of the girls are married, and another is with her people in Tanana. One has gone as nurse to the Government hospital at Tanana, and three are in the hospital there as patients. The only large boy of the mission has left, and I do not intend to take any more children in to the mission while the cut in our appropriation is in effect.

We paid a village man fifty dollars a month to haul wood and water, but he shot himself in the hand, and so is not now available for work. Two of the small boys split wood and carry it into the house, and empty the garbage.

We have taken the four boys into our own house. They do their own work, and are no trouble.

Shoes for the children were the most pressing need. Part of a check given to the mission was used to buy mooseskin for the children's moccasins, and part went to apply upon the fuel bill.

The first mail plane is due here on November 4. Sixteen communicants were present at the early service on All Saints' Day. After the service in the chapel, I gave the communion to patients in the sick room.

Last year our branch of the Woman's Auxiliary joined in observing Armistice Day as a day of prayer. This year, some of our girls asked, of their own accord, if they might observe Armistice Day of this year in the same way; so the chapel was open to them all day for this purpose.

The mail plane arrived at noon on the twelfth of November. Air mail service is expected every two weeks, depending for its regularity in arrival, upon favorable flying weather.

* * *

Ward Hall, named for Miss Marian DeC. Ward of Boston, is the new dormitory for students of Boone Library School, Wuchang, China, replacing an old Chinese dwelling which was inconvenient and too small.

* * *

Among the Columbia University Library School students this year is a young Chinese, Mr. V. L. Wong, librarian from the Low Library, St. John's University, Shanghai, studying in New York on a fellowship from the Rockefeller Foundation.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S SERVICE LEAGUE PAGE

The Rev. Randolph F. Blackford.

AN ANNOUNCEMENT.

A "Young People's Service League Program" page will begin in our issue of February 2. These programs, compiled by an able and experienced clergyman, after years of contact with young people, will appear weekly and may be used as source material or suggestive material for Young People's Service League meetings.

It is hoped that they may be of interest to others as well as fill a real need and prove of value to Service Leagues everywhere.

It is suggested that officers of the Leagues make a file of these for reference purposes. They will be on varied topics. Just as an example, it is intended that each month there shall be programs on History, on Social Service topics, on Missions, or Comparative Religions, and what we will call a "'Prize Program" or one selected as "their best" by a successful League. These last will be on a great variety of subjects.

The Editor of the page will be the Rev. Randolph Fairfax Blackford of Leesburg, Florida.

Br. Blackford is a Virginian by birth, being the son of the late Mr. Launcelot Minor Blackford, many years Headmaster of the Episcopal High School at Alexandria, Va., which school he attended. He received his B. A. degree from the University of Virginia, attended the Virginia Theological Seminary, was ordained deacon by Bishop Gibson of Virginia, and priest in 1916 by Bishop Tyler of North Dakota.

Mr. Blackford has had charges in the West, as well as in Charleston, S. C., and St. Peter-by-the-Sea, Navy Yard, North Carolina.

He served with distinction in the Medical Department, A. E. F., a member of the University of Virginia Base Hospital Unit.

All communications may be sent direct to Rev. Randolph F. Blackford, Leesburg, Florida.

THE WOMAN'S AUXILIARY

An Open Letter to the House of Bishops.

The recent Pastoral Letter of the House of Bishops of the Episcopal Church states the attitude of the Bishops pertaining to national and international war, as is set forth in the following quotation. It is with concern and astonishment one reads:

> "It (the Church) refuses to respond to that form of cheap patriotism that has as its slogan: 'In time of peace prepare for war'."

Considering, that after the bitter experience of the Revolution, this was the solemn advice of Washington to his countrymen, the words "cheap patriotism" have a shocking sound in connection with our most outstanding hero.

As a General, a Statesman and an Episcopalian, there was nothing "cheap" about Washington. Nor was "cheapness" a characteristic of the other Christian patriots who pledged to their country their lives, their fortunes and their sacred honor.

Such a pronouncement by the House of Bishops is deeply resented by many of the laity, and it serves to weaken their allegiance to the Church, for they are proud to remember that Washington was a prominent Episcopalian and they revere and cherish the memory of this wise and gallant Christian soldier.

We are told that if we would seek to understand nations, peaceful solutions could be made. Experience has taught us that the more we understand some people and some nations the less confidence we feel we can place in either.

History has shown that the security and stability of treaties are not convincing, moreover, nations have also been known to ignore or evade most sacred obligations, of which the war debts are a recent and glaring example. Nor, in order to see that the nations play fair, do we wish to be forced to furnish soldiers to help police the world. History further teaches that unpreparedness does not eliminate war—it invites war.

Can any one say to an enemy: "Our homes mean nothing to us. Come, take us; rule over us; and enslave us?" Or shall we take the advice of Washington to the end that whatever eventuality may come, we shall be prepared? Theodore Roosevelt said:

> "We stand for Peace, but only for the Peace that comes to the just man armed. Peace, like freedom is not a gift that tarries long in the hands of cowards, or of those too feeble or too short-sighted to deserve it, and we ask to be given the means to insure that honorable Peace which is alone worth having."

And the Prince of Peace said:

> "If the good man of the house had known what hour the thief would come, he would have watched, and not suffered his house to broken through. 'Be ye therefore ready'."

Elizabeth Snowden, President.
Mrs. C. E. Nicol, Secretary.
Woman's Auxiliary to the Board of Domestic and Foreign Missions.
Christ Church, Alexandria, Virginia.

Annual Meeting, Diocese of Bethlehem.

The Woman's Auxiliary held its annual meeting in Trinity Church, Carbondale, Pa., on January 15 and 16, the Rev. Clarke Trumbore, rector.

The reports were excellent. Over two thousand dollars more was given for all kinds of work during 1934 than in 1933. All obligations were met and there was a small balance in each account. They generously donated $200 to the Bishop and Council for the N.-W. C. fund.

The Rev. C. Rankin Barnes preached the annual sermon on the theme, "Social Uses of a Parish House," illustrating well what some churches are doing very effectively for the general welfare with their parish houses.

Only two new officers were elected. Mrs. Arthur B. Frick of Bethlehem was elected Vice-President in place of Miss Laura B. Ruddle of E. Mauch Chunk, who had served the Auxiliary for twenty-four years as President, and for the last few years as Vice-President. She felt that she had done her duty as an officer, but she said, "Nothing can drive me out of the Auxiliary." Mrs. E. R. Clarke of Grace Church, Kingston, was re-elected as the United Thank Offering Treasurer.

Book of Remembrance: The question has been asked: "What does it cost to have the name of a member of the Woman's Auxiliary inscribed in the 'Book of Remembrance'?" The answer is: "Absolutely nothing." Every woman member of any branch who has passed to higher service has by virtue of her membership and service here gained the right to have her name written in the book. The full maiden name, and if married, the full name of husband must be sent to Mrs. John Norris Harding, Secretary, 3206 Nineteenth Street, N. W., Washington, D. C.

THIRD SUNDAY AFTER THE EPIPHANY.

This Collect or short prayer is taken from the Sarum Missal, 1549 (Sacramentary Gregory.) The original title of this collect was simply "The Third Sunday"; in 1604 the words "after the Epiphany" were added. The chief variations in this collect from the original were the addition of "in all our dangers and necessities" and "Thy right hand" in place of "The right hand of Thy Majesty." It is interesting to turn to the collect for the Third Sunday in Lent, which is very similar to that for today. In the collect for the Third Sunday in Lent, we find "The right hand of Thy Majesty" is retained. In the opening words of the collect for today we find three of the attributes of the Ruler of the Universe, viz.: Almighty God, Everlasting God, God of Mercy, and we call upon Him because we accept these attributes, believing in His power, in His continual presence and in His mercy (He is a merciful God, full of compassion), and, therefore, we call upon Him to stretch out His right hand to help and defend us, not only in regard to our spiritual dangers, but also to look upon us in mercy when temporal and physical dangers beset us, laying before Him what we think are our necessities day by day. It is of interest to notice the words, "Stretch forth Thy right hand." When we turn to the Old Testament we find that the expression, "God's right hand" is used to express His power. We read that Jesus Christ "sitteth at the right hand of God; we see there that the right hand is not only the place of power, but also of honor; therefore, one of the principal thoughts of this collect is that of defense; in other words, we ask for the Championship of God in the hour of danger and for His assistance in the time of necessity. The entire collect may be summed up as a prayer for sympathy. The word sympathy is taken from a Greek word meaning "to feel with" and so Almighty God not only feels for us, but feels with us, and as only one who has suffered as Jesus Christ suffered can feel with us (tried in all points like as we are), and, therefore, can realize our trials, perplexities and necessities and knowing them we find in Him "a God near at hand and not afar off."

William E. Callender.

CHURCH INTELLIGENCE

BISHOP BARNWELL ELECTED BISHOP-COADJUTOR OF GEORGIA.

The Right Rev. Middleton Stuart Barnwell, Missionary Bishop of Idaho, was unanimously elected Bishop-Coadjutor of the Diocese of Georgia, after an all day session held in St. Paul's Church, Augusta, the Rev. John A. Wright, rector, on January 15.

Bishop Barnwell's election came after the convention becoming hopelessly deadlocked between the Rev. Charles C. J. Carpenter, rector of St. John's Church, Savannah, and the Rev. Dr. Henry D. Phillips, rector of Trinity Church, Columbia, their names were eliminated. The convention opened with a celebration of the Holy Communion, Bishop Reese being the celebrant, assisted by the Rev. John A. Wright, rector of the parish, and the Rev. H. Hobart Barber, rector of the Church of the Good Shepherd, Augusta. The attendance was splendid, all the parishes and practically all the missions being represented. Among the delegates present who had not been able to attend a convention in several years on account of ill health, was the Rev. Samuel J. French, retired. The convention stood in appreciation of his presence.

This convention being a continuation of the one hundred and twelfth annual convention held at Camp Reese, St. Simon's Island, in May, and the convention called in Waycross last May for the purpose of electing a Bishop-Coadjutor, and which adjourned when it became hopelessly deadlocked, did not nominate new candidates. The delegates took up the balloting just where they had left off in November and, as a result, became again deadlocked between the two favorite nominees. After this had continued through the fourth ballot, it was decided to have a joint committee of the clergy and laity, three of each, go into executive session and try to work out some plan to break the deadlock. The committee, after two hours' work, stated to the convention that it was believed that if the clergy would confine themselves to one of the nominees that it would show the laity where they stood and it might lead to a decisive vote. It had no effect and when the deadlock continued through the sixth ballot, a motion was made and unanimously carried, that the names of the Rev. Dr. Phillips and the Rev. Mr. Carpenter be eliminated and new nominations be made from the floor. Bishop Barnwell was among those nominated and was elected on the ninth ballot.

Notwithstanding the strong partisanship that existed, at no time was there any other feeling than that of good will exhibited. It was the Rev. Dr. James B. Lawrence, rector of Calvary Church, Americus, and himself one of the prominent nominees throughout the session, and particularly after the sixth ballot, who moved that Bishop Barnwell's election be made unanimous.

Julia St. Clair Moore.

* * *

WORLD'S SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION.

A REVIEW OF 1934.

Africa: The notable achievement of the World's Sunday School Association in 1934 was the sending of its General Secretary, Dr. Robert M. Hopkins, for a four months' visit in South and Central Africa. As a result of this visit the Sunday-school work has been organized in the Belgian Congo through the appointment by the Congo Protestant Council of a very representative Sunday-school committee, the Rev. Malcolm Guthrie serving as executive director. This is the first cooperative unit for Sunday-school work organized in the Heart of Africa. Its nearest neighbor to the south is the South African National Sunday School Association and to the north the Egypt and Sudan Sunday School Union. The funds requested of the World's Sunday School Association in the Belgian Congo have been assured for 1935. Additional funds are being sought to assist the work of Christian education in the neighboring Portuguese colony of Angola. Dr. Alexander H. Kemp of Quessa was named as Sunday-school secretary for this province following the visit of Dr. Hopkins. Recent letters, both from Angola and from the Belgian Congo indicate a widespread awakening to the importance of the Sunday school, daily vacation Bible school, and other agencies for Christian education.

Greece: Greece has reported the outstanding increase in the work of religious education for 1934. The ZOE chatechetical schools, particularly in Athens, Piraeus and Salonica, are growing very rapidly. There are now 114 such schools in Athens as compared with eighty-nine in 1933. For all of Greece there are reported 662 schools enrolling more than fifty thousand students. The Rev. J. Riggs Brewster, who represents the World's Sunday School Association in Greece, has the finest fellowship with his Beatitude, the Archbishop of Greece, as well as Dr. P. N. Trembelas, the head of the ZOE movement within the Greek Orthodox Church.

England: Sir Harold Mackintosh— The many friends of Sir Harold Mackintosh, President of the World's Sunday School Association, will be pleased to learned that one of the few honors awarded by the King of England at the close of 1934, was one granted to Sir Harold Mackintosh. He was made a Baronet, and the announcement of his new honor specifically refers to the fact that he is President of the World's Sunday School Association with a constituency of more than forty million Sunday-school pupils around the world. Those who know Sir Harold are fully convinced that he is deserving of every recognition both by his king and country and by this globe encircling group which constitutes "the greatest voluntary movement in the world working for the spiritual education of the rising generation."

Balances Its Budget: Friends of the world-wide Sunday-school work will be gratified to learn that for the most difficult year of 1934, the World's Sunday School Association has balanced its budget. This was accomplished through the loyal support, and in many instances repeated gifts, on the part of a host of friends in many countries. Gifts were received during 1934 from thirty-six countries for the work of the World's Sunday School Association. We are faced with many untrue philosophies of life in these days. Perhaps one of the most misleading is to the effect that we can build a Christian society without the aid of a thorough-going, continuous program of Christian education. Fellowship with the World's Sunday School Association is helping to make possible an effective program of Christian education throughout the world.

A PREVIEW OF 1935.

Dean Weigle to Visit China: Looking out upon 1935 the World's Sunday School Association envisages as its most notable achievement the sending of Dr. Luther A. Weigle to China for six months of intensive service. The aim of Dr. Weigle's visit is to respond to the insistent invitation of the National Committee for Christian Religious Education, which is anxious to have made under his leadership a study of the problems of training for church leaders in China. "The theological schools are not the only places on which attention will be concentrated. Dr. Weigle will study all grades of training schools, Bible schools and methods of training voluntary workers. This will involve making himself familiar with Chinese conditons, the work that pastors and others have to do and the needs of the local church. Ample time will be allowed in his program for full and leisurely concentration not only with the institutions concerned but with church and mission administrators responsible for policy." Dr. Weigle is chairman of the World Council of the World's Sunday School Association, president of the Conference of Theological Seminaries of North America, chairman of the Educational Commission of the International Council of Religious Education, and Dean of Yale Divinity School. A conference called in New York City to confer with him prior to his visit was attended by forty representatives of the mission boards and other agencies concerned with this visit. Dr. Weigle will spend ten days in Japan en route to China, and he expects to return in August by way of Siberia and northern Europe, thus completing the circle of the globe.

Dr. Hopkins to Visit Puerto Rico: A very insistent invitation has come from Puerto Rico that the General Secretary of the World's Sunday School Association shall visit this island early in the spring of 1935 with a view of effecting some such program of Christian education for Puerto Rico as that which prevails in Mexico under the leadership of G. Baez Camargo.

New Appeals: Several very urgent appeals have been received by the World's Sunday School Association for assistance in opening Sunday-school work in important areas in 1935. The allocation to the World's Sunday School Association by the Presbyterian Church, U. S. A., of the Rev. Irven Paul of Chile as Director for Religious Education in Spanish-speaking South America makes it imperative that provision shall be included for opening up this long desired continental service. The strengthening of the newly-formed cooperating committees in the Belgian Congo and Portuguese Angola is also most important. It is hoped that the urgent appeals from Northern and Southern Rhodesia may be answered for a visit on the part of Karlton Johnson, Assistant Secretary of the South African National Sunday School Association. The Rev. R. T. McLaughlin of the Near East Committee of the World's Sunday School Association, with headquarters in Cairo, is earnestly requested to make his first visit to the Sudan and also to visit again Algeria where the work is in process of reorganization. It is hoped that conditions will make it possible for Mr. McLaughlin and the Rev. George H. Scherer of Beirut, Secretary of the Bible Lands Sunday School Union, to visit Persia for extended service there. It is most important that Mr. and Mrs. Levon N. Zenian shall return in 1935 to their work in the Near East within the Apostolic Church of Armenia to begin a new term of service of the Christian education within this ancient Eastern Church. Thus an ever increasing circle of activities opens up in the world-wide work in behalf of Christian education.

* * *

ENGLISH BOY CHORISTERS VISITING THE UNITED STATES ON "GOOD-WILL" TOUR.

The English Boy Choristers are composed of twelve choir boys, chosen from the prominent churches in London, England—and each is a member of the London Choir School. Amongst this group are a selected number of soloists. They are under the direction of Carlton Borrow, A. R. C. O. A proficient schoolmaster accompanies these boys, while on tour, and they pursue a regular outlined course of study, as if they were at home, in the London Choir School.

The repertoire of the English Boy Choristers consists of both sacred and secular music. In both, its beauty of tone and deep devotion are equally apparent. They sing three and four-part anthems of composers, such as Schubert, Byrd, Handel, Brahms, and Hiller.

On their last tour through Canada, they were honored with an invitation to the Government House in Ottawa, by the Governor General and Lady Bessborough—and in Washington, to the White House, by an invitation from Mrs. Roosevelt.

This group sang in the Cathedrals and Churches in New York, Boston, Providence, Baltimore, Philadelphia and Washington. In many cases the choir had the privilege of joining with their own choirs in worship and praise to the one God of all our Churches.

It was a convincing proof that the age-old tradition of Anglican Choral Music, famous throughout the world, still charms, still delights and still holds the audience in the spell of its seraphic music.

* * *

PLANS FOR VARIOUS YOUTH ORGANIZATIONS.

Further plans toward coordinating the Church's work among young people are now under consideration and will probably take some definite form next March 26, at a meeting of representatives of the various youth organizations. They are to report whether their respective societies favor the formation of a Council of Youth Organizations, which would be composed of representatives of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, Girls' Friendly Society, Junior Daughters of the King, Knights of SS. John, the Orders of Sir Galahad and Fleur de Lis, Church Mission of Help, Young People's Fellowship, Young People's Service League, and the Church School, with certain members at large and, ex-officio, the National Council's executive secretary for religious education, secretary for college work and secretary for young people's work, the last, Miss Dorothy May Fischer, to be secretary of the new council if organized.

A conference representing most of the above groups, held in New York late in December, canvassed the subject in considerable detail and, feeling that such a council is much to be desired, determined to learn the feeling of their constituent societies between now and the end of March.

The possible functions of the council would be to promote a mutual acquaintance with activities and programs, to determine where there are gaps and overlappings, geographical and functional, and to cooperate in field work.

Among the questions discussed, which revealed the need of the projected Council, were: At what points do the various programs now overlap? What are some of the gaps in the combined programs? What kind of program should be developed so that there would be no overlapping? Or is overlapping desirable? How can the needs best be met of those young people not now allied with any young people's organization? What responsibility should be felt for the group between twenty-four and thirty-five years of age? At what point can cooperation in leadership-training and field work be most effective?

The tendency is increasing to think of young people primarily as young people and not as members of one or another organization. Several dioceses are experimenting with this end in view. Ohio has a new type of Young People's Convention. Georgia has a Young People's Division, part of a program calling also for a Children's Division and an Adult Division, all definitely part of the Church, with the local parish as the center of activities. California has a Youth Movement, initiated to coordinate young people's work.

Similar trends are noticeable outside the Church. One of the most far-reaching plans to unify young people's work is sponsored by the International Council of Religious Education in a long-range program over several years under the theme of Christian Youth Building a New World, with a nation-wide series of conferences planned for the coming February and March.

Writing of the increasing cooperation among character-building agencies (in the Federal Council Bulletin for Januuary, 1935), J. Roberts Hargreaves says, "The aims of the Church, the synagogue, the public school, the juvenile court in many cities, and several independent groups, such as the Scouts and Camp Fire Girls, are so similar as far as character ideals are concerned, that there should be some recognized method of cooperation."

Present at the December conference of Church leaders were: The Rev. Ernest E. Piper, representing the Y. P. F. and Y. P. S. L.; Miss Harriet A. Dunn and Miss Frances Arnold, G. F. S.; Mr. Frank Lincoln, Order of Sir Galahad; Miss Ruth L. Littlefield, Order of the Fleur de Lis; Mr. Richard T. Viguers, Knights of SS. John; the Rev. Vernon McMaster, Church Schools; the Rev. Dr. T. O. Wedel, College Work; Miss Dorothy May Fischer, Young People's Work.

Other members of the Religious Education Department staff also attended. Mr. Leon C. Palmer, Brotherhood of St. Andrew, and Miss Martha Kimball, Junior Daughters of the King, were unable to come. This group was called by the Rev. Dr. McGregor at the definite request of a conference of youth leaders from all parts of the country, which met at the College of Preachers last September.

NEW YORK.

Rt. Rev. Wm. T. Manning, D. D., Bishop
Rt. Rev. A. S. Lloyd, D. D., Suffragan
Rt. Rev. Chas. K. Gilbert, D. D., Suffragan

Bust of Dr. Norwood Unveiled at St. Bartholomew's.

"To the greater glory of God, and in loving memory of Robert Norwood, friend of his brother man, priest and doctor, sixth rector of this parish, we receive and dedicate this statue as an outward and visible sign of our gratitude to God for his life, prophetic ministry and example, and as a constant reminder that we joyously carry into the life about us, his radiant love and devotion to the Master whom he served."

Above is Dr. Sargent's eulogy, at the unveiling of the bust of Dr. Norwood, at St. Bartholomew's Church, Thursday morning, January 17, 1935.

The bronze rests upon a plinth of dark green imported marble veined with gold, which surmounts the stone pedestal-bracket built into the wall as an integral part of the Cloister, to the right of the door leading into the Community House in which Dr. Norwood did such pioneer work. The host of Dr. Norwood's friends who were present at the unveiling gladly recognized not only his ever-present spirit of loving kindness but his abounding vitality at the height of his energy and health.

His rectorship covered the period of from May 3, 1925, to his death on September 28, 1932.

The bust is the work of Mrs. Elizabeth Randolph Gardner.

Leadership Training School.

The Yonkers Leadership Training School for Religious Education will meet on ten Monday evenings, beginning January 28. This is the sixth year of the School which is held under the auspices of the Yonkers Committee on Leadership Training. Classes will be held in the Parish House of St. John's Church, of which the Rev. Oliver Shaw Newell is rector. George Arthur Smith is Dean of the School and Ida M. Bullock is Registrar. The classes will be given by Dr. F. Dean McClusky, Director of the Scarborough School; Professor Mary T. Whitley, Teachers' College, Columbia; Miss Augusta Kempe, Specialist in Religious Education; and the Rev. Lawrence B. Lawson of the Chapel of the Redeemer.

"The Little Theatre Group," consisting of professional actors and actresses of the Church of St. Mary the Virgin will present the play, "Mary Tudor," in St. Joseph's Hall Friday evening, January 25.

Dr. Adelaide Case of Columbia University spoke at the home of Mrs. Clement R. Ford, a member of St. James' Church, on Wednesday, January 16. The meeting was arranged by St. James' Church, of which the Rev. H. W. B. Donegan is rector, for parents of preschool age children.

The woman's branch of the New York City Mission Society held their one hundred and twelfth annual meeting on January 14, at the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church. Mrs. Dwight H. Day presided and addresses were made by the Rev. Donald B. Aldrich, D. D., the Rev. Robert W. Anthony, the Rev. Wm. R. Jeliffe, D. D., and Mrs. Horace Biglow.

The new Parish Hall of Trinity Church, located at Trinity Place, in the rear of the church, was dedicated on Wednesday evening, January 16.

E. F. K.

Speech by Lawson Purdy, Comptroller and Junior Warden at the Dedication of the Parish Hall of Trinity Church, January 16, 1935.

When we, citizens of the United States, read of religious intolerance in various parts of the world today it is hard for us to realize that such things can be. Perhaps it is even harder for us to realize that such things were in our own country not so very long ago. The statute of religious freedom in Virginia was one of the first declarations of freedom with respect to religious observance. Our Constitution is only one hundred and fifty years old which contains the guarantee that Congress shall not interfere with the free exercise of religion.

When New Amsterdam was under the control of the Dutch, there was perhaps no country in the world which had any modern conception of religious freedom. There was no such thing in our New England. Quakers were persecuted and found refuge in Rhode Island, and the atmosphere of New Amsterdam is shown by the opinion of the Dutch ministers who reported about 1657 that certain Quaker women had been sent to Rhode Island "where all kinds of scum dwell, for it is nothing else than a sink for New England." This was not a happy place for those who disagreed with the Dutch ministers, not that they were any worse than many others.

When the English came into control Charles II gave the entire management to his brother James, then Duke of York, and one of his first acts was to isue a proclamation directing that all should be so governed "that differences in opinion do not lessen their charity to each other, since charity is a fundamental in all religion." That was going very far for those days. Within thirty years Trinity was established. It was established on the basis of charity for all and opinions were to be free. I think it may be said fairly that Trinity has been guided by that early counsel.

The first church was erected on the site of the present church and the River came up to Greenwich Street or thereabouts. The Churchyard went down to the River. We were on the outskirts of the City.

Now in establishing this Parish Hall as a meeting place, we hope to be guided by the same spirit that was declared for the Colony of New York two hundred years ago. We hope this Hall may be so used that it shall be helpful to those associated with Trinity and its chapels and to many whose days are passed within our neighborhood.

CHICAGO.

Rt. Rev. George Craig Stewart, D. D., Bishop.

Chicago's Ninety-eighth Annual Convention.

Plans for the ninety-eighth annual convention of the Diocese of Chicago, to be held at Grace Church, Oak Park, February 5, 6 and 7, are complete. Plans of far-reaching importance to the diocese, including the diocesan centennial program and proposals for refinancing the obligations of the entire diocese, will be submitted to convention.

The pre-convention dinner, sponsored by The Church Club, will be held Monday night, February 4, at the Hotel Sherman, at which time Bishop Stewart will make his annual awards of Crosses of Honor for distinguished service in the diocese. He will deliver his convention charge Tuesday morning, February 5. Tuesday night, Bishop Henry W. Hobson of Southern Ohio will be among the speakers at a mass meeting in Grace Church. Thursday, February 7, the annual meeting of the Diocesan Woman's Auxiliary will be held with the Bishop and Dr. Herbert W. Prince speaking. Archdeacon W. H. Ziegler is chairman of convention arrangements.

Laborer Tells Settlement Help.

A laborer's story of how the Church helps Chicago's great west side through her social service institutions was related by B. Hrdina, leader in a Workers' Committee of the area, before the annual meeting of Chase House board this week.

Hrdina told how his group had been offered facilities at Chase House for meeting purposes; how gradually he and his friends had become acquainted with the settlement until it became as a friend to them and finally termed the institution a "second home" to hundreds and thousands who are served by it. He related some of the personal services which staff members at Chase House render unfortunate families in time of illness, death, relief tangles or other emergencies.

Bishop Stewart presided at the annual business meeting of the house. Officers elected were: President, John D. Allen; vice-president, Mrs. L. J. Braddock; secretary, Miss Helen MacLean; treasurer, Mr. Carl A. Pfsu. The Bishop is honorary president of the corporation.

Chicago Organist Dies.

Mason Slade, well-known church organist and choir leader in Chicago, died suddenly of a heart attack, January 14. Mr. Slade had been for a number of years organist and choirmaster of St. Peter's and Christ Churches. He was the youngest official organist at the St. Louis World's Fair and came to Chicago shortly after the exposition, serving as organist at St. Andrew's on the west side; Christ Church, Woodlawn, for twenty years; St. Peter's; Grace Church, Hinsdale, and Emmanuel Church, LaGrange. He studied abroad for several years. Funeral services were from St. Peter's Church.

G. F. S. Elects.

Mrs. John R. King, of Emmanuel Church, LaGrange, was accorded an unusual honor when she was elected diocesan president of the Girls' Friendly Society for a fourth consecutive term. Other officers named were: Honorary president, Mrs. Robert B. Gregory; first vice-president, Mrs. Cleon E. Bigler, Western Springs; second vice-president, Mrs. Wm. McEvoy; secretary, Mrs. John Wren; treasurer, Mrs. Walter L. Belt.

Young People Make Award.

Gamma Kappa Delta, diocesan young people's society, awarded its honor shield for constructive work during the past year to St. Peter's, Chicago, chapter. The award was announced at the annual installation service at St. James' Community House, January 14, when newly elected officers took up their work. Leigh H. Hunt is president.

J. E. Boyle.

SOUTHERN OHIO.

Rt. Rev. Henry Wise Hobson, D. D., Bishop.

The Triumphant Exit of a Good Soldier and Servant of Christ.

The funeral of the Rt. Rev. Boyd Vincent was held in St. Paul's Cathedral, Cincinnati, on Wednesday afternoon, January 16. The body of the beloved patriarch lay in state a day in his old Cathedral. While young clergy in Easter vestments stood guard, hundreds of friends came to pay their last respect. In spite of a heavy cold rain, the people packed the Cathedral to its capacity. Bishop Hobson had charge of the services. Dr. Frank H. Nelson of Christ Church read the sentences as the casket proceeded through an aisle of sixty vested priests. Bishop Gravatt of West Virginia read the Psalms and Bishop Francis of Indianapiis the Lesson. Other Bishops attending were Bishop Abbott of Lexington, Bishop Page of Michigan, and Bishop Paul Jones. The Rev. B. H. Rinheimer, D. D., represented the National Council.

The Cathedral choir was augmented by forty vested priests from the Diocese of Southern Ohio.

It was a joyful service, the triumphant exist of a good soldier and servant of Christ. Easter hymns, Easter flowers and Easter spirit lifted up all hearts. It was such a service as Bishop Vincent would have wished.

Cincinnati showed it had lost a great and veteran citizen. In only nine days more Bishop Vincent would have reached the forty-sixth anniversary of his consecration. Instead now his pall-covered casket took the place where so long ago he had been set aside for the duty he so greatly fulfilled. Bishop Hobson accompanied the body to Bishop Vincent's old home at Erie, Pa., where, with others Bishops, he read service at the grave on the following day.

The widow and daughter of the late Bishop Theodore Irving Reese came from Massachusetts for the funeral.

Bishop Boyd Vincent.

For half a century Boyd Vincent has been known as a pastor and apostle of the Church. When rector of Calvary Church, Pittsburgh, before 1889, his name was taken by the younger clergy and students in theology as a symbol of what the parish priesthood should be. From the time that he entered the Episcopate, the traditions of the Church in Southern Ohio gathered around him and Churchmen in all parts of the country turned to him as to a wise and courageous leader. Every good cause, especially in the movements toward Church Unity, had his support. Every new member of the House of Bishops received the benefit and blessing of his sympathetic friendship. The position to which he at last attained, as Senior Bishop in the Anglican Communion, carried more than the prestige of long experience and service. Through the later years of active episcopate and retirement, the judgment of his alert mind was sought, his unwavering voice was heard and his presence cherished. For the Christian household of faith he continued to the close of life, as he will never cease in our remembrance, to be a beloved Father-in-God.

James DeWolf Perry,
Presiding Bishop.

Bishop Lawrence's Tribute.

"The expression that I should use if asked to describe Bishop Vincent in two words would be a 'Knightly Saint.' He was in all points official and informal, virile: he was a man: strong and deep like his voice, with a richness of sentiment that was also felt in his speech. He was fully consecrated and never, so far as I know, thought of himself, his comfort or his promotion.

"I remember that when a Canon had been passed which enabled Bishop Jagger, who had been an invalid for years to resign, he immediately arose and presented his resignation of his See; at which Vincent, who as Bishop Coadjutor had done all the work for years, arose and in a most decided and affectionate voice protested; he would be happy to remain Coadjutor and do the work for the rest of Jaggar's life, but he was finally prevailed upon to accede.

"When the Prayer Book amendments were up a few years ago he and I worked together to get the formula of Baptism simplified, but we made up a small minority; as we left the House together he said: 'Lawrence, we have started something which will not rest until it has gone through.' Later, he presented as a first step an amendment which resulted in the second question in the Confirmation office.

As member and chairman of the Committee on Amendments to the Constitution, his thought and work were in the Constitution and foundation of the Church Order and Administration; a position of great importance but of little personal recognition. He was a man of doubtless courage, physical, intellectual and spirit. It never seemed to occur to him to falter or wince under opposition. He moved steadily on and took the blows as they fell with cheer and with humor.

"His was a tender heart, his affectionate care of the widow of his brother, Strong Vincent, who fell in the Civil War, beautiful. What a handsome face he had and how it lighted up among friends, and also, too, when indignation moved him.

"His service in the Episcopate has been a long one, during which one may safely say he had the respect and affection of every bishop in service during that period."

The above statement was made by the Rt. Rev. William Lawrence, D. D., Bishop of Massachusetts, now retired, and a friend of Bishop Vincent's almost all of his life.

WEST TEXAS.

Rt. Rev. W. T. Capers, D. D., Bishop.

Parish Organizations Join in Festival Service.

On Monday, January 7, at 5:15 in the afternoon, the organizations of St. Mark's Church, San Antonio, marched into the church behind the combined choirs of the parish, led by the vestry. The church was crowded to the doors with the members of the working organizations in the parish. The Rt. Rev. Clinton S. Quin, D. D., Bishop of Texas, was the preacher. After the service of rededication, the parishioners went into the parish house for the annual parish dinner and parish meeting. The rector, the Rev. Arthur R. McKinstry, reported that 172 members have been added to the parish during 1934, that the Church School enrollment was 800, and a total of 434 services were held during the year. St. Mark's Church has an elaborate plan for the commemoration of the sixtieth anniversary of the opening of the present church structure on Easter Day; this plan was outlined by the rector at the parish meeting.

VIRGINIA.

Rt. Rev. H. St. George Tucker, D. D., Bishop

Y. P. S. L. Conference.

Miss Dorothy Fischer, National Secretary for work among young people, visited Alexandria, Va., on Tuesday, January 15, and met the leaders of the Young People's Leagues of the city and neighboring counties, at a supper conference in St. Paul's Parish Hall. Thirty-five persons were present, including three rectors, and also several students from the Theological Seminary, where Miss Fischer spent the afternoon. Miss Fischer believes that a program, practical and challenging, calling for sacrifice, will find response among young people who are not attracted by a schedule vague and dilletante. A lively and prolonged discussion followed the address.

FLORIDA

Rt. Rev. Frank A. Juhan, D. D., Bishop

Rev. Alfred St. John Matthews Was Advanced to Priesthood by Bishop Juhan on Feast of the Epiphany.

Christ Church, Monticello, was filled to its capacity for the morning service on the Feast of the Epiphany, when the Rev. Alfred St. John Matthews, its rector since October, was advanced to the priesthood by Bishop Juhan.

This was the first ordination ever held at Christ Church, which this year commemorates its semi-centennial. Friends of Mr. Matthews came from points as far distant as Jacksonville and Saint Augustine to witness the impressive service. The morning service at St. John's, Tallahassee, was omitted in order that both its rector and congregation might attend the ordination. The choir of St. James, Perry, was present in a body to augment the singing.

The Rev. Thomas A. Schofield, Minister in charge of the Churches at Live Oak and Lake City, presented the Ordinand. The Litany and Gospel were read by the Rev. Wm. Jeffery Alfriend, rector of St. John's Parish, Tallahassee; and the Epistle was read by the Rev. Ambler M. Blackford, associate rector of St. John's Parish, Jacksonville.

The Bishop of the diocese preached a most inspiring and challenging sermon, taking his text from St. Paul's charge to Timothy, "Fulfill thy ministry," in which he emphasized the responsibility of the laity as well as the clergy in their respective ministries.

The Rev. Mr. Matthews was born in Jacksonville, but at an early age moved to Saint Augustine, where in his boyhood he was a member of Trinity Parish. He is the son of the late Mr. Frank B. Matthews and Mrs. Mary Wright Matthews. His schooling was received in the public schools of Saint Augustine and Jacksonville. For six years he was under the Rev. Mr. Blackford at Keystone, South Jacksonville, during which time he was a communicant of St. John's Parish. He took his collegeiate and theological training at the University of the South, Sewanee, Tennessee; from which institution he received both a B. S. and a B. D. degree. He graduated at Sewanee in June, 1934, with highest honors. He was placed temporarily in charge of St. Mary's Church, Green Cove Springs, and in October last took charge of his present field which includes Christ Church, Monticello; St. James, Perry; St. Clement's, Lloyd, and St. Mary's, Madison.

Pre-Lenten Retreat for Diocesan Clergy.

An event of unusual importance and significance for the clergy of the diocese will be the Retreat and Conferences to be held February 13, 14 and 15, probably in Jacksonville. This Retreat is the major event of the program for the year of the Diocesan Commission on Evangelism.

The Rev. Basil M. Walton, Chairman of this committee, has been fortunate in securing the Rev. Malcolm S. Taylor, Field Secretary of the National Commission on Evangelism, to lead the Conferences and to conduct the Retreat.

All of the clergy in the diocese are expected to be present, and no doubt eagerly look forward to this gathering. For the clergy, this Retreat and Conference will be most timely, coming as it does shortly before the Lenten Season.

SOUTH FLORIDA.

Rt. Rev. J. D. Wing, D. D., Bishop
Bishop Coadjutor.

A Thousand Mile Tour on Bicycles.

Ralph P. Channon, of Providence, Rhode Island, and Arnold Charnock, of Sanford, Maine, received their commission as Captains in the Church Army from Bishop Wing during an impressive service in St. Luke's Cathedral, Orlando, Florida, on January 14. These young men completed their training for this commission before coming with the group from the Church Army under Captain Charles L. Conder for a four months' bicycle tour of this diocese.

Other members of this group are John Daley, of Scranton, Pa.; Joseph Entwistle of Pawtucket, R. I., and Fred Sudden, of New Bedford, Mass. Missions at Kissimmee and St. Cloud, under the Rev. Elred E. Simkins, were visited by this group prior to their coming to the Cathedral parish on January 12.

At the close of the special service in the Cathedral on January 14, Bishop Wing gave his solemn charge and blessing to these Church Army Cycling Troubadours from the steps of the Cathedral, then after singing one verse of "Onward Christian Soldiers," they started on their bicycles for Winter Park, the next stop in their journey of one thousand miles through this diocese.

Gradually working down the east coast and through the southern part of the diocese, they will continue along the west coast, thence to the northern part of South Florida and complete the trip by attendance at the diocesan convention, to be held May 7-9, in Daytona Beach.

C. Robinson.

BETHLEHEM

Rt. Rev. F. W. Sterrett, D. D., Bishop

An Old Joke Applied.

The Convocation of Scranton held its mid-winter session in Epiphany Church, Glen, on January 14 and 15, the Rev. Edward McCance, rector. The Rev. Dr. John Lewis, a Congregational minister of Scranton, spoke on "A Ministry For Today." He told the story of the child who fell out of bed. When her mother asked her how it happened, the child said, "I fell asleep too near to where I got in." Dr. Lewis thinks one trouble with some of the clergy at least in his denomination is that they fall asleep too soon after they get into the ministry. He wondered whether this was so in the Episcopal Church. Maybe!

The Annual Canvass.

It was a disappointment to many of us. We hoped for a substantial advance. Instead we have $1,128 less than for 1934.

Are times better? I was told that a certain car shop would only work three days for the month of January. This is the worst yet. Our big industries in the diocese are not around that elusive corner, as yet.

H. P. W.

LOUISIANA

Rt. Rev. James Craik Morris, D. D., Bishop

Christmas for the Seamen.

It may not have been Christmas Day, but it was really Christmas down at the Seamen's Church Institute, New Orleans, on Wednesday evening, December 26. It was then that the seamen were having their annual Christmas service and entertainment. And such a wonderful time it was.

Bishop Morris was there and conducted the service. The men seemed so eager to be taking part in the worship; they sang hymns and carols, they recited the Psalms, and you could have heard a pin drop as they listened attentively to the Bishop's words of cheer, hope and courage.

The refreshments were most plentiful and unique. Ice cream, mince pie, coffee, oranges, bananas and apples were served. Among the gifts were comfort bags, made and filled by Church School children throughout the country. Indiana and Ohio seemed to be the banner givers this year. So many of these little bags, filled with needed articles, were received this year that many seamen in the hospitals and those not at the party will be remembered.

It was just impossible to know how many were at the celebration. The building was crowded and so was the sidewalk. There must have been about 200 inside and 100 unable to get in. Board members were there; entertainers were there and everybody wore a smile. Great credit is due Mr. Harold A. Johnson, the superintendent, for the perfectly splendid record of the Institute during these "hard times." His report showed figures only; one must go to the Institue to get any idea of the real worth it is to these men of the sea.

Alma S. Hammond, Secretary,
Seamen's Church Institute.

CENTRAL NEW YORK.

Rt. Rev. Charles Fiske, D. D., Bishop
Rt. Rev. E. H. Coley, D. D., Suffragan

Anniversaries Celebrated.

The Rev. Harold E. Sawyer celebrated his eleventh anniversary as rector of Grace Church, Utica, on Januray. 13. During his incumbency the church has grown from 850 to 1,283 communicants. The church building has been repaired and redecorated, new organ installed and a $400,000 parish house was built and paid for.

The Rev. Arthur Breese Merriman, rector of the Church of the Saviour, Syracuse, celebrated the tenth anniversary of his ordination to the priesthood on January 6—Epiphany. The English Boy Choristers of the London Choir School assisted in the celebration. How those boys could sing! Beautiful tones, superb phrasing and artistry and, above all, their enunciation was excellent.

St. John's Church, Whitesboro, has recently received a bequest of $2,000 by the will of the late Ida M. Wagner.

Churches Repaired and Beautified.

The Parish Aid Society and the Circle Guild of Calvary Church, Utica, have had the wood work of the rectory renewed and the exterior painted. A considerable amount of repair work on the church building was done at the same time.

The windows in Grace Church, Union Springs have been completely reset in new lead and in modern double ventilated frames.

St. Paul's Church, Owego, recently received a bequest of $2,000 to be added for parish support.

The Church of the Redeemer, Watertown, has completed extensive repairs on the church building. The chancel has been re-roofed, the brick work repainted, the interior of the church redecorated and painted and the chancel and sanctuary given a new interior roofing.

The Rev. Henry Lee, white missionary-in-charge of St. Philip's (colored) Church, Syracuse. baptized forty-eight during the year of 1934. This mission has a communicant list of 167.

The Rev. Claude H. Leyfield has been appointed Dean of the Fourth District Convocation. The Very Rev. R. W. Bell has been reappointed Dean of the First District Convocation.

Winter Meeting of Woman's Auxiliary.

The Woman's Auxiliary of the Fourth District held its winter meeting in Grace Church, Syracuse, January 17, Mrs. Harry E. Clarke, presiding. Dr. H. B. Taylor, physician in charge of St. James' Hospital, Anking, China, addressed the meeting.

Dr. Taylor also addressed the Men's Club of St. Mark's Church, Syracuse, at a supper meeting, on January 17. He showed moving pictures of his work and of conditions in Anking, China.

Joseph R. Clair.

HARRISBURG.

Rt. Rev. Wyatt Brown, D D., Bishop

Three Generations Confirmed In the Same Class.

Here are two recent instances of the far-reaching influence of the Church's ministrations in hospitals and other institutions for the sick. In October, 1933, Archdeacon Hughes, who for more than nine years has been Chaplain at the State Sanatorium for the Treatment of Tuberculosis, located at Mont Alto, Pa., baptized an ex-service man and prepared him for confirmation. Due to his father's serious illness, this patient was obliged to leave the Sanatorium before the visitation of Bishop Brown, of Harrisburg, in whose diocese Mont Alto is located. The patient was subsequently confirmed in Pittsburgh by Bishop Mann. Returning to his home in Butler, Pa., he interested his relatives in the Episcopal Church. On the Feast of the Epiphany, 1935, Bishop Mann confirmed this man's mother, sister, brother-in-law, and their children in St. Peter's Church, Butler, where they were presented by the rector of the parish, the Rev. J. K. Brennan, Jr. To have three generations from one family confirmed in the same class is not a common occurrence.

Another case worthy of mention is that of a young girl whose mother has been a patient at the same sanatorium for several years. Several years ago Chaplain Hughes baptized the mother and prepared her for confirmation. He later baptized the daughter and she was confirmed also by the Bishop of Harrisburg. The daughter

(Continued on page 22.)

FAMILY DEPARTMENT

JANUARY.

1. Circumcision. (Tuesday.)
6. Sunday. Epiphany.
13. First Sunday after Epiphany.
20. Second Sunday after Epiphany.
25. Conversion of St. Paul. (Friday.)
27. Third Sunday after Epiphany.

* *

THE COLLECT.

Third Sunday After the Epiphany.

Almighty and everlasting God, mercifully look upon our infirmities, and in all our dangers and necessities stretch forth Thy right hand to help and defend us; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

* * *

HOMES.

So long as there are homes where fires burn,
And there is bread;
So long as there are homes where lamps are lit,
And prayers said;
Although a people falter through the dark,
And natons grope,
With God Himself back of those little homes,
We have sure hope.

—Grace Noll Crowell.

* * *

The Christian Dynamic.

No one can read the New Testament, and particularly St. Paul's Epistles, without observing how in the Christian experience which is there portrayed there is a blended note of triumph and joy. The Christian has entered into a new world redolent with the freshness of a heavenly morning. Behind him lies a past life with which he has broken; before him stretches a future entirely different from the past, because it is full of the promise of moral victory and closer fellowship with God. There is a feeling of newness in the air. New visions open up before a personality which has been renewed; new sources of spiritual power await discovery. "Bliss was it in that dawn to be alive."

What was the secret of this sense of joyous emancipation and spiritual vigor? It is to be found in the Person of Jesus Christ. The Christian was an emancipated man because Christ had freed him from the tyranny of sinful habit, had taken him out from the narrow world of selfish desire and had set his feet "in a large room". As he looked into future with its unknown difficulties and temptations awaiting him, he saw that future dominated by a Figure, scarred in hands and side, yet victorious. That figure represented the purpose of God and the power of God to secure the ultimate fulfilment of the purpose. It was a Figure, not only of beauty, and of power available for distribution among men. "Nay in all these things we are more than conquerors through Him that loved us" is the triumphant conclusion of the piece of spiritual autobiography which St. Paul gives us in Romans 7 and 8. There had been for the apostle fierce struggle, ending in despairing failure. But that was in the days before he had learned the redeeming love of Christ. When he had learned it, all was changed. Into his life came a vast transformation. He experienced a complete moral renewal, which brought with it peace of soul and the knowledge that he was in the keeping of One who could be to him the constant Companion of his way.

In St. Paul's teaching, which was the transcript of his own experience, the secret of the Christian life is renewal from within. The Christian is called to a life of love and trust in which the fruit of the Spirit is manifest; but such a life is possible only if he is indwelt by Christ. "In Christ" is one of the apostle's favorite phrases. He meant by it such a close union with Christ that the life of the Master flowed into that of the disciple. There is a Spirit who indwells, and that Spirit is the Spirit of the Living Christ. We speak of this as mysticism; but note that the Pauline mysticism is no vague and nebulous doctrine of immanence. It is mysticism connected with a clearly defined Person, and it has a severely ethical content. The historical Jesus was real; the Living Christ was real; and the Spirit of Christ made Himself felt as indwelling Spirit in the human heart. Those who were "led by the Spirit" gave proof of the reality of His guidance by living a life of holiness and displaying a moral sensitiveness to the ideals and standards set up by Jesus Christ.

Christian experience remains in essence the same throughout the ages. It preserves its constituent features—the sense of alienation from God; restoration with the ensuing consciousness of wounds healed and fellowship renewed; and experience of power coming into the life from a higher source. That it remains thus true to type is proof that it is not the product of illusion. Jesus Christ is for every generation the Saviour and the Life-Giver. Is there any message more needed for the present time than this old yet ever nw message of power that can transform human character? "We have no power of ourselves to help ourselves" is the cry going up from many a soul which is conscious of its spiritual impotence in face of temptation, and is a prey to invading forces of evil. Yet the power is there, only the struggler does not know where to look for help. Canon Barry is surely right when he points out in The Relevance of Christianity that the problem for thousands today is not whether Christianity is true, but whether it has any bearing on life or is of any practical utility.

Christianity is a way of life. It has a dynamic of its own. Christian living is living sustained by the communicated power of Christ. That is the story revealed by the New Testament and confirmed by Christian experience down the centuries. Is it not sometimes the fact that those who fail to find the help they need, fail because they have not learned how to be receptive? There is in their lives too much fret and strain. They have not discovered the secret of becoming instruments of a higher power and of waiting upon God. Only he who is ready to make this act of self-committal to Christ can know the measure of His resources. A life thus united to the living Source of life must have in it the notes of joy and triumph, because it will be a life in which there will be the progressive achievement of victory.—Archdeacon V. F. Storr, in Church of England Newspaper.

* * *

"Jin."

"This must be remembered" (it is Kagawa, the great evangelist of Japan who is calling us of America and the world to remember that), "Shintoism, Buddhism and Confucianism all teach love to a certain degree. There is a vast difference, however, between the instinctive love of animals, the ethical love of human beings and the redemptive love which God revealed through Christ. Animal love is purely instinctive, and is not subject to the correction and control of reason. Human love, though more instinctive, attempts to become rationalized only within the bounds of human relations. Confucius called this 'jin', the way of benevolence. But the jin of Confucius is not rooted in God." And so Confucius called it jin—the way of benevolence. Many of us in a Christian land, and some in Christian churches, call it the way of benevolence, like Confucius did, and leave God out. We accept and make a poor attempt at the second great commandment and ignore the first and greatest commandment. "In Christ alone"—I am quoting Kagawa again, who says, "In Christ alone, and for the first time, was made known to mankind the love of the Cross which forgives enemies and saves sinners."

The way of benevolence, jin, is not enough. If so, Confucius is sufficient and we do not need Christ.—Rev. J. O. Atkinson.

* * *

For the Southern Churchman.

TO UNDERSTAND.

O. G. Strum.

I do not know or understand the feeling
in my heart,
The yearning that would set me far apart
From selfish impulse and from human greed.
I only know that Something stirs within,
A Something that declares my soul akin
To other lonely souls, so much in need
Of understanding, in the World's keen mart.

The loneliness of heart and soul!
One meets them everywhere.
One makes of sympathy a Dole—
A pressure of the hand—a whispered prayer—
A scant expression, one can only dare,
Of sympathy Divine that floods the soul.

To give of self, unstintingly to all
Who sadly need the understanding friend,
One's ear must be attuned to heed the call
Of that dear Friend, whose tender Hand
Alights a spark divine with the heart,
And speaks, with gentle love, this one command:
"To know and serve Me, you must understand."

Oh, Friend, who art so worthy and so understanding, too,
My heart goes out in adoration unto You!

* * *

An Ordinary Housewife.

It is significant, I think, that Jesus pictures for us an ordinary housewife. This is a parable of God's love, but Jesus does not think it necesary to make the leading character a princess or a queen, but just an every-day woman. Even though one's life does not include a large amount of domestic routine, it ought to be remembered that for Jesus the commonplace was full of grace and truth, and "if you bake bread with indifference, you bake a bitter bread that feeds but half man's hunger." The Anglo-Saxon word "lady" meant "loaf-giver," and we might call this the parable of the Lady in the House.

But it was primarily as a vehicle of spiritual truth that Jesus told the story, and certain things stand out. One is that the coin was lost right in the woman's own home. It did not slip from her hand when she was jostled in the market-place. No purse-snatcher got off with it. It was not lost when some banker invested it unwisely. It was within the four walls of home that it disappeared. The insurance companies are always telling us how many accidents occur at home. The danger of falling in the bathtub or tripping on the parlor rug or tumbling headlong down the cellar stairs is greater than the danger of being struck by an automobile. This is due, I suppose to our feeling that home is a place of security, and we therefore cease to be on our guard.

Which is strangely like something in the spiritual world—namely, that times of relaxation are the most dangerous. When we are busy in the market-place, there are many things that will keep us from sinning. It is when we relax with our friends that we are apt to pass the harsh judgment, or do the popular thing or make the foolish promise. When in public, our conduct is regulated by our desire for social approval, but at home these restraints are off. Sometimes the most precious treasure we have in our home—our children—are neglected and slip away and finally are lost. Unless office-bearers are eternally vigilant, even in the Church there will be those to hide away in a dark corner and at last be numbered among the missing.

A second truth in our parable is the great value of the thing that has got away. It was only one coin in ten, and the careless housewife would have said, "Well, don't worry about it; it can't be far away." But not this housewife. That coin meant something to her. It may have been a part of the circlet that she wore across her forehead, and the loss of it meant that the perfection of her headdress was spoiled. Or perhaps it was money saved for the land lord, whose insistent knock was due to be heard. Or perhaps it represented the purchase price of some treasure for which she and her husband had long been saving. Even though the ten per cent could not have got out of the house, it wasn't enough that she had ninety per cent in hand. She wanted to see the entire amount.

Accordingly, with candle and broom she sought diligently until she found it. And this, says Jesus, is a picture of God's infinite love. The shepherd goes after the lost sheep "until he find it." and the lady in the house searches for the lost coin "until she find it." "Until she find it"—how much of divine persistence there is in that phrase! God had for so long been seeking for man. Nature and conscience had been the instruments of His search. Wisdom had cried aloud in the street seeking for her children. The voice of priest and prophet had not been silent in the land. But man had been deaf to it all, and still went blindly along the paths of his own self-will. Now a lamp is lighted—it is the lamp of Truth; and now a voice is heard—it is the voice of Him who came to seek and to save that which was lost, and so long as one of His own is missing He can have no rest until He find it.

Which leads us to that other element in the story: the great joy of discovery. In the small town every household sorrow is a village tragedy. Imagine the gloom that must have spread among this woman's friends when the knowledge went abroad that, in that land where money was so scarce, one drachma, one day's wages, one-tenth of all that she had, had disappeared. It is in the time of our sorrow that we discover how many friends we have—and it is perhaps some consolation to find out that we had more than we knew. But equally do we like to have our friends share our happiness with us, and when this woman's diligent search was rewarded her joy knew no bounds. She had to have someone with whom to share it. We can picture the frenzy of her excitement as "she calleth her friends and her neighbors together, saying, Rejoice with me; for I have found the piece which I had lost."

"Likewise," says Jesus, "I say unto you, there is joy in the presence of the angels of God over one sinner that repenteth." It is a picture of the supreme importance of one human being. It was a hard saying then; it is even harder for us, who speak of human beings as "hands" in a factory and consider it no great tragedy if one should perish. But that is the estimate of an unregenerate human nature. The revelation of the Gospel is that one soul—every soul—is of infinite worth, and however it may have got lost divine love can have no rest until it find it.—Presbyterian Banner.

* * *

For the Southern Churchman.

RECOVERY.

Leslie Savage.

Lord. Thou hast healed my body's hurt,
That halted and dragged with pain,
Heal my pallid limping soul
That failed beneath the strain.
Cure it of crippling doubt and fear
That I may stride again,
Stalwart in faith and quick to help
Some faltering fellow men.

* * *

The Call From the Mission Field.

"Grieve not the Holy Spirit of God"—grieved, and deeply grieved, must that Comforter divine be also when He sees how small a section of the Christian Church takes any living sacrificial share in the work of world-evangelization; how few parents dedicate their children from their birth to this glorious enterprise; and how poor and almost shabby appear our money offerings for the task which is of all work the nearest to our Lord's heart, compared with what we spend on our own luxuries, not to mention what we imagine to be our necessities. When "the fruit of the Spirit which is love" glows in our hearts, missions will cease to be starved to withering-point in many fields, and the Holy Spirit's grief will be turned into joy over the Church's labor of love. Every man a missionary in his home, his business, his parish, and every man pulling his full strength to make our Lord's way known upon earth, His saving health among all nations—that is the ideal. How can the Spirit but be grieved when that Lord's first missionary command to pray the Lord of the harvest to send out laborers, and His last command to the laborers to go and make disciples, have so little weight with a great host of communicants of His Church? If when the Spirit once said, "Separate Me Barnabas and Saul," the Church had said, or they had themselves said, that they could not be spared, the history of the Church, and of the world, too, would have been very different even from what it is.—Canon R. C. Joynt.

* * *

A Strange Family.

The father has never missed church or Sunday School in twenty-three years. The mother has had a perfect record for eleven years. A son has not missed for twelve years. A daughter has been at the evening service every Sunday for eight years.

What's the matter with this family, anyway? Don't they ever have company on Sunday to keep them away from church?

Don't they ever get up tired on Sunday morning?

Don't they belong to any lodges, where they get their religion, instead of at their Father's house, or to any clubs, or to anything?

Don't they ever have headaches, or colds, or nervous spells, or tired feelings, or sudden calls out of the city, or week-end parties, or business trips, or picnics, or any other trouble?

Don't they have a radio, so that they can get some good sermons from out-of-town preachers?

Don't they ever get a lot more good out of reading a sermon out of a book?

Don't they ever get disgusted with the social Gospel, or whatever it is that their minister preaches?

What's the matter with this family anyway, and why are they so happy and cheerful? We leave it to you to answer. —Rev. W. W. Wilke, Pana, Ill.

* * *

The Secret of Peace.

The great spirits of Christendom have often tried to tell us their secret. In the end their voice has brought us much the same message. Let the great soul of Cardinal Mercier of Belgium speak for them. "In view of my age, and that intimacy of heart which unites us, you may allow me to betray a secret. Like every one else I have known joy and I have known suffering, during the course of my life, but I have never been unhappy. Whether in the years of peace, or whether in the years of war, whether in poverty or in prosperity, whether in failure or in success, never have I ceased to feel deep in my heart a sense of tranquility, confidence and peace. I must tell you the secret. It lies in giving yourself confidently to the goodness of the Lord."—Rev. Dr. Louis Sherrill.

* * *

STAR OF MY HEART.

Star of my heart, I follow from afar,
Sweet Love on high, lead on where shepherds are,
Where Time is not, and only dreamers are.
Star from of old, Magi Kings are dead
And a foolish Saxon seeks the manger-bed.
O lead me to Jehovah's child
Across this dreamland lone and wild,
Then I will speak this prayer unsaid,
And kiss His little haloed head—
"My star and I, we love Thee, little Child."

Except the Christ be born again this night,
In dreams of all men, saints and sons of shame,
The world will never see His Kingdom bright.
Star of all hearts, lead onward through the night
Past death-black deserts, doubts without a name,
Past hills of pain and mountains of new sin
To that far sky where mystic births begin,
Where dreaming ears the angel-song shall win.
Our Christmas shall be rare at dawning there,
And each shall find his brother fair,
Like a little child within:
All hearts of earth shall find new birth
And wake, no more to sin.

—Vachel Lindsay.

* * *

For the Southern Churchman.

NEW LIGHT.

Minnie R. Dreesen.

Lord, give me light that I may see,
The wondrous things you've done for me.
Not just to ask for help and care—
But see your beauty everywhere.

FOR THE YOUNG PEOPLE

For the Southern Churchman.

NIGHT'S SPARKLING SEA.

Alice M. Spokes.

I gaze in gratitude of sight
Upon a sea of blue at night;
A sea of planets—glittering spars,
With crested waves of sparkling stars.

My eyes, in admiration, shine
For fear I lose a gem of Thine;
Imprisoning safe within their gaze
A vague and restless, twinkling maze.

And when I view such wonders—God,
Where human feet have never trod,
Upon this sea of blazing light,
I sail my soul to You this night!

* * *

For the Southern Churchman.

THOSE RECTORY CHILDREN.

Chapter 5.

The Missionary.

M. L. G.

It was a bright Sunday morning. Claire lay out in the sunshine on the porch that opened from the upstair's hall. A tall hemlock whose boughs she could almost touch through the railing was fast shedding its snow blanket. "Plop!" went a mass of soft whiteness to the ground. The bough sprang back, and Claire's face was sprayed with tiny drops.

The house was very quiet. All the other children had gone with Father to Sunday School. Mother came to the door, all dressed for church.

"Not crying, pet?" she cried anxiously.

Claire burst out laughing. "No Mother, it was the tree crying to lose its snow!"

"Cindy will come up to see you, while I'm gone," said Mother, wiping the drops from Claire's face with her handkerchief, that smelled a Sunday smell of "Florida water." "Get her to tell Uncle Danger to put you in if you get tired or cold. You wouldn't rather I'd stay?"

"I'll be all right, Mother. I jus' hope the missionary won't talk too long."

"Maybe you'll get a little nap out here in the sunshine." Mother put one arm around Claire to hold her while she arranged the pillows with the other. "Then, when we come back, you will feel so well you will enjoy Mr. Craig."

"A missionary is what I can never be," Claire said in a troubled voice, as Mother tucked the blankets more firmly around her.

"A blessing is what you can be, and are!" Mother kissed her forehead. She put Claire's favorite doll, Amy, just inside the covers. "The Grays are coming by for me. We'll all be back, before you know it!"

And so it was. Claire heard the Grays drive up, Mr. Gray's big voice and laughter, the horses' hoofs sounding more faintly. The sunshine was warm on her face, the hemlock stretched friendly arms into the blue, blue sky. Claire pulled Amy close. Amy looked very sleepy, with her waxen eyelids closed. Claire could not keep her own eyes open. Cindy came on tiptoe to the door.

"'Tain't no trouble lookin' after Miss Claire dis yuh mawnin'," she said with a chuckle, as she went back to the kitchen where Uncle Danger was leaning back in his cane chair, resting; "she done gone 'sleep same ez if twuz de middle of de night."

But Claire waked in time to hear the return. First Kent and Philip, dashing up the stairs and shouting:

"We stayed all through!"

"An' we were good." That was Kent.

"A lady fwowned at me," Philip put in, "an' I fwowned right out loud at her!"

"He on'y made a little noise, Claire," Kent explained.

"Like this," Philip cried, "oo-oo-oogh! But I was goin' to fwown some more, but Mother looked no."

Then Winnie and David were on the porch.

"O Claire, you'll like the missionary." Winnie said, "And he's goin' to write us Chinese names after dinner, to keep for always."

"He said the Lord's Prayer in Chinese for us, in Sunday School," David added. "It's good the Lord knows everything, 'cause that was the funniest lot of sounds! I wouldn't have known it meant a prayer."

"And this is our fine girl, Claire," a voice said from the door, and there were Mother, Father and the Missionary. Claire caught her breath in sudden fear, but the next minute the missionary had both her hands in one of his and Claire had to answer his friendly smile with her own timid one.

"I've heard of Claire," said Mr. Craig. "I think, Claire, I've wanted to see you more than you have me. Your Mother said I might just speak to you now. But I'm going to stay here all day, and I'll tell you later of a message from someone in China to you."

That Sunday always stayed in Claire's memory as a dream. She was moved back into Mother's room for her dinner, and while she ate she could hear the voices and laughter coming up from the dining-room. Kent's and Philip's rose to shouts. What a lot of funny stories the missionary must know about China! And who ever had heard of her, in China, and sent her a message?

This fascinating question was with her all afternoon. After dinner Mr. Craig and Father smoked their pipes in Father's study, and then they had a walk with the boys and Winnie. During this time Mother read to Claire and heard her Catechism. This being so strange a Sunday the others must wait until next week for their Sunday reading. But at last Father came in to carry her down to the study. Claire loved the study—Father's desk, the walls with their book-shelves and pictures, the smell of pipe-smoke, the "Open Franklin," giving out a rosy warmth when the blower was taken down.

Here were gathered Mr. Craig and the other children. Mother followed Claire with her little pillow and light coverlit. In Father's arms, with the pillow under the place where her back would hurt, and the little quilt thrown lightly over, Claire turned her bright eyes to Mr. Craig.

"You've waited patiently, little lass," he said smiling. "And so have I, indeed, for I promised before I left China to tell you this story."

(To be continued.)

* * *

The Law of Use.

"I am almost afraid to use this beautiful table," said the owner. The cabinetmaker ran his hand across the polished surface and felt the thickness of the wood. "What are you afraid of?" he asked brusquely. "You can't wear out that table. Why, do you know nowadays they would make fifty veneered tables out of just the wood you've got in this one; but this—the more you use it, the better for it, madam. The only flaw there is on it now is this worm-hole, and that came, you say, when you had it stored away in the loft."

"You're too bright and lovely to be wearing yourself out doing so much for other people," said one girl to another. "I can't be very good stuff to begin with, then," was the girl's retort. "Trying to live happily with one's neighbors never wore anybody out yet, unless the person was of such thin veneer that she was afraid people would find her out."

There is one law for the solid people and the solid woods, and that is the law of constant, well-sunned, well-aired, cheery use. Only veneer is injured by the common, practical, wholesome duties of every day life.—Forward.

* * *

Behind-Time Sallie.

Sallie Cole was the jolliest little girl in the whole block. That is, she was most of the time, and every one liked to have her around. But she had one fault that tried her poor mother and made her brother really cross. She was never on time. Day after day it was the same.

"Wash the dishes quickly, dear," mother would say.

"Yes, mother!" But Sallie never did. She would stand with her hands in the dishpan, playing with a cup or a spoon, and dream for an hour.

"Sallie! What are you doing? Have you finished the dishes and swept the crumbs around the table?"

"No, mother. I'll get it done right away," was the answer every day, but it would be an hour before Sallie had the dishes washed and the crumbs swept.

And school days were worse.

"Breakfast is ready, Sallie."

"But, mother, I'm not dressed yet," and Sallie kept every one waiting while she put on her shoes and washed her hands and face.

It did not matter to Sallie, not even when big brother Jack promised to give her a nickel each morning that she was ready for breakfast when mother called.

"Now look here, little behind-timer sister, you will be late to school again," he scolded.

Sallie only laughed. "It really doesn't matter if I am late. Anyway, you wait to give me a ride, so I almost always get there when the bell rings."

But this morning Brother Jack did not wait to give Sallie a ride to school. He was so cross he hurried away to his office and left her to walk. She was late again, and Mr. Marks, the principal, was in the room when she came in.

"Why are you always late?" he asked sternly, and Sallie had to tell him in front of all the children and her teacher.

Now you would think Sallie would do better after that, but she did not. She still dreamed and loitered and took a long, long time to do things.

One morning, after the summer vacation, mother received a letter from Grandfather Cole. "I shall be there Tuesday afternoon at three o'clock to take Sallie to the farm with me," he had written.

Now grandfather's farm was the nicest place in the world. There was nothing Sallie liked better than to stay there in the summer time with grandfather and grandmother. And today was Tuesday.

Mother went into the kitchen where Sallie was supposed to be washing dishes. As usual, she was just dreaming, with her hands in the dishpan.

"Hurry, dear," mother said, "or you will not get through before—"

Mother did not finish what she started to say. She turned quickly and went out on the porch to watch for grandfather. Soon he came. He talked with mother. Then he peeped into the kitchen.

"Why, why, grandmother! When did you come?" Sallie cried.

"I came just now, Salliekin, to take you back with me, but I see you haven't your work finished. And I can't wait," grandfather replied.

"Oh, please, please wait. Just a minute!" Sallie begged. "I'll be done right away, if you will wait. Please, grandfather!"

"Can't do it this time, Sallie. Why, it is three o'clock now, and I must get home," and grandfather went away in a great hurry.

Poor Sallie! She put her head down on the table by the dishpan and cried and cried. To think she could not go with grandfather all because the dishes were not washed. And grandfather had said quite loudly that it was three o'clock.

Then she stopped crying. Whose fault was it she could not go? Hadn't mother often said, "Get your work done, dear?" and hadn't brother Jack always called her "Little Behind-Time?" Well, they never would have another chance to say such things, she promised the cups and saucers as she finished the dishes, oh, very quickly.

She kept her promise and the next time grandfather came she was all through with her work and ready to go with him to the farm.

And when the school-bell rang in September she was there on time, ready to march in with all the other children. Not once all that year did Miss Lane have to say, "How is it you are late again, Sallie?"—Junior World.

* * *

GOD IS LIFE.

God is life and breath to me;
There can be no death for me;
God is life—a part of me;
Naught without Him I would be.
In His image I am made
I live in Him—am not afraid;
I see, I hear, I feel Him nigh;
Smiling when my best I try
To do each day that I may grow;
Ever reaping what I sow.
God is life and breath to me;
There can be no death for me.
—Magda Brandon, in Homiletic Review.

* * *

Icelandic Ponies.

For many years I have been interested in Iceland—misnamed because, comparatively speaking, but little ice is to be found there. Its life, which centers around its remarkable ponies, is especially attractive. Iceland has a climate similar to ours where traveling from place to place is dependent almost wholly upon ponies, although automobiles are growing in number as roadways are built.

This island, lying in the North Atlantic, some three hundred miles southeast of Greenland, with its extreme north just within the Arctic Circle, is comfortably warm much of the time because of the Gulf Stream which flows up the south coast and northward along the west coast. This stream does much in counteracting the polar currents and in softening the climate.

In these days, when horses are constantly being withdrawn from our traffic congested highways, it is a pleasure to know of these shaggy little ponies which are so much needed in their homeland.

Some one has said that the burdens of Iceland, are borne almost exclusively on the backs of its ponies. Everybody travels in the interior on ponies, which are raised in the country, because that is the best means of conveyance. For hundreds of years it has been the only means. Every man, woman and child of Iceland can ride. If there is a long distance to travel, extra ponies are taken along to relieve those being ridden every hour. This primitive mode of traveling from farm to farm is interesting, from all accounts, and much to be desired over an automobile when roads are merely tracks and the speed of necessity is not more than from five to ten miles an hour.

These Icelandic ponies are strong and very sure-footed, often going very fast over the stony ground and seldom stumbling, even when obliged to pick their way over the lava rocks and boulders which strew much of the ground in certain sections, or when going in single file along the shelving sides of rocks hundreds of feet up in the air. Bridges, like highways, are rarely to be found, so in crossing deep streams, which are not easily forded on foot, people rely on these little steeds who keep their feet in spite of rolling stones and swift currents.

Icelanders show great consideration for their ponies. The animals are always well fed and well cared for. They live by grazing in summer, and in the winter on small amounts of hay, supplemented by the heads of dried codfish.

The chief domestic animals of this country, besides the ponies, are cattle and sheep. Grass here is luxuriant in many valleys, and during the summer months it is mown for fodder. On the quantity of hay harvested depends the number of sheep and ponies and cattle which each farmer can keep over the long winter. With the exception of sheep and horse raising, haymaking is the only agricultural pursuit. Every farm has its small field, but most of the hay grows wild and is a kind of marsh grass found on the boggy moors. When carts cannot be used the ponies take the place of hay carts, great bundles being slung over their backs, one on each side.

The small sure-footed ponies are greatly in demand in other countries, many people liking the peculiar gait of some of them, which is half trot and half canter. When they get to Denmark and other countries that buy them, they are, of course taught not to fear motor cars, but in their native land they are very much frightened of them and they rear and plunge and run like wild creatures. In time this problem will be solved, but at present Icelandic ponies are not used to automobiles, as there are only about four hundred miles of roadway over which they may travel with comfort.—Our Dumb Animals.

* * *

The Beauty of the Lord . . . Be Upon Us."

A missionary in Tokio tells of a Japanese woman who came to speak to her about having her daughter received into the school for girls, which the teacher was conducting. She asked if only beautiful girls were admitted. "No," was the reply, "we take any girl who desires to come." "But," continued the woman, "all your girls I have seen are very beautiful." The teacher replied: "We tell them of Christ and seek to have them take Him into their hearts, and this makes their faces lovely." The woman answered: "Well, I do not want my daughter to become a Christian, but I am going to send her to your school to get that look in her face."

Matteson once said, "Nothing shines of its own light. The radiance of everything is borrowed." Jesus was beautiful. It was not a borrowed radiance. It was the most exalted form of beauty known to humankind. There is no higher, for we beheld "the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ". It made Jesus the transcendent figure of all time. It was this beauty the Psalmist desired, when he said, "Let the beauty of the Lord our God be upon us". If we would have the highest known beauty, then let us remember we are beautiful in the degree that we reflect the divine: God's glory in our face.—Norman Elliott Lambly, in Lutheran Herald.

* * *

The Nearest Duty.

Moses spent long years in the desert in keeping watch over the flocks of his father-in-law. But he did well the common task and one day his great moment came when God appeared to him in the burning bush, and from then on his life was lived on the heights. The apostles were good fishermen before they were made fishers of men. What the world needs today is for every man and every woman to do the duty that lies nearest; to stick to the job in hand and not be a shirk; to regard all life, including their common task, as sacred in the sight of God.

* * *

HANGING ON.

It's hanging on that does it,
When others faint and tire;
To keep a-going onward
To climb a little higher.
Some folks are always weary;
They say it can't be done,
While others keep on trying,
And find in work their fun.

It's hanging on that does it,
It takes a lot of grit,
But the more of that you're spending
The more you have of it;
And soon it gets as easy
As singing an old, old song,
Forget that you are plugging,
And days just slide along.

It's hanging on that does it,
Folks see you standing pat,
They say you are a wonder,
A genius, and all that;
You laugh at their exclaiming,
"Superior brain or brawn",
And know that all the difference
Is just in hanging on.
—R. Walter Wright, in Boy's Friend.

* * *

Trusted Christ.

In a creed we believe about a person or circumstance; but in faith we repose our trust upon a person. We must not believe about Christ only, but in Him, as Livingstone did, when on one occasion he was opposed at nightfall by an army of infuriated savages, and was tempted to steal away in the dark; but his eye lit on the promise, "I will be with you all the days," and he wrote, "I went to sleep because I knew it was the perfect word of a perfect gentleman." Do not believe only about Christ, but in Him.—F. B. Meyer.

* * *

JESOUS AHATONHIA.

'Twas in the moon of wintertime,
When all the birds had fled,
That mighty Gitchi Manitou
Sent angel choirs instead;
Before their light the stars grew dim,
And wond'ring hunters heard the hymn
Jesus your King is born,
In excelsis gloria.

Within a lodge of broken bark
The tender Babe was found,
A ragged robe of rabbit skin
Enwrapp'd His beauty 'round;
But as the hunter braves drew nigh,
The angel song rang loud and high,
Jesus your King is born,
In excelsis gloria.
—Indian Words by Jean de Brebeuf (1642). Translated by J. E. Middleton.

Classified Advertisments and Notices

All notices and advertisements, excepting positions wanted, will be inserted in this department at a rate of 20 cents per agate line each insertion. Special raes to contracts of any length. A rate of 15 cents per line is made to persons seeking positions. No advertisement accepted for less than 50 cents.

Copy for this department must be received not later than Tuesday of the week in which it is intended that the first insertion shall appear.

SPECIAL NOTICES.

CHURCH VESTMENTS.
Cathedral Studio, Church embroideries, Altar and Pulpit Hangings. Stoles from $6.50. Burse and veil from $10. Surplice from $8. Send for complete line of pure Irish linens by the yard. Silks, fringes and gold thread. Embroidered emblems ready to appy. Altar Guild Handbook, 50c.
50c.
L. V. MACKRILLE
11 W. Kirke St., Chevy Chase, Washington, D. C.
Telephone Wisconsin 2752.

CHURCH LINEN.
FINE IRISH LINEN specially selected for Church use. 36 inches to 54 inches wide, cut any length. Sample of 12 qualities on request. Mary Fawcett Company, 812 Berkeley Avenue, Trenton, N. J.

RAZOR SHARPENER.
SHARPENS ANY STRAIGHT RAZOR, or safety razor. Guaranteed by manufacturers, and I guarantee it to please you. 50 cents per cake, or 3 cakes for $1.00. I take subscriptions for all magazines published at publishers' rates, or less. Sold by a wheel chair invalid. Edward P. Broxton, R. F. D., Blythe, Ga.

FOUNTAIN PENS.
A FOUNTAIN PEN AT A 1933 VALUE, with the Spencerian quality and smooth writing ease famous for seventy-five years. Guaranteed. Points fine and medium. Colors, gloss black, green and gold, Burgundy, blue and black, grey pearl. Price $2.00. Sold by a shut-in wheel chair invalid. Edward P. Broxton, R. F. D., Blythe, Ga.

HELP WANTED.

DEATHS

WALTER JOSEPH SUTHON.

On September 21, 1934, at his home in New Orleans, Louisiana, WALTER JOSEPH SUTHON, beloved husband of Elizabeth Meredith Smith, passed from this life to Eternity. Two sons, Walter Joseph Suthon, Jr., and Archibald Magill Suthon, survive him, also ten grandchildren.

"I hope to see my Pilot face to face
When I have crossed the bar."

CHURCH INTELLIGENCE.

(Continued from page 17.)

is now president of the Young People's Fellowship in a New Jersey Parish.

Only American Churchman Present.

While visiting his native city, Aberdeen, Scotland, Gavin T. Binner, secretary of the vestry of Trinity Church, Chambersburg, Pa., was highly honored at a recent service commemorating the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the consecration of Bishop Seabury. At the time of the service it was learned that Mr. Binner was the only member of the American Church present. He was, therefore, invited to sit between the Bishop of Argyll and the Isles and Bishop Danson of Carlisle.

Perfect Attendance.

For the past eighteen weeks not a boy in Richard Baney's Sunday-school class of St. Johns Church, Bellefont, Pa., has been absent or late. One of the members comes seven miles to attend and another eight.

NEBRASKA.

Rt. Rev. E. V. Shayler, D. D., Bishop.

Diocesan Convention.

Rededication to missionary enterprise, and unshaken optimism, were the keynotes of the Diocesan Convention held this week. A laymen's dinner was held Tuesday evening at the Elks' Club, addressed by the Rev. Dr. H. P. Prince of Lake Forest, Ill., and Mr. Stewart A. Cushman of Chicago. Mr. Cushman outlined the work done by the Chicago Churchmens' Club in the forty-five years of its history. Dr. Prince, from the clergy side, saw the great value of the Men's Club work in the acceleration of all Church life by the organized impetus of the laity. Temporary officers elected some time ago in Lincoln were made permanent. Ed. K. Cochran of Omaha is the president. A greeting was given to Fr. Paul Markovich, Serbian Eastern Orthodox Priest of St. Nicholas Church, Omaha. A telegram was read from Governor R. L. Cochran regretting his inability to attend the gathering.

Wednesday morning the Convention proper assembled with the Bishop as celebrant for the Holy Communion service. Dr. Prince preached from the text, "Whose I am and whom I serve," stressing personal Christian life.

The Bishop in his annual message made considerable reference to the General Convention, and also to problems arising out of the necessary economy program. He urged earnest participation in the coming, "Forward Movement" for the promotion and development of greater spiritual life in the church. The following were elected to the Executive Council of the Diocese: The Rev. Messrs. F. Clayton, T. J. Walker, L. W. McMillin, G. Sibbald, A. G. Asboe, D. J. Gallagher; Messrs. F. Beck, Q. Joyner, G. Whitcomb, L. Hilton, R. D. Neeley and Ed. K. Cochran. The last two in each case being the appointees of the Bishop.

Deputies to the Provincial Synod at Fargo, N. D., are the Rev. Messrs. T. J. Walker, D. J. Gallagher, E. J. Secker, and Messrs. J. S. Hedelund, I. Joyner, A. C. Pancoast and S. Mutz. Bradley Malkeson was reappointed treasurer and Miss M. Knight, Secretary. Rural Deans named by the Bishop were the Rev. A. G. Asboe (Southern), Dean McGinley (Omaha), the Rev. William J. H. Petter (Southeastern), L. Granley (Northern).

Young People Active.

Young People of St. Mary's, Blair, have redecorated the parish house and furnished drapes for the windows and have also pledged $5 a month toward the general fund of the church.

Uses Rectory as Church.

In the absence of a building, the Rev. L. Gramley of Wayne is using his own house for services and ministering to the largest teachers' college in the state.

Wm. J. H. Petter.

VIRGINIA.

Rt. Rev. H. St. G. Tucker, D. D., Bishop.

Regional Seminary Dinner.

The annual mid-winter Seminary Alumni Dinner took place at the Westmoreland Club, Richmond, Monday night, January 21, with forty-six Alumni present from the three dioceses.

Bishop Goodwin acted as toastmaster. The representative, who came to speak from the Seminary, was the Rev. Alexander C. Zabriskie, S. T. D. Other speakers were: the Rev. Tayor Willis, representing the Diocese of Southern Virginia, and the Rev. Carlton Barnwell, representing Southwestern Virginia. Bishop Bently of Alaska, visiting in Virginia, was also a speaker.

Another feature of the banquet was a gift to the Rev. Charles W. Sheerin from the Richmond Clericus, of Mr. Douglas Freeman's book, "Robert E. Lee," as a farewell present. Testimonial and presentation was made by the Rev. Mr. Ossman of Monumental Church, President of the Richmond Clericus. The Rev. B. B. C. Lisle was Chairman of Arrangements of the Supper.

Make Plans for New Building at Ruins of Old.

Grace Church, Millers Tavern, was burned to the ground on Saturday evening, a total loss of the building, and the building behind the church, which was used for the lower classes of the John Moncure High School. The loss was estimated at nearly $2,500. It is the oldest Episcopal congregation for Negroes in Essex County; also the John Moncure High School is the only High School for Negro youths owned and operated by the Episcopal Church in the Diocese of Virginia. No lives were lost. The congregation had a meeting Sunday morning around the ruins of the church and started plans for rebuilding, and they hope to build a brick building. A considerable amount of timber has already been promised by the negroes themselves from their own farms to be used for flooring and roofing in the new building, and also for the erection of a new building for the John Moncure High School.

FLORIDA.

Rt. Rev. Frank A. Juhan, D. D., Bishop.

Rev. Mr. Dudley Resigns Charge at Good Shepherd.

The Rev. Thomas E. Dudney, who became rector of the Church of the Good Shepherd, Jacksonville, Florida, a little more than a year ago, has been compelled to resign and give up the work in this great parish, following an illness of several months. Due to an extremely nervous condition which began last summer, Mr. Dudney has been unable to discharge his duties regularly, and in November last, went to Richmond for medical treatment, which we are thankful to say has been responsible for considerable improvement. However, the doctors have ordered that he must have a period of indefinite rest before complete recovery may be made.

The Rev. Mr. Dudney, with Mrs. Dudney and their two young daughters, are at present at Ormond Beach at the home of Mrs. Dudney's parents, and his many friends in the Church of the Good Shepherd and throughout the Diocese, both clergy and laity will be gratified to know of his improvement and will pray for a complete restoration.

The vestry of the Church of the Good Shepherd at its December meeting, regretfully accepted the resignation of Mr. Dudney, which took effect December 31. Mr. Dudney expects to remain in the Diocese of Florida and to resume his ministry in this diocese as soon as he is permitted to do so by his physicians.

Since January 1, the Rev. Richard Allen Hatch, formerly Canon of St. Luke's Church, Altoona, Pennsylvania, has been acting as Locum Tenens at the Church of the Good Shepherd.

LONG ISLAND.

Rt. Rev. E. M. Stires, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. J. I. B. Larned, Suffragan.
Rt. Rev. F. W. Creighton, S. T. D., Suffragan.

Friendly Wednesday Evening Parish Dinner, January 30, at Zion Church, Douglaston.

Mrs. Elinore Morehouse Herrick, Director of the New York Regional Labor Board, the guest speaker, topic: "The Social Significance of Strikes."

A Word About Our Guest Speaker.

It is enough to say that Mrs. Herrick brings to her present post with its import of human welfare and responsibility, great gifts of personality. In addition to the sound judgment and social sympathy needed, she brings the culture and the charm of a lady, and at the present moment her position marks her as one of the most distinctive women of the country. Moreover, she is a loyal and devoted Churchwoman, who finds religion a real factor in everyday affairs, and her own career is the truest commentary here, for Life has not touched her lightly. Bereft a young widow with two small boys, she chose to become a factory worker, and from that job advanced to production manager; then on to Antioch College for a bachelor's degree, and service as secretary to its distinguished president, Dr. Arthur E. Morgan, and then on to the national secretaryship of the Consumer's League, and from there to her present post. But, always, be it noted, the choice of vocation fell in the field that promised fair play to the workers. So I say, it is a great privilege accorded Zion Church people and their friends of Little Neck and Douglaston that we are privileged to meet and hear one who knows so intimately the two great sides of the social and economic order so realistically and sympathetically as Elinor Morehouse Herrick.

Lester Lake Riley.

Personal Notes

The Rev. Edward B. Gary, Trinity Church, Pinapolis, S. C., has accepted a call of rectorship at South Farnham Parish, in Essex County, Virginia, and will take charge February 1. Mr. Gary also becomes Chaplain of Saint Margaret's School. His postoffice address will be Tappahannock.

Dean of Virginia Seminary Visits in Jacksonville.

The Rev. Wallace E. Rollins, D. D., dean of the Virginia Theological Seminary, at Alexandria, was the guest of the Rev. and Mrs. Ambler M. Blackford, at Keystone, South Jacksonville, Florida, for a week of his Christmas vacation.

On Sunday morning, December 30, Dean Rollins preached at St. John's Church on the reaction of the life and message of Christ upon Christians of the first century.

The following day the Bishop and local clergy were invited to meet Dr. Rollins at a luncheon, given by the Rev. Mr. Blackford at the George Washington Hotel. An informal address of welcome to the Diocese was made by the Bishop, and a response given by Dr. Rollins in which he told something of the problems facing the seminaries of the Church in the present day.

Dr. Rollins is a graduate of the Yale Divinity School and, before coming to the Virginia Seminary as profesor of Ecclesiastical History in 1913, he had for several years been professor of Bible and Ethics at Sweetbriar College. Three years ago he succeeded the Rev. Dr. Berryman Green as Dean of the Seminary. The Rev. Wm. Jeffery Alfriend, of Tallahassee and the Rev. Mesrs. Ambler M. and Randolph F. Blackford (the latter now of Leesburg, Florida), together with the late Rev. Messrs. Menard Doswell and C. Gregg Richardson, were all in the class which entered the Virginia Seminary the year of Dr. Rollins' arrival there. The Dean is the only surviving member of the faculty of that year.

A pleasant feature of Dr. Rollins' visit was the cordial reception given him by the Sweetbriar Alumnae of St. John's Parish, who had been in his classes in this famous Virginia institution.

Deaths.

The Rev. Robert Coles, retired minister of the Diocese of Virginia, died at his home in Charlottesville on January 17. Mr. Coles was born at his father's home, Estouteville, in Albemarle County, on June 29, 1862. He took his college course at the University of Pennsylvania, and later graduated at the Philadelphia Divinity School, and was ordained deacon in 1885, by Bishop Whipple, and priest by Bishop Whitaker in 1888. He was rector of the Church of Our Saviour in Jenkins, Pa., from 1898 to 1910, and St. Paul's Church, Hamilton, Va., 1910-1914. Rector of Slaughter's Parish, Rapidan, Va., 1914 to 1916. Rector of Christiana Hundreds, Del., 1916-1919. He served other parishes until his retirement from active work in 1927. His funeral was held in Christ Church, Charlottesville, January 19, 1935, and was conducted by the Rt. Rev. Bishop Goodwin, Bishop Coadjutor of Virginia, and Dr. Gibson, rector of Christ Church. The interment was in the family cemetery at his old colonial home place, Enniscarthy, Albemarle County. Mr. Coles married in 1908 Miss Mary M. Minor. She, two sons and several brothers survive him.

Population Increasing.

Born, a son to the Rev. and Mrs. A. E. Koch, St. Peter's Parish, Hazleton, Pa.; born, a son to the Rev. and Mrs. Fred W. Trumbore, St. Clement's Church, Wilkes-Barre, Pa.; born, a daughter to the Rev. and Mrs. Glen B. Walter, Church of the Redeemer, Sayre, Pa.

The Rev. Herbert M. Clarke, Ph. D., of Syracuse, N. Y., is recovering from a serious operation. Dr. Clarke will be eighty years old in July.

The Rev. Harry Benjamin Meyer, missionary at Calvary Church, Homer, N. Y., St. John's Church, Marathon, and Zion Church, McLean, has resigned, due to ill health. The Rev. Herbert G. Coddington, D. D., rector emeritus of Grace Church, Syracuse, has assumed temporary charge of the work.

The Rev. John E. Kinney, priest-in-charge of St. Paul's Church, Endicott, N. Y., and of St. Michael and All Angels, West Endicott, has resigned to accept an army chaplaincy. The Rev. Sidney Winter is the supply pastor.

The Rev. F. C. Smith has resigned the secretaryship of the various Boards of Trustees, as well as the position of Secretary of the Diocese of Central New York. Mr. Smith is seriously ill at his home in Utica. The Ven. A. A. Joynes has been appointed Secretary pro-tem.

The Rev. A. D. Caslor, priest-in-charge of the work at Willard and Trumansburg, has been added to the list of clergymen in the Diocese of Central New York, who have been incapacitated by illness.

The Rev. John Buckman Walthour, formerly rector of Grace Church, Waycross, Ga., accepted a call to become rector of St. Andrew's Parish, Tampa, Fla., and was instituted in charge of the latter parish by Bishop Wing on Epiphany Day. Mr. Walthour accompanied Bishop Remington as one of the speakers sent from the National Field Department to visit points in South

For the Church

R. GEISSLER, INC.
450 SIXTH AVE. NEAR 10th ST. NEW YORK
Church Furnishings
IN CARVED WOOD AND MARBLE · BRASS · SILVER FABRICS + WINDOWS
EST. 1877

CHOIR VESTMENTS

Cassocks, Cottas and Caps. Special low prices. Samples and prices on request.
Poplin Canterbury Caps, $1.00 each.
Paper Patterns for Choir and Church.
Vestments for sale.

HENRY HAYTER, 8205 Riverside Drive, Box 618, Rte. 1, St. Petersburg, Fla.

FLOWERS BY WIRE EVERYWHERE
Mosmiller Florist
115 E Main St.
424 E. Grace St
RICHMOND, VA.

CONFIRMATION PAPERS

By
CANON F. E. HOWITT

1. Confirmation and Baptism.
2. Baptism and the Christian Covenant
3. The Baptismal Covenant—Repentance.
4. The Baptismal Covenant—Faith and the Faith.
5. The Baptismal Covenant—The Faith.
6. The Baptismal Covenant—Obedience.
7. The Lord's Supper.
8. The Means of Grace.

A series of informing pamphlets compiled by Canon F. E. Howitt They have an inestimable value in instructing those who contemplate membership in the Church, and for impressing the already confirmed with the sacredness and meaning of this holy ritual.

Price, single pamphlet, each..... 5 cents
Complete set of eight..... .....25 cents

Order from

SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN COMPANY
Richmond, Va.

CREOMULSION
Your own druggist is authorized to cheerfully refund your money on the spot if you are not relieved by Creomulsion.
COUGHS

The Ewart's Cafeteria
EXCELLENT FOOD
REASONABLE PRICES
Richmond, Va.
112-114 N. 5th St.
Norfolk, Va.
112-114 Market St.
Washington, D. C.
522 13th, N. W.

Educational

The General Theological Seminary

CHELSEA SQUARE, NEW YORK

The next Academic year begins on the last Wednesday in September

Special students admitted and Graduate Courses for graduates of other Theological Seminaries

The requirements for admission and other particulars can be had from THE DEAN, 1 Chelsea Square, New York, N. Y.

SHENANDOAH VALLEY ACADEMY

Certificates accepted by universities, colleges, West Point, Annapolis. The Academy's experienced teachers, cultural atmosphere, limited numbers, military discipline enable it to prepare boys to succeed in college. For catalogue write: Col. B. M. Roszel, Supt., Winchester, Va.

ST. MARGARET'S SCHOOL

TAPPAHANNOCK, VIRGINIA.

A Church School for girls. Boarding Department limited to 70. Colleeg Preparatory Course and Intermediate Grades. Athletics. Very moderate cost.

Country life and simplicity without isolation. Beautiful grounds on Rappahannock River. Three dormitories for different stages.

EDITH LATANE, Headmistress.

ST. CHRISTOPHER'S

A Church Boarding and Day School

Healthful, beautiful and historic surroundings. Boarding Department limited to 50 boys. Rate, $650. Reduction to sons of clergymen and missionaries. Illustrated catalogue on request.

REV. C. G. CHAMBERLAYNE, Ph. D., LL. D., Headmaster, Richmond, Virginia.

The Virginia Theological Seminary

ALEXANDRIA, VIRGINIA

For catalogue and other information, Address THE DEAN

The Beckford School

WOODSTOCK, VIRGINIA.

A school for younger boys. Second grade through Junior High School. On modern farm in Shenandoah Valley. Summer camp. Limited enrollment. Fifty dollars monthly.

EDMUND BURKE WHELAN, Headmaster.

The Bishop Payne Divinity School

The accredited Seminary of the Church for training colored men for the ministry. The curriculum covers the full course for Deacons and Priest's Orders. The degree of D. D. awarded.

For catalogue and information, apply to Rev. F. G. Ribble, M. A., D. D., Dean Petersburg, Va.

The Episcopal Theological School

Cambridge, Massachusetts.

Affiliated with Harvard University. Dean H. B. Washburn, 3 Mason Street.

Florida last November, and his coming to succeed the late Rev. Francis S. White, in charge of one of the largest parishes in this diocese is gladly welcomed.

The Rev. Edward B. Guerry of Charleston, S. C., has definitely accepted the call to become minister of St. John's Episcopal Church in Tappahannock, Virginia, and St. Paul's Church, Millers Tavern, Virginia, it was announced by the vestry of South Farnham Parish.

The Rev. Mr. Guerry is expected to preach his first sermon at Tappahannock on the morning of February 3, and following this will preach in the evening at Millers Tavern. He succeeds the Rev. J. Haller Gibboney, who had to resign from his charge because of ill health. Besides the two churches, Mr. Guerry will also have the instruction of Bible classes at St. Margaret's School.

Mr. Guerry is the son of the late Bishop Guerry of South Carolina and is a graduate of the University of the South at Sewanee, Tenn., and also of the law school of the University of Pennsylvania. He practiced law for a year before deciding to enter the ministry.

The Rev. Tucker Watkins Tayloe, rector of Newton Parish, Front Royal, Virginia, Diocese of Virginia, has accepted the call extended to him to become rector of St. Mark's Church, Palatka, Florida. Mr. Tayloe succeeds the Rev. Francis B. Wakefield, Jr., who took charge of Holy Trinity Church, Gainesville, Florida, on January 1.

It is understood that the Rev. Mr. Tayloe will assume charge of St. Mark's about March 1.

Mr. Tayloe is a graduate, with a B. S. degree, from Hampden-Sidney College and also of the Virginia Theological Seminary, where he received a B. D. degree in 1925. He was born in Danville, Virginia.

Correct Address.

The Rev. Alvin P. Knell is not a resident of Orlando, Fla., as listed in the Living Church Annual; his correct address is 11 High Street, Springfield, Mass.

* * *

Ordinations.

Deacon.

The Rev. Robert Lee Gordon, for the past several months deacon in charge of St. Michael's and All Angel's at Tallahassee, was ordained to the priesthood by Bishop Juhan on the first Sunday after Epiphany, January 13.

The Rev. W. J. Alfriend, rector of St. John's Church, Tallahassee, presented the ordinand; and the sermon was preached by the Bishop.

* * *

Deaths.

The Rev. Francis C. Huber, priest of the Diocese of Bethlehem, retired for a number of years on account of ill health, died in Norristown on December 13, 1934.

The Rev. Benjamin R. Phelps died Sunday, December 23, of penumonia, at the Long Branch Memorial Hospital, Long Branch, N. J. Mr. Phelps was the son of the late Elizabeth Cowdrey and Benjamin R. Phelps, and was born in Cincinnati May 6, 1842. His ancestors came to this country from their ancestral home, Cowdrey Castle, Midhurst, England, in 1634, and settled in Lynn, Mass. Mr. Phelps was a Civil War veteran. He was ordained to the ministry about 1868, and had a number of charges: St. Mark's Church, Newark, N. J.; St. James' Church, Downingtown, Pa., one in Texas, St. Louis, and Orange.

The burial took place in Downingtown, Pa., December 27.

Mr. Phelps will be greatly missed by all who knew him. He was greatly beloved; a true Christian, always ready to help anyone and everyone in trouble.

When Your Head Feels "Stuffy"..

Apply Va-tro-nol ...just a few drops.

Va-tro-nol penetrates deep into the nasal passages, reduces swollen membranes, clears away clogging mucus, brings welcome relief.

Two generous sizes ...30¢ and 50¢.

... USED IN TIME HELPS PREVENT MANY COLDS

Royal Laundry

and

BAND BOX DRY CLEANERS
UNEXCELLED LAUNDRY
and Cleaning Service
Richmond, Virginia.

L. T. CHRISTIAN

FUNERAL DIRECTOR

Boulevard-Park and Patterson Avenue
Richmond, Va.
Office Never Closed
Prices to meet depressed conditions

Edwin S. Gorham, Inc.

Publishers and Booksellers.
Established 1900.

Church Literature and Art, Bibles, Prayer Books and Hymnals, Devotional Books, Parish Requisites.

Catalogues and Information on request.

18 West 45th Street, New York.

Some Important Facts in English Church History

EXAMINED AND REVIEWED

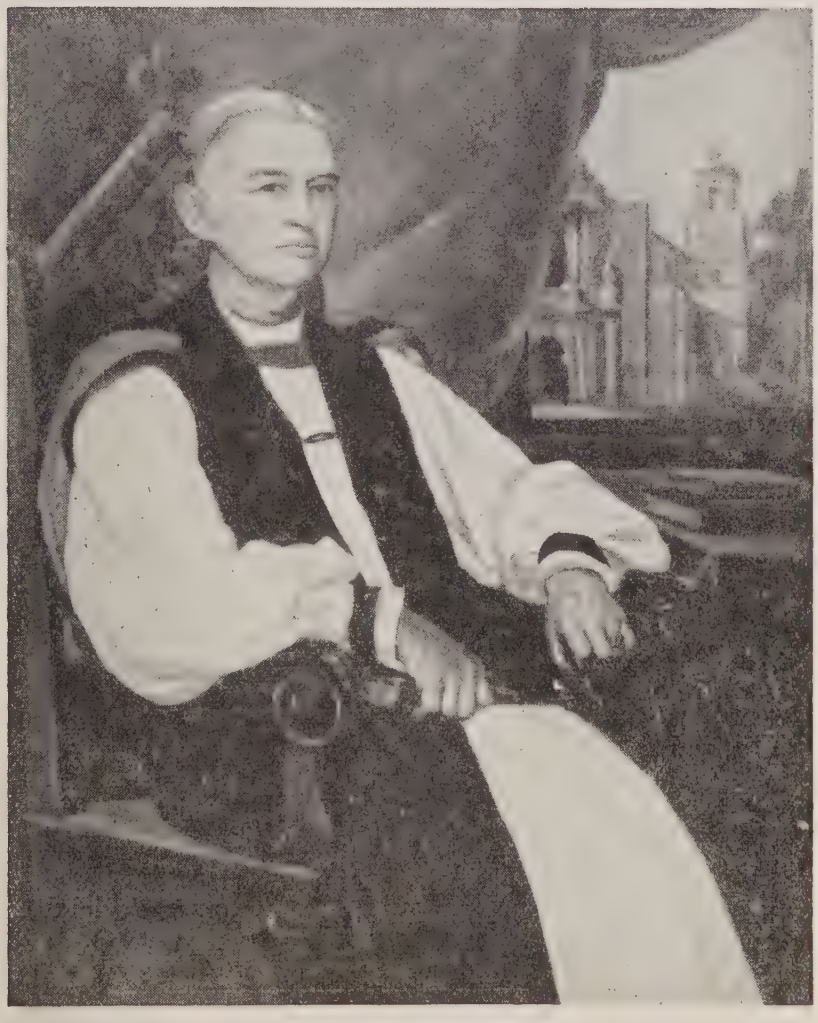
By

REV. W. P. WITSELL, D. D.

This is an illuminating and instructive review of the history of the Episcopal Church in England from the earliest records, with commentaries on the book with the above title compiled by the Rev. C. L. Wells, D. D., of Sewanee, Tenn.

As a digest of the records of the establishment and growth of the Church; its maintenance and continuity of existence as an independent religious body amid the vicissitudes of early English politics, and efforts of outside interference, this review affords a valuable fund of information to churchmen.

In pamphlet form,
Price, 25 cents



For sale by
SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN CO.
Richmond, Va.

DESIGNED FOR THE PROMOTION OF PRACTICAL PIETY, THE DIFFUSION OF RELIGIOUS AND GENERAL INTELLIGENCE, AND THE MAINTENANCE OF THE PRINCIPLES OF THE PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL CHURCH

Southern Churchman

DOMINUS * FRUSTRA * NISI 1835

Vol. 100. RICHMOND, VA., FEBRUARY 2, 1935. No. 5.

THE RT. REV. HIRAM RICHARD HULSE, D. D.

The Twentieth Anniversary of Bishop Hulse's Consecration was Celebrated by the Missionary Diocese of Cuba on Sunday, January 13, 1935.

FOURTH SUNDAY AFTER EPIPHANY.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

A Real Achievement.

It is fitting that our Southern Churchman should come back to us with its enlarged publication and beautiful cover, at Christmas! Congratulations to those strong arms who have weathered it through its turbulent waters the past few years. I look confidently to the great help the Southern Churchman will render to the Church in our Forward Movement.

The Southern Churchman has been read by my great aunts, aunts and grandmother for a hundred years, and I have been a subscriber ever since I have been in Middlesex County, forty years.

Faithfully yours,
Mrs. W. C. Segar.

Stormont, Va.

Personal Notes

The Most Rev. James De Wolf Perry, D. D., Bishop of Rhode Island and Presiding Bishop of the Church in the United States, on a recent visit to Oklahoma, was the guest of honor at a public reception in Trinity Parish, Tulsa, Okla. Some four hundred people, most of them Church people and members of Trinity Parish, had the pleasure of meeting the Presiding Bishop.

Bishop Wyatt Brown and Mr. Richard M. H. Wharton, treasurer of the Diocese of Harrisburg, Pennsylvania, sailed for Bermuda, January 26. They expect to return February 8.

Bishop Woodcock of Kentucky has had to cancel all engagements until April 1, because of illness.

Bishop Goodwin in Auto Accident: The Rt. Rev. F. D. Goodwin, Bishop Coadjutor of the Diocese of Virginia was painfully bruised, but not seriously hurt, when his automobile skidded off the Washington highway and turned completely over on Tuesday afternoon while he was on his way to the Episcopal Theological Seminary at Alexandria. The accident occurred about five miles north of Richmond. The Bishop sustained painful bruises to his leg and back. He is now at his home in Westhampton, where he probably will be confined for a week or more.

Bishop Keeler Visits Old Parish.

The Rt. Rev. Stephen E. Keeler Bishop Coadjutor of Minnesota, visited his former parish, St. Chrysostom's in Chicago on January 26 and 27. He preached at the morning service, January 27, and was the guest at a reception in his honor that afternoon. It was while rector of St. Chrysostom's that Dr. Keeler was elected to the Episcopate.

Bishop Jett on Vacation.

The Rt. Rev. Robert Carter Jett, D. D., Bishop of the Diocese, left Roanoke on January 21, for approximately a month's holiday in Florida. It is much more convenient for him to be away from the diocese in the winter than in the summer, and he usually follows this practice. He leaves all his diocesan routine behind him and receives very little correspondence, even from the office.

Resignations.

The Rev. Walter S. Pond, rector of St. Barnabas' Church, Chicago, since 1921, and former dean of the Cathedral of SS. Peter and Paul, announced his resignation at the annual parish meeting this week. Fr. Pond was superintendent of Chicago City Missions, while at the Cathedral, and formerly was in charge of St. Jude's Church, South Chicago; St. Philip's Church, Holy Trinity Church, and was superintendent of Chase House for a time.

The Rev. Howard B. Ziegler, priest-in-charge of St. Paul's Church, Savanna, Illinois, for the past three years, has resigned because of ill health. He expects to take an extended rest before resuming his active priestly duties. Fr. Ziegler built up the work of the Church among boys in Savanna to an unusual degree. He is a brother of the Ven. W. H. Ziegler, Archdeacon of Chicago.

The Rev. Walter B. Williamson, for the past five years missionary-in-charge of St. Andrew's, Flint, Michigan, with the supervision also of St. John's, Otter Lake, and Grace Church, Lapeer, resigned to assume charge, on February 1, of Grace Parish, Bay City, with the supervision of St. John's Mission. Mr. Williamson has served in many churches in Michigan, from Detroit to the Far North. He has been canonically resident in the diocese since 1916.

Change of Address.

The Rev. Frank J. Mallett, retired priest of the Diocese of Indianapolis, who has been living in Brooklyn, and has occasionally assisted the clergy of St. Paul's, Flatbush, has changed his address to 66 Church Street, White Plains, New York.

The address of Rev. D. R. Covell, 1611 Spruce, So. Pasadena, Calif., has been changed to 223 West Seventh Street, Cincinnati, Ohio.

The address of the Rev. Frederick A. McNeil, of 2117 W. Jefferson St., Phoenix, Arizona, has been changed to Good Shepherd Mission, Defiance, Arizona.

Ordinations.

The Rev. Charles O. V. Covell was ordained to the Priesthood at Vawter's Church, St. Anne's Parish, Essex County, on January 25, St. Paul's Day, by the Rev. H. St. George Tucker, Bishop of Virginia. The Rev. Clifford L. Stanley of Virginia Theological Seminary, conducted the ordination ceremony and presented the candidate. The Rev. B. B. Comer Lile of Richmond and the Rev. W. B. Lee Milton of Lancaster County took part in the service. Mr. Covell will become rector of St. Ann's Parish. P. O. address is Loretto, Va.

(Continued on page 23.)

CONTENTS

	Page.
Letters to the Editor	2
Personal Notes	2
Editorials	3
Church and World Problems as Others See Them	4
The Thousandfold Page—F. W. Neve	5
A Missionary Anniversary Sermon—Bishop H. R. Hulse	6
Fourth Sunday After the Epiphany—W. E. Callender	7
Weddell Memorial—Rev. Hugh W. Sublett, D. D.	8
Two Hundredth Anniversary of St. Thomas' Church, Barth, N. C.—Part II—By Rev. George MacLaren Brydon, D. D.	11
News From the Front	12
Book Reviews	12
Young People's Fellowship—Rev. R. F. Blackford	13
Church Intelligence	14
Family Department	18
Children's Department	20
Thoughts for the Thoughtful	24

Southern Churchman

SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN COMPANY
Mayo Memorial Church House,
110 West Franklin Street,
Richmond, Va.

Officers.

President, RT. REV. H. ST. GEORGE TUCKER, D. D.
Vice-President, E. OTTO N. WILLIAMS.
Secretary-Treasurer, MR. JOHN H. COOKE.

Board of Directors.

RT. REV. H. ST. GEORGE TUCKER, D. D.
REV CHURCHILL J. GIBSON, D. D.
PEV. GEORGE P. MAYO, D. D.
REV. CHARLES W. SHEERIN.
MR. CARL H. NOLTING.
MR. ALEXANDER W. WEDDELL.
MR. E. RANDOLPH WILLIAMS.
MR. LANGBOURNE M. WILLIAMS, JR.
MISS SUSANNE C. WILLIAMS.

Voting Trustees.

RT. REV. ROBERT CARTER JETT, D. D.
RT. REV. H. ST. GEORGE TUCKER, D. D.
MR. JAMES M. BALL, JR.
MR. ROBERT B. TUNSTALL.
MR. LANGBOURNE M. WILLIAMS, JR.

Editors.

REV. CHARLES W. SHEERIN....Editor
REV. F. W. NEVE, D. D.,
Associate Editor
MRS. CONRAD H. GOODWIN,
Associate Editor
MRS. R. TATE IRVINE.....News Editor
JOHN H. COOKE..Secretary and Manager

Entered at the Post Office in Richmond, Va., as second-class mail matter.

SUBSCRIPTION PRICE.

$3.00 a year in advance. To the Clergy, $2.00. Six months, $1.50. Total subscriptions, three months, 50 cents; 10 cents a copy. Foreign postage, $1.00 additional.

For the convenience of subscribers subscriptions are continued at expiration unless otherwise ordered. Notice of renewal, discontinuance or change of address should be sent two weeks before the date they go into effect.

RECEIPT OF PAYMENT is shown in about two weeks by change of date on address label. If date is not properly extended after each payment, notify us promptly. No receipt for payment will be sent.

Notice post office address. The exact post office address to which we are directing the paper at the time of writing MUST ALWAYS BE GIVEN. Our mailing list is arranged by post office and not alphabetically.

Make all checks and money orders payable to the Southern Churchman, and not to an individual.

ADVERTISEMENTS.—Rates quoted on request. For classified see head of that department.

Representatives wanted in each Parish; liberal commissions.

News concerning the Church at large always welcome.

MURPHY'S HOTEL
RICHMOND VIRGINIA

An old Richmond landmark that has kept the pace. In the heart of that portion of the city most interesting to the traveler.

Write

A. GERALD BUSH, Manager.

SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN

Catholic for every truth of God; Protestant against every error of man.

EDITORIALS

Vol. 100. RICHMOND, VA., FEBRUARY 2, 1935. No. 5.

Using the Forward Movement.

Plans are being formulated to make real and active use of the Forward Movement. The main theme would seem to be Discipleship and, as was predicted in this paper some time ago, this will be approached at present through the regular organizations of the Church.

The great weakness of many fine movements of the past has been some loss of vision and energy somewhere between those who had the making of the plans and their actual execution. We are so prone to take things for granted in the Church that we forget that only as individuals are effected will there be effectiveness in any movement. If the Forward Movement leaders can see that a tremendous energy will have to be used to overcome this natural resistance that has been built up through the years, they may be able to make a real contribution, not only through their own movement, but in all future endeavors.

We might as well face the fact that the great majority of our people are "hard boiled", to use the real language of the day. They are not ready to follow voluntarily anything just because it is announced in the chancel on Sunday morning. As a matter of fact, the opposite is primarily the truth. Half of this behavior is because in the past they have been urged to devote all loyalty to things that were not really of great importance, and with many men and women there is a suspicion that the clergy are only interested in secondary matters at best.

To overcome this natural reaction, it will be necessary to enlist the whole-hearted efforts of the clergy themselves. In our individualistic traditions, in which we believe fundamentally, we have the weakness of allowing clergy to remain individualists in their promotion of churchly movements. Clergy today, however, must be aware that unless a real discipleship is taught and practiced, we will actually face an empty Church that has been emptied even of the Spirit—for the Spirit will seek other channels.

The world today is a hungry world. It does not know "the comfortable Gospel" of Christ. It would rejoice to have reality in the leadership that would come from the Church if the present Forward Movement is taken seriously. From the indifferently read services to the lack of breadth of vision, our Church, like all Christian bodies, needs a real reformation, and the approach to a troubled world can best be made when we realize that this Forward Movement must be taken seriously by all.

Dangers.

One of the smug attitudes of the present day is found in comments we hear from time to time about the phraseology of the Book of Common Prayer. It is true that the language is the beautiful language of an olden time, but when we hear moderns talking as though the problems about which the prayers were written are no longer with us, it causes a smile.

A typical manner is brought to mind from the collect for the Fourth Sunday after the Epiphany. It speaks of dangers, and we recently heard a smooth spirit saying that such a phrase was placed there in primitive days when man was very superstitious, and that to the modern there is no such sense of danger.

If physical dangers are meant by such smugness, we still wonder. It is easy to smile when we hear the prayers for those at sea and remind ourselves that some good member of the congregation is having a winter's cruise, but disasters, such as the Morro Castle, and more recent tragedies, bring back to us the fact that man is not yet so clever that he is above the dangers which beset our ancestors at least not entirely.

Possibly there is more danger from being indifferent to danger than any other thing. Indifference can easily replace care, and certainly an indifferent manner in regard to the regulations of seamanship and a complete trust in "modern equipment" has been proved to be dangerous, for the human factor remains and it is the human factor that has been proved weakest when real danger arose.

Of course, there is a difference between realizing danger and realizing fear. It is the wise man and the brave who senses danger, and the foolish who fears. Our Lord knew the danger of entering Jerusalem, while His disciples had fear. In facing the world of morality, every wise man knows and recognizes danger, but only the fool fears. There is only one thing more dangerous than fear and that is complete self-assurance that blindly stumbles along with no course of life planned.

Wise men see the danger of lack of cooperation in government, while foolish men merely fear and blinded by fear help bring a country into chaos. Wise men plan and study what dangers might arise and how to avoid them. Fearful men see the danger and plunge into reactionary policies.

We are not yet at the point where we can eliminate the old collects and we still need to be taught to avoid dangers—even in a modern world.

Church and World Problems as Others See Them

A Chat With the Editor.

The Canadian Churchman, January 24, 1935.

The challenge, "Canada for Christ," is an arresting one and fires the imagination. It is not enough to merely say it, we must implement it. Anyone who would bring Canada to Christ must first look within himself and see that his own consecration to Christ is entire, that no area of his life is outside the rule of Christ. Then he must see that his religion is contagious, that it is winsome and attractive and leads others to fulness of consecration.

It is encouraging to know that steps are being taken to bring Canada more completely to Christ. For some time an interdenominational committee for the evangelization of Canadian life has been working and it is hoped that a nation-wide effort will be made this spring to bring our nation to Christ. The call has already gone forth to the leaders of each communion and our Primate has sent it to each bishop of our Church. It is entitled, "A Mission of Renewal".

Last week the first gun in the campaign was fired in Montreal. A great "Service of Witness" was held in the Forum and Montreal's largest hall was packed. It was promoted by the Bishop of Montreal. All the city ministers met in the morning and Bishop Farthing spoke at the Forum in the evening. During the coming weeks until Lent every pulpit in that great city will ring with the message of evangelism, the great Christian duty of witnessing to the faith that is in one. This vital principle will be applied to the whole gamut of our lives. Its searchlight will be turned on the home, the educational institutions, industry, recreation, and the state. Montreal has indeed given us a great lead.

Witnessing is a personal thing which no one can do for anyone else. In a court of law the witness can tell only what he knows himself. Witnessing is the great outstanding mark of the early Christians. They no sooner found Christ than they told the great good news to some one else. "That which we have heard and seen with our eyes, that which we beheld and our hands have handled of the Word of Life, declare we unto you." As we speak of our Saviour, does our voice ring with the knowledge that He has saved and is saving us? Can we speak of the Gospel as the power of God unto salvation because we have experienced that power? Does forgiveness of sin on our lips mean that Ghrist has delivered us from sin and its power and from the fears that destroy our peace of mind and mar our lives?

Every man, woman and child in Canada is called to win Canada for Christ. Let each one who reads this see that he or she is Christ's absolutely and then spread the good news by example and witness in all the circles of his life.

Canadian Felicitations.

Hearty congratulations to the Southern Churchman on its century of continuous publication. In the Old Country that would not be exceptional, for The Record, their oldest Church paper, has entered the last decade of its second century. But here in America a century of anything is most noteworthy. It began as the Church Family Newspaper and in the year of its appearance the Protestant Episcopal Church sent forth its first missionary bishop.

The Southern Churchman all through the years has stood for evangelical truth, an aspect of truth most assuredly held forth in the formularies of our Church. Its editors during that long term include many distinguished and scholarly men. The paper has had its ups and downs financially and, with most religious papers at the present time, is likely having one of its downs.

The centennial issue is filled with good wishes from many bishops as well as others. The Editor of The Living Church closed his words of congratulation and felicitation with the prayer, "May the Southern Churchman have many more years of devoted service to our Lord and His Church." I regret that no Canadian felicitation appears in the issue.

The New Fallen Snow.

The Canadian winter has more influence on our national character than many think. It is a part of our national heritage. It is touching to see the joyous surprise of those from the sunny South who see snow for the first time in their lives. The Winter makes our climate one of great contrast and thus widens our outlook. A land with no contrasts tends to narrowness and smallness of outlook. So the winter makes its contribution to our inner spirit and helps form the national character. "Dark and true and tender is the North."

There is a stillness about the winter that stimulates thought. The short days and long evenings give us more time to read. The other night a bank manager remarked this to me. In the winter he got so much more reading done than in the summer, although he had holidays in the summer. The winter thus affects in some degree all our life—family, church and social life. We feel more like reading, writing and thinking in the winter and thus our soul is deepened and made richer.

Another influence winter brings to bear on us is its whiteness. The new fallen snow is of surpassing beauty. Its wondrous curves and crystal whiteness we long to perpetuate with a camera but, alas, the photograph falls far below the original. "Though your sins be as scarlet they shall be as white as snow," says Isaiah. "Wash me and I shall be whiter than snow," cried David. They had never seen snow on the ground or in the air as we have. They had seen it far off on the mountain tops, but David states the blessed truth that the God-cleansed heart is purer, whiter than snow. All of us can have the experience through Christ. "The blood of Jesus Christ cleanseth us from all sin."

Will Mr. Baldwin Be That Statesman?

The Church of England Newspaper, January 11, 1935.

Writing in our issue of December 21, we said: "The British statesman who will come out boldly with a policy which could truthfully be described as Christian would ultimately sweep the country."

Is Mr. Stanley Baldwin going to prove himself to be the man raised up for this hour? We do not know, but we think it is possible. On various occasions Mr. Baldwin has struck a clear spiritual note and he is acclaimed the world over as a man of high character. In his New Year message to the Junior Imperial League, he points out that "around us we see examples of countries where liberty has been overwhelmed by the law of might . . . where Christian ideals are giving way to paganism and atheism. In the concluding passage Mr. Baldwin calls upon the League "to foster a true spirit of service to our country and to our fellow-citizens, and above all, to maintain those spiritual ideals which alone can inspire and elevate human activity and government."

For such a courageous witness to the things that matter Britain and the Empire have reason to thank God.

THE THOUSANDFOLD PAGE

ARCHDEACON FREDERICK W. NEVE, D.D.

Our Place In The Sun

"For God, who commanded the light to shine out of darkness, hath shined in our hearts, to give the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ." 2 Cor. 4:6.

Twilight Christianity will never conquer the world. It is only Sunlight Christians who will ever be able to win the world for Christ. Twilight Christians do, it is true, give a certain amount of light, but it is not enough to brighten the world and draw men to them as having something, much to be desired, and which they themselves lack.

Christ's Revelation of the Love of God.

Christ came into the world to let men know that God is Love and He revealed this, not merely by word of mouth, but by His life, and more especially by His death upon the Cross. It was because men saw in Him the Love of God made manifest that He became to them the Light of the World. Not like the world, a natural light, but the Light from Heaven. The Love of God is the sunshine of the soul, that is of the inner life of man and we can, if we will, live in the enjoyment of this sunshine all the time. We cannot change the outward climate of the particular region in which we live, but we can change the climate of our inner life by seeing to it that we dwell in the sunlight of God's Presence and of His love to us. This is our right and part of our Christian inheritance and we can, therefore, claim it as our own.

The Shadows Which Hide the Light.

It may be said that this constant consciousness of the Love of God is an impossibility, because there are so many things which enter into our experience, and seem to raise doubts in our minds as to whether God really does love us. We must, however, learn to train ourselves to believe in God's Love towards us, no matter how difficult it may seem to be. We must not allow anything or anyone to rob us of our Place in the Sun. This sunlight of the Love of God, is not only necessary to our happiness, but it also gives us the power to reflect the heavenly light which enables men to see that we are really the Children of God, or in other words, the Children of Light.

An Illustration.

The German Kaiser plunged his own country, and almost the whole world, into the most terrible war of all history, in order that he might procure for himself and his people a larger place in the sun. His ambition was to exercise World Dominion; to occupy as large a place in the sun as he could conquer. The Christian ideal is not to take anything away from others, but to give to others a share in the heavenly sunlight which we ourselves possess, or have the right to call our own. One of the greatest results of our dwelling in the sunlight of God's love is that we are able to bring others to the knowledge of it.

The Universality of the Love of God.

For the Love of God is world embracing, so that all mankind may share in it. "For God so loved the world, that He gave His only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have everlasting life." It is something so wonderful that we cannot but desire that others should know it and rejoice in it. This is why it must spread and spread until it covers the whole earth. And this is why, too, it will be sought for as a precious possession, which will add vastly to the value of life as a rich treasure which is a foretaste of the heavenly life, the life of the angels of God. All Christians have a place in the sun, if they choose to claim it and take possession of it, and thus dwell in a spiritual climate which brings out the best that is in them, just as a mild and genial climate renders the earth capable of producing its finest flowers and fruits.

The Return of the Sun Awakens the Earth to Life.

The earth, during the winter, shows no sign of life and vegetation, remains dormant and apparently incapable of growth, but as soon as the spring comes, we see life manifesting itself on every side. It is the power of the sun's light and heat which awakens the seeds and hidden life beneath the soil, and enables them to appear above the surface and manifest the mystery of life in all its manifold forms. And it will be the same with human nature, "For as the earth bringeth forth her bud, and as the garden causeth the things that are sown in it to spring forth, so the Lord God will cause righteousness and praise to spring forth before all the nations." Isaiah 61:11.

Twilight and Sunlight Christians.

Twilight Christians do not know that they have a right to a place in the sun and that it is the most priceless possession to which they are entitled as the sons of God. Sunlight Christians are the true children of light, because they dwell in the light, that is, in the consciousness of the Love of God. It is, as St. John says in his First Epistle (4:16), "We have known and believed the love which God hath to us. God is Love: and he that dwelleth in love, dwelleth in God and God in him." Christianity has vastly more in it than we are conscious of at present, but the way to find out the full measure of our Christian inheritance here on earth, is to seek for and find our place in the sun. And what is more, we shall have plenty of followers, because they will know that Christianity is not what they had supposed, a tame and commonplace variation of their own way of living, but the fulfilment of what Christ promised should be the portion of those who would truly follow Him. "I am come that they might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly."

* * *

FAVORITE SCRIPTURE VERSE.

(In this space each week will appear a favorite passage of Scripture as sent in by a different reader. Every one is, therefore, invited to send us their favorite verse. It is suggested all who can, join with the rest of us in committing to memory the verse which appears here each week, including its location in the Holy Book; and in due time your memory chest will be laden with choice, eternal treasures, indeed. "Thy word have I hid in my heart that I might not sin against Thee." (Ps. 119:11.)

Mrs. R. S. Stant:

"Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love him."—1 Cor. 2:9.

A Missionary Anniversary Sermon

By the Rt. Rev. Hiram Richard Hulse, D. D., Bishop of the Missionary District of Cuba.

(Abstract of sermon preached by Bishop Hulse on January 13, at the service in commemoration of the twentieth anniversary of his consecration, at Holy Trinity Cathedral, Habana, Cuba.)

1 Cor. 2:2—"I determined not to know anything among you, save Jesus Christ, and Him crucified."

It was not without a struggle twenty years ago that I was persuaded that my duty was to accept the new work which had been offered to me in Cuba.

It meant the study of a new language, and I had no gift for languages; it meant leaving the city where I had lived for a generation and parting company with old friends; it meant giving up work with which I was familiar and in which I was happy. I had had some measure of success in that work, and I had grave doubts of my ability to carry on the work here.

On the other hand, was the fact that I had been selected for this field by the whole body of the Church acting through the House of Bishops; and that it was a field in which I had always been interested. Naturally, I was complimented by the election. After a period of consideration, I decided that my doubts must be set aside and that I must go to the new field.

When I did that I did it with the thought that as I had been elected by the whole body of the Church, I must be the representative of the whole Church and not of any section.

In my life here I have tried to be fair to all the different schools of thought in the Church, not only in action, but in my interior judgment. I have done my best to get the point of view of others, and to understand how it was that men came to entertain their differing ideas.

I had and I still have my own beliefs about ecclesiastical affairs, and I am glad when I can persuade others of the truth of what I believe, but I have no desire to force my own opinions upon others through the power of my position. I realize perfectly that each school of thought in the Church has something to contribute to our common life.

I rejoice that different types of thought and worship are represented here, and that, therefore, the whole Church is represented.

At the same time I have tried to repress extravagances, and to see that the differences are not so great that members moving from one place to another feel that they are not at home in the new church. There is a great deal of liberty to be found within the pages of the Prayer Book; we can each of us give full expression to our religious feeling and at the same time remain faithful to the form of worship we find there.

When I decided to come here my thoughts went beyond the limits of the Episcopal Church. I wanted, so far as possible, to be the Bishop of the unchurched, to gather in those who belonged nowhere and not to spend my time persuading those who were already Christians to change their ecclesiastical home. I have not turned over my hand during the time I have been here to persuade Methodist or Roman Catholics or Christians of any other name to come to us.

Of course we welcome people from everywhere, and when those who have been brought up in some other Church find that their religious life can be sustained better with us than elsewhere, we are glad to have them join us. Such people sometimes make a large contribution to our life; they enrich the common life with methods and experiences obtained elsewhere.

But I cannot feel that the kingdom gains much when we go out of our way to persuade good Christian people who are at home in some other Church to cast off their allegiance and join with us.

There are many unchurched people around us. Men and women who are uncertain of themselves, and who need the consolation and inspiration of religion, and who have no church home. These are the ones on whom we must concentrate. I feel that the success of our ministry is to be judged by the way in which we bring home these wandering sheep rather than by the way in which we fill up our ranks with the members of other churches.

I was anxious when I came here to have friendly relations with other Christian ministers. So far as I have had time and opportunity I have cultivated such relations. I have been glad to welcome them in the Cathedral, and to join with them in united services. And I try to meet them on the level of equality. I am a firm believer in the life and worship and ministry of the Protestant Episcopal Church, but I do not, therefore, read out of the Christian ministry those who are not in our historical lineage. We need all the force and strength we can have to keep the influence of Christ alive and growing in this modern world, so I welcome to the ranks of the ministry all devoted workers, whether they call themselves Roman Catholic or Greek or Baptist or Presbyterian.

I am convinced of the truth of the preface to the Ordinal in the Prayer Book. But that is a statement of historic fact and not a dogma. We must be careful how we put outside the life of the great Church of Christ those who are doing the work of the Church in converting sinners and building up the kingdom. So when I find men doing the work of the ministry in ways which are foreign and distasteful to me, I am glad to find Christ preached, though in ways with which I am not familiar.

As I have tried to understand and be on friendly terms with those both in and out of our communion who might differ with me, I have found that it was necessary to emphasize those truths in which we all agree; that part of the Christian message which exalts the Christ.

There were a great many true and necessary and useful things which St. Paul might have taught the people in Corinth, but he determined to preach only what he regarded as absolutely essential. Christ and Him crucified. Surely, that is the most essential part of the Christian message.

In the interior life of the Church it is important that our members and especially our children should be trained in our household ways; that they should be familiar with the customs which give our part of Christianity its familiar character. We believe that our liturgical worship, our historic ministry, and our disciplined and ordered liberty are important elements which we must preserve for the good of all, the contribution which presently we may make to a united Christianity. So our members ought to be trained in these things which give us our distinctive character.

But while these are important they are only secondary. The important thing is our allegiance to Christ, which we share with the rest of Christendom. This is what we must make manifest in our exterior life, in our intercourse with the indifferent or with other Christian people.

The great body of the indifferent need to be won to Christ and to accept and follow His way of life; apart from this, there is no salvation for humanity. They can only be won as Christ is held up before them, and not some particular way of worship.

We have a contribution to make to the life and worship of Christian people outside our particular fold, but they will not pay much attention to us until they realize that we attach more importance to following Christ than to any particular form of worship.

It becomes important then that in the exterior life of the Church we hold up those things which we have in common with all Christian people.

It is equally important for our inner life of devotion. Unless we put Christ first our prayers are thin. The purpose of all our worship is to make us more aware of His presence and more willing to do His will.

I have tried, therefore, during these twenty years to put first things first. I am not blind to the need for orderliness in worship and discipline in thought; the way to attain these things is to keep the end of worship in our mind.

They have been happy and busy years. The friends I had I have not lost, I still keep in touch with them. In addition, I have gained other friends, who have taught me many valuable things and enriched my life with their friendship. I want to thank those, especially of this congregation, who have been such a source of help to me all these years.

You have given me of your experience to help me meet the problems of a new field; you have given me of your money to help me meet the financial difficulties we confront; you have given me of your friendship to sustain me as I went about my work.

You have made allowances for my shortcomings and I assure you that, but for your help, they would have been much more evident. Your generous reception of me twenty years ago warmed my heart and gave me fresh courage. As I look back over the twenty years I do not think that any Bishop ever had greater help from his Cathedral.

And when I think of the three Deans who have been here during the twenty years, my heart swells with gratitude to God for giving me such congenial workers.

George Myers, with his scholarly habits and philosophic mind, was a constant inspiration to study and clear thinking. Harry Beal, with his business-like efficiency, his devotion to people and his disciplined mind, was a great help, not only in the Cathedral, but in the management of the District. And what shall I say of Hugo Blankingship, whose interest in and love for the people are constantly being manifest before us? We have been greatly blessed, you and I, in the character and attainments of those who have been at the head of the Cathedral Congregation during the past twenty years.

Due to their leadership and your intelligent and devoted activity the Cathedral has been able to make several notable advances.

Fifteen years ago I preached here, outlining some of the things I hoped the Cathedral might do in a material way. I then asked you to clear away the debt from the Cathedral, to install more seemly furniture, to acquire an organ and finally to secure a residence for the Dean.

Many of these things you have accomplished. You paid off the debt on the Cathedral and it was consecrated in March, 1924, Bishop Knight preaching the sermon. The beautiful altar was put in place before. The altar rail and sanctuary wainscoting and furniture was installed as a memorial, to Verno Myers, whose memory we cherish still. The lectern and chancel barrier were erected in memory of Mrs. Cathcart. The pulpit is now here a constant reminder of the good deeds of Mr. Brownson, who gave it. The organ has been installed and paid for and has been a great source of enjoyment and inspiration for years. And now we have our Deanery, not yet paid for; but in spite of the depression only a few thousand dollars remain due.

These are some of your material achievements of the past twenty years.

Spiritual influences are more difficult to appraise. Who can say how much comfort and inspiration has come to people in trouble and difficulty, from the services here and the ministrations of the Dean?

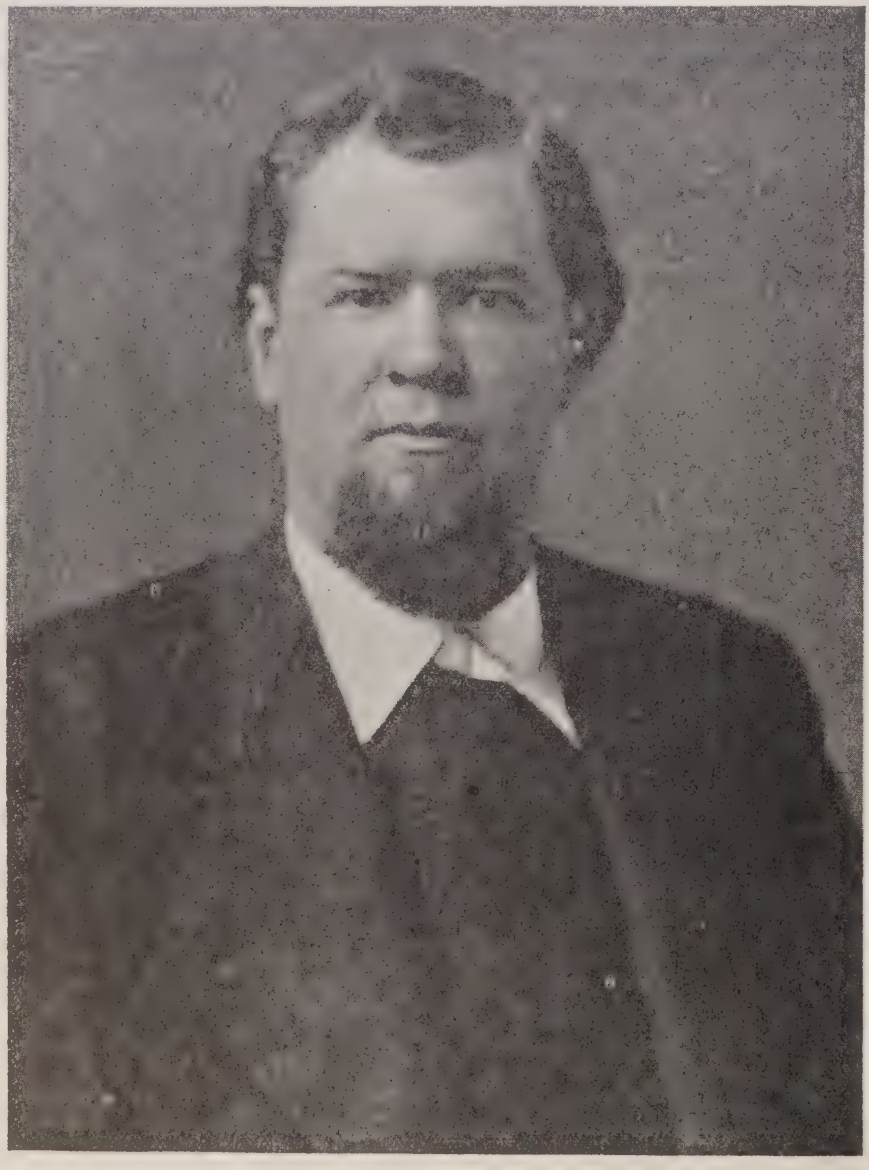
This I can say. We have been enriching the life of the Church all along the Atlantic Seaboard from Miami to Portland, Maine. Most of those who have been confirmed at this altar rail have left us and are now to be found among the ranks of church members in the North. This contribution of young life which we are constantly making to the Church in the United States is a great drain on our resources. But it is a splendid thing for the parishes which get the communicants trained here and it is a manifestation of the unity of the Church.

As we think of the past and what God has helped us to do, we thank God and take fresh courage for the future. We pray that He will help us make this Cathedral Church a lighthouse for Christ in the midst of this shifting multitude of people who surround us; that we proclaim nothing but Christ and Him crucified as the only hope for a warring and weary world.

* * *

FOURTH SUNDAY AFTER THE EPIPHANY.

This collect or short prayer is taken from the Sarum Missal, 1549, with slight variations. The 1549 collect was an improvement upon the original which merely asked for physical and mental strength. It, however, retained the ambiguity of the phrase which being translated is "the things which we suffer for our sins". The English word "for" being as ambiguous as the Latin word "pro" and is susceptible of the idea that our suffering atones for our sins. The use of "sin" for "sins" (as of 1549), did not sufficiently remove a misunderstanding, so the prayer was recast in 1662, and is that which we today use. The first thought in this collect appears to be that we are appealing to One to whom we are no strangers, "O God, who knoweth us." In this we are following the example of David, who appeals to Jehovah as "the One who knoweth our sittings and uprisings and who understandeth our thoughts afar off," and then, on the other hand, we confess our weakness, "that by the frailty of our nature we cannot stand upright." How true is the fact of our common liability to weakness, both in its physical and in its moral aspects. When we turn to Holy Scripture we find that we are not alone in our failures. Take the case of Moses speaking unadvisedly; of the evil instance of David and Bathsheba; of Mary Magdalene; of Saint Peter; of the penitent thief. The accounts in Holy Scripture do not gloss over the faults of any of its great characters, but gives the various illustrations to us in order that we may take notice of their failures and realize that as they sought and found forgiveness, so may we also go to the fountain of all Goodness and confessing our sins "to Him who is faithful and just to forgive and to cleanse from all unrighteousness." We realize that of ourselves we are unable to stand upright and, therefore knowing our weakness we go to Him, the Father of Love and of mercy and in the words of the collect pray from our hearts that He will "grant to us such strength and protection as may support us in all dangers and carry us through all temptations" in order that we may "stand upright" before our God and before our fellow men.



William E. Callender.

Weddell Memorial

Address by the Rev. Hugh W. Sublett, D. D., at the Opening Service of the New Church.

I planted, Apollos watered, but God gave the increase.—1 Cor. 3:16.

I understand that I am to speak mostly of Dr. Weddell, to whom our church, which today is reopened, is a memorial. It must suffice then to say that Weddell Memorial Chapel was completed and open for service the first time November 20, 1881. Mr. William S. Blankingship, father Very Rev. Hugo Blankingship, Dean of Holy Trinity Cathedral, Havana, Cuba, was the first Sunday-school Superintendent. This was while our own dearly beloved Bishop Burton was rector of St. John's. Retired Bishop of Lexington, he is still in constant correspondence with us, greetings being constantly exchanged. I have marveled at his perfect Christian courtesy and absolute devotion to the minutiae of all that is fitting and right. I have felt that he was so holy as to remind me of my conception of St. John, the beloved Apostle. That this conception is not unwarranted may be apparent from a remark of the old colored sexton on the evening of the Sunday when he preached for us, "That the doctor favored John," when he knew nothing of my own thoughts about the Bishop.

THE REV. ALEXANDER WATSON WEDDELL D. D.

It is very important for those who now know Weddell Memorial that they may have the inspiration of some knowledge of him for whom it is named. It is more difficult for me to talk about Dr. Weddell than about Weddell Memorial. This I have been more or less intimate with for a longer period than it takes for a boy to grow up into a full-grown man.

Dr. Weddell laid down his work, himself only a little over forty with only some short ten years in the active ministry, when I was but three years old. I scarcely remember my father who died two years later. Even if I had been associated with Dr. Weddell, I could not have remembered him. But others have remembered him so vividly that I am always surprised when I recall how long ago he left us. Fifty years and longer have gone by since he went in and out among us. Yet, how clearly he is kept in mind. When I first came to St. John's his name was generally a household word. But since, one by one, those who knew him and loved him have gone to rejoin him and their voices gradually stilled, not as many echoes of his life are now sounding as were then.

An outstanding conception I have had of him from those who told me of him, independent of the epitaph, through all these one and twenty years—a big mind and a big heart in a big body. It was said of him: "Nature cast him in a heroic mould, not only physical, but endowed him mentally with those graceful virtues, calculated to win human hearts, and enshrined his soul in those lovely traits of character that endeared him to all who knew him."

It was further said of him that he was "liberal, broad-minded, free from cant and hypocrisy. Plain, simple and unaffected, devoid of slang and free from technical terms. He formed opinions not in the academic school, but from practical experience from actual contact with men. His horizon of thought was bounded by no narrow limits; he thoroughly understood human nature. He did not look down upon humanity from a lofty pedestal. He took mankind as he found it, not as he thought it should be. He had familiarized himself with man's nature in the tented field, as a Confederate soldier; he knew its capacities, its aspirations, its fallibilities. He exercised patience, temperance and moderation in treating its limitations. He was never pessimistic in his religious views or dogmatic in his discourses or self-conceited in his opinions. A beautiful optimism pervaded his thoughts and breathed in his utterances. A wonderful patience and submission during his lingering illness pervaded his conversation, and governed his actions. Many a time has the writer on his way to his home taken him 'up the hill' in his buggy when scarcely able to walk, yet still trying to perform his appointed duties." (History of Henrico Parish and old St. John's Church. J. S. Moore.)

At his death a "pall was cast not only over the Church he had so faithfully served and loved so well, but over the entire community; yet we are consoled with the reflections":

"They never quite leave us, the friends who have passed
Through the shadows of death to the sunlight above;
A thousand sweet memories are holding them fast,
To the places they blessed with their presence and love."

The Rev. Alexander Watson Weddell, D. D., came to St. John's as rector, beginning his work there the second Sunday in September, 1875, succeeding the Rev. Dr. Henry Wall. He had previously studied law and had planned to run for Congress.

St. John's Church, Richmond, Va.
Built 1741.

The very next year the "Frame Sunday School Building" was erected to house his own school that he himself had gathered and formed. There was not in the Church of that day the interest in the Church School that we know today. This is one of the finest tributes we can render Dr. Weddell. Nor was this all. In 1880, the year the church was extensively remodeled and new chancel furniture placed, two new Sunday schools were started, one known as Calvary Mission, the other a colored Sunday school long known as Good Shepherd, and in recent years under the control of St. Philip's as St. Peter's. Dr. Weddell was an enthusiastic Mason and doubtless through his influence the Calvary Mission met at first in the old Masonic Hall. I am told that the colored Sunday school assembled first in the "Brick Schoolhouse". Afterwards and still continuing the colored school was and is on Twenty-eighth Street. We might say it was a strategic act to appoint a policeman as superintendent of the Calvary Mission. For this was wisely done, and the brass buttons in that locality were especially instruments of good and respect for right. The man chosen was B. F. Howard, afterwards Chief of Police. Perhaps his advancement was largely due to his faithfulness in his duties there.

The Council Reports of 1881 show that St. John's had three hundred communicants and an aggregate Sunday-school enrollment of 423. This was the result of Dr. Weddell's indefatigable labors and splendid gifts. Shortly after this his health began to fail. Assistants were secured for him. His congregation did all that love could render. They sent him South and also to our own mountains. But it was God's will to take him to Himself. December 6, 1883, he departed to be with Jesus. He rests within the churchyard of old St. John's, where most fittingly he should lie, where the morning shadows of the church he loved and so faithfully served fall across his grave. His monument, erected by his congregation, bears these words by his friend, Mr. John L. Williams:

"To the Glory of God.
In memory of Rev. A. W. Weddell, D. D., Pastor of this Church for Eight Years. Born May 20, 1841; Died December 6, 1883.
'Asleep in Jesus'."

It is related that when this faithful pastor, "so strong, so brave, so true and forceful in speech, so boldly aggressive, and perseveringly energetic in action," began to fail in health, that the whole machinery of the Church began to falter with the slackened pulsations of that heart which had been for years the tireless motive power in it all.

Can there be a stronger comment on a rector's responsibilities? Well may he tremble at the thought, and pray for divine strength to do his work.

During the eight years of Dr. Weddell's ministry at St. John's, 243 persons were presented for confirmation and the communicant list grew to over 500 souls. The development was so phenomenal that it may be called a replanting, a restoration, almost a resurrection of old St. John's. This was due to his earnest zeal, his affability and his sincere piety. He planted, or at least replanted, others have watered.

THE RT. REV. LEWIS WILLIAM BURTON, D. D., Bishop of Lexington, Retired. Former Rector of St. John's, Church, Richmond.

He could have been followed by none more gifted or more consecrated and faithful than Bishop Burton, whom we still know and love, and Dr. Robert A. Goodwin, whom "we have loved and lost awhile"—these three. What a glorious triumvirate! He was, to return to the old history,

"Large hearted
Large minded
Devoted to God.
A lover of the truth and of manhood;
Bold, untiring, faithful in the service of the Master;
Tender, watchful, and unceasing in the care of his flock;
His people loved and revered him."

A tablet to his memory rests upon the wall on the Epistle side of the chancel bearing this inscription, with a cross in a crown:

"A happy, cheerful, loyal man,
Built upon the God-like plan;
Always doing something good
For his humble brotherhood.
Memory, with her magic spell
O'er the years, shall fondly tell
How his glorious active mind
Lived and wrought for all mankind."

(Continued on page 14.)

Two Hundredth Anniversary of St. Thomas' Church

Bath, North Carolina.

Historical Address Delivered September 20, 1934.

By the Rev. George MacLaren Brydon, D. D.

PART TWO.

The history of the growth of the Church of England in the American Colonies followed two distinct lines of development. Into the New England Colonies the Church of England entered as purely missionary field and parishes were established amongst a population which was predominantly of another and a hostile religious type. Consequently the Church had to fight for its existence and to win its way to strength and numbers in the face of frequently bitter opposition. In the Southern Colonies on the other hand, the Church was established and, under the protection of the Civil Government, salaries were provided and churches erected by taxation, and the Church, except in those localities where the bulk of population was either Presbyterian or Quaker, held the allegiance of the majority of the population. In this fact lies at least one of the reasons, if not the greatest, why the Church in New England showed so much more vigor after the Revolution than was shown in the Southern States. It can easily be seen that the very difficulties and opposition which the missionaries and their congregations faced in Puritan New England tended to draw them together. In their very fighting for existence and growth they gained a strength and power to resist and the ability to organize and manage their own congregational affairs which stood them in good stead after America had won its independence, even though the ministers and congregations of New England had suffered under the great handicap during the Revolution of being predominantly Tory and opposed to the cause of American independence.

In the Southern Colonies, on the other hand, the establishment of the Church had meant that the power of self-government and self-support had been taken away from clergy and congregations. The Colonial legislatures, legislated for the Church, erecting parishes, providing taxes for their support; the clergy had no authority to legislate, and little or no opportunity was given to congregations for giving to support the Church.

There were more than twice as many ministers and far more than twice as many adherents of the Church at the outbreak of the Revolution in the Southern Colonies than in New England, but at the end of the Revolution, when the Church was disestablished and all taxes for its support in these Southern States simply collapsed. It had been pauperized in manpower and in the ability to give by its connection with the State. It is true that the Church in Virginia organized its Diocese in 1785, and elected a Bishop in 1786. But Virginia, with its hundred parishes, could not raise in three years a sufficient sum to pay the expenses of their Bishop-elect to go to England for consecration. Another Bishop was elected in 1790 and consecrated, but the history of that Diocese was one of growing weakness until in 1811 the Church seemed to be sleeping the sleep of death. The revival and the modern life did not begin till 1814. North Carolina attempted to organize, and elected a Bishop on 1794, but he was never consecrated. There was not sufficient strength to organize the Diocese until 1817, and the first Bishop was consecrated in 1823.

South Carolina was organized in 1785. Its first Bishop was consecrated in 1795 and died in 1801, and the Diocese was then without a Bishop at all for eleven years, until 1812. Georgia was organized in 1823, forty years after the independence of the American Colonies was acknowledged by Great Britain. Within that period came the desolate years when the Church in the Southern States, unable, on account of the conditions of her former existence, to withstand the new forces brought into being in the new national life and seemingly impotent to face and conquer them fell from weakness to weakness and passed in so many cases into the lethargy of hopeless defeat. The revival when it came found the majority of the old churches gone—abandoned, destroyed or turned to other religious bodies. So that in each Diocese organized life had to begin anew and the Church was compelled through long years to fight its way against antagonism, opposition, and distrust into the place which it holds today.

What a desperate hurt it was to the spiritual life of our Southern States that the Church was thus pressed down into uselessness for so many years. It was inevitable that after seven years of Revolution, in which men's souls were keyed to the highest degree of tension there should come years of moral drifting—when spiritually the world was more out of course than it was after the release of tension of our own World War. The drift away from faith must have been greater then than in our own day. We can read in the histories of the times how in gratitude to France for its aid in the Revolution, in widespread sympathy with the French Revolution and adoption of French modes of thought, current in France, spread far and wide among our people—so far and wide indeed that Bishop Meade stated that in the early years of his ministry, beginning in 1812, whenever he met an educated man he expected to find an atheist or an infidel. And in these years of bitter need to uphold and stress the principles of true Christian faith, the Church, to which, perhaps, the majority of people of education had belonged, was sinking into the sleep of death—useless in the face of her people's need.

Surely we must believe that in the Church's experience of going down into desolation and rising again into newness of life the Lord of the Kingdom was working out His own plans for greater usefulness of the Church in years to come. Did He see that the fires of adversity and the years of desolation were necessary in order that the old weaknesses, misconceptions and attitudes might be burned out before the Church would be able to do its best work in the new and developing national life? The insistent message of the old prophet in the darkest days of Israel's history that a remnant shall return and restore the nation was fulfilled again in the remnant who, through all the darkest days of the Church's desolation, remained true to the ancient faith and made possible the revival of new life. The tree whose boughs were lopped with terror did once again send new roots downward and boughs upward to bear new fruit and we of today in profound thankfulness for the large and constantly growing room in which our feet are placed —do we not earnestly pray that He, our Master and Saviour, may lead us through all the days to come into ever greater usefulness in the extension of His Kingdom among men, that His Church may grow into ever richer life through fuller fellowship of Service?

There is so much—if these venerable walls could speak—that they might tell us of the development of spiritual life in our land during the past two hundred years—and the experiences through which our

(Continued on page 14.)

BOOK REVIEWS

REV. STAMO S. SPATHEY, Editor.

JESUS AND HUMAN PERSONALITY: By Albert Edward Day. Being The Lyman Beecher Lectures, delivered at Yale University, 1934. Pp. 269. Price, $2. Published by The Abingdon Press, New York City.

We welcome this fine group of lectures as a distinct contribution to the art of preaching for this day and age. The author propounds the subject that Jesus Christ is personality-centered, a new presentation of an old universal truth. A fine description of present conditions and the effects they exert on human personality we have in Chapter Two, "Personality and Society." The writer makes this striking statement: "Security is something we all crave, but it would be little less than a calamity if from us were removed all demand to live dangerously," page 31. Progress, he states, depends on the adjustment of personality, page 37. To change society, we must grow sturdy personalities.

The author passes sympathetic and candid criticism on the failure of the Church and ministry and offers stimulating suggestions to better both the Church and preaching, stating that, "It takes preachers to pass sound criticism on preaching." The chapter on "The Ideal Person" is a fine presentation of true idealism as revealed in Jesus Christ. This idealism can be appropriated by anyone of us to the making of our own personality. Salvation is the perfection of human personality. It is interesting to note the relation of Jesus' death to human personality according to the author's view. "If Jesus died for them (human beings), there must have been something in them worth dying for," page 90. His protest with regard to the pulpit's unwillingness to admit limitations as to "The Figure presented in the sources, that is, the Gospels, is sincere and sound. He calls for mental honesty (page 100). No preacher can afford missing the inspiring message of these lectures. They are refreshing and informing.

Spathey.

FROM A DIARY: By F. W. Barrett. Cloth. Pp. 103. Published by Fred. W. Barrett, Springfield, Ohio. Price, $1.

The simple story of a man whose heart was ever Godward and whose longing for the good of his fellows was ever strong. It is recommended as a gift from an employer to his employees.

That the Eighteenth Amendment and the document "Re-Thinking Missions" should come into view, as well as the doctrine of evolution and bit of business philosophy, insures the prospective reader a more than individual record. Its sincerity and faith in the essentials of the belief of the historic Christian Church are a witness to the value of parental education on religious lines.

HOW TO CONDUCT A CHILDREN'S MISSION: By James C. Jatho. With Introduction by Bishop Herman Page, D. D. Pp. 31. Published by The Morehouse Publishing Company, Milwaukee, Wisconsin. Price 25 Cents.

A well worth-while publication, in view of the fact that children's missions are becoming a necessity. In the first place, children appreciate a mission designed especially for themselves; they appropriate it as their own and throw into it their whole-souled cooperation. And the value of the undertaking lies in the acknowledged failure of the ordinary Church School to garner a rich harvest from the limited time afforded by the Sunday sessions. While weekday religious education has to be more general than should be with the desire for decision and dedication. The Children's Mission meets the lack. So, to know how to make such a mission a permanent success is a desideratum. Let all who have this burden upon their hearts glean from this author the result of his own experience.

Kenneth Mackenzie.

THE WORLD-WIDE CHURCH. Paper. Pp. 130. Published at The Church House, Westminster, S. W. London. One shilling (60 cents).

This is the second unified statement of the missionary work of the Church of England throughout the British Empire. It presents an array of statistics and challenging portrayals of work being accomplished. As well there is well-defined policy of action, based upon the problems which attach to missionary endeavor. The chapter on Opportunity, which succeeds the interesting mass of figures and delineations of mission accomplishments, is well worth reading by all interested lovers of the evangelism of the unsaved.

Kenenth Mackenzie.

THE REVEREND THOMAS BRAY: By the Rev. Edgar Legare Pennington. Art Paper. Pp. 46. Published by The Church Historical Society, Philadelphia.

An entrancing portraiture of life in the Southern colonies in the light of the endeavor of the Church of England to plant a ministry there. We have in brief: The Church of England as known to the early settlers; Dr. Bray's enthusiastic purpose to culture the missionaries with the service of libraries; the work of the S. P. C. K. and the S. P. G., and the history of the early days of the colony in Maryland. A truly stimulating record.

Kenneth Mackenzie.

* * *

News from the Front

A Letter From China.

The work in Nanchang was more interesting than I have known it to be. Nanchang has come into prominence since General Chiang has made it his headquarters. Bus lines radiate to all the main cities in a number of other provinces. Rural reconstruction has been undertaken with really encouraging results, especially at the Lichwan center. I am trying to get a minute to write it up and the soul-stirring visit from Dr. Sherwood Eddy and his brother, Dr. Brewer Eddy. Two thousand and five hundred came daily to the meetings in Nanchang. This is a day of marvelous opportunity. Testimony comes from every hand of open doors and questioning hearts. It is wonderful to be in the midst of it to see the lepers home; the college young people willing to work for less than a soldier's wage in order to help the country people; to have a group of boys from a Government University about your own dining table studying the Bible nights and saying, "We can come anytime you have time." A soldier talked to me of his interest in the church and in helping his country, most of the six hours' trip from Nanchang to Kuikiang. We had the forlornist little traveling show troupe with us on our opposite bench. We all ate pears and talked and got so friendly, we were sorry when the trip was over. There was no boat out the next day. Fortunately, I had a cosy room at the Methodist Mission, and was able to get in a good visit to our work in Kuikiang. We had a small, slow boat to Anking. A very magnificent and impatient Italian airman paced the deck and consumed prodigious quantities of port to help ease up the delay. He seemed a bit disturbed at my getting off into the howling mob, which always meets a boat; but wished me a happy year in very quaint English as our faithful hospital servant piloted me off. Home looked so good and welcoming. One of the family was waiting with cocoa and sandwiches. My little Persian kitty sat up and licked my hand. Home letters were banked on my table. My cousin, Mrs. Allen of Pittsburgh, had gone to sleep in church, just before service and never wakened. Such a beautiful ending to a useful, loving life. The family letters were most understanding. I read till three A. M. The small cat was cold and curled up close to me. It didn't seem long before we heard this early rising family at breakfast. They sent mine up. So I had a rest before the neighbors heard I was home and came to welcome me.

It's a pretty nice place. You'd better come see it for yourself some time. We would take very good care of you.

Margaret Monteiro.

American Church Mission,
Anking, China, December 10, 1934.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S FELLOWSHIP SERVICE LEAGUE

The Reverend Randolph F. Blackford, D. D.

HILDA? PRINCESS OF THE CHURCH.

I. Her Times.

When speaking of high dignitaries of the Church, one often calls them Princes of the Church. This evening our subject is a lady who in her time was probably the most influential person, man or woman, in all of England, if not in all of Europe. So when we call her a Princess of the Church it is more than an idle expression.

But, before we can understand her life, we should get a view of the times in which she lived. It was in the seventh century. England, as the South-Eastern part of the Island of Britain, was beginning to be called, had been conquered by the English for about a hundred years. But the English were not united. Instead they were divided into seven kingdoms.

In the extreme Southeast there was the kingdom of Kent, and in the extreme Northeast there was the kingdom of North-Umbria. This got its name from the fact that it was territory north of the Umber River.

A short time before Hilda was born, St. Augustine had come as a missionary to Kent. He was a Roman monk, who had been sent by Gregory, Bishop of Rome, to the English, all of whom were heathen at this time. Augustine, by the time our story opens, had had such success that he decided to send a missionary to Northumbria on the first occasion that presented itself. This came when the daughter of the king of Kent went to marry the king of Northumbria. Augustine sent Bishop Paulinus to be her chaplain.

In course of time Paulinus had great success. Then a heathen king came to the throne of Northumbria and Paulinus was driven out. But a young prince who had been driven out also by the heathen king took refuge among the missionaries of the Scottish Church, who had their headquarters at Iona. He later came to the throne, and invited the Scottish missionaries to come and preach to his people. This they did, led by Bishop Aidan, and eventually won back the Country for Christ.

Now the Scottish Church had come originally from Ireland. The Irish Church had been converted by St. Patrick, a Briton, and the British were the people from whom the English had conquered the country. But the British-Scottish-Irish Church had been separated so long from the Christians on the continent of Europe that they had many strange customs, as we shall see later.

The seven English kingdoms one would have thought would at least be at peace with one another. But they were not. Rather were they constantly fighting. Hilda's father had been a king of one of them. But he had been first exalted, and then poisoned by his enemies. Hilda's mother had then taken the child to the court of her great uncle, the king of North-umbria. There they were given protection, and there Bishop Paulinus found her.

II. Her Life.

Paulinus was much discouraged. The Queen and he were almost the only Christians in the kingdom, and all others seemed deaf to his message. But there was one little girl who seemed to never miss a service, and to drink in all he said of God the Loving Father, and the Heavenly Home. He asked who she was.

"That," he was told, "is Hilda, the King's great-niece. She is an orphan princess banished from her own land. No wonder she likes to hear of a Heavenly Father, and a Heavenly Home." Then they told him her story. The Bishop became much interested immediately, and often talked with her.

Soon he heard another story about her. When her mother was in exile she had a strange dream. She was out of doors on a very dark night searching for her husband. Suddenly her cloak became unfastened, and she became conscious that she was wearing a necklace of very precious stones. As she watched, these stones began to shine so brightly that the whole countryside was lit up by them. Shortly after this Hilda was born. Her mother thought that the dream meant that she was to do some great thing in the world.

Paulinus had been at the Court of Northumbria for about a year when the king had a narrow escape from death. The same night a beautiful princess was born. The King was very happy, of course, and started to give orders for a great feast according to the heathen manner. But Paulinus came to him and said that he had long been praying for both the king and the queen. The king was much surprised and said that, if Christ had answered Paulinus' prayers so wonderfully, he would show his thankfulness by giving the princess to Holy Baptism. So they waited until Whitsunday and then the baby princess was baptized and with her twelve other members of the royal household. Among these was Hilda.

Years passed and Hilda grew into a woman. She wished to become a nun. But the heathen king who had come to the throne would not let her. But after she was grown, the prince, of whom we have spoken as having become a Christian at Iona, became king. He allowed Hilda to start at the age of thirty-three for France to become a nun in a monastery there. But Bishop Aidan heard of it and stopped her as she was about to get on a boat. He persuaded her to start a nunnery in England. He got her some land on the river Wear, and there Hilda came with three or four companions, and lived for a year.

Bishop Aidan had kept in touch with her and knew of her prayers and fine work among the poor, so after the year was up, he got her to come to a much larger work. This time it was a monastery at Hartlepool. Here she reigned for several years, and became well-known as a great Bible student and for her wisdom. She was always telling the people who came to her to study the Bible carefully so as to know God's will for them.

Time passed and Hilda was again called to a larger work. This was the monastery at Whitby. Here she spent the rest of her life. She died at the age of sixty-six. But her work at Whitby deserves a paper by itself.

III. Her Life at Whitby.

We have already said that the Scottish-Irish-British Church was very different from the Church on the Continent of Europe. Strange to say, our own Church today is much more like the Church on the Continent than it is like the Church of St. Hilda, that had the Scottish customs.

At Whitby, as an example of the Scottish, they had bishops, priests and deacons as we have. But the Bishops seem mostly to have ordained and advised, and done very little ruling. They lived in the communities or monasteries and were under the heads of the communities, Hilda in this case. Bishop Aidan was sent to England by Columba, who was not a bishop, but only the head of the community. These communities also had men and women in them and were like a school. Either a man or woman might head the community. Whitby was probably the most famous of these communities, and it was headed by a woman. This was very different from the custom in other parts of Europe, where men were in monasteries and women in convents and they never mixed.

Not only was Hilda the head of this monastery and convent at Whitby, but she was also the friend and advisor of many high nobles and kings. For these came to her from all over England for spiritual and other advice. And not only this, for her reputation extended to the Continent, and she was frequently asked to advise by letter nobles and kings in France, Germany and other countries.

When they wanted to have a kind of General Convention of the English Church to decide whether to adopt the Irish customs or the Roman, they had it at Whitby, where they might have the benefit of her advice.

Thus, we see that Hilda was a great teacher, and head of a monastery in Early England. She is said to have had many kings and five bishops attend her school. She is regarded as one of the greatest women that ever lived.

* * *

TWO HUNDREDTH ANNIVERSARY OF ST. THOMAS' CHURCH.

(Continued from page 11.)

people have passed. They were new built when John and Charles Wesley began the movement which vitally affected the religious conceptions of the whole English race and which came with mighty power and far-reaching results into the life of our Southern States. They have heard the prayers offered for the King in Colonial days, and hither fathers and mothers came during the days of Revolution to pray for boys in Washington's army. As again through four later years of patriotic devotion and sacrifice, the prayers of her people were offered for the boys in the army of Lee. They have seen the fall and rising again of the old church—the times of its prosperity and the days of its desolation. They have seen the new life take root and grow. What memories cluster around the old building and press upon the mind of one who knows anything of the history of the State. But it must not and cannot be merely a place of memories of the past. Its supreme message is a call to us to go forward into the future. It speaks of the long history and the permanence of the Mother Church in the life of the Anglo-Saxon race. It can point to the denials of the faith in the old deistic days of the eighteenth century and the drift away from religion in years of laxity after the Revolution and bid us not to lose heart in the face of denials of faith and drift away from religion in this or any future day. It bids us remember that, because this is the Mother Church of the race with a history reaching back into the earliest days—beyond the Reformation—beyond the Norman Conquest—to the very beginnings of the Christian religion in the island of Britain, ours is the duty of holding up always the light of the ancient faith and of seeking to extend our ministration and service as widely as possible among a people whose forefathers learned of God at the Church's knees. It bids us to go forward unafraid into our future, seeking only to know the Master's will and to learn more fully of His Truth; praying only for adequate wisdom, strength and zeal to enter the doors which He opens to us to spend ourselves in the service of his children.

* * *

THE BIBLE.

The Bible is a book of religion. Its purpose is to reveal God and to bring man into a right attitude toward God and so into a right attitude toward his fellows. The Bible is thus a means to an end. It may be little more than a 'bone of contention''. That was true of the Old Testament in Jesus' day. He said in substance, ''Ye search the Scriptures'' but fail to use them for their purpose. The Scriptures constitute a key by which to open the door into eternal life, but you discuss the details of their structure instead of using them to open the door. Therefore, you fail to find that life—abundant life, eternal life—which you seek.—Selected.

* * *

WEDDELL MEMORIAL.

(Continued from page 10.)

Opening Service at the New Weddell Memorial Church.

Weddell Memorial Church, in Fulton, has been torn down and the material used to erect a new building on Montrose Heights, at the corner of National and Kemp Streets. The new church is a Gothic structure with a Sunday-school room in the rear. A few years ago, at the suggestion of the Rev. S. S. Spathey, then rector of the church, Mr. Alexander W. Weddell gave to the church the three beautiful lots on which the new church now stands. Owing to the removal of members from Fulton and the number of former Weddell Memorial members living on Montrose Heights, the vestry felt that the time had come to move. With the consent and approval of the Bishop and with the aid of the Diocesan Missionary Society and the splendid support of the Rev. Beverley D. Tucker, Jr., D. D., rector of St. Paul's Church, the present building has been erected. A loyal group of workers at the old Weddell Memorial Church, together with a male quartette that has rendered most faithful service, will form the nucleus of the new congregation. Sunday, January 27, the opening service was held. The Rev. S. S. Spathey preached the sermon, and there was a brief historical sketch by the Rev. Hugh W. Sublett, D. D., rector of St. John's Church.

The Honorable Alexander W. Weddell, Ambassador to the Argentine, the distinguished son of the Rev. Alexander W. Weddell, to whom the church is a memorial, was present, and addressed the congregation. There was special music by the quartette and St. Paul's choir.

LETTER FROM BISHOP BURTON.

It was pleasant to have you associate me with the Weddell Memorial Mission and Chapel, though it is so many years ago that that association was vital.

The Weddell Memorial Mission was started because Fulton was an isolated portion of the City of Richmond, and also because our St. John's communicants living in that region had an inconvenient and distant access to the Mother Church.

The Mission was begun with a Sunday School in a hall over a grocery store in Fulton. My recollection is that a vehicle, furnished by Captain Cyrus Boissieux, Junior Warden of St. John's Church, was used to transport the Sunday-school workers from Church Hill to Fulton.

Bishop Whittle preached, on a Sunday afternoon, the opening sermon of Weddell Memorial Chapel. That Sunday morning the Episcopal Church had been attacked by one of the local pastors. It proved to be a useful advertisement of our Missionary Enterprise.

For a time the Rev. Dr. Pike Powers, rector of St. Andrew's Church in Richmond, was my assistant, with special charge of Weddell Memorial Mission.

The Mission was meant, not only to serve the interests of Church Extension, but also to perpetuate to Godly Memory of my devoted predecessor in the rectorship of St. John's, who was the very personalification of Church Extension and City Missions.

If any of my fellow workers in Weddell Memorial Mission survive, I thank them from my heart for their co-operation, without which the enterprise would have been impossible.

I beg the rich and plentiful blessing of the Divine Head of the Church on Weddell Memorial Mission, under its new auspices and in its new environment.

Faithfully yours,

Lewis W. Burton.
Retired Bishop.

Lexington, Ky.

CHURCH INTELLIGENCE

FINANCE REPORT.
Missionary Outlook for 1935.

General Convention adopted for 1935 an Emergency Schedule of appropriations to the amount of		$2,313,115
It is estimated that further savings in operations (lapsed balances) can be effected to the extent of		60,000
Leaving estimated expenditures in 1935 under the Emergency Schedule of		$2,253,115
The estimated total to be received from the Dioceses in 1935 is	$1,352,000
The estimate of income from other sources such as interest on Trust Funds, United Thank Offering, etc., is	727,325
Additional resources not included in above estimate	30,000
Total resources in sight		$2,109,325
Indicated deficiency		$ 143,790
Toward this deficiency the Council has in hand three individual gifts of $20,000 each, conditional upon a fourth such gift being secured. If this is obtained the total from this source will be		80,000
Leaving a balance to be raised or pledged prior to February 12 of		$ 63,796

TWENTIETH ANNIVERSARY.

On Sunday, January 13, special services were held in all of the churches of the Diocese of Cuba, marking the twentieth anniversary of Bishop Hulse's consecration as Bishop of Cuba. Bishop Hulse was the celebrant at the Cathedral service and preached the sermon, reviewing the work in Cuba during his twenty years of Episcopate and telling of some of his plans for the future. He was assisted in the service by the Dean, Canon Barrios, Archdeacon Lopez-Guillen and the Rev. Mr. Serapion.

A portrait of the Bishop, painted by a Cuban artist, which will be presented to him by the clergy of the diocese at the coming Convocation, was shown to the congregation after the service.

On Monday night Bishop Hulse was the guest of honor with the Cathedral Chapter at dinner at the Deanery. At this time the Chapter presented to the Bishop a handsome pair of candlesticks as a token of their high esteem and appreciation of his effective administration.

The Cathedral congregation had planned a reception for Bishop and Mrs. Hulse, but this had to be postponed because of the illness of Mrs. Hulse, who had been seriously sick since her return to Cuba with Bishop Hulse.

Hugo B. Blankingship.

* * *

CONFERENCE FOR CHURCH WORK, 1935.

Wellesley College will again be the scene of the Conference for Church Work in 1935. The thirty-first annual session of this great national summer school will be held from June 24 through July 5, in the same building as for the past eighteen years. The Rt. Rev. Stephen E. Keeler, D. D., Bishop Coadjutor of Minnesota, who directed the conference last year, will be in charge again, and the Rev. Leicester C. Lewis, Ph. D., rector of St. Martin's-in-the-Fields, Chestnut Hill, Pa., is to be the chaplain. Those wishing information should address the conference secretary, Miss Marian DeC. Ward, 150 Commonwealth Avenue, Boston, Mass.

Marjorie M. Raymond.

* * *

THE FIELD DEPARTMENT.

By Rev. Bartel H. Reinheimer, D. D.,
Executive Secretary.

In the November 1934, reductions at Church Missions House the appropriation for the Field Department for 1935 was cut $25,727. In several ways this is the most drastic cut in any of the general Church agencies.

The first measure applied was a reduction in the staff. The resignation of the Rev. Robert W. Patton as Field Director was accepted. A word about the work of this great leader is given below. The year 1935 finds him giving his full time to the preservation of the American Church Institute for Negroes which has been jeopardized by the decreased appropriation from the general Church.

Two of the four General Secretaries have been released, the Rev. R. W. Trapnell and the Rev. David R. Covell. Dr. Trapnell was appointed in October, 1931, resigning the rectorship of the Church of the Good Shepherd, Norfolk, Virginia, to join the Department. His field work has been largely in Provinces 3, 4, 7.

Mr. Covell was appointed a General Secretary in November, 1929. The five preceding years he was Executive Secretary in the Diocese of Los Angeles. Mr. Covell was the senior in years of service with the National Council of the six members of the Department's staff. His work has been largely in the Fourth and Eighth Provinces. In the former he played an important part in the Teaching Mission on the Great Commission.

Mrs. Bernardine Boyd, a Speaker's Bureau stenographer since 1928, was also released. With her departure three stenographers have been eliminated from the Department's office in two years.

A second measure of reduction resulted from the abolishing of children's allowances to all workers at Church Missions House. To two officers of the Department this meant a reduction in salary at $960 and of $640 to the other two.

The foregoing salary reductions and eliminations carried also a fifty per cent reduction in the items for Pension Premiums and travel allowance.

The final measure of reduction consisted in decreasing the appropriation for printing and publications from $7,000 to $3,000. On such an appropriation it will hardly be possible to offer again for free distribution a leaflet like "The Log Book of 1934," for which nearly half a million copies, were asked.

This adjustment downward in the appropriation for field work comes at the end of a year in which the Department achieved a record-breaking promotional coverage of the Church.

The year opened with the Presiding Bishop's Call. The six members of the staff were employed as couriers and in the two weeks, January 9-22, presented the Message in person to eighty of the Bishops. Subsequently the office force of the Department assisted the Presiding Bishop's Office in the handling of nearly a million pieces of literature for the Church-Wide Endeavor, involving separate shipments to 1,200 parishes and missions.

Following the February meeting of the National Council, the Department undertook the promotion of the 1934 Supplementary Appeal, cooperating with the dioceses and with the National Committee on the Everyman's Offering. The contributions to this Supplementary Appeal promise to exceed $280,000.

Connected with the promotion of this Appeal was the organization and handling of the nine regional conferences held in April at Boston, Philadelphia, Birmingham, Raleigh, Chicago, Omaha, Portland, Fresno, and Dallas.

During the year, eighty-five rectors of parishes responded to a call for enlistment as Field Department Aides to supplement the work of the six full-time members of the staff. This corps of volunteers replaced the Associate Secretaries of the preceding triennium and demonstrated their effectiveness in the November Missionary Itinerary.

This November, 1934, Missionary Itinerary utilized the Missionary Bishops present at General Convention. Twenty-one teams of three members were organized by the Department by associating a representative of the Woman's Auxiliary and a Field Department secretary or aide with each of the missionaries.

There were 413 cities and towns visited in eighty-one dioceses and missionary districts. The teams addressed 1,250 meetings of various kinds, at which the aggregate attendance was well over 125,000 people. This would seem to indicate that more members of the Church received a personalized presentation of the Church's missionary work than ever before in the preparation for an Every Member Canvass.

It is a satisfaction to have had such a year of field work before the reductions became effective. The Department moves into 1935 partially dismantled.

It is interesting to recall that the Field Department's lineage dates back to the very organization of the Domestic and Foreign Missionary Society. As early as 1823 Ephraim Bacon, George Boyd, and John Davis were appointed domestic or visiting agents to create interest and collect means. Thereafter and continuously through more than a century that has ensued, the Church has relied upon visiting agents of one kind or another to create interest and collect means.

A notable point in this record was reached in 1905 when the Church was divided into eight regional Departments for missionary cultivation. The following year brought the appointment in connection with this scheme of the greatest of our Church's promotion secretaries, the Rev. Robert W. Patton. During the following ten years he originated a message and methods which revolutionized the promotion of parochial as well as missionary giving within our Church, and won the General Convention of 1919 to the inauguration of the Nation-Wide Campaign.

The success of the movement convinced the Church of the need of a permanent and adequate promotional organization. The Nation-Wide Campaign Department succeeded the joint commission of the same name in the set-up of the National Council in 1920. Later it was renamed Field Department. Its work was constructively developed under the leadership of its Executive Secretaries, the Rev. William H. Milton, the Rev. R. Bland Mitchell, and the Rev. C. E. Snowden.

This interesting paragraph is found in the report of the National Council for 1925:

"The Council, at its May meeting, decided that it was asking the Field Department to attempt the impossible by allowing it only four full-time Field Secretaries for reaching the whole Church. With so limited a staff the Department had to confine itself to extensive or 'broadcasting' field service to the neglect of intensive and follow-up work. It was felt that the time had come, if the Church is to be won to a clear vision of its responsibility and opportunity, to inaugurate a more continuous and intensive and educational and training policy. To this end permission was granted to secure five additional Field Secretaries in order that the Department might be able to put its services at the disposal of the dioceses in a more sustained manner."

This enlarged staff authorized by the National in 1925 was never realized, but the roster of the Department has averaged eight officers in the fifteen years just ended. The Emergency Schedule of 1935 permits two headquarters secretaries and two field secretaries instead of the four headquarters and nine general or field secretaries contemplated in 1925. This is a smaller force than was being maintained in the era of provincial secretaries which preceded the organization of the National Council.

It is necessary to go back thirty years to come to a time when the Church was undertaking to promote the knowledge and support of its missionary work with a smaller force of visiting agents than is provided for by the Emergency Schedule of 1935.

* * *

GOOD NEWS.

Seventy-Nine Have Paid 100 Per Cent of Expectations.

The revival of missionary zeal throughout the Church is evidenced by the record of payments made by the dioceses on their missionary objectives for the year 1934.

On December 1 there was still due on the Expectations the sum of $428,718. When the books of the national treasurer closed for the year on January 21, there had been paid since December 1, $414,338, leaving a shortage of only $14,380. The collections for the entire year amounted to $1,255,452, or 98.8 per cent of the Expectations. Out of the ninety-nine dioceses and districts, at home and overseas, seventy-nine have paid 100 per cent or more of their Expectations. The total of the shortages was $33,142, but the total overpayments were $18,762, leaving a net shortage of $14,380.

* * *

EPISCOPAL "CHURCH OF THE AIR". Order of Service of Broadcast, 10 A. M., Sunday, February 3, 1935.

Opening announcement.

Anthem: Psalm 65:1 and 2.—

"Thou, O God, art praised in Sion; and unto thee shall the vow be performed in Jerusalem.

"Thou that hearest the prayer, unto thee shall all flesh come."

Anthem written by Charles MacPherson. Published by Novello.

Sentences.

Prayers.

Hymn 117, Episcopal Hymnal—"He Who Would Vallant Be—" Words by John Bunyan, 1628-1688. Tune, "St. Dunstan's", written by Winfred Douglas, 1917.

Address: "Forward."—The Rt. Rev. Henry W. Hobson, D. D., Bishop of Southern Ohio, Chairman of the Forward Movement Commission of the Episcopal Church.

Hymn 535, Episcopal Hymnal—"Go Forward, Christian Soldier"—Words written by Laurence Tuttiett, 1861. Tune, "Lancashire," written by Henry Smart, 1836.

Prayers and benediction.

Closing announcement.

The service will be conducted by Bishop Hobson. The organist and director of the choir will be Mr. Parvin Titus of Christ Church, Cincinnati. The choir will also be from Christ Church.

Over WKRC, Cincinnati, with a nation-wide Columbia hook-up over WABC.

* * *

WOMEN TRUSTEES.

Church Army has elected two women to its Board of Trustees, one from the Diocese of New York, Miss Florence S. Sullivan, the other from Long Island, Miss Lucy Kent.

* * *

MEXICO.

The vestry of Christ Church, Mexico City, has elected the Rev. Charles W. Hinton as rector to succeed the Rev. F. W. Golden-Howes. The Mexican Government has granted a permiso to Mr. Hinton to serve for a period of six years, during which time he is expected to train his successor, who must be a Mexican by birth. Mr. Hinton has already entered upon his duties.

OKLAHOMA.

Rt. Rev. Thomas Casady S. T. D. Bishop.

The Presiding Bishop Preaches in a Presbyterian Church.

The forty-first annual convocation of the Missionary District of Oklahoma was held in the Church of the Redeemer, Okmulgee, January 15 to 17. Or rather, some of the convocation was held there. The Church of the Redeemer is beautiful, but not large, and proved to be altogether inadequate for the unprecedented attendance.

When, on the evening of January 15, Bishop Casady read his annual address in the Church of the Redeemer, many were unable to gain admittence to the church.

The pastor and people of the First Presbyterian Church, Okmulgee, graciously offered the use of their church edifice for the purposes of the convocation. An altar was improvised, with office lights and other accustomed furnishings, and on January 16, at the service of Morning Prayer, Bishop Perry preached there before a congregation of approximately a thousand people.

Again in the evening the Presbyterian church was filled for a missionary meeting, at which four of the younger missionary clergy of the district spoke of their work, and Bishop Perry presented a world-view of the Church's Mission.

The Presiding Bishop also conducted a Quiet Hour for women. Bishop Casaday, in his annual address, emphasized the value of the Forward Movement, soon to be launched in the Church, and urged the need for an adequate Endowment Fund, in order that this Missionary District might soon become a self-supporting diocese.

All the officers of the district were continued in their respective offices.

The following were elected as delegates to the Provincial Synod: The Rev. E. H. Eckel, Jr., the Rev. Eric Montizambert, the Rev. Samuel U. J. Peard; the Hon. L. W. Pratt, Mr. A. D. Cochran, Mr. O. A. Jennings.

James Mills.

Knights of the Order of St. Martin.

The Most Rev. James De Wolf Perry, D. D., Presiding Bishop, and the Rt. Rev. Thomas Casady, Bishop of Oklahoma, have consented to serve as patrons of the Order of St. Martin, a fraternal Order for Churchmen, headquarters of which are located in Trinity Parish, Tulsa, Okla.

Both the Presiding Bishop and Bishop Casady have been declared Knights of the Order by the Inner Council, which constitutes the governing body.

Chapters of this Order are now located in Trinity Church, Tulsa, Okla., and in St. Thomas' Church, Pawhuska, Okla. Letters of inquiry regarding its organization and work may be directed to the rector of Trinity Church, Tulsa, the Rev. E. H. Eckel, Jr.

LEXINGTON

Rt. Rev. H. P. A. Abbott, D. D., Bishop.

School Activities.

The third annual Epiphany party for Margaret Hall, Versailles, was held at the school on January 11. The advisory board of women, composed of Woman's Auxiliary members from the various parishes in the diocese, sponsor the affair. Gifts of money and provisions were presented to the Sisters of St. Anne. Members of the lower school presented an Epiphany play, composed, staged, and costumed by the pupils themselves. Over 150 persons attended, representing many parishes.

The Diocesan Normal School at Lexington began its fourth year on January 7. For ten Monday evenings, courses leading to N. A. L. A. credits will be given in the parish house of Christ Church. Four subjects are being taught. The number of persons having credits and diplomas in N. A. L. A. has increased greatly as a result of the school sessions.

Weaving.

The weaving of rugs, coverlets and bags is becoming a parish industry in St. Thomas' Mission, Beattyville, oldest mountain mission in Kentucky. The women are unable to keep up with orders, the demand for their work is so great. Three looms are in almost constant use. The Rev. Frederick Drew, priest-in-charge, says: "We wish all the industries of the country were doing as well in proportion." This work is the only contribution some of the workers are able to make to the Church's program.

At Eager, a preaching station associated with this mission, contributions to diocesan and general Church work are made possible through the sale of quilts, for which there are many orders.

KENTUCKY

Rt. Rev. C. E. Woodcock, D. D., Bishop

One Hundred and Seventh Annual Convention.

The Diocese of Kentucky held its one hundred and seventh annual convention January 23 and 24 at Christ Church Cathedral, beginning with celebration of the Holy Communion at 9:30 o'clock. The opening session was held in the Bishop Dudley Memorial Hall.

Members of the Laity League of the diocese, the Brotherhood of St. Andrew and the Young People's Service League met together at eight o'clock Wednesday night in the Cathedral House.

A celebration of the Holy Communion took place at 7:30 o'clock Thursday with the Rev. Custis Fletcher, rector of Grace Church, Paducah, celebrant, assisted by the Rev. William Banks, of St. Paul's Church, Henderson.

Mission is Topic.

The Thursday afternoon session was devoted to a discussion of missions. Speakers included the Rev. J. Luther Martin, priest-in-charge of St. George's Mission, Louisville; the Rev. Charles F. Wulf, rector of St. Paul's Church, Hickman, and the Rev. Walter C. Whitaker, rector of Christ Church, Bowling Green.

Bishop Woodcock Celebrates Thirtieth Anniversary.

The thirtieth anniversary of the consecration of the Rt. Rev. Charles E. Woodcock, as the third bishop of Kentucky, was observed with the celebration of the Feast of the Conversion of St. Paul Friday morning. All clergy of the diocese took part in the service.

Woman's Auxiliary Hold Convention.

The convention of the Woman's Auxiliary was held Tuesday at Christ Church Cathedral with Mrs. Starling Fagin, president, in charge.

Speakers on the program included Sister Ignatia, O. S. A., of Margaret Hall, Versailles; Mrs. Proctor Smith, Mrs. S. M. Russell and Mrs. William H. Langley, Jr.

Delegates from Hickman, Paducah, Columbus, Henderson and Hopkinsville were present.

NORTH CAROLINA.

Rt. Rev. E. A. Penick, D. D., Bishop.

Clergymen Come From Many Points to Honor Dr. Rollins.

Episcopal clergymen from many points in North Carolina gathered in Raleigh on January 21 to honor Dr. Wallace E. Rollins, Dean of the Episcopal Theological Seminary at Alexandria, Va.

They met in the parish house of the Church of the Good Shepherd at a beautifully appointed dinner, with Bishop Thomas C. Darst, of East Carolina, as toastmaster. The Bishop of North Carolina, Dr. Edwin E. Penick, welcomed the distinguished guest.

Most of those at the dinner had been students at the Seminary under Dr. Rollins. In addition to the honor guest, those present were: Bishop Thomas C. Darst, Wilmington; Bishop Edwin A. Penick, Raleigh; Rev. Edwin Bethea, Rockingham; Rev. Frank Dean, Wilson; Rev. D. Parker Moore, Weldon; Rev. Joseph N. Bynum, Roanoke Rapids; Rev. George S. Gresham, Goldsboro; Rev. E. W. Halleck, Wilmington; Rev. William M. Latta, Lumberton; Rev. Daniel W. Allen, Lexington; Rev. Daniel W. Allen, Lexington; Rev. Ernest Winborne, Mt. Airy; Rev. Thomas Clarkson, Smithfield; Rev. Howard Hartzell, High Point; Rev. Stephen Gardner, Washington; Rev. Sidney Matthews, Plymouth; Rev. Andrew Milstead, Statesville; Rev. David W. Yates, Tarboro; Rev. A. E. Sanderson, Oxford; Rev. Theodore Partrick, Raleigh, the host, and A. B. Andrews, Raleigh, chancellor of the diocese.

Contralto solos were sung by Mrs. Louis V. Sutton, and Herbert Byrd rendered violin selections. The piano accompanist was Mrs. Frederick W. Staudt.

Dr. Rollins has been the guest of Mr. Partrick over the week-end. He occupied the pulpit of the Good Shepherd on Sunday.

In an informal speech, he told the dinner guests last evening that the intellectual equipment of students at the Seminary today is much higher than it was fifteen years ago. Where few entered with college degrees then, Dr. Rollins stated, about eighty or eighty-five per cent enter today with degrees. He pictured qualifications essential for the ministry today, and said the Seminary is seeking a higher type of man, better fitted to cope with the situations confronting the world.

Dr. Rollins, at Good Shepherd, Says God is Living Ceature to Followers.

God becomes not some distant being but a living creature to His followers, declared Dr. Wallace E. Rollins, Dean of the Episcopal Theological Seminary at Alexandria, Va., in his sermon as guest preacher at the Church of the Good Shepherd.

"For those who became the followers of Christ in His day, life was opened Godward; God became a reality. It was an epoch then and it is an epoch today when men and women become alive to the presence of God and feel that God is adequate for every need."

Dr. Rollins took his theme from a verse in Corinthians: "If any man be in Christ, he is a new creation; the old has gone; the new has come."

"It is certainly a fact that Christ brought a new quality into life and did change men and women into something else. They became imbued with new motives and a new sense of values. They were given a new power and they became conscious of a new liberty," declared Dr. Rollins.

"We need today just the things that Christ brought. We need to feel the need of God and to awake to the realization that He is sufficient for every need. How much we need the spirit of kindliness, the spirit of fellowship, the spirit of liberty and joy. May we give ourselves to Him anew, and may these same results come to us in the year 1935."

NEW JERSEY

Rt. Rev. Paul Matthews, D. D. Bishop
Rt. Rev. A. W. Knight, D. D., Bishop Coadjutor.
Rt. Rev. R. E. Urban, Suffragan Bishop.

Institution of Rector at Grace Church, Merchantville.

The Ven. John de B. Saunderson, Ph. D., was instituted as rector of Grace Church, Merchantville, N. J., on Sunday, January 20, by the Rt. Rev. Albion Knight, D. D., Coadjutor Bishop of New Jersey, this being the first service of its kind in the past twenty-eight years. Dr. Saunderson succeeds the Rev. Harold Morse, who retired on December 31, 1934. Clergy from the surrounding districts were present, and an old and valued friend of the rector was also present in the person of the Rev. Charles H. Arndt, D. D., rector-emeritus of Christ Church and St. Michael's, Germantown, Philadelphia, who at the request of the Bishop said some suitable prayers. Dr. Saunderson was escorted to the chancel rail by the wardens, John Page and Arthur Truscott, who presented him with the keys of the church. The new rector hails from the Diocese of Maine, where he was rector of Old Town, Maine, Archdeacon of the Penobscot, and Chaplain to the University of Maine. Before going to Maine in 1927, Dr. Saunderson served as rector of Christ Church, Brownsville, Diocese of Pittsburgh. A reception of the wardens and vestry and their wives was given in the rectory after the service, and was attended by the Bishop and other visiting clergy.

SOUTHERN VIRGINIA.

Rt. Rev. A. C. Thomson, D. D., Bishop.

Annual Council.

The fifty-third annual Council of the Diocese of Southern Virginia, which met at St. Paul's, Newport News, January 22 and 23, was quiet and cheering. In his address to Council, Bishop Thomson expressed his gratitude for the loyalty and devotion of the clergy and their people during the past year, which has been a time of difficulty and much distress and for that reason a time of testing. "Out of a situation," said the Bishop, "which at the time of the last Council seemed almost desperate, we have won our way by God's help and goodness, to a place from which the outlook is more encouraging than it has been for several years." The Bishop stated that the most significant change in the parish alignment in the diocese was the merger whereby Christ Church, St. Luke's and St. Andrew's in the City of Norfolk, have combined in one parochial organization to be known as Christ and St. Luke's Church, effective June 1. He commended the members of these three congregations for the subordination of deep personal preferences and long established loyalties to a consideration of what appeared to be the permanent good of the church.

The Bishop commented on the commission on the Forward Movement as appointed by General Convention, which he described as a call to companionship with Christ. The Bishop closed his address by reminding Council that the meaning of the reports, parliamentary procedure and business detail was really companionship with Christ in His ministry to mankind.

Under official matters, the Bishop reported four postulants, four candidates and 59' confirmations.

Council passed a resolution approving the merger of the three Norfolk churches and felicitating the rectors, trustees, vestries and congregations on the outcome of their deliberations.

A resolution was adopted looking towards the cooperation of the diocese with the Laymen's League Movement.

The constitutional amendment giving the colored clergy equal representation with the white clergy in Council passed its final reading. Heretofore, the colored Convocation was represented in Council by only two of the colored clergy. Their amendment admits all the thirteen colored clergy to the full privilege of Council.

Council adopted a re-written and revised Canon on the Election of Vestries. Th most significant change was the changing of the age limit of qualified voters at congregational meetings from twenty-one to eighteen years.

The officers elected for 1935 are:

Secretary, the Rev. Wm. A. Brown, D. D.

Treasurer, the Rev. Norman E. Taylor.

Chancellor, Col. James Mann.

Historiographer, Miss Mary F. Goodwin.

Delegates elected to the Provincial Synod:

The Rev. N. E. Wicker, Danville, Va.

The Rev. M. E. Travers, Kempsville, Va.

The Rev. Charles H. Holmead, Portsmouth, Va.

The Rev. George P. Gunn, Norfolk, Va.

Mr. W. B. Ferguson, Suffolk, Va.

Mr. E. B. Hodges, Norfolk, Va.

Mr. Ivor A. Page, Norfolk, Va.

Mr. George B. Townsend, Petersburg, Va.

Before adjourning the Council chose the Rev. Theodore S. Will of Hampon and C. G. Milhan of Williamsburg, as trustees of Stuart Hall at Saunton, and heard reports by Mrs. L. D. Pilcher, of Petersburg, on the Woman's Auxiliary and by Captain Frank W. Darling on the Boys' Home at Covington.

NEW YORK.

Rt. Rev. Wm. T. Manning, D. D., Bishop
Rt. Rev. A. S. Lloyd, D. D., Suffragan
Rt. Rev. Chas. K. Gilbert, D. D., Suffragan

Dr. Bowie Urges Adherence to the World Court.

Dr. W. Russell Bowie, rector of Grace Church in New York City, speaking before the Kiwanis Club at the Hotel McAlpin on Wednesday, January 23, denounced modern war as "dirty, barbaric slaughter," and urged that the United States enter the World Court.

"Modern war is neither romantic, glamorous, chivalrous nor heroic," said

(Continued on page 21.)

FAMILY DEPARTMENT

FEBRUARY.

2. Presentation of Christ. (Saturday.)
3. Fourth Sunday after Epiphany.
10. Fifth Sunday after Epiphany.
17. Septuagesima.
24. Sexagesima.
25. St. Matthias.* (Monday.)

* * *

COLLECT FOR THE PRESENTATION OF CHRIST IN THE TEMPLE, COMMONLY CALLED THE PURIFICATION OF SAINT MARY THE VIRGIN.

(February 2.)

Almighty and ever living God, we humbly beseech Thy Majesty, that as Thy only begotten Son was this day presented in the temple in substance of our flesh, so we may be presented unto Thee with pure and clean hearts, by the same Thy Son Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

* * *

FOURTH SUNDAY AFTER THE EPIPHANY.

O God, Who knowest us to be set in the midst of so many and great dangers, that by reason of the frailty of our nature we cannot always stand upright; Grant to us such strength and protection as may support us in all dangers and carry us through all temptations; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

* * *

NAPOLEON'S RELIEF PROGRAM.

(From Ludwig's "Napoleon.")

"If the cold should be sharp, as it was in 1789, you must have fires kept alight in the churches and marketplaces, so that as many people as possible can warm themselves."—"The winter is very severe, meat is dear, we must have several homes of refuge in with the cutting of the Ourcq canal, with the construction of the Quai Desaix, with the paving of the back streets."—"The law directs that all beggars shall be laid by the heels. Were we to do something more than this, our conduct would be barbarous and absurd, arrest them, certainly, that you may give them work and food. We must have several home of refuge in every department."—"There are a great many out-of-work shoemakers, hatters, tailors and saddlers. See to it that five hundred pairs of shoes are made every day." He writes to the Minister for War saying that special orders for supplies for the artillery are to be issued. To the minister for Home Affairs: "We must provide work, especially this month before the holidays. Issue an order that in May and June two thousand of Saint Antoine workmen are to supply chairs, chests of drawers, armchairs, etc. . . . Send me your proposals tomorrow, so that a beginning may be made promptly."

He reads a by-law that no one wearing a workman's blouse is to walk through the Tuileries garden. Instantly he has the regulation cancelled, and gives express permission for such people to go through. He learns of a proposal to close the public reading-rooms: "I won't allow anything of the kind. I have not forgotten my own experience, how useful it was to know of a well-warmed room where I could read the newspapers and recent pamphlets. I will not allow others who are as poor as I was then to be robbed of these comforts." In the Theatre Francais, the stalls are to be very cheap on Sundays, "so that the people may enjoy the performance." There are to be no gambling hells in France: "They bring families to ruin, and I should set a bad example were I to tolerate them."

By his new education law, he establishes public elementary schools, middle schools, lycees, and technical colleges, throughout the country. There are to be six thousand free scholarships, and a third of these are to be reserved for the sons of specially deserving persons. Within three years, there are 4,500 elementary schools, 750 middle schools and 45 lycees. He honours the Institute by choosing a third of his first senators from among its members. The Ministry for Home Affairs is instructed to draw up lists "of the ten best painters, sculptors, composers, musicians, architects, and other artists whose talents make them worthy of support." He orders great frescoes to be painted, which shall depict striking incidents in his battles. He gives his reasons for this State Regulation of art, saying: "People complain that we have no literature. That is the fault of the Minister for Home Affairs!"—Public Welfare.

* * *

For the Southern Churchman.

COMMUNITY VALUES.

I.

The Home.

Upton H. Gibbs.

In every community there are three institutions that are fundamental to its welfare and development. These are the Home, the School and the Church.

The home is put first because it stands for the family. Before the nation or state, the home was established, and out of it they originated.

Scriptural account gives the origin of the human race to a single pair. This has neither been proven nor disproved scientifically. But it makes no difference, whether the family is the source of nation and state. It follows that whatever powers the nation or state possesses and exercises, these are inherent in the family. The heads of the family, the parents, have authority over the children to which the latter must submit and obey. The children on the other hand, are entitled to the loving care and protection of their parents.

The home, then, which is the family domain, is the foundation on which the superstructure of the state is erected. Permanency and strength should be its characteristics. Anything which is destructive to the permanency and strength of the home, will prove also destructive to the state. For its permanency, the home must be kept secure and intact. There must be children to insure its continuity, and parents and guardians for the children's training, and the management of the home. Marriage, of which the home is the outcome, ideally considered, is indissoluble. In its institution divorce was not contemplated, for that is disruptive. Death, which is inevitable, interrupts, but does not dissever family relationships, as does divorce.

The permanency and sanctity of the home, then, should be guarded and preserved at all costs. This duty and this responsibility are incumbent on the state for its own preservation and good, for if the foundation on which the state rests, is insecure, it means its ultimate undoing. This justifies laws against gambling and the liquor traffic, for both, in experience, have proved most dstructive to the peace and security of the home. And it is with the same justification that divorce will be prohibited or restricted.

Those who come thus to be joined should have some sense and realization of the responsibilities and duties involved, especially in regard to parenthood. Mrs. Gene Stratton-Porter, the author of The Girl of the Limberlost," and other popular stories, paid the following tribute to her father:

"He believed that no man had the right to bring a child into the world unless he intended to make himself responsible, so far as lay in his power, for its physical growth, for its mental culture, and for its loving and careful rearing."

And no matter how busy he was he always had time to give loving and careful instruction, both moral and educational, to his children.

Schools and churches cannot entirely take the place of the home training of the young. Unless these have the cooperation of the parents their efforts will be nullified to a great extent.

The ancient Romans regarded the home as sacred; its altar was typified by the hearth fire, that stood for the hospitality and spirit of the home. The incoming guest was told: "For thee the hearthfire glows."

Let us see to it, then, that the home fires be kept burning brightly and warmly for God and country.

* * *

For the Southern Churchman.

WE LIFT OUR HEARTS

Mabel C. Gorrell.

We lift our hearts to Him in earnest prayer,
Not understanding half the words we say;
With eager lips we plead to do our share,
Not dreaming all must come in His own way.

We beg of Him a firm, unwavering belief—
A courage that will never be denied,
We ask a hundred joys for every grief
Nor think that there are storms to be defied;

We plead for more of Love, that is Divine,
And tell to Him the things of our desire;
But never think to pattern our design
To shun the paths that lead through dust and mire;

Yet He will never fail to guide our feet,
As through some valley we would push our way,
He lifts to heights where joy becomes complete;
We learn the blessing that it is to pray.

* * *

The Poetry of Hymns.

There is the closest kinship between religion and poetry. Theology has its canons of thought, its laws of discussion, its rules for arriving at conclusions. Religion is not a matter of syllogisms; it is a question of surrender to the spirit of worship and spiritual fellowship, a way of feeling about God and ultimate Reality. Poetry is this precisely. Emerson wrote: "When the poet sings, the world listens with the assurance that now a secret of God is to be spoken." What finer and truer thing can be said of the prophet! In worship and fellowship one finds truth; that truth is best expressed by him who sees deeply into its eternal meanings. Poet and hymn writer alike are born of the same emotional response.

Poetry is closely associated with a sense of the beautiful. Why should not hymns be thus closely associated? When truth is emotionally realized it is invested with the glory of the Ideal, and the Ideal is always beautiful. Just as a rich emotional experience tends to rhythmic expression, so it tends to impress with a sense of pleasure. To one the beauty of poetic form may appeal most strongly, to another the beauty of content, or thought. The Christian poet or hymn writer finds in God, and in the divine Presence, however it be revealed, the ultimate truth that is most beautiful and satisfying. This expresses itself in the old hymn, "How tedious and tasteless the hours." There is something of the sentimental about this. The movement is spritely rather than stately. There is a diffuseness, a lack of concentration in details that robs the stanzas of the best effect. But the conception of the writer is essentially poetic, even though the technique be faulty. Far better is the poise and concentration of the Crusaders Hymn,

"Fair are the meadows, fairer still the woodlands,
Robed in the blooming garb of spring."

This is a genuine poetic touch. Here is the warm, growing smell of the spring time. Here is the suggestion of the life that carpets the meadows with the lush grass, and pushes the buds of the woodland into fragrant gladness. There is no power of nature so rare, so fascinating as this. Surely the transition of this beautiful power to the more beautiful and marvelous power of the Christ who in the night of woe puts songs into the hearts of men, is most natural and forceful! The beauty of spring is nature's beauty; the beauty of Jesus is more than natural. It requires a genuine poet to give the church such hymns.—The Christian Review.

* * *

For the Southern Churchman.

RECOMPENSE

Blossom Bennett.

Only the heart that has suffered can know
All the joy of release from his pain;
Only to those who were burdened with losses
Can come the glad fullness of gain.

Prisons that shackle the body or mind
Make one's freedom more precious and dear;
The loneliest life is most blessed by a friend,
And the saddest by courage and cheer.

Springtime is sweetest to those who have known
Bitter hardships of winter's fierce blast;
Only the man who has tasted of death
Can find heaven his home at the last.

* * *

Legitimate Outlet for Imagination.

Mr. Simpson paused and laid down his fork. The evening meal apparently held no further interest for him. His entire attention was focused on his son, Wilbur, who had launched on one of the most outlandish, inconsistent tales I had ever heard. To my surprise, Mr. Simpson's interest was not that of an amused parent. Rather, his manner was like one listening respectfully to an adult recital. Wilbur proceeded with his story; feeling the parental interest, he doubled his efforts, killing a few more bears and chasing a few more lions off the trail.

Surely, I thought, Mrs. Simpson would soon stop such nonsense. However, she too had struck an attitude of respectful silence. How long, I wondered, must I endure this. I could see nothing either amusing or interesting in such absurd stories.

Wilbur finally desisted because of shortage of breath, or a consuming hunger. No sooner had the narrative stopped than his younger brother, age five, clamored for attention. "Mamma," he pleaded, "may I tell one now?"

"No, Richard," replied the mother, "not now. You may tell one after dinner. Between courses you can outline your story so you'll know just what you are going to tell."

Until now I had not suspected that there might be method back of this madness. When Mrs. Simpson encouraged the younger boy to outline his story, however, and promised him the next chance, I began to wake up.

The boys ate silently during the remainder of the meal. They entered the conversation only when skillfully drawn into it by Father or Mother. It was easily seen, though, that Richard had his tale quite ready before the dessert appeared, and no sooner was it eaten than he exclaimed, "Now, Mamma, may I tell a story?"

"Yes, dear," said Mrs. Simpson, and settled herself to listen. Taking my cue from the parents, I did likewise.

Richard's story was even more thrilling. It, too, related to animal life, and he tried hard to encounter one of each species. Of course each was duly conquered by Richard and the companion whom he had allowed to accompany him on this perilous adventure. The story finished, both boys seemed in good spirits and ran off to play by themselves. Turning to Mrs. Simpson, I waited expectantly.

"You are wondering why I encourage it?" she asked.

"Yes."

"Well, I believe it encourages truthfulness." She explained further: "You see, by giving them a legitimate outlet for their active imaginations they are not tempted to tell falsehoods. When they feel the urge, they tell a 'big story' for just what it is. They do not try to pass it off as truth."

"How long have you been using this method?" I asked.

"More than a year," replied Mrs. Simpson, "ever since the day Wilbur told me about seeing a bear in the back yard. When pinned down, he admitted that perhaps he only thought it was a bear. Instead of punishing him, I simply taught him the meaning of fiction and then helped the children to outline stories. Both boys get much pleasure from it, and they each have a strict regard for truth; the practice has taught them to discern truth from fiction very quickly."

Mrs. Simpson's method is not a "cure-all" and may not be practical in all cases, but it has certainly been helpful to her. Her boys are far above the average with regard to truthfulness.—Mrs. D. W. Hinds, in National Kindergarten Asso. Release.

* * *

Upland Saints.

We ought not to rest content in the mists of the valley when the summit of Tabor awaits us. How pure are the dews of the hills, how fresh is the mountain air, how rich the fare of the dwellers aloft, whose windows look into the New Jerusalem! Many saints are content to live like men in coal mines, who see not the sun. Tears mar their faces when they might anoint them with celestial oils. Satisfied I am that many a believer pines in a dungeon when he might walk on the palace roof, and view the goodly land and Lebanon. Rouse thee, O believer, from thy low condition! Çast away thy sloth, thy lethargy, thy coldness, or whatever interferes with thy chaste and pure love to Christ. Make Him the source, the center and the circumference of all thy soul's range of delight. Rest no longer satisfied with thy dwarfish attainments. Aspire to a higher, a nobler, a fuller life. Upward to heaven! Nearer to God!—Spurgeon.

* * *

Striving for Perfection.

Like all life's lessons, the personal significance of the resurrection is one which we increasingly apprehend. At no point can we say, "I have fully understood or atttained." Our reach is always greater than our grasp, and there is continued fresh light glowing from the risen Christ to guide us in our upward search. "Excelsior" is the descriptive life-motto of the man who realizes himself as one "risen with Christ"; and while he is never aught but fully satisfied with the perfections of his great Ideal, he never for one moment pauses to be satisfied in himself. Such pause, indeed, would be fatal to his true progress, and would defeat the God-formed purpose of his life. There is in a little churchyard in Switzerland a simple inscription on the tomb of one who perished in an Alpine accident, which has always appealed to me with singular force: "He died climbing." He had heard the call of the mountains, and lost his life in endeavoring to respond. We have heard the call of the risen Christ, but, unlike the climber, we gain our lives in our sustained attempt to respond worthily. "Seek those things that are above" is a call to enjoy the largest possible life, for the very struggle develops latent possibilities and capacities, and each step upward is into fuller liberty and more perfect manhood.—J. Stuart Holden.

* * *

For the Southern Churchman.

PRAYER.

Leslie Savage.

I fear no sudden death, O Lord!
I would move swiftly toward the sun,
Aflame with throbbing joy and life
Before my hour-glass is run.
I dread a lingering creeping death
To feel my spirit age and fail.
I crave a meteor flight through space
From world to world—"Farewell!" and "Hail!"

* * *

Ideal.

The ideal layman:
Will have a vital religious experience.
Will have a sure faith in God.
Will have faith in his fellow-men.
Will believe in the Church.
Will know the history of the Church.
Will be enthusiastically committed to the work of the Church.
Will be a regular attendant upon the services of the Church.
Will invest himself in the program of Christian education.
Will give systematic and adequate financial support to the Church.
Will give loyal support to his pastor.
Will translate his religion into terms of service through his daily task.
Will be possessed of a world-vision.
—G. L. Morelock, in Arkansas Methodist.

* * *

The Greatest Discovery.

One asked the great Sir James Simpson, who discovered chloroform, what was the greatest discovery he ever made. "What was the greatest discovery I ever made?" he answered. "It was the discovery that I had a Saviour." And so it was that this brave and triumphant spirit, in spite of honors that came thick and fast, was satisfied to rest his feet upon the Rock of Ages. How much finer our poor old planet would be if multitudes of our richest and smartest men were not practically agnostic, but sincere believers in the Saviour of men.—Southern Christian Advocate.

* * *

To be a servant of Christ demands an initial act of surrender, the soul thrown upon the saving grace of God in Christ Jesus, accepting Him as Redeemer and Lord. But for the sanctifying power of the Holy Spirit, which immediately follows to do its work within the soul, there must be response on the human side taking the form of bringing into captivity every thought to the obedience of Christ.—Record (English).

FOR THE CHILDREN

For the Southern Churchman.

I AM GLAD

Minnie Roberts Dreesen.

I am glad stars shine
When day is done.
When sparkling sands for the hour have run,
When shadows follow setting sun,
When darker hours the heart would shun,
When daily tasks of life are done—
I am glad stars shine.

* * *

For the Southern Churchman.

THOSE RECTORY CHILDREN.

Chapter VI.

Seng-Tai.

M. L. G.

"There was a village in China," began Mr. Craig, "where the bad habit of opium smoking had so great a hold on the people that twenty or thirty families, almost all in the village, had become addicted to it. They lost energy, they got down—oh, very low, and they seemed almost a lost people. A few families had remained clear of the general curse, and these, with some Christians, who were kin to the poor opium-smokers, came to the misionaries nearest them. They were not of our Church, but of the great China Inland Mission—to ask their aid in rescuing their friends. These good native Christian neighbors gave to the missionaries money for medicine and supplies. The missionaries did their work well. The poor people were helped to break off their evil habit, and all but one family are said to have done so. They put away their idols, and in one idol's temple they made a Christian chapel."

"How did the idol like that?" Philip asked, his eyes round with interest.

"He made no more objection than Claire's doll, there. You see, he was of stone! Well, in the one family in which the missionaries had not been able to turn anyone from their bad habit, there was a little girl, about nine years old. She had been unwanted, as many little girls are in China. Her life in the miserable hovel that was her home had been worse than you could picture if I tried to tell you—neglect, dirt, hunger and disease made up most of it. Her parents were not cruel to her, only bound by their opium-smoking to their strange world of dreams. When she was rescued by the Chinese Christians she seemed a hopeless little bundle of rags and dirt and fear. Our mission hospital being the nearest place where she could have the medical and nursing care she needed, she was brought there by the missionary. But even when she was cleaned up, fed and warmed—for it was winter when they found her—she would not speak, but cower back from nurses and doctor as if in terror. At last our good Doctor Brown asked me to come talk to her, and I did—no answer, only eyes following every move I made. I had in the nurse, thinking she might better understand her own country-woman, but things were no better. Then I thought of a little picture of you, Claire, which my cousin Alice Trent had sent me. I had it in my pocket, for the letter had just come that enclosed it. I put it on the coverlet, and was rejoiced to see the little bony hand reach out for it. Do you remember it, Claire? My cousin said she took it one day last summer, when you all spent the day with them."

"Oh, yes, sir, I do," said Claire. "I wish it had been Winnie's, more fat and well-looking."

"Winnie's face would be a cheerful sight indeed," said Mr. Craig, smiling as he looked from Winnie's rosy face, with the bright brown eyes, like her mother's, and tangle of brown curls to Claire's, framed in pale gold, with a look of suffering in the gray eyes and delicate mouth, yet of patience and content. "But yours, little Claire, did the work. Little Seng-Tai clutched it in her two hands, she looked and looked. We had the pleasure of seeing a smile come on her own face, and when I left I made her understand that the picture was hers to keep."

"I'm glad!" said Claire, and she looked so.

"Did she have to go back to the mis'able home?" Winnie asked.

"No, indeed. Her parents were glad to give her up; she was too weak to work, even if they had had a well-ordered household, instead of a smoky den. There were weeks of care at the hospital before we could be sure she would live and be strong and well. But just before I left I took and developed a picture of her. David, my boy, bring me my bag from the hall."

"Yes, sir!" David was out and back in an instant.

"Let me see. I put it in this pocket," He drew out a thin brown envelope, "Ah, here it is. Seng-Tai sent this to you, Claire."

"Oh, my!" cried Claire softly. Her fingers trembled. "You open it for me, Father."

Father drew out the picture. A shy-ly-smiling little Chinese face, short black hair, long jacket and trousers, feet encased in slippers.

"She hasn't those funny Chinese feet," said Winnie, as the children crowded to see.

"No, that's where she was lucky. The neglect that almost cost her life saved her from having them bound. We had to shave her head, and it had grown out only a little way when this was taken."

"I don't think that's a pretty little dirl," Philip announced, staring hard.

"O Phil, yes, she is!" Claire answered, hurt.

"Prettiness is different over there, I reckon," Winnie added.

"That's it exactly!" Mr. Craig said. "When you see only these Chinese faces day after day you become so accustomed to them that it gets to be one's own face and the few other foreigners' that seem strange. Little Seng-Tai is going to be a nice looking girl when her hair comes back and she gets less thin."

"Tell her, thank you!" said Claire suddenly. "An' tell her I do think she's pretty."

"Claire," Mother said when all had looked at Seng-Tai, "would you like to send her a little present, if Mr. Craig will carry it to her?"

"O Mother, yes!"

"You remember the two dolls that came on your birthday? They were from different aunts," she added, turning to Mr. Craig, "but so alike that we put one away, for Claire finds one enough at a time, since she cannot play actively."

"I would rather than anything!" Claire said.

So when Mr. Craig left he carried a little box in which lay a doll that might have been a sister to Claire's precious Amy. And Claire went to sleep that night with Seng Tai's picture on her pillow.

Note: While the story of Seng-Tai is a fabrication, the incident of the opium village, its disease and its cure, is given substantially as reported in the China Centenary Missionary Conference Record, p. 567.

* * *

For the Southern Churchman.

Chinook.

William Allen Ward.

Chinook was a big Alaskan bear who dearly loved the broad, sweeping valley of his native Alaska—the towering, rock-ribbed shoulders of Mount McKinley and the singing river that cut through the forest on its way to the sea.

To Chinook, life was very happy, for it was summer, and there were many ripe berries to eat and out in the cool waters on an unknown river which flowed into the big Yukon were salmon which Chinook ate when he was hungry. Chinook was not worried about men, for he had never seen a man in all his life. He was a wild child of the Alaskan wilderness. The smell of a gun had no meaning to him. Chinook had never seen anything of which he was afraid. The big white polar bear lived further north, the snorting bull moose, that liked the lake country, was not a fighter and Chinook was as strong as the biggest timber wolf. So he lived a life of ease, until one day he spied from the river where he had gone to catch a salmon, two strange creatures who were hiding in the bush.

The creatures were men and they had come with traps and ropes to take Chinook, or some other bear just like him, back to Seattle, where he would be sold to the circus. Before Chinook knew what was taking place a strong rope fell about his neck and another around his body. Then he was dragged to a strong cage and put on a truck. Down to Sitka the men went, taking with them the beautiful bear which they were planning to sell into a life of captivity.

Chinook was bewildered. He could not imagine what was taking place. But he knew that he already was homesick for his brother and sister. Also his old father and mother. Chinook longed for the Alaskan wilderness when night came, where he might hide away in a cave, and watch the silent stars as they looked down from the brilliant night. sky. Weeks passed and Chinook was sold to a circus. The show toured the United States, finally reaching an obscure point in Texas. Chinook had no idea where he was—he only knew he was tired of people glaring at him and saying: "My, what a big bear! He's from Alaska, far away Alaska."

As a matter of fact, Chinook did not know what Alaska meant. He merely knew that he was away from home and wanted to go back. One night, a keeper left the cage door unlocked just for a moment. Chinook took advantage of the opportunity and escaped. But there were many strange adventures waiting for Chinook.

Instead of returning immediately to his wilderness home, as he thought, Chinook walked right into a big city. The lights blinded him and he was amazed at the way the people acted. Somehow they had never been frightened by him before, but now they raced down the street screaming in fear as he drew near. Poor Chinook. He did not know what to do. He saw a man dressed in blue approaching. Chinook had seen blue-coated men before and understood their duties.

There was an open car standing by the curb. Chinook leaped inside because he was afraid. The driver came and, not noticing the bear crouched in the rear, started driving into the country. Chinook was homesick for the mountains and the barren hills of Southwest Texas, caused him to rouse from the warm back seat and stick his nose out the open window. The driver saw the bear and was terrified. An instant later the driver leaped from the car and raced at full speed into the woods.

That night Chinook crept into the woodland. He saw another bear, but this Texas creature was unlike Chinook The Alaskan bear started toward the little brown bear and the Texas species raced away in fright.

"I'll tell you what is wrong," said the big gander that had recently flown to Texas from far-away Alaska. "You are a long, long way from home—the people here never saw your kind and they are scared of you."

"But how can I get back to Alaska?" asked Chinook. "I am so homesick!"

"Keep an eye on the pole star and travel only at night," the wise old gander said. "It is a long way, but you will get back to Alaska, if you keep walking."

Chinook took the gander at his word. For months and months he traveled, ever watching the pole star and journeying only at night. Finally Chinook came to some tall mountains—the Rockies of Colorado.

"Surely, I am at home," he thought.

"You are far away," a grizzly replied. "But watch the pole star and keep walking north—you will get home before long."

It was spring. The fir were beautiful. The stream sang a happy song. Chinook wandered into the peaceful valley. He laid down beneath a fir and went to sleep—he saw a bear, but determined not to ask him about home, for Chinook was afraid the bear would say: "Chinook, watch the pole star and keep walking north—"

Chinook was awakened by a bear rubbing his nose.

"Wake up, Chinook, wake up, "the bear was saying. "I'm your brother! And mother and sister and your father want to see you—you have come home!"

In the year that followed Chinook was glad to stay at home. He did not have much to say and always wondered why his brothers and sisters would say: "Chinook, tell us another story—you are so interesting—you have been to so many places! We wish we could see things as you have!"

* * *

When Ahmed Killed the Cobra.

(Founded on Fact.)

Nellie Milton was sitting alone in her Indian bungalow trying to study, now that the sun had set and it was getting cooler. Her companion had been obliged to go to the hills on sick leave, but Nellie could not get away just yet. It was wonderfully peaceful in the compound; her trusty old man-servant Ali had been called away for a short time, so Nellie was alone, but his young son Ahmed was over in the cook-house.

"Oh, dear, it is nice to be quiet at last," thought Nellie, "there's been such a lot of coming and going all day." Soon after she heard a slight rustling noise like a mat being dragged over the bare wooden floor. "Oh, I suppose that must be Ali come back. Well. he's been very quick; I expect Ahmed is asleep. The boy has been very different lately; I feel sure that he is secretly a believer, but he fears to confess because of his father."

Suddenly Nellie felt very sleepy, but she had learned in India to keep her ears alert even though her eyes were closed. No sound, however, broke the evening stillness, and strange to say no loud snores came from the compound where her old servant slept. Suddenly sensing danger, she sat up and looked round her. To her horror she saw a large, black snake not more than three feet away from where she was, a deadly cobra ready to attack. Most of his length was coiled on the floor, but his front part and head were held straight up, with hood open ready for battle. Nellie sprang lightly into the middle of the room, and believing that Ali had returned, she called him loudly. Alas! there was no reply, and the girl realized that the scraping sound she had heard on the mat had not been Ali at all, but the snake crawling over the floor.

"Oh, for a good stout stick!" thought Nellie, though she shivered with fear, for she never was able to kill anything. She knew that in the far corner of the verandah there were lots of thick bamboo canes, but if she left the room for a second the snake would disappear, and there was no telling where he would hide. Still, as the creature never moved she thought she might risk darting out for a stick. Quietly she backed to the door, her eyes bravely fixed on the snake, and springing across the verandah she seized a stout cane. But at that moment Ali entered the compound gate. She called him softly, and immediately, with Ahmed all excitement, they started looking everywhere for the lost snake.

At last Ali drew in his breath softly, and then they saw that the cobra had pushed himself up between the folding leaves of a glass door, though there seemed no room between them. If there had been time for him to look over the whole house he could not have found a better hiding place.

"Missy, I know their ways too well to let them escape me," Ali whispered. Oh, what a thrilling moment it was when he first saw the snake, and letting the leaves of the door go, he sprang quickly away. But Ali himself would not kill it, as he belonged to a certain class of Hindus who worship snakes. He would only have carried it away a short distance and let it go to attack some one else.

The cobra tried to escape through the open door, but Ahmed, seizing the cane, suddenly struck it a blow that stunned it. Then he struck it heavily till it lay motionless on the floor, with its head crushed, for until this is done, no one can be sure the snake is dead.

The boy's father was struck dumb with horror! He angrily demanded why his son had dared to kill the snake.

Ahmed's face was very pale, but suddenly with a swift look upwards he replied:

"Because I believe in Jesus, Missy's Saviour-God. I've been asking Him to give me courage in some way to confess Him, and this is my chance. My Father, I fear no evil, it is God who has saved our lives." But Ahmed's father was furious, and would not listen to Nellie's earnest pleading that he would not punish his son.

"The boy is cursed for ever. He has brought evil upon my house. Henceforth I have no son." And Ahmed's father kept his word in spite of all Nellie could say.

His father after beating him terribly flung him bruised and bleeding out of the compound gate, and next morning Ali himself had gone before Nellie was awake. But she resolved to keep praying for them both, that Ali and his son might love one another again.

Months passed, and then one day Nellie heard that Ali was sick in a mission hospital. He said he would like to see her, for he had hopes that she could tell him something about Ahmed.

"I have repented," he said. "I could never forget my boy's brave action in killing the cobra—it showed me as nothing else could do the difference in our faith. I refused for a long time to believe, but now I want my boy back. I can never be happy without him."

So a search began in every direction, but it was a year before Ahmed was found. He had boarded a freight train, and reached a distant coast town, fearing that his father might kill him if he dared to return. He looked for work there, and God indeed watched over him, for he had come across a Christian merchant who found him a job.

Joyfully he returned home, and his father has often said since:

"Thank God for the cobra's visit and Ahmed's confession, which He blessed to me also."—A. O. Stott, in S. S. Times.

* * *

For the Southern Churchman.

GOD'S LOVE.

Magda Brandon.

God cares for you every day;
In your work—in your play;
And His angels always stand
Close to you in slumberland.

His love for you He plainly shows
In all the food that for you grows;
It speaks through loving parents, too,
Who takes such thoughtful care of you.

His love shines in the birds and flowers;
In all your many happy hours;
In the days—every one—
The night, its rest, when day is done.

God's goodness is smiling through
This world that He has made for you;
It tells us plainly, you and me,
That goodness God loves to see.

* * *

The Legend of Eliab.

In the Holy Land lived a man called Eliab, whom God had blessed with earthly goods. He was also cunning in all the wisdom of the East. But all this could not bring peace to his heart; he was often full of sorrow and wished to die. Then a man of God came to him, and showed him an herb possessed of wonderful powers of healing, but Eliab said: "What is that to me? My body lacks not health; my soul is diseased. It were better for me to die." "The herb will do thy heart good," said the man of God. "Take it, and heal seven sick men, and then thou mayest die if thou wilt." Eliab did as he was asked, and sought out misery in its abiding places. He healed seven sick people, and succored the poor with his riches. Then the man of God came again to him and said: "Here is an herb of death; now thou mayest die." But Eliab cried: "God forbid! My soul longeth no more for death, for now I comprehend the meaning and use of life."—F. W. Krummacher.

* * *

Love and Forethought.

A little waif was asked, "What is love?" and answered, "Going errands." When in Samoa, Stevenson had left his small hut and removed into a large house. Stevenson felt sad and weary, and had also forgotten to bespeak his nightly coffee. While he was thinking the door quietly opened, and the native boy entered carrying the tray with that on it for which he longed. Stevenson said in the native tongue, "Great is your forethought." The boy corrected him, and said, "Great is the love."—Christian Endeavour World.

* * *

For the Southern Churchman.

AT WORK.

Martha Young.

Now that I work without a thought
Of compensation, gain,
My work goes to the goal it sought
Without a stroke in vain:

At work with God! Leave Him result
And He will give increase;
No labor can be difficult
When selfish aims shall cease.

Classified Advertisments and Notices

All notices and advertisements, excepting positions wanted, will be inserted in this department at a rate of 20 cents per agate line each insertion. Special raes to contracts of any length. A rate of 15 cents per line is made to persons seeking positions. No advertisement accepted for less than 50 cents.

Copy for this department must be received not later than Tuesday of the week in which it is intended that the first insertion shall appear.

A TRIBUTE

To Rev. Thomas Semmes, Retired Rector of St. Luke's Church, by the Richmond Clericus at Luncheon, January 28, 1935.

In the old Book of God, a dire calamity was pictured in the graphic terms of war by saying, "It shall be as when a standard-bearer fainteth." We hasten to limit the figure in the present application by saying that our beloved brother, for whom we are here to testify our love and esteem, has not fainted, nor is he dead, thank God. But we do feel that when a vigorous, stalwart standard-bearer leaves the ranks of parochial clergy it brings a rather sad sense of regret, while at the same time we rejoice in the record of achievement in the service of God.

Thomas Semmes is more than a name in Richmond—his dynamic personality that has endeared him to so many and his untiring zeal in the Master's service has marked an era in the religious life of our city. Under his inspiring leadership, St. Andrew's Church was built and its splendid activities inaugurated; Holy Comforter Church established, and now the beautiful St. Luke's on the Southside. But not simply in a material way has he left this monument in Richmond—his devotion to and knowledge of the Scriptures brought into existence the St. Andrew's men's Bible class, the largest in the Episcopal Church in America. Perhaps few men have such a wide circle of friends in all the churches of all denominations. He has been a recognized leader in the Ministerial Union and is truly a brother beloved by all.

Amidst a busy ministry, he has found time to render a sacrificial service to philanthropy and other lines of work for the welfare of the community. His sound judgment commended itself to the people of means and he became their almoner and has dispensed to the poor in a way that few realize. His work in Bethany Home is a ministry in itself. Few men's influence has been so felt in the State. An effective missioner, his services have been in demand and still are. With a faith unchanged, amid the present revolutionary thinking, he has preached the Word in season and out of season.

But not to dwell on his splendid preaching ability, that for over forty years has so blessed our city and the sealed fruits of which are manifest, we would record our love for him as a friend and brother. Years do not seem to have abated his natural force or weakened his genial spirit, his keen interest in life, his crisp concise appraisal of events and books and his perennial humor. It is said that a man once mixed up Litany and prayer that the Lord would illuminate the bishops, priests and deacons that in due time we may enjoy them. We do not have to pray this prayer for Thomas Semmes—we enjoy him—we want to continue to enjoy him—we love him and we thank God for his rich, fruitful ministry amongst us and pray God to spare him to us for many years to come.

P. W. REED,
Chairman of Committee.

This tribute was adopted unanimously by the Clericus and instructed its secretary to make further publicity of same in the daily papers and church magazines, also to spread it on the minutes of the meeting.

SPECIAL NOTICES.

CHURCH VESTMENTS.
Cathedral Studio, Church embroideries, Altar and Pulpit Hangings. Stoles from $6.50. Burse and veil from $10. Surplice from $8. Send for complete line of pure Irish linens by the yard. Silks, fringes and gold thread. Embroidered emblems ready to appy. Altar Guild Handbook, 50c.
50c.
L. V. MACKRILLE
11 W. Kirke St., Chevy Chase, Washington, D. C.
Telephone Wisconsin 2752.

CHURCH LINEN.
FINE IRISH LINEN specially selected for Church use. 36 inches to 54 inches wide, cut any length. Sample of 12 qualities on request. Mary Fawcett Company, 812 Berkeley Avenue, Trenton, N. J.

RAZOR SHARPENER.
SHARPENS ANY STRAIGHT RAZOR, or safety razor. Guaranteed by manufacturers, and I guarantee it to please you. 50 cents per cake, or 3 cakes for $1.00. I take subscriptions for all magazines published at publishers' rates, or less. Sold by a wheel chair invalid. Edward P. Broxton, R. F. D., Blythe, Ga.

FOUNTAIN PENS.
A FOUNTAIN PEN AT A 1933 VALUE, with the Spencerian quality and smooth writing ease famous for seventy-five years. Guaranteed. Points fine and medium. Colors, gloss black, green and gold, Burgundy, blue and black, grey pearl. Price $2.00. Sold by a shut-in wheel chair invalid. Edward P. Broxton, R. F. D., Blythe, Ga.

CHURCH INTELLIGENCE.

(Continued from page 17.)

Dr. Bowie. "It is the killing of women and children by long-range guns, the bombing of defenseless towns by Zeppelins, the slow starving of children. War today is a dirty, barbaric slaughter, and will be more so in the years to come. In eighteen months of war $37,000,000,000 was blown away by America, and the net gain of the war was zero. We destroyed the regime of the Kaiser and got the regime of Hitler, Goebbels and Goering."

America's adherence to the World Court is one way of insuring international peace, according to Dr. Bowie. "The world situation today is like that which faced the individual states at the time of the organization of the Union," he stated. "Adoption of the Federal Constitution, establishment of the Supreme Court and elimination of interstate tariff barriers ended the same sort of jealousies, rivalries and near-conflicts we find in the world today."

New York News Notes.

Following a hundred-year-old tradition, the gates of St. Paul's Chapel, Broadway and Fulton Street, New York City, were closed for forty-eight hours prior to the eve of St. Paul's Day. The tradition goes back to an old law ordering that the property be thus protected from "The proscriptive right neighbors may have." After the forty-eight hours passed on Thursday, the gates opened at sundown and the ceremony was presided over by the Rev. Joseph Patton McComas, D. D., Vicar of the Chapel, which is one of the many belonging to Trinity Parish.

The Rev. W. Brooke Stabler, Chaplain of the University of Pennsylvania, was the preacher at All Angels' Church, Sunday morning, January 27.

The local alumni of Kenyon College and the members of the congregation of the Church of the Ascension, joined in a service Sunday evening, January 27, commemorating the life of the Rt. Rev. Gregory Thurston Bedell, for sixteen years rector of the Church of the Ascension, and later for thirty years Bishop of Ohio. Through Dr. Bedell, Ascension Memorial Hall and the Chapel of the Holy Spirit, were built for the students at Gambier. The preacher at this service was the Rev. William Foster Peirce, D. D., the present President of Kenyon College.

The annual service of re-dedication of the New York Church Mission of Help was held at St. Thomas' Church,

January Selection of the Religious Book Club . .

GOD AND THE SOCIAL PROCESS

By LOUIS WALLIS
author of Sociological Study of the Bible

A timely and constructive book showing how social forces, like those operating in the critical world-epoch of today, transformed early Hebrew paganism into the monotheism of church and synagogue.

Dr. S. Parkes Cadman writes:

"I have been greatly moved by your truly illuminating work. It should be read by every Christian and Hebrew teacher and pastor throughout the land. The order, development and conclusions t presents furnish an indispensable guidance to our clearer understanding of the Bible as a whole, and especially to the relation between pre-exilic Hebraism and Christianity."

354 pages, cloth, $2.00; postpaid, $2.15
5750 Ellis Avenue—Chicago
The University of Chicago Press

Break the Tyranny of UNCONTROLLED COLDS

When Colds THREATEN . . . VICKS VA-TRO-NOL

At the first sneeze or nasal irritation, quick!—a few drops of Vicks Va-tro-nol. Its timely use helps to prevent many colds, and to throw off colds in their early stages.

If a Cold STRIKES . . . VICKS VAPORUB

At bedtime, massage throat and chest with VapoRub, the mother's standby in treating colds. Through the night, its famous poultice-vapor action gives soothing relief.

BUILD RESISTANCE TO COLDS — by following the simple health rules that are part of Vicks Plan for Better Control of Colds. The Plan has been clinically tested by physicians and proved in home use by millions.

(Full details of this unique Plan in each Vicks package)

VICKS PLAN FOR BETTER CONTROL OF COLDS

COLDS
Creomulsion
Your own druggist is authorized to cheerfully refund your money on the spot if you are not relieved by Creomulsion.

The Ewart's Cafeteria
EXCELLENT FOOD
REASONABLE PRICES
Richmond, Va.
112-114 N. 5th St.
Norfolk, Va.
112-114 Market St.
Washington, D. C.
522 13th, N. W.

PARKER'S HAIR BALSAM
Removes Dandruff-Stops Hair Falling
Imparts Color and Beauty to Gray and Faded Hair
60c. and $1.00 at Druggists.
Hiscox Chemical Works, Patchogue, N. Y.

FLOWERS BY WIRE EVERYWHERE
Mosmiller Florist
115 E Main St.
424 E. Grace St
RICHMOND, VA.

Sunday afternoon, January 27, at 4 P. M. The speakers at this service were the Rev. Shirly C. Hughson, O. H. C., and Mr. Charles Burlingham, President of the Welfare Council of New York City.

E. F. K.

* * *

PERSONAL NOTES.

(Continued from page 2.)

A Seminary Wedding.

Miss Helen Tighe, niece and secretary to the Dean, and the Rev. Clifford L. Stanley, of the Seminary Faculty, surprised the whole Hill by being married early on December 23, in the Chapel, in the presence of their immediate families only.

Mrs. Stanley was born at Asheville, N. C. She graduated from the North Carolina College for Women, taught for two years at Leaksville, N. C., and came to the Hill as hostess and secretary for Dr. Rollins when he became Dean. During her years here she has made for herself a very distinctive place in the community. We cannot welcome her as a new comer, but the whole Seminary body greets her most warmly in a new capacity.

Mr. Stanley, a native of Williamsport, Pa., after attending Bucknell for two years, completed his undergraduate work and took his M. A. at the University of Virginia. On the completion of his Seminary course he took a charge in Tyrone, Pa., where he remained for three years, at the end of which time he was called back to Alexandria as instructor in the History and Philosophy of Religions. He is now in his fourth year as a member of the Faculty, and has been promoted to an Associate Professorship.

The Stanleys will live in an apartment that has been arranged for them on the ground floor of Bohlen Hall.

When answering advertisements mention this paper. Thus you will aid us in securing more advertising patronage.

LOANS
To individual depositors as well as to commercial depositors.
Discuss with one of our officers our monthly payment plan for financing purchases as well as other reasonable personal needs.
State-Planters Bank and Trust Company
RICHMOND, VIRGINIA.
Established 1865. Member Federal Reserve System.

RICHMOND'S OLDEST AND VIRGINIA'S LARGEST BANK
Established 1865.
FIRST AND MERCHANTS
National Bank of Richmond
JOHN M. MILLER, JR., President.
Capital and Surplus Five Million Dollars
Complete Trust Facilities

For the Church

R. GEISSLER, INC.
450 SIXTH AVE. NEAR 10th ST. NEW YORK
Church Furnishings
IN CARVED WOOD AND MARBLE · BRASS · SILVER FABRICS + WINDOWS

Surplices, Cassocks
ETC.
FOR THE CLERGY AND CHOIR
Altar Linens, Embroideries.
Materials by the Yard, Tailoring.
J. M. HALL, INC.
174 Madison ve
(Suite 702-3-4)
Bet. 33d and 34th
New York

CHOIR VESTMENTS
Cassocks, Cottas and Caps. Special low prices. Samples and prices on request.
Poplin Canterbury Caps, $1.00 each.
Paper Patterns for Choir and Church.
Vestments for sale.
HENRY HAYTER, 8205 Riverside Drive, Box 618, Rte. 1, St. Petersburg, Fla.

CAUTHORNE PAPER COMPANY
The South's Most Progressive Paper House
ALL GRADES OF PRINTING AND WRAPPING PAPERS
Richmond, Va.
This paper is printed on paper supplied by the Cauthorne Paper Company.

Church Furnishings
Gold, Silver and Brass
Church and Chancel Furniture
Write for Catalogue
for Episcopal Churches
W. & E. SCHMIDT CO.
308 Third Street, Milwaukee, Wis.

CONFIRMATION PAPERS
By
CANON F. E. HOWITT
1. Confirmation and Baptism.
2. Baptism and the Christian Covenant.
3. The Baptismal Covenant—Repentance.
4. The Baptismal Covenant—Faith and the Faith.
5. The Baptismal Covenant—The Faith.
6. The Baptismal Covenant—Obedience.
7. The Lord's Supper.
8. The Means of Grace.
A series of informing pamphlets compiled by Canon F. E. Howitt. They have an inestimable value in instructing those who contemplate membership in the Church, and for impressing the already confirmed with the sacredness and meaning of this holy ritual.
Price, single pamphlet, each..... 5 cents
Complete set of eight.....25 cents
Order from
SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN COMPANY
Richmond, Va.

Educational

The General Theological Seminary

CHELSEA SQUARE, NEW YORK

The next Academic year begins on the last Wednesday in September

Special students admitted and Graduate Courses for graduates of other Theological Seminaries

The requirements for admission and other particulars can be had from THE DEAN, 1 Chelsea Square, New York, N. Y

SHENANDOAH VALLEY ACADEMY

Certificates accepted by universities, colleges, West Point, Annapolis. The Academy's experienced teachers, cultural atmosphere, limited numbers, military discipline enable it to prepare boys to succeed in college. For catalogue write: Col. B. M. Roszel, Supt., Winchester, Va.

ST. MARGARET'S SCHOOL

TAPPAHANNOCK, VIRGINIA.

A Church School for girls. Boarding Department limited to 70. Colleeg Preparatory Course and Intermediate Grades. Athletics. Very moderate cost.

Country life and simplicity without isolation. Beautiful grounds on Rappahannock River. Three dormitories for different stages.

EDITH LATANE, Headmistress.

ST. CHRISTOPHER'S

A Church Boarding and Day School

Healthful, beautiful and historic surroundings. Boarding Department limited to 50 boys. Rate, $650. Reduction to sons of clergymen and missionaries. Illustrated catalogue on request.

REV. C. G. CHAMBERLAYNE, Ph. D., LL. D., Headmaster, Richmond, Virginia.

The Virginia Theological Seminary

ALEXANDRIA, VIRGINIA

For catalogue and other information, Address THE DEAN

The Beckford School

WOODSTOCK, VIRGINIA.

A school for younger boys. Second grade through Junior High School. On modern farm in Shenandoah Valley. Summer camp. Limited enrollment. Fifty dollars monthly.

EDMUND BURKE WHELAN, Headmaster.

The Bishop Payne Divinity School

The accredited Seminary of the Church for training colored men for the ministry The curriculum covers the full course for Deacons and Priest's Orders. The degree of D. D. awarded.

For catalogue and information, apply to Rev. F. G. Ribble, M. A., D. D., Dean Petersburg, Va.

The Episcopal Theological School

Cambridge, Massachusetts.

Affiliated with Harvard University. Dean H. B. Washburn, 3 Mason Street.

THOUGHTS for the THOUGHTFUL

The mind is the seed plot of deeds.—Storr.

The true prayer is not an attempt to change God's will—it is rather an attempt to order ourselves in accordance with His will.

"If we are our brother's keeper, we must of necessity fight for him and strive desperately to save him."

When we discover the needs of the Kingdom, when we feel a special desire to serve, it is God's calling and His Spirit leading.—Rev. E. Marmura.

"The father in the Parable of the Prodigal Son went out to meet with pardon his repentant son. The Cross is that parable enacted in history."

"Let our offering be what it may, if only it be what we can."

"Enough we know—on good our hearts are bent,
But, Lord, Thou knowest all our bitter need.
Help us to build above the deep intent
The Deed—the Deed!"

As long as ever you have confidence in yourselves, you are like a man who keeps his anchor on board his boat, and you will never come to a resting-place. Over with your faith into the great deeps of eternal love and power, and trust in the infinitely faithful One. —Charles Spurgeon.

"The glory of faith lies in its being fit for every-day wear."

Always the chief argument in support of the truth of religion will be the personal religious experience of the believer. "The far God becomes a near God by an act of grace."

It is wholly impossible to live according to divine order, and to make a proper application of heavenly principles, as long as the necessary duties which each day brings seem only like a burden grievous to be borne.

Our Master is not a dead Christ. He is not simply an historic character. He is alive with power as no other on this earth is alive. We may learn from Him face to face what He would have us do.—Bishop Slattery.

Two Christian travellers were visiting the mission stations in China. From time to time one of them would ask the Chinese converts, what in their opinion was the greatest barrier to the spread of Christianity. Almost invariably the answer was, "Ourselves."—C. of E. Newspaper.

Christ Church School

MIDDLESEX COUNTY, VA.

A country school for boys; well located. College preparatory, moderate cost. Personal attention; scholarships. Apply to Wm. D. Smith, Jr., Headmaster(for information, Christchurch, Va.

Divinity School

Of the Protestant Episcopal Church in Philadelphia

42nd and Locust Streets

Graduate Courses in Theology. Privileges at the University of Pennsylvania

Address: The Rev. G. G. Bartlett, D. D Dean.

I WILL HELP YOU RAISE MONEY!...

My co-operative plan enables women's clubs and church organizations to raise much-needed funds with very little effort.

Gottschalk's Metal Sponge, the original sanitary metal scouring device, is known and endorsed by millions of women throughout the land. To keep pots and pans shiny and bright, it has no equal. This year there are two additional Gottschalk items to go with the original Metal Sponges—namely, Kitchen Jewel and Hand-L-Mop.

Write today. I will help with your money problem.

METAL SPONGE SALES CORP.
John W. Gottschalk, Pres.
2726 N. Mascher St., Philadelphia, Pa.

The Little Fellow that does the BIG Job

GOTTSCHALK'S THE ORIGINAL-SANITARY METAL SPONGE

Royal Laundry

and

BAND BOX DRY CLEANERS
UNEXCELLED LAUNDRY
and Cleaning Service
Richmond, Virginia.

L. T. CHRISTIAN

FUNERAL DIRECTOR

Boulevard-Park and Patterson Avenue
Richmond, Va.
Office Never Closed
Prices to meet depressed conditions

Edwin S. Gorham, Inc.

Publishers and Booksellers.
Established 1900.

Church Literature and Art, Bibles, Prayer Books and Hymnals, Devotional Books, Parish Requisites.

Catalogues and Information on request.

18 West 45th Street, New York.

Some Important Facts in English Church History

EXAMINED AND REVIEWED

By

REV. W. P. WITSELL, D. D.

This is an illuminating and instructive review of the history of the Episcopal Church in England from the earliest records, with commentaries on the book with the above title compiled by the Rev. C. L. Wells, D. D., of Sewanee, Tenn.

As a digest of the records of the establishment and growth of the Church; its maintenance and continuity of existence as an independent religious body amid the vicissitudes of early English politics, and efforts of outside interference, this review affords a valuable fund of information to churchmen.

In pamphlet form,
Price, 25 cents

For sale by
SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN CO.
Richmond, Va.

DESIGNED FOR THE PROMOTION OF PRACTICAL PIETY, THE DIFFUSION OF RELIGIOUS AND GENERAL INTELLIGENCE, AND THE MAINTENANCE OF THE PRINCIPLES OF THE PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL CHURCH

Southern Churchman

1835 DOMINUS NISI FRUSTRA

Vol. 100. RICHMOND, VA., FEBRUARY 9, 1935. No. 6.

PRAYER FOR THE NATIONAL COUNCIL

Meeting February 12-14

Almighty God Whose wisdom has enlightened and Whose will has ruled Thy Church, grant to the National Council the guidance of Thy Holy Spirit that in all things it may seek the welfare of Thy Kingdom and the glory of Thy Name, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

A Friend Through Thick and Thin.

Mr. Editor:

I am seventy-seven years old. I have read the Southern Churchman since I was a boy in my grandfather's, the late Edward C. Marshall, and my father's home. If there has ever been a break in my use of the paper, I do not remember it. Through thick and thin, I have subscribed regularly. I also subscribed for my two sons. I am delighted with the present outlook of the paper, and the service it is rendering the Church. The last number was particularly fine, and I take the greatest pleasure in the manifest improvement of the paper. I have just re-subscribed for my sons and when I go back home in the spring, I will be glad to seek subscriptions among my former parishioners.

Sincerely,
Rev. N. F. Marshall.

January 30, 1935.

Present-Day Preaching.

Mr. Editor:

I have read in your issue of January 12 the "Philosophy of Phillips Brooks." In passing, is it not significant that he is not spoken of as Dr. or Bishop Brooks. And why?

While the entire article is worthy of preservation, the writer is specially impressed by the citation from the eulogy of Dr. Samuel Elliot. "He would anticipate eternity, so to speak; he would bring it into time, and make it dominant. . . . This was his message of messages, his service of services, that he knit the life of earth with the life of heaven."

I can recall nothing more pertinent to today's needs of the Church. The writer hears and reads sermons attentively, and finds them lacking in inspiration and instruction in the Word of God.

To be more specific—the preaching is narrow. This may seem an unwarranted statement. The thought in the writer's mind is that the present-day preaching does not "declare all the counsel of God." Should not every minister of the Gospel be able to say with St. Paul: "I have not shunned to declared unto you all the counsel of God?"

There are some of the teachings of Christ which are ignored too commonly; and which minimize the value of the sermon. Often the criticism is heard; the sermon lacks spirituality.

1. The failure to associate the life that now is with the complete life that follows death. This is in contrast with the teaching of Christ—the "teacher come from God": and not in keeping with that of the Apostles. Christ said (St. John 14:2, 3), "I go to prepare a place for you. And if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again, and receive you unto myself; that where I am, ye may be also." Again (St. John 17:24), "Father, I will that they also, whom Thou hast given me, may be with me where I am; that they may behold my glory, which Thou hast given me: for Thou lovedst me before the foundation of the world."

These, and other like assurance by the Saviour of the children of men, have given to God's children courage to carry them triumphantly through all the vicissitudes of life, and to give them confidence as they face the veiled future, and serenity as they pass into a life in which they "shall see Him as He is, and know even as we are known," and be "satisfied."

What does Christ think of the ambassadors who withhold such truths? Contrast this with the preaching of the peerless Phillips Brooks, who "knit the life of earth with the life of Heaven." And his great Church was thronged with people, who came to be strengthened, to be fed. And for the same purpose men read these words.

An educated man said lately to the writer, and with pathetic earnestness, that he was losing his faith; and had nothing to put in its place. He wanted help; and was not getting it when he went to church.

And do we hear, as before, of the account which every man, according to the teaching of the Christ, must render? St. Matthew 16:27, "For the Son of Man shall come in the glory of His Father with His angels; and then He shall reward every man according to his work."

Again. Is repentance stressed by the pulpit now as it was by Christ? and by our church in its liturgy, and doctrinal instructions? Several years ago a minister in our Church announced his text: "Repent ye." He then said, "Christ and John the Baptist began their ministry with the call to repentance. But that is out of date now." God forbid! Devoutly I thank God for our liturgy.

As the writer reflects on the subject, the situation is this: The gospel of social service has supplanted the gospel of redemption. Whereas social service should be the fruit of the gospel of redemption. The preaching of a symmetrical gospel will furnish a vigorous appeal for social service. And will, I believe, bring back to our churches many, who rarely enter.

May God add His blessing to this appeal.

J. W. Ware.

Orange, Va.

CONTENTS

	Page
Letters to the Editor	2
Editorials	3
Church and World Problems as Others See Them	4
The Thousandfold Page—F. W. Neve	5
The Day's Work—A Sermon by Rev. Clifford L. Stanley	6
Book Reviews	8
A Dream Reality—Rev. Davis Johnson	9
Fifth Sunday After the Epiphany—W. E. Callender	8
News from the Front	12
Woman's Auxiliary	10
Young People's Service League—Rev. R. F. Blackford	11
Church Intelligence	12
Family Department	18
Children's Department	20
Personals	22
Thoughts for the Thoughtful	24

R. GEISSLER, INC.
450 SIXTH AVE. NEAR 10th ST. NEW YORK
Church Furnishings
IN CARVED WOOD AND MARBLE · BRASS · SILVER FABRICS + WINDOWS

CHOIR VESTMENTS

Cassocks, Cottas and Caps. Special low prices. Samples and prices on request.
Poplin Canterbury Caps, $1.00 each.
Paper Patterns for Choir and Church.
Vestments for sale.

HENRY HAYTER, 8205 Riverside Drive, Box 618, Rte. 1, St. Petersburg, Fla.

Southern Churchman

SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN COMPANY
Mayo Memorial Church House,
110 West Franklin Street,
Richmond, Va.

Officers.

President, RT. REV. H. ST. GEORGE TUCKER, D. D.
Vice-President, E. OTTO N. WILLIAMS.
Secretary-Treasurer, MR. JOHN H. COOKE.

Board of Directors.

RT. REV. H. ST. GEORGE TUCKER, D. D.
REV CHURCHILL J. GIBSON, D. D.
REV. GEORGE P. MAYO, D. D.
REV. CHARLES W. SHEERIN.
MR. CARL H. NOLTING.
MR. ALEXANDER W. WEDDELL.
MR. E. RANDOLPH WILLIAMS.
MR. LANGBOURNE M. WILLIAMS, JR.
MISS SUSANNE C. WILLIAMS.

Voting Trustees.

RT. REV. ROBERT CARTER JETT, D. D.
RT. REV. H. ST. GEORGE TUCKER, D. D.
MR. JAMES M. BALL, JR.
MR. ROBERT B. TUNSTALL.
MR. LANGBOURNE M. WILLIAMS, JR.

Editors.

REV. CHARLES W. SHEERIN....Editor
REV. F. W. NEVE, D. D., Associate Editor
MRS. CONRAD H. GOODWIN, Associate Editor
MRS. R. TATE IRVINE.....News Editor
JOHN H. COOKE..Secretary and Manager

Entered at the Post Office in Richmond, Va., as second-class mail matter.

SUBSCRIPTION PRICE.

$3.00 a year in advance. To the Clergy, $2.00. Six months, $1.50. Total subscriptions, three months, 50 cents; 10 cents a copy. Foreign postage, $1.00 additional.

For the convenience of subscribers subscriptions are continued at expiration unless otherwise ordered. Notice of renewal, discontinuance or change of address should be sent two weeks before the date they go into effect.

RECEIPT OF PAYMENT is shown in about two weeks by change of date on address label. If date is not properly extended after each payment, notify us promptly. No receipt for payment will be sent.

Notice post office address. The exact post office address to which we are directing the paper at the time of writing MUST ALWAYS BE GIVEN. Our mailing list is arranged by post office and not alphabetically.

Make all checks and money orders payable to the Southern Churchman, and not to an individual.

ADVERTISEMENTS.—Rates quoted on request. For classified see head of that department.

Representatives wanted in each Parish; liberal commissions.

News concerning the Church at large always welcome.

MURPHY'S HOTEL
RICHMOND VIRGINIA

An old Richmond landmark that has kept the pace. In the heart of that portion of the city most interesting to the traveler.

Write

A. GERALD BUSH, Manager.

SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN

Catholic for every truth of God; Protestant against every error of man.

EDITORIALS

Vol. 100. RICHMOND, VA., FEBRUARY 9, 1935. No. 6.

New Attitudes.

Just as social work has pointed to us in the Church new ways of approach to human problems, so the leaders of education are demonstrating new attitudes towards human personality. The interesting thing to Christians should be the fact that in both social and educational work the newer ways and attitudes are nearer to the ways of the Master.

When most of us were young men and women, colleges seemed only interested in making us conform to their demands. In other words, if passing grades were not determined upon by the pupil himself, he was forthwith expelled from the institution. Whether he was psychologically fitted for such courses never seemed to matter, for the college had a curriculum built up by profound minds and a student could take it—or take his leave.

Today progressive educators are finding that a college owes something more to the student. In the first place it needs to know him as he really is with his background, training and psychological make-up. If he fails in a course the college assumes at least half the blame, and as one famous dean has said, a black mark should go on the records for each student expelled, for it is really the college that has failed. Likewise the curriculum is the result of the students' needs and not just a program made up by wise minds with no thought of the boys and girls that will study.

We wonder whether the Church cannot learn a great deal from the educators? Our programs are often not even thought up by would-be profound minds and our methods of approach are archaic. Parsons have long refused to keep case records and have used "sanctity of confidence" as an excuse for what really amounted to laziness. Individuals have been told what they ought to do, but seldom have been carefully analyzed to see why they don't do what is right.

All educators know that their pupils come to college to acquire learning, and recently have found that such a goal cannot be reached by hard and fast methods, but by a flexible curriculum that touches life interest. If parsons and vestries could learn such a lesson there would be much greater and more interesting variety of services and much more attention to individual needs. We believe there would be much greater attendance at church services.

A few "indifferent" young people called together by the rector could reveal in real frankness some of the things that keep them away from church. We are always ready to criticize them for their misbehavior, but have we really studied them? Are not most young people (and not all of them are indifferent) who stay away really failures in religious approach because of our indifference rather than theirs? It's worth thinking about, anyway.

The World Outlook.

If any of us in the Church feel that we are not making the influence of our long heritage of as much use in the modern world as it should be, we cannot help but wonder whether the waning interest in missionary work is not responsible for this lack of interest. The real tragedy of the depression years is found in the increasing nationalism that has resulted in every country in some selfish way, and even good church members are heard to express doubt in rgard to Christian missions.

Of all of The Christ's teaching, almost the clearest thing read by disciples from His mind was, "Go ye into all the world." In history we find periods of missionary activity, the greatest periods of Christian nations and bad economic conditions were often solved when a nation's religious impulse was quickened. The lack of missionary interest today is a real sign of weakness.

Of course it is also a sign that gratitude is lacking in Christian people. When we say we don't believe in foreign missions, we practically assert that we don't believe in our own best inheritance, for certainly our civilization is the result of a foreign mission on the part of civilized and better races than our own. It is sometimes a good thing to remember that our own ancestors were considered by educated Latins as drunken savage sots and very probably there were many protests against sending men and money to such benighted heathen.

The present weakness of a lack of missionary interest is often attributed by the clergy to the indifference of vestries in general. We all know that average vestries left to themselves are apt to think only in parochial terms, but after all can they be blamed entirely? Only too many parishes fail to even hear a missionary sermon or address, because the rector failed to invite a real live missionary to present his appeal. In the economic struggle for exsitence many rectors and vestries have been afraid of the missionary appeal, for they feared a lack of giving to current expenses. A great part of the blame for lack of interest belong not only on the indifference of the vestries, but the clergy as well.

But the missionaries themselves are to blame for

(Continued on page 5.)

Church and World Problems as Others See Them

Wise Old Rome!

The Christian Century, January 16, 1935.

Protestant Churches might profitably ponder two bits of news which come from the Vatican during the same week. The pope has appointed a new archbishop of Toronto, and a new auxiliary bishop for the Diocese of Brooklyn, which is exceeded in size in the United States only by the Archdioceses of New York and Chicago. The new archbishop of Toronto is forty (he has been an archbishop since he was thirty-six, having previously presided over the Archdiocese of Regina); the new bishop of Brooklyn is thirty-two. Christopher Morley once protested, in what most readers interpreted as a whimsical vein, that Protestantism has its idea of clerical promotion turned just backward. It appoints its young clergy as vicars, and to similar posts where intimate pastoral service is required of a sort which should rightly command the mellowed experience of years. For its executive positions it chooses men who have already exhausted their energies and should, if things were properly run, be settling back for calm contemplation and reflective counsel. The system should be turned about, Morley insisted. Let young men be ordained as bishops and gradually advanced, as they proved their wisdom, to the vicarate and the pastorate! Perhaps someone in Rome read Morley's essay; at least the wise old Church seems to have grasped the truth which underlay it.

Training the Parents.

The Christian Century, January 16, 1935.

Perhaps our first consideration in putting religious education upon a Protestant basis should be the question: Who, after all, is to be educated? Ultimately, the child, we agree. But in this day of scientific illumination, indirect lighting has proved most satisfactory.

The emphasis upon the religious training of the child may need to be shifted to, or divided with, the parent. Probably our best beginning is with the nearest approach to a fact which we have derived from the data accumulated in our experience of "educating" children for character, that is, the high correlation between the ethical standards of parents and their children. Factors outside the home may make a contribution to the child's sense of values; factors inside the home do determine his values. Thus parent education in a very real sense precedes child education. In secular education the Dutch government is now experimenting with this procedure in teaching the pre-school child; instead of taking the child to the nursery school, kindergarten attitudes and techniques are brought into the home by experts. For the mother, given genuine understanding, has ten chances to the teacher's one to touch the life of her child. In religious education the same principle holds: the parent who has what we may term the religious attitude toward life has opportunity for setting the attitudes of the child which the teacher can never know.

Perhaps the greatest source of latent power in the church today lies in this group of uncertain parents who fear to teach their children the tenets they have had to unlearn for themselves and yet are reluctant to let their children grow up without the undergirding of religion. Up-to-date in other lines of thinking, modern in their approach, they had let go of religion at the point of their first adolescent disillusionment. In many cases they have themselves ceased to attend church services; half-heartedly they send their children to Sunday school. They are the ones who (as an editor of a leading parents' magazine remarked to the writer) send earnest, intelligent, poignant requests for articles on ethics and social problems "to take the place of religion"—and request that their names be not quoted!

Liberal Protestantism has not been sufficiently evangelical in bringing this large group of parents back into the Church. A high percentage of them understand the vocabularies of modern psychology and the social sciences; they are accustomed to the new approaches in education. But—perhaps through diffidence, perhaps through inadequate training on his own part—the average preacher fails to lay upon them the burden of proof for their own religious incompetence. They might well be the first consideration of Protestant religious education if such education were a community enterprise legitimately motivated and adequated staffed.

Need For Church Unity.

The Church of England Newspaper, January 18, 1935.

We at home, accustomed to our divisions in the Church, often fail to realize the disintegrating effect which those divisions, reproduced as they are in the mision field, have upon the work of evangelization. Where strength and a united front are desperately needed, they bring weakness and hesitancy. The call to unity has come most loudly from the Church overseas, and it is in the mission field that reunion is most likely to be first achieved. It is impossible to emphasize too strongly the need for unity in face of the world-situation today, when Christianity is confronted with rival forces claiming to control the lives of individuals and nations, forces which in many cases are frankly secularist in color. The state of the world presents a grave challenge to the Christian Church, and that challenge can be met only if, both at home and abroad, the different sections of Christendom cease to be rivals and make themselves partners in a common enterprise.

An important factor in the cooperative effort for evangelism is greater readiness to give responsibility to the younger churches overseas. Theirs, after all, is the task of evangelizing their own peoples, and in many districts they are showing that they recognize their responsibility and are eager to fulfil it. The mission is but a preparatory stage; the goal is the establishment of an independent, self-supporting Native Church. It is satisfactory to know that the policy of the Home Missionary Societies is moving along these lines. We sometimes forget that the very genius of the Christian religion is such that it naturally lends itself to differing expressions. It is possible to impose upon the East a Western Christianity in which it is not at home. Was it not Bishop Westcott who said that we should never understand St. John's Gospel until an Indian commentary upon it had been written? The nations, we are told, are to walk in the light of the Kingdom, each bringing its contribution to the richness of the whole.

We need today a big vision of the work of the Church overseas. Ideas of plan and method have to be revised. The ideal of unity must be kept in the forefront of our thinking. Unity cannot be forced, it is true. But when the need of it is felt the Holy Spirit, who is the Spirit of Unity, will, if we are responsive to His leading, show us how to overcome our divisions.

THE THOUSANDFOLD PAGE

ARCHDEACON FREDERICK W. NEVE, D. D.

The Microscope And The Telescope

In an address delivered by the Rev. Dr. Major, Principal of Ripon Hall, Oxford, before the twenty-first Conference of Modern Churchmen last summer, on Christ and Criticism, he made the following statement:—"A modern scholar who has contributed three volumes to the subject asserts that the total output of books about Jesus during the past five years 'would fill several five-foot shelves'. If we extend our retrospect to the last thirty years the product is truly enormous." This enormous output of literature on the subject of Jesus Christ, Founder of the Christian religion, is a remarkable fact and one which shows that the dominant issue with regard to Christianity has come to be, not so much the spiritual truth which He taught, as a documentary evidence with regard to His place in human history and the truth or otherwise of the facts recorded in the New Testament.

A Similar Situation in the Time of Christ.

The Gospels, which serve as the most important chronicles of Christ's life and teaching, have been subjected for many years to the most searching cross-examination which the world has ever seen. We seem to have reached a period somewhat similar to that which Christ found Himself in at the time of His ministry. The scribes and rabbis of His time were busily engaged in carrying on a microscopic study of the law of Moses and of the traditions which had been handed down from the past. Christ said of them, "Ye pay tithe of mint and anise and cummin and have omitted the weightier matters of the law, judgment, mercy and faith; these ought to have done, and not to leave the other undone." St. Matt. 23:23. Our Lord evidently regarded the work of the scribes not as wrong in itself, but as placing the principal and dominant emphasis upon the less important factors of their religion.

The Spirit and the Letter.

The great issue which separated Him from the religious leaders of His time, and which ultimately led to His death at their investigation, was the emphasis which He placed upon the Spirit rather than the letter. His saying:—"The words that I speak unto you they are spirit and they are life," implied that the truth, which lay beneath and behind His words, was of far greater importance than the words themselves which might and have often become mere empty symbols.

A New Departure.

It is high time that the emphasis should be laid where Christ Himself placed it, since ample time and an extraordinary amount of effort has been devoted to the microscopic examination of that eventful period which corresponded with our Lord's ministry and its culmination in His Death, Resurrection and Ascension. The materials have been gone over such a multitude of times and by so many competent scholars, that it would seem as if there were no longer any excuse for the Church to go out of her way, as it were, to scrutinize her credentials, as if she were still not satisfied as to their validity. It must seem to the outside world that the Church is not sure of her credentials, since her scholars are continually investigating the foundations.

The Major Emphasis.

Christ, however, had no doubts on the subject of His divine authority. What He was principally concerned about, and placed a supreme emphasis on, was the establishment of a spiritual Kingdom on earth and the great and mighty truths which it represented. If the Church is not sure of herself, or of the message which she has been commissioned to deliver to the world, it is impossible for her to make any headway, for men will lose confidence in her and are already doing so, because she does not seem to have confidence in herself.

Natural Science and the Telescope.

Natural Science in its study of Nature, not only uses the microscope in its investigations, but also the telescope, and by this means it has revealed to us, not only the marvels of the infinitely little, but also the marvels of the infinitely great, thus showing the vast extent of the physical universe and the mighty worlds which lie on every side of us. How small and insignificant our knowledge of Nature would have been if Natural Science had not utilized the telescope and failed to discover the majesty and greatness of the universe!

The Greater Things of Our Religion.

It would seem as if Christianity in these days of ours, while paying assiduous attention to the use of the microscope in carrying out a meticulous examination of the minutiae of our religion has forgotten, for the time being, that there are immensities in the truths revealed to us by Christ, which might very well and profitably be explored. At present there seems to be an entire lack of perspective in our presentation of religion to the world. By far the major emphasis has been placed on what is, after all, a minor issue, with the result that men generally have no conception of the real grandeur and mighty splendor of Christianity. We have been over-working the microscope and seem to have entirely forgotten that Christianity cannot be seen in all its true magnificence without the use of the spiritual telescope.

* * *

EDITORIALS.

(Continued from page 3.)

much indifference. In their missionary work and missionary talks they have too often left the impression that they were concerned with secondary things rather than first things. The modern man of modern outlook is not interested in making Westerners out of Easterners. He is not interested in minor details of civilization, such as clothing, and yet missionaries have seemed to be interested in such minor problems. When a missionary bishop says that we had better send missionaries or the heathen nations will turn into communists, the modern young people are frankly not interested, for to them Christ is either greater and bigger than an economic form, or He would not be The Christ.

We need Christ in the world today not merely to battle political groups with which we do not agree, but primarily because His Spirit is the only Spirit that breathes peace on earth and good will to men. Whether we live in a monarchy, a republic or a soviet governed country, we still need the Christ, and it is the task of Christians to take Him to all the world. Until as Christians we realize that, we will continue to have a weakened influence

The Day's Work

An Ordination Sermon.

By the Rev. Clifford L. Stanley, of the Virginia Theological Seminary.

John 9:4. "I must work the works of Him that sent me while it is yet day, for the night comes in which no man works."

There is a certain wistful note, a rare thing which comes into life because there is such a thing as time. Because life is the kind of thing which comes, pauses in the brilliance of its day for a moment like a butterfly on a flower and goes on, there is something elusive and transcendent in it, so that we cannot grasp it completely either in ourselves or others. Because of time our life is ours—and it is not ours. In the moment of completest possession it is most assuredly not ours. We cannot nestle in life, settle down; we cannot say, "Soul take thine ease," without hearing a voice "Thou foolish one 'this night they are asking for thy soul'." Further, because of time we cannot possess others utterly. Bar fast the door we may but no door can stop the tread of years and finally death takes even the closest. So time presides over all our living and doubtless always will. And it will be always giving to life that rare and haunting quality—always putting a catch in the throat, always making us treasure our joys the more, always forcing enough detachment to keep us human and personal. Why is the sunset with its tenderness, its living splendor out there on the world's edge, the best beloved time of the day to most people? Is it not that the fleeting character of life is then most felt, most poignant? In that hour the procession which time is, because as the day pauses a moment in its flight it is most in evidence, makes our joys more dear and our sorrows ache the more. In that hour we see how subject human life is to time. Perhaps in that sunset hour God reminds us daily and beautifully of the nature of our humanity. For time is but a way of saying that man has opportunities which may be accepted or rejected. But in either case they must be acted upon one way or the other, for they both present themselves and are withdrawn, and both the presenting and the withdrawing are beyond the control of man. At all events each sunset is a fresh persuasion of the grace of God to be about our life's business.

Let us approach the work of the ministry then from the angle of the time element in life. In the normal course of things a person our age can look forward to thirty to forty years of labor. So that the next thirty to forty years are "day" for us and our contemporaries. After that the "night cometh" and then we do no work as far as this world is concerned. By the time we shall have made the last stroke of pen or blow of hammer. All that this world is to receive from us it must have received by then. All the dividends of character which come from high usefulness must be ours by then. All the improvements and transformations which we are to enjoy must be worked by then. "How So-and-So would have appreciated this," we often say when upon entering some improvement or good fortune we think of one who has passed beyond. Yes, "How So-and-So would have enjoyed it." But So-and-So went on with back bent and hands horny for lack of this new labor-saving device, and out there somewhere God has to straighten that back and I wonder if He knows how to soften hard hands? So it is with us. If some injustice is devouring the tissue of our souls, if some ancient iniquity is stealing life itself from us, we must deal it the death blow in these thirty to forty years or out into the unknown we go, our souls still smarting. And on the other hand if some great improvement is visioned by us, some blessed order where life walks free and men have their chance, then these are the years when we have our opportunity to strike the blow and the only ones in which we can enter into the enjoyment of such improvements. That then is "day" for us, but what are the "works of Him that sent" us?

Limited Improvements.

Before we try to state these appointed "works" in any concrete fashion there is a preliminary question to be answered. Are the possible improvements to life limited or unlimited in number and quality? Let us first assume that there is a limited possibility and that only so much can be done during these available years. Only so many can be converted and only to such an extent can they be changed. Only so many improvements can be made to education. Only so much can be done toward the fundamental redemption of government and politics, only so much improvement of the economic "standard of living" of the average man. On this view, and it is a common one, there is a sort of "ceiling" to our achievement. We will assume that this view is true and that we could not by any amount of taking thought add a cubit to the stature of this possibility.

There are several implications of the truth that the possible improvement to life is limited. One we have noted, namely, that it cannot be exceeded. But there is a positive side of this truth, and it is the important one, namely, that so much can be done. This proffer of betterment places the gravest responsibility upon us. For we make reality and such part of this limited possibility as we do not do remains undone and reality itself is impoverished to that degree. The ultimate tragedy of sin lies at this point, that great values which might have been, never saw the light of day, childhood laughter never heard, smiles that never shown on some face, songs deep in the heart that never were. Things happen in this world. Good is lost and evil is truly wrought. Life can drop through, and like the boy's penny which drops through the boards of the sidewalk, and is lost, it too can drop down into the bottomless pit of human refusal and be lost. The very possibility that things may happen is purchased by the other possibility that they may not. If gain is real, loss is equally real. All the water in the world will not cleanse Lady Macbeth's hands; in vain David cries, "Absalom, Absalom, my son, Absalom." There are mouths today which might be filled and are not; there are pinched bodies which might be clothed and are not. This day there are bitter hearts which might be sunny. There are men whom the institution of private wealth has spoiled and damned. There are people whose lives are unravelled and scattered abroad like the chaff which the wind driveth away by the soul-disintegrating force of secularity. Such things ought not to be, but they can be and, indeed, they are. For the measure of reality is committed to us, and in our hands are the keys of two great portals, one marked "Gain", the other "Loss". "O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, how oft would I have gathered your children together . . . and ye would not. Behold, your city is left unto you desolate."

Thus failure to achieve the limited but possible improvement to life means loss, ultimate and bitter. It is evident that we do not actualize the extended potentialities. The reasons are many. There is plain deliberate refusal. "He went away sorrowful." There is indolence of the spirit. "A little slumber and a little sleep, a little folding of the hands to sleep, so cometh poverty." That holds for economic and other kinds of poverty. In any case such amount as we do not do remains undone.

In addition to failures in executing what we do see there are limitations in our insight. Our best dreamings will fall short of the possibility, be it never so limited. Our imaginations are earth-bound and dull. We have not trusted them, we have not developed them by use. So the matter comes to this: We do not carry out all that we see; our seeing is limited. So it becomes plain that there is little danger of aiming too high and striving too hard. We are not apt to surpass the allotted amount of the "works of him that sent" us. We may fall short of it and that means the death and murder of offered life.

Unlimited Improvements.

But perhaps the amount of possible improvement is not limited. Instead it may be completely undetermined. This is my own understanding of the matter. When I recall the sayings of Christ about faith, for instance, this seems to be the case. "According to your faith be it unto you," He would say. "When ye pray, pray believing, and behold ye have your desire." And again, "If ye had faith as a grain of mustard seed ye would say to this mountain, be thou picked up and cast into the sea and it would be done." Putting these and other things together it looks as if both the fact that anything is done and the degree of it depend upon our faith, as if faith is limitless in power, as if the smallness of our achievement is witness to the littleness of our faith and not to the weakness of faith as a method.

The reason for the limitless power of faith is twofold. First, the power of God is without limit. Speaking of entrance into the Kingdom, Jesus once said, "How hard is it to enter into the Kingdom of God." "Who then can be saved!" exclaimed the disciples. "With men it is impossible but not with God, for all things are possible with God." He who created the world, He who made so amazing a thing as human life, "He who spared not His own son, how shall He not also with Him freely give us all things?" We are weak because we come at our problems wrong end first. We come at the problem first and then look around for energies to solve the problem. There is another way to come at things, God first, strong in the consciousness of available power. Then we approach our problems with a mind of victory. Our weakness is due not to the greatness of our problem but to the littleness of our faith. We affirm that God is omnipotent, but to watch us in our life and work you would never suspect that we thought so.

But the power of God, however limitless in itself, is at least in the higher ranges of its working conditioned by human consent. Such consent we call faith. But here again the amount of faith is not fixed and limited; faith is not rationed out like the rations of a relief station or an army mess, so much to a man. You can have as much as you want. If you think God will save one man through you, one it will be. If you put the number at ten then the power of God—able on its part to save a world, but only through men—will get at ten men through you. Faith is dependent upon imagination. Imagination is not fixed. Likewise faith is dependent upon reason. There is no limit on thought. The more we think, the more we can think, and the more our thinking grows in depth, breadth and nicety. The human personality is gifted with an elasticity which is without limit. A rubber band can be stretched so far; then it breaks. The human soul's stretch is never done. At whatever point you see a man stop know then that he wanted to stop there or was willing to or thought he must. Do not think he had to. The things omnipotent God might be doing through these infinitely expansible souls of ours beggars belief. How can we let our souls off as easily as we do? The sin Jesus condemned with greatest persistence and fury was self-righteousness. And the deadliest part of self-righteousness is that it is an attitude which says we have done enough, that no more need nor can be done. So it puts a limit upon an enterprise which, because of its nature, has no proper limit. "When ye have done all," said Jesus—all—"that was commanded, you say, We are unprofitable servants." How can we let our souls off as we do?

Problems of the Machine.

Whether its possibility be limited or unlimited, there is work to be done for Him that sent us. Can we be any more specific as to the nature of that work? We hold that the problem of our generation heads up and comes to its critical climax around the problem of the machine. Ours is a machine civilization and the salvation of our twentieth-century soul depends upon the solution of the problem of the machine. Other problems there are, the perennial problems of human life, but they are all inter-related, they form a sort of moral hierarchy at the head of which stands the problem of the machine and upon the solution depends the solution of the others. In a peculiar fashion, therefore, the solution of the technological problem is the "work of Him that sent" us and it is this that we must "work while it is day."

The solution of this problem means two things, speaking broadly. First, it means that the fruits of the machine, the finished products of agriculture and industry, must be distributed in a manner roughly if not precisely equal. Second, the labor involved maintaining the necessary economic basis of life must be distributed in a manner roughly if not precisely equal so that all men have some work and no men have unceasing work. In their own order physical goods are real and desirable, and physical evils are regrettable. But the physical also conditions the mental. Culture is dependent ultimately upon security and leisure and the first requirement of universal culture is a universal distribution of these things. In its order, culture is an end in itself and has value in its own right. But the mental conditions, the spiritual and the highest religion is dependent upon a measurable degree of culture. So religion itself is dependent in its well-being upon the solution of this problem. Apart from this it is the business of religion to see that the supremely critical problem of our age be solved.

For if it is not solved within a certain term of years the poisons and diseases generated by this unsolved problem will kill our civilization. Jesus' contemporaries had thirty-seven years of grace after His predictions of doom. "Behold the days come when thine enemies shall compass thee about . . ." Thirty-seven years later Titus came upon the city like a whirlwind, so that forty thousand were slain, blood flowed knee-deep in the streets, and the survviors were cast to the four winds, where they are to this day. I don't know how many years of grace we have for the solution of our major problem, but except we repent we shall likewise perish.

Now any moral battle that can be lost can also be won, and it can be won—so far, at least, as the principle of the matter is concerned—in the same time that it can be lost. For if there is no genuine alternative there is no morality. You cannot do evil unless you can do also an alternative good. So if we can fail, using the word in any intelligible sense, in the great problem of our time it is true also that we can succeed. Otherwise it is not a moral issue at all, and we need not worry about it. But let us think soberly before adopting a solution which makes humanity the creature and plaything of mechanical and sub-personal forces forever beyond his control. Such a solution is a judgment levelled against God. For it says that this is not a moral universe. And that is a pretty expensive excuse for our failure to solve the problem of the machine.

Also a Spiritual Problem.

Actually the problem is not one of machinery but of human nature, not of making the machine behave but of doing things to the men who run and control the machine. Now this makes our problem both easier and harder. It is harder because a mechanical force is all that is required to move a machine. But it takes spiritual, personal, moral forces to move men. Now we have hardly enough of these to energize our own lives, let alone any surplus with which to improve other lives. Which means that if we have any serious intention of dealing with the problem of the machine we must have dealings with God on a new level of intensity and continuity. The diffused, mildly benevolent brand of religion which has been going the rounds does not begin to concentrate in us enough of the divine energies to solve so mighty a problem as this. The solutionl of this problem requires us to receive God in such a degree that it will burn away our sin, drive forth our weakness and make us great, so strong that we will fear the flint of our own wills.

But if harder then easier, also is a problem which centers in the human will, for it means that a solution is possible. For the very nature of a will is that alternative and open roads lie before it. Will is but a name for the fact that the human organism may choose and whoso may say "No" may also say "Yes". And the distinction of Jesus lay precisely at this point, that He always answered "Yes" to the "motions" or suggestions of God when He might have said "No". So He is called in Scripture the "Everlasting Yea of God". To say that perfect Jesus is true man is to say that all wills like His may in principle respond with "Yes" to the overture of God. Therefore, the day which presents a problem to the will of man, the day in which it becomes a genuine issue, the day in which it may be lost, in that day the victory may be won. Between us and the new world in God lies—and this alone lies between—the human will. Meanwhile God has asked, as in the old times, "Whom shall we send, and who will go for us?" To this challenge our age has hitherto not returned the ancient answer, "Here am I, send me."

This, then, is the work of God for our time; this is the work which must be done while it is yet day, for the night cometh—not slow, not swiftly, but steadily—when no man works.

* * *

FIFTH SUNDAY AFTER EPIPHANY.

This collect is taken from the Sarum Missal, 1549, it being very freely translated from the original Latin. This collect is very similar to the collect for the Twenty-Second Sunday after Trinity, to which it would be very well to turn. It is of special interest to note that practically the same words used in the collect for today, "Thy Church and Household", and in the collect for the Twenty-Second Sunday after Trinity, "Thy Household the Church". The idea of the household brings before us very plainly the great thought that all true believers are members of Christ and Christ being the Chief Cornerstone of the Church, then we being members of Christ, we are members of the Church; here the Church Militant—then the Church Expectant, and finally, the Church Triumphant. The thought of the Church as a household is one that should be more stressed than is the case. There is too often in mind the idea that the building is the church, and all we have to do is to go there to sing, praise and pray; so many being satisfied when they have attended worship, forgetting that it is not the building in which

(Continued on page 9.)

BOOK REVIEWS

REV. STAMO S. SPATHEY, Editor.

THE ROMAN FEVER; a Little Handbook of Facts for Churchmen. Paper. Pp. 47. Published by George W. Jacobs & Company, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. Price, 25 Cents.

The name of the author is not given. He is simply a priest of the Diocese of Pennsylvania. This is a detriment; since any treatise on a so-important theme demands that the reader should know whose voice is sounding.

That, however, need not detract from the value of the contribution; for the writer has a clear vision and a strong grip. He diognoses the patient afflicted with the Roman Fever as being uneasy as to the pure doctrine of the Episcopal Church; questioning the happenings at the reformation in England; the weaknesses of the Book of Common Prayer; our historical order, etc. We are more or less familiar with these symptoms as discerned in the experience through which they have gone, who either recovered or passed out into the Roman communion.

The author shows a commendable knowledge of the authorities to whom we must look for information on this theme. His textual grasp of the New Testament; his familiarity with the classics and especially of Church History, qualify him with discernment and acumen for his task. And he has, in this small compass, done justice to his endeavor.

He enlightens the lay-mind with the explanation of the origin of the Roman claim, which all theological students are expected to acquire. The fact that Rome was the capital of the Roman Empire, gave to the metropolitan the itching desire to appropriate authoritative sway over his fellow bishops. And, of course, we all know that the forged decretals of Isador of Seville, purporting to supply the list of the Bishops of Rome from Peter down, are now conceded by the scholars of the Roman cultus to have been a shrewd device to establish, dogmatically, what had been received circumstantially.

The author not only traverses the old paths, but beats a few of his own, which add charm to the discussion. The book has an intriguing appeal. Strong Churchmen will be interested and educated by this brochure. And they will have something to put into the hands of those in whom the early symptoms of the Roman Fever have not yet reached the point of being bed-ridden.

Get the book. The publishers have aimed to make it possible for the ordinary man to possess it.

Kenneth Mackenzie.

THE LIVING CHURCH ANNUAL FOR 1935: The Year Book of The Episcopal Church. Pp. 684. Price, $1.75. Published by The Morehouse Publishing Company, Milwaukee, Wisconsin.

This almanac has all information necessary for Churchmen who like to know how many churches and chapels make up the Episcopal Church in the United States and in foreign lands, the clergy, institutions and organizations, the church calendar with lessons for each festival and every day use. A real source of valuable information.

Spathey.

THE JOURNAL OF THE GENERAL CONVENTION of The Church Held in Atlantic City, New Jersey, last October.

This Journal contains the official acts of the Convention together with The Constitution and Canons of the General Church at the end of the volume. All the reports of the various committees and discussions. A real source of information for all who wish to know what the Convention did during its entire session.

It is published exclusively for the General Convention and may be procured by writing to the National Council of the Church at New York.

Spathey.

WINGS OF HEALING. Pp. 153. Published by Grace Cathedral Mission of Healing, San Francisco. Price, 75 cents.

This is a collection of poetical verses containing a spiritual message arranged for every-day use by Dean Gresham of the Cathedral, who has a note on the opposite page on each poem. The note is illuminating. The book is a source of comfort to anyone who uses it.

Spathey.

A Dream Reality

By the Rev. Davis Johnson,
Rector Christ Church, Towanda, Pa.

A few nights ago I had a most interesting dream, and worth repeating it seems to me.

In my dream, I stood at the lectern reading one of the lessons appointed for the Morning Prayer of that day. In the midst of the lesson, there came to my ears from the sacristy, the rumbling sound of angry voices. With some difficulty I went on with the service, but as I did so, a man entered the chancel from the sacristy, and approaching me said: "There is a man out there who wants to see you, and says that he will not go away until you come."

With some embarrassment, and no explanation to my congregation, I left the chancel, and entered the sacristy, where I was confronted by a man of rather coarse habit whom I had never seen before, but because of what is to come, will be called "Every-man Without A Job"

A conversation something like this followed. The Rector said, "Don't you know that I am trying to have a service out there, and that you are interrupting it?" The answer of the man was, "I want a job, I want work." "But," continued the rector, "why come here at this hour? It is important that I continue my service, and you have no right to interrupt me." The man's answer was: "Your having your service is not as important, as that I have a job, and I want it. You promised it to me."

In my dream I pictured myself as going back into the chancel, rather humbly, and immediately dismissing the congregation, who by this time showed much uneasiness, with the Benediction.

This dream has haunted me ever since, and my conclusion of the matter is this. The Church is paying too much attention to things, and not enough to lives. There is no question as to the value of Sacraments, but how about the Sacramental Living of Christian priest and layman, so well defined in the words of the prophecy of Isaiah first and then in the words of Jesus Christ, recounted in the Holy Gospel of St. Luke. "The Spirit of the Lord is upon me, because he hath sent me to heal the broken-hearted, to preach deliverance to the captives, and recovering of sight to the blind, to set at liberty them that are bruised."

The failure of the Church today comes from its lack of ability to be all things to all men, it seems to me, and if the Church does not become more practical in her good works, She will die, and a post-mortem will introduce evidence to show, that She committed suicide.

Pious men and women, Monastic Orders, psalm singing, prayers for the poor, will not be enough to save Christianity. "This do in remembrance of Me," means vastly more than the receiving of the Rite of Holy Baptism or the making of a good communion. These only make up the good earth from which Christian Character ought to flower in good works.

If Holy Orders and Sacraments alone can save the Church, what about the "Holy Bride" in such countries as Spain and Mexico, not forgetting such vast areas as Germany and Russia? In all these places there has been a plentitude of all that go to make up the pure mechanics of formal religious worship. But with the poor getting poorer (if a man who has nothing to begin with, can be said to be still further reduced in his estate), and the rich getting richer, and all of us realize that to some extent at least, that has taken place, the people of these States have destroyed their governments, both secular and spiritual, and seem bound to build up a new social order, whose very preamble leaves out God and the Christian Faith.

I am opposed to the economic doctrine called Socialism. I believe that the social plan of Karl Marx is as false as hell, and namely, because he does not take into consideration the fact that you cannot legislate brains into a man's skull, and because of that fact, all men are not, and never have been created free and equal. But I do believe with all my heart, in the socializing of society in general, and the Church of the Living Christ in particular. But I insist upon defining the word socialize, at least for the purpose of this moment.

To socialize the Church means, to bring into friendly relationship, each with his brother, so that when a Christian meets any person, he will say to himself: "Here is an opportunity to be of service, I shall make the most of it." That when stern Winter is upon us and we sit comfortably by our warming fires, after having dined well, that we shall be stirred to think of our neighbor, and to make inquiry of his shelter, and his food. To not be content to think of giving our lesser favored neighbor our other cloak, but that we shall promptly carry it to him ourselves.

Socializing the Church would further mean, the arousing of all those who call themselves Christians, to interest in the welfare of all conditions of men, to make Christians understand, that the words, "Our Own" mean just the same today as they did in the days of Jesus of Nazareth, and include all flesh, naked, cold, sick, hungry and forgotten.

Christianity is fast becoming, with some of us at least, a theory rather than a practice. Our churches are sometimes charnel-houses rather than power-houses. There is too much of the garden and secluded spot in Christian lives, and not enough of the parade-ground, and the battle-field. The soft voice of the lute has taken the place of the stern voice of the trumpet. There is far too much of ease in Zion.

Now the saddest part of this diatribe is that Every-man who reads it will say: "Well, that certainly does not apply to my parish." Thus we make an end to the matter, or does it end it, and not without sure and certain hope that the battle is not yet against us, and that by earnest thought and endeavor, things may yet be made right.

* * *

THE FIFTH SUNDAY AFTER EPIPHANY.

(Continued from page 8.)

they worship, but instead of the building, it is the Household of Christ meeting together in their Father's house to render a service of love and of devotion, losing sight altogether that we are indeed "Workers together with God, the Head of the Household". The Lutheran of January 31, 1935, has a splendid short article on "How About the Individual", from which I take the liberty of quoting, "Christians are members who by coordination with each other form the Body of Christ. Neither as individuals nor in separated activities can the work committed to us by our Lord for performance be completely and satisfactorily done. It is of the nature of faith in Christ that believers become members one of another, not isolated, self-centered, independent units in the Kingdom of God" In other words members of the Household of God. How essential it is that if we claim to be members of the Household of God we should pray that we may be kept by the Divine power and that we should lean upon the power of Divine Grace in order that we may walk worthy of our membership, realizing also that our defense is only to be found in Him who in deed and in truth is "A Refuge in the time of storm."

William E. Callender.

THE WOMAN'S AUXILIARY

Work With College Students in the Far South, Auxiliary Women of New Orleans Fill Need in Lives of Young Women at Newcomb College of Tulane University.

By Edith Vaudry Smith, E. S. W.

The young people of America today are starting life in a social order which is crushing personality, worshipping material profit, denying a chance at life, and confronting them with bitter prejudice and tragic fears. They look out upon hatred between races and economic classes; they see the breaking up of old systems and bitter controversies about building new ones. But they do not themselves realize, nor do we older people fully appreciate, how hard it is, under these conditions, for them to grasp clearly the meaning of vital Christian faith and experience. Youth leaders representing ten million young people in the churches and Christian agencies of North America, at a conference held in March, 1934, reached this conclusion, and decided that something must be done. The answer of the Auxiliary women of New Orleans to this ultimatum has been an increased effort in their work with college students through their Episcopal Student Center on the campus of Newcomb, the College for Women of Tulane University.

Under the direction of the Rev. Theodore O. Wedel, Ph. D., Secretary for Student Work to the National Council, our church is maintaining "Student Centers" on the campuses of many of the country's leading universities, many of which doubtless exceed in accomplishment the work done here in New Orleans, but we believe that the consecrated efforts of the group whose work we are considering in this article are indicative of what is being done along these lines by Church men and women all over the United States in an effort to help the young people of the Church over an exceedingly difficult period, not only in their own lives, but in the history of the world.

The Episcopal Student Center at Newcomb was organized in 1930, when a group of Woman's Auxiliary members saw the need for student work and organized the center, which is maintained entirely by their support and that of Auxiliary members of the Diocese of Louisiana. They secured some rooms near the campus, enlisted the aid of the clergy of New Orleans, and set about to fulfil their aim of "giving to the Episcopal girls at Newcomb an opportunity for positive Christian growth and fellowship within their own Church." Because Newcomb College is in a large city, one of the first duties of the members of the committee is to acquaint the girls with the various Episcopal churches and clergymen in the city. All of the work has been with out-of-town girls, and most of the invitations to the various activities have been made by personal calls by members of the committee.

The general plan of activity has been to have one of the large parish churches of the city to take charge of the work for one month of each school year. It is the duty of the church in charge to arrange for the corporate communion of the students which is held the third Sunday morning of each month, to supply the breakfast which always follows; and to be the hostess at the monthly tea with address, at which the rector of the church in charge talks to the girls at the student center. During Lent study groups are held, and especially at this season of the Christian year are the girls urged to make use of the student center library, which contains books of interest to young people of the Church.

This year the field of activity at the center has been widened, and more of the work taken over by students themselves. A part-time student worker has been secured, the girls' club has been reorganized, U. T. O. Boxes have been distributed to all students, and definite assistance by way of gifts and service is being rendered by the girls to the Episcopal Children's Home in New Orleans, and to the city mission. Since October of this year the center has been located in a most attractive bungalow, just a stone's throw from the college library. In December we were honored by a visit from Dr. Wedel, whose help by way of suggestion and encouragement was invaluable. Several times the Rt. Rev. James Craik Morris, Bishop of Louisiana, has visited the center and talked to the students. At all times we are assured of his hearty support of the work.

We do feel that the center is filling a definite need in the lives of the girls, who come from all sections of the United States and from the Latin-American countries south of us. Few of these girls come from great cities, the majority of them coming from small towns, farms, and mountain regions. New Orleans is a most cosmopolitan city. The students meet in their dormitories girls of all creeds, financial conditions, and social position. Outside the dormitories the material things are ever before them in delightful array. The university holds before them always ideals of scholastic excellence. The Student Center is trying in these troublous times to bring the young people nearer to God, and by so doing to bring them to a finer way of life that will ultimately be transforming power in the world.

Annual Institute.

The Twelfth Annual Diocesan Missionary Institute sponsored by the Woman's Auxiliary of the Diocese of Virginia, held in St. James' Church, and in the Mayo Memorial Church House, Richmond, closed its three days' session Thursday, January 24. In spite of the exceedingly bad weather, the daily attendance averaged about 275 people.

There were four separate classes on the study of Japan held each day by such outstanding leaders as the Rev. Arthur M. Sherman, D. D., a recognized authority on the Orient, and now in charge of Missionary Education for the National Council of the Episcopal Church in this country; Mrs. A. M. Chapman, in charge of Missionary Education in the Diocese of New York, and Mrs. J. H. Moore, our new President of the Woman's Auxiliary in the Province of Washington. One delegate said, that from the standpoint of the cultivation of an international viewpoint and the promotion of better understanding of other races these classes were invaluable. Those attending came away with a sympathetic understanding and appreciation of Japan and her culture.

The Japanese woman scholar, Dr. Shio Sankinishi, in her address on Tuesday afternoon, also stressed these points. Her speech was the very essence of friendliness and good will.

The Conferences on the Woman's Auxiliary work led by Mrs. J. H. Hill of Philadelphia, were of inestimable value. Every woman went back to her parish with unforgettable impressions of Mrs. Hill's simple analysis of the organization, its aims, and purposes, and its varied work.

The talks by Bishop Tucker on Diocesan Work, and by the mountain workers, impressed us with the importance of building up the Diocesan work, whereby the whole Church will prosper.

The general conclusion of all the delegates was that a new breath of missionary interest was moving over the diocese, and that the Institute was a vital force in the life of the Church today.

M. E. O.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S FELLOWSHIP SERVICE LEAGUE

The Reverend Randolph F. Blackford, D. D.

Foreword: The following program on the subject of Child Labor was written for a Florida League, but it is equally important for twenty-eight other states that have not ratified the amendment on Child Labor. So that it is urged that it be used in the states where the amendment has not passed the Legislature, simply changing the name of Florida to that state's name, and in states where it has passed that that section be omitted.

One of the Least of These.

We who live in a Christian country are so accustomed to the term "the rights of the individual", that we seldom stop to think that in history it is comparatively very recenly that such an idea has come into people's minds. In ancient times people thought of "the rights of the Kings", the rights of nobles, the rights of business, or the rights of a country. But no one ever thought that a person had any rights just because they were human beings.

People considered that if a King were killed it was a great crime. So also was it a crime to kill a noble. If an ordinary person was killed such as a poor man or a slave, if the person to whom he belonged, or for whom he worked, wished to make a protest something might be done about it. Otherwise not. The money value was highest for a grown man, less for a woman, and very little indeed for a child. In ancient times the crime of murder was only a matter of robbing the owner of the work of a slave, or subject. So, if a man were free and committed suicide it made no difference. Thus Cato, a great Roman, was said by his fellow Romans to have been a very brave man and one to be imitated because when he got in trouble he committed suicide as the easiest way out.

In comparatively modern times in Russia the value of a woman's life was so small that when two court ladies became jealous of one another the one who got the ear of the Czar persuaded him to give her rival into her hands. She then pronounced her doom to have the skin stripped from her back, her tongue torn out by its roots, her eyes put out and then to be sent away to Siberia to work in the mines. So we see that they had no idea of the rights of the individual.

When we come to the rights of children, the civilized world was even slower to consider that they had any rights at all. We remember that as late as 1600 hundreds of children were "exposed" on the streets of Paris to die because their parents did not have funds to rear them. St. Vincent Paul built the first foundling hospital for them.

About a hundred and fifty years ago, Robert Raikes, an Episcopal clergyman in England, considered it a shame that the poor children should grow up with absolution no education. So he started a Sunday School for them. to teach them to read and write. They had to work six days in the week in industry, factories and mills and mines. From this work of his began the idea of public schools, where even the poorest might have an education. Before that time people had not even thought children should have a right to an education, unless their parents could give it to them. For a long time, up to within the past year, this has applied only to those whose parents could afford to send children to the schools, that is, did not need them at home.

Little by little the laws for compulsory education came into being, but they have been much neglected for many reasons. This year we are told that there are 100,000 more children in school than there were before last year, as the NRA has released them in this country from work in mills, factories, etc., for the first time. Those who have read Dickens' novels, especially Oliver Twist, will remember what a hard time children had in England as late as the middle of the last century. Dickens' writings aroused the whole English-speaking world to the necessity of helping the poor children.

In the late nineties small children six and seven years old used to have to work in the mines and in mills and factories. Not only to work, but often long hours, and all night long. We naturally ask, "How could they stand it?" The answer is that they did not. Their health broke down and only the strongest lived to grow up. Others died from overwork. Little by little the conscience of America was aroused and laws were made at first not letting them work at night, then not for more than twelve hours a day. Before that they sometimes worked fourteen. Now in many states no children under a certain age may work in industry. In industry home chores and jobs, and farm work is not included. But laws are by no means the same all over the country.

People may ask what kind of jobs small children can do. They can do such things as drive horses and mules in mines, tend some kinds of machines, and hand tools to workers. The great reason for using children is that they will work for less than grown people, and usually are easier to handle. That is to say they will not complain.

The reason children should not be worked are many. Just to mention a few:

1. Children are easily overworked and cannot thus grow up healthy.
2. Children in industry cannot go to school. They thus fall more easily into crime.
3. Children take places of grown people in industry and at this time when so many men and women with families to support need jobs, this ought not to be allowed.
4. Children need time to play and should have it, if they are to grow up healthy-minded.

There has been for a number of years an Amendment to the Constitution of the United States that will give Congress power to regulate child labor. In order to become a law it must be ratified by thirty-six states. It has already been ratified by twenty of them. Next year it is to come before the Florida Legislature. In the past it has been defeated in Florida by the vote from the rural counties. They fear that it will mean that they may not have the farmers work their children on the farm. This is not correct. For it only says that Congress shall have power to regulate child labor in industry. If the Amendment is not passed by 1936, it will mean that the 100,000 children released from industry will have to go back to work in mills and factories in 1937. So we should try to stir up interest in it all over the state to be sure that our legislature is one of those who pass it next year.

Young People's Service Leagues have usually a good deal of trouble with their programs, especially in smaller places. As was stated in the advance notice of this page, each month we plan to reproduce, at least, one "Prize Program". It is hoped that these may come from different sections, and that Leagues will feel free to send in comments on these programs that are produced and also programs that they may consider among the best they have produced, in order that we may have many to choose from. We want this page to be not only "For the Leagues", but "by" them as well. Credit in each case will be given to the League sending in the program and the author. So that it is asked that the Programs sent in be typewritten, marked with name of League and author.—The Editor.

* * *

News from the Front

Glade Cross Mission, Everglades, Diocese of South Florida.

Christmas, 1934, was a most joyous occasion among the Seminole Indians in South Florida. In 1933 they came to the Mission in a suspicious manner, but they all enjoyed the feast and listened very attentively to the Story of Jesus' Birth. When we asked them if they had a good time, some of the young men said, "Next time more come."

This year, long before Christmas, the Indians began asking, "How long Christmas?" And several days before the celebration, they began to gather in Everglades. At last the Day came. The men put up the Tree, and the children had great fun throwing the tinsel over the branches. Then the gifts provided by Church friends were piled under the Tree. The women did the cooking on an open fire. We had beef, macaroni and tomatoes, rice, coffee, bread. Mr. Copeland, in charge of the Collier interests in Collier County, donated oranges, and the Woman's Club of Everglades and friends provided the candy.

At two o'clock all was ready. The celebration opened with a service conducted by the Rev. Harold F. Bache of Fort Lauderdale. One hundred and thirty men, women and children gathered around the Tree. They were all very quiet and reverent and listened to the Christmas Story, interpreted by Cory Osceola. Deaconess Bedell was assisted by Mrs. Copeland, and immediately after the service, the mothers with babies were asked to come forward. It was such a pretty sight as each one received two blankets; then the little children formed a very attractive group and received toys; the women and girls were next, receiving pretty bags containing miscellaneous articles that they liked; the men and boys received kerchiefs with pretty buckles for fastening around the neck. The candy was distributed to the children and all received oranges, and in a short time they were gathered in groups for the feast. In leaving I asked, "Every one had a good time?" "Yes, everybody," they enthusiastically replied.

I wish all who helped to make our Christmas such a joyous one could realize what their partnership means to us. I am welcome in all the villages now and never have any difficulty in assembling them together for prayer and the Gospel Story. I expect soon to have the girls live with me—two, for two weeks at a time—as I did in Oklahoma and Alaska.

Two families—father and mother and two children in one and parents and three children in the other—are being prepared for baptism: separated families have been reunited; and we hope and pray that they all, too, may have the means of Grace that God grants through His Church to live the life that He wants us to live.

May we have your continued interest and prayers?

Harriet M. Bedell,
Deaconess-in-Charge.

CHURCH INTELLIGENCE

THE NATIONAL COUNCIL

Conducts the General Work of the Church Between Sessions of the General Convention and is the Board of Directors of The Domestic and Foreign Missionary Society.

Presence of Women Members for First Time.

The National Council, meeting for the first time since General Convention, will assemble at Church Missions House, New York, on Tuesday, February 12, and continue through February 14 for the consideration of a wide range of missionary problems vital to the progress of this great cause at home and abroad.

The Council will greet and be greeted by the Presiding Bishop, who will as usual preside throughout its sessions, this time however as chairman of the Board of Directors of the Domestic and Foreign Missionary Society of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States of America, and not as president. This latter office, formerly held by the Presiding Bishop, committing him to a vast volume of administrative detail, is now held by the Rt. Rev. Philip Cook, D. D., Bishop of Delaware, a former member of the National Council, and for years active in connection with its Departments of Missions and of Religious Education. Elected by General Convention in his absence, Bishop Cook, after careful consideration of this new responsibility both from the standpoint of the national Church and of his own diocese, accepted and already has made his presence felt in the world headquarters of the missions of the Church.

In the ranks of the National Council itself numerous changes are to be recorded. There will be cordial welcome for a number of newcomers who take up the exacting tasks which fall to the National Council itself and to the Departments to which each is assigned.

There will be a completely new method for transacting the business of National Council. Heretofore the first day has been given over to meetings of the various Departments. On the second and third days the Executive Secretaries of each Department and of the Woman's Auxiliary reported in turn to the National Council itself. Each Department was made up of members assigned from the National Council. To these were added additional members, laymen and women, often nationally recognized experts in the various fields of work represented by the Departments. Economy primarily has suggested a radical change. Additional members will no longer be named. Departmental appointments will be made as heretofore, but the Departments will meet only to consider matters referred to them from the floor of National Council.

Under the new plan, tried at one session in 1934, the National Council as a whole will sit as each Department in turn and the reports of Executive Secretaries will be made directly to the whole body. It is felt that this plan by which all the members of National Council are continuously cognizant of the work of all the Departments will be far superior to the abandoned plan by which the detail was presented only to the small departmental group.

To indicate the particular care with which the agenda of the sessions of National Council is prepared with respect to time schedule, we present the agenda for the forthcoming meeting:

Tuesday, February 12.

9:00 A. M.—Holy Communion.

9:45 A. M.—Council called to order. Report of Chairman of Board. Report of President. Report of Vice-President. Communications. Report of Treasurer. Report of Committee on Trust Funds.

11:00 A. M.—Presentation of Field Department.

Noon—Prayers for Missions.

12:15 P. M.—Presentation of Department of Publicity.

1:00 P. M.—Recess for Luncheon.

2:30 P. M.—Presentation of Department of Foreign Missions.

5:00 P. M.—Adjournment.

6:30 P. M.—Meeting of Department of Finance.

Wednesday, February 13.

9:00 A. M.—Holy Communion.

9:45 A. M.—Council called to order. Presentation of Department of Domestic Missions.

11:30 A. M.—Report of Woman's Auxiliary.

11:45 A. M.—Report of American Church Institute for Negroes.

Noon—Prayers for Missions.

12:15 P. M.—Presentation of Department of Christian Social Service.

1:00 P. M.—Recess for Luncheon.

2:30 P. M.—Presentation of Department of Religious Education.

3:30 P. M.—Report of Commission on Ecclesiastical Relations.

3:45 P. M.—Reports of Sub-Committees and Cooperating Agencies.

4:15 P. M.—Miscellaneous Business.

5:00 P. M.—Adjournment.

6:30 P. M.—Meeting of Department of Finance.

8:00 P. M.—Meetings of Departments to which matters have been referred by the Council.

Thursday, February 14.

9:00 A. M.—Holy Communion.

9:45 A. M.—Council called to order. Report of Department of Finance.

11:00 A. M.—Report of other Departments on matters referred to them.

11:30 A. M.—Miscellaneous Business.

1:00 P. M.—Adjournment.

The matter of greatest interest as National Council is called to order will be the presence of women members for the first time. They were elected by General Convention upon nomination by the Triennial of the Woman's Auxiliary, as follows: Miss Elizabeth Matthews of Southern Ohio, Miss Eva D. Corey of Massachusetts, Miss Rebekah L. Hibbard, and Mrs. James R. Cain of Upper South Carolina. National Council will extend cordial greeting to these added members, who all, it need hardly be said, long have been distinguished voices in the missionary life of the Church.

The National Council therefore is made up as follows:

To serve until December 31, 1940: The Rt. Rev. Henry S. George Tucker (Virginia), the Rt. Rev. Warren L. Rogers (Ohio), the Rev. William H. Milton (East Carolina), the Rev. Paul Roberts (Colorado), Mr. Philip S. Parker (Massachusetts), Mr. William H. Peterkin (West Virginia), Mr. Thomas J. Fleming, Jr. (Los Angeles), and Mr. Ralph W. Hollenbeck (Southern Ohio).

To serve until December 31, 1937: The Rt. Rev. Ernest M. Stires (Long Island), the Rt. Rev. George Craig Stewart (Chicago), the Rev. Karl M. Block (Missouri), the Rev. G. P. T. Sargent (New York), Mr. Harper Sibley (Rochester), Mr. Z. C. Patten (Tennessee), Mr. John S. Newbold (Pennsylvania), the Hon. William R. Castle, Jr. (Washington, D. C.), Miss Elizabeth Matthews (Southern Ohio), Miss Eva D. Corey (Massachusetts), Miss Rebekah L. Hibbard (Los Angeles), and Mrs. James R. Cain (Upper South Carolina).

Elected from the Provinces: I. The Rt. Rev. Henry K. Sherrill (Massachusetts), II. Mr. Walter Kiddie (Newark), III. The Rt. Rev. Francis M. Taitt (Pennsylvania), IV. The Rt. Rev. Edwin A. Penick (North Carolina), V. The Rt. Rev. Herman Page (Michigan), VI. The Rev. Addison E. Knickerbocker (Minnesota), VII. The Rev. Claude W. Sprouse (West Missouri), and VIII. The Rt. Rev. W. Bertrand Stevens (Los Angeles).

Fiscal problems naturally will come highest in administrative legislation. In accordance with action taken at General Convention the National Council has agreed with each diocese as to the "Objective" which the dioceses should assume for 1935. The total of these "Objectives" with a very moderate margin of safety is only enough to meet the Emergency Schedule of $2,313,-115 adopted by General Convention and does not touch "The Challenge" of $386,885 which represents the difference between the Budget of $2,700,-000 and the Emergency Schedule. Following General Convention each diocese completed efforts to insure payment of amounts agreed upon as above and has reported to the Finance Department of National Council success or failure in this respect. General Convention has required that upon this ultimate basis the actual budget for 1935 must be built. In event of failure, as tragic as such a result will be, there must be further reductions in missionary grants as these are now allotted. No graver problem than this ever has confronted National Council.

If on the fiscal side there are circumstances which challenge courage there is in the spiritual outlook as it will come to the attention of National Council a tremendously reassuring factor. General Convention created a Joint Commission on a Forward Movement, "for an organized effort to reinvigorate the life of the Church and to rehabilitate its general, diocesan, and parochial work." This joint commission headed by the Bishop of Southern Ohio, Bishop Hobson, already has developed significant activities and the National Council will hear with gratitude not only of these but what its part is to be in what it is prayerfully hoped will prove to be one of the greatest cooperative activities for venturesome advance that has been known in the life of the Church.

The Financial emergency of the Church and the range of problems which have been committed to National Council are all missionary problems. They concern the record of the Church with respect to its obedience to Christ's Great Commission. We invoke the earnest intercession of our people that the Holy Spirit truly may guide this world leadership into courageous and effective handling of problems however grave, and rally to the support of so holy a cause the last man and the last woman in a unity of renewed consecration.

* * *

THE GENERAL THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY.

Annual Meeting of Trustees.

At the Annual Meeting of the Board of Trustees of the General Theological Seminary on Wednesday, January 16, the Rt. Rev. Thomas F. Davies, D. D., Bishop of Western Massachusetts, G. T. S. '97, presided. It was the most largely attended meeting for many years, of the six new members five being present, the Rt. Rev. Frederick G. Budlong, S. T. D., G. T. S., '07, Bishop of Connecticut; the Rev. Roelif H. Brooks, D. D., former student G. T. S., '03, rector of St. Thomas' Church, New York; the Rev. William Way, D. D., former student G. T. S. '01, rector of Grace Church, Charleston, S. C.; the Very Rev. Kirk B. O'Ferrall, D. D., Bexley Hall '13, Dean of St. Paul's Cathedral, Detroit, and Mr. Alden D. Stanton, of Trinity Parish, New York.

The Rev. Paul Matthews, D. D., Bishop of New Jersey, a Trustee since 1914 except in 1920 and 1921, and Chairman of the Board since 1926, having declined re-election as Chairman, a decision to which the Board of Trustees acceded with regret, the Presiding Bishop, the Rt. Rev. James DeWolf Perry, D. D., S. T. D., LL. D., was unanimously elected Chairman. The Presiding Bishop has accepted his election.

To fill a trustee vacancy in the Episcopal Order, the Board unanimously elected the Rt. Rev. George Ashton Oldham, D. D., S. T. D., Bishop of Albany, G. T. S. '05.

* * *

INTERRACIAL COOPERATION.

The conditions of Negro public education in the South challenge both justice and enlightened self-interest, according to a sixteen-page report on this subject just published by the Commission on Interracial Cooperation, with headquarters in the Standard Building, Atlanta. Quoting a mass of facts and figures from the records of the several Southern state departments of education, the report alleges that the following conditions are almost universal:

1. Glaring discrimination against Negro children in the expenditure of public funds, the inequality running in some states as high as six and eight to one, and in many counties as high as ten, twenty, and thirty to one.

2. Diversion to white schools of vast sums of state funds sent down to the several counties for the education of Negro children. The total so diverted, according to the statement, runs into millions of dollars a year.

3. Hopeless inferiority of Negro school buildings and equipment, which average less than one-tenth as adequate as those provided for white children.

4. Shorter terms, poorly paid teachers, lack of consolidated schools, and absence of effort to compel attendance.

5. Many Negro children get no education at all, multitudes never get beyond the second or third grade, and in certain states only one in five hundred finishes high school.

These conditions, the report holds, are not only unfair to Negro children, but short-sighted as well, since society necessarily suffers from the resulting ignorance and inefficiency. Religious leaders and other public-spirited citizens are urged to look into the conditions in their respective communities, with a view to their improvement if needed. The Commission offers to send a copy of the report without charge to any one requesting it.

* * *

BISHOP BARNWELL ACCEPTS.

Bishop Middleton Stuart Barnwell, Missionary Bishop of Idaho, who was elected Bishop Coadjutor of Georgia on January 16, at the Diocesan Convention held in St. Paul's Church, Augusta, has accepted the election.

* * *

MISSIONARY AVAILABLE.

The Headmaster of Kuling School, Mr. Roy Allgood, is now in the United States and will be available during March, April and May to speak on its work. He has lantern slides showing the life and activities of the children. He would especially welcome opportunities to make report to the friends at home who have so loyally supported the enterprise.

Requests for appointments should go directly to Mr. Allgood at 38 Alexander Street, Princeton, New Jersey.

Kuling School is for the children of missionaries in China and is considered by some to be one of the most important adjuncts to the work of the Church in that field.

* * *

CONGRATULATIONS.

The revival of missionary zeal throughout the Church is evidenced by the record of payments made by the dioceses on their missionary objectives for the year 1934.

On December 1 there was still due on the Expectations the sum of $428,-718. When the books of the National Treasurer closed for the year on January 21, there had been paid since December 1, $414,564, leaving a shortage of only $14,154. The collections for the entire year amounted to $1,-225,678, or 98.8 per cent of the Expectations. Out of ninety-nine dioceses and districts at home and overseas, eighty have paid one hundred per cent or more of their Expectations. The total of the shortages was $32,916, and the total overpayment $18,762, leaving a net shortage of $14,154.

The dioceses are also credited with $280,398.17 on account of gifts to the "1934 Supplementary Offering" and "Everyman's Offering". The total received in these two offerings up to the close of the year was $298,627.64. The expenses charged to these offerings were $23,671.95.

It is too early to report as to the final outcome of the year 1934. Last February the National Council made an estimate that the deficit for the year would $500,623. In some of the mission fields expenditures were higher than the estimate, because of unfavorable foreign exchange developments, and in other fields exchange was favorable. The more than $$275,000 net received from the two special offerings mentioned above will help very materially in reducing this deficit.

With sincere thanks to all who have aided in making possible these encouraging results, I am

Faithfully yours,
Lewis B. Franklin,
Treasurer.

VIRGINIA.

Rt. Rev. H. St. George Tucker, D. D., Bishop

The Monumental Church, Richmond, Virginia.

To all the Clergy and to all Branches of the Woman's Auxiliary of Richmond and Vicinity:

Greetings:

On Sunday, February 10, at 4 P. M. at the Monumental Church, 1226 East Broad Street, there will be a special Memorial Service for Dr. Rudolf B. Teusler, Founder and Director of St. Luke's International Medical Center, Tokyo, Japan, who died last August. Before going to Japan, Dr. Teusler was a resident of Richmond and a member of the Monumental Church. It is, therefore, fitting that some appropriate recognition of his life and work be made in this city and in the church where he worshipped. This memorial service is for all the Richmond congregations, and it would be appreciated if special notice be given at the Auxiliary meetings and at the church services on Sunday morning. The speakers will be Dr. John W. Wood, Executive Secretary of the Department of Foreign Missions of our Church, and Bishop Tucker.

The clergy are requested to be present and take part. Bring your vestments and white stole. Bishop Tucker joins with me in hoping that as many of the members of your congregation as possible will be present at this service.

Faithfully yours,
George Ossman.

NEW YORK.

Rt. Rev. Wm. T. Manning, D. D., Bishop
Rt. Rev. A. S. Lloyd, D. D., Suffragan
Rt. Rev. Chas. K. Gilbert, D. D., Suffragan

Anniversary Week.

The Forty-eighth Annual Dinner of the Church Club of New York was held in the Grand Ball-room of the Hotel Waldorf-Astoria on Tuesday evening, January 29. This dinner is given each year in honor of the Bishop of the diocese. This is the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the Diocese of New York and the dinner emphasized that important event. The guests of honor and speakers were: Bishop Manning, Bishop Budlong of Connecticut, and Dr. Francis Parkman, Headmaster of St. Mark's School, Southborough, Mass. Mr. Edward K. Warren, President of the Club, presided. Colonel George W. Burleigh was Chairman of the Dinner Committee, which was composed of 125 members.

The Rev. John F. Steen, D. D., rector-emeritus of Ascension Memorial Church, New York City, is the oldest living clergyman in years of service in the Diocese of New York. On January 6, Dr. Steen celebrated his ninetieth birthday. He was ordained deacon on June 9, 1867; and advanced to the priesthood on February 7, 1869. He was in charge of Ascension Memorial Chapel from 1870 to 1895, at which time the Chapel became Ascension Memorial Church, with Dr. Steen as its first rector. He continued as rector until 1923, when he resigned and became rector-emeritus.

St. James' Parish, New York City, celebrated its one hundred and twenty-fifth anniversary on Sunday, January 27. The Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman, D. D., Bishop of Washington, was preacher at the eleven o'clock service. At the eight o'clock evening service, which was attended by the combined congregations of St. James and the Church of the Holy Trinity, the preacher was the Rev. ZeBarney T. Phillips, D. D., rector of Epiphany Church, Washington, and Chaplain of the U. S. Senate. At the evening service the guilds of the parish marched in procession, led by the four choirs. The Rev. Horace W. B. Donegan, rector of St. James' Church was instituted as rector on May 21, 1933.

Another outstanding event of the Anniversary Week was the great parish dinner held at the Hotel Pierre on the evening of January 31, at which the Bishop of the Diocese was the guest of honor. Among the speakers at the dinner were the Bishop and the Hon. George W. Wickersham.

The Diocesan Bulletin of New York for January, carries the news that the diocese has accepted $200,000 as its goal for the National Council during 1935. An equal amount is also needed for the Diocesan Budget for 1935. The goal was adopted at a representative gathering of clergy and laymen for all over the diocese, at the Synod Hall on December 10. This meeting was called by the Bishop of the diocese to consider the goal the diocese would set for itself.

The Laymen's Club of the Cathedral of St. John the Divine has entered the journalistic field with the publication of "News Items". The Publications Committee of the Laymen's Club is responsible for this new paper. Mr. Eric Wilder is Chairman of the Publications Committee. The circulation of "News Items" is limited to the Laymen's Club membership.

D. E. K.

LEXINGTON

Rt. Rev. H. P. A. Abbott, D. D., Bishop.

Fortieth Annual Convention.

The fortieth annual convention of the diocese was opened in the Church of the Good Shepherd, Lexington, the evening of January 29, with a sermon by the Rev. Frank Nelson, D. D., of Cincinnati. The most important item in Bishop Abbott's annual address delivered after the celebration of the Holy Communion, was the section entitled, "Possible Consolidation of Dioceses," "I am jealous that the Diocese of Lexington should give the lead to the Church in this much mooted movement, if at all possible, and if it be in accordance with the wish and will of this convention," Bishop Abbott said. He had been in correspondence with Bishop Woodcock of Kentucky, who has appointed a committee in his diocese to meet with a committee from Lexington, which was appointed later in the convention. These committees are instructed to consider the possible consolidation of the two dioceses in Kentucky, and to report to their respective diocesan conventions in 1936. Bishop Abbott concluded, "The cause is so worthwhile, that the two bishops have been willing to make in anticipation their unselfish contribution towards its successful prosecution," which is their expressed intention of resigning when and if consolidation is approved, that a new diocesan may be elected by such a merged diocese.

The Rev. Herman Page, of St. Paul's Church, Dayton, Ohio, was the special speaker at luncheon on the thirtieth and thirty-first, and his addresses constituted the chief inspirational feature of the convention. He spoke on the question, "Are we Christians, merely by inheritance, or Disciples of Christ, in the most active sense of the phrase?"

Members of the Standing Committee were re-elected, including the Rev. E. W. Baxter, who had been elected earlier to complete the unexpired term of the Rev. R. J. Murphy, who has left the diocese.

Provisions for reviving The Diocesan News, monthly diocesan paper, were made. A special committee to consider the future of the Mary K. Williams Home, diocesan orphanage, was appointed with power to act.

The most important business of the convention was the passage of a complete set of revised canons for the diocese. Obscurities and redundancies were clarified and eliminated. Most striking of all is the additional authority conferred upon the bishop, especially the power of absolute veto in the selection of rectors henceforth.

Richard C. Patton was ordered deacon before the business session on the thirty-first. He will reside in Corbin, Ky., assisting Archdeacon Catlin.

Financially, the diocese is in a more hopeful condition than during the past three years.

G. R. Madson.

WYOMING

Rt. Rev. Elmer N. Schmuck, D. D., Bishop

The New Dean of St. Matthew's Cathedral.

Bishop Schmuck of Wyoming announces that the Rev. Goodrich R. Fenner has been chosen as Dean of St. Matthew's Cathedral, Laramie. Until recently Dean Fenner was Secretary of Rural Work of the Department of Christian Social Service of the National Council. Dean Fenner was born in Beeville, Texas, and graduated from Texas A. & M. College with B. S. degree, and from the General Theological Seminary in 1916. He was made Deacon by Bishop Lloyd in that year and Priest by Bishop Capers in 1916. He spent his parochial ministry in Texas, being rector of St. Philip's Church, Uvalde from 1916 to 1924, and later rector of Christ Church, Dallas, from 1924 to 1932. He was a member of the Standing Committee of the Diocese of Dallas as well as on other important boards and was a deputy to the General Convention from that diocese in 1919, 1928 and 1931. In 1918 he served as first lieutenant and captain in the U. S. army. He was active in community affairs in the City of Dallas, and was member of the Board of City Welfare of that city. In February, 1932, he was elected Secretary of Rural Work of the National Council. In 1930 he was married to Miss Julia Hogan of Dallas.

Dean Fenner had a notable ministry in Texas and made an outstanding contribution to the National Church as Secretary in the Social Service Department. He brings a rich experience not only to the Cathedral in Laramie, but to the work of the Missionary District of Wyoming. His previous contact in school and college work admirably fits in connection with the Cathedral Schools, as well as the University of Wyoming, which is located at Laramie. As Dean of the Cathedral he will also be the Church's Student Pastor among the unversity students, at which institution Church students are in the largest proportion of probably any state university in the country. Dean Fenner began his ministry at the Cathedral on Sunday, January 13. He is the author of a forthcoming book entitled "The Episcopal Church in Town and Country," to be published by the Social Service Department of the National Council.

LONG ISLAND.

Rt. Rev. E. M. Stires, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. J. I. B. Larned, Suffragan.
Rt. Rev. F. W. Creighton, S. T. D., Suffragan.

Upturn in Long Island.

The Diocesan Council of Long Island, in its financial report for 1934, shows a slight upward turn in contributions after a decided downward trend for five preceding years. In 1934, the gifts of our congregations applicable to the quota amounted to $115,232; in 1933, to $113,292. Though the increase over last year is small, yet it is encouraging to find an increase after five years of steady decline. The peak was in 1928, when the contributions were $195,110.

The contribution of Long Island to the National Council in 1934 was $51,003.48, which was a thousand dollars above our promise of $50,000. The amount of our gifts for the Church's general program has, of course, fallen off since 1928; but we ardently hope that the figure for 1934 represenes the low point of the curve, and that 1935 and succeeding years will show improvement.

C. H. Webb.

CONNECTICUT.

Rt. Rev. F. G. Budlong, D. D., S. T. D.,

Convocation—Reunion.

The Archdeaconry of New Haven met at St. Thomas' Parish House Tuesday, January 22. Archdeacon F. S. Kenyon was re-elected and interesting reports of the Departments were received. The unfinished Immanuel Church, Ansonia, was discussed, and a strong committee appointed to secure its immediate completion. After lunch, the Convocation assembled, and the Rev. J. F. Sexton was elected Dean.

The Mid-Winter Berkeley Reunion was held January 23, the Rev. Humphrey Beevor of Oriel College, Oxford, delivered the Page Lectures on, "Love the Creator, the Redeemer, the Unifier and the End of Life." Among other speakers were the Bishop of Connecticut, who gave the opening Meditation, and Prof. F. C. S. Northrop, who called attention to the Philosophical and Scientific tendency to return to the idea of unity in nature as in pre-modern days. The presence of Bishop Brewster through the entire session was a source of great inspiration.

The Rev. Floyd Appleton of Woodbury, addressed the student body of Berkeley on January 30, on the Interdependence of Church and State as equally derived from the aboriginal institution of the family.

The Rev. Humphrey Beevor, Librarian of Pusey House, Oxford, preached the annual sermon before the acolytes of the diocese at Christ Church, New Haven, January 22 (St. Vincent's Day). The church was filled.

Floyd Appleton.

PENNSYLVANIA

Rt. Rev. Francis M. Taitt, S. T. D., Bishop

Bishop Moreland Assisting Bishop Taitt.

The Rt. Rev. William Hall Moreland, retired Bishop of Sacramento, will assist Bishop Taitt in taking confirmation appointments during the month of February, according to an official announcement. February 3, Bishop Moreland administered the rite in historic old Trinity Church, Oxford, Philadelphia, at 10:30 A. M., and in St. Gabriel's, Roosevelt Boulevard, Philadelphia, at 8 P. M. On Wednesday night, Bishop Mooreland confirmed at St. Mark's, Frankford, and on Thursday night, at the Church of the Resurrection, Mayfair, Philadelphia.

Lieutenant-Colonel Louis B. Runk, Lay Canon of the Cathedral Chapter and Vestryman of St. Peter's Church, Germantown, conducted the eleven o'clock morning service, February 3, at St. Mary's Chapel of the Protestant Episcopal Cathedral Church of Christ, Upper Roxborough.

WEST VIRGINIA

Rt. Rev. W. L. Gravatt, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. R. E. L. Strider, D. D., Coadjutor

The Rev. Paul L. Powles, rector of Trinity Church, Martinsburg, W. Va., was elected president of the Standing Committee of the Diocese of West Virginia, at Charlestown on January 24, to succeed the Rev. C. A. Mitchell, who will retire from the presidency and active ministry March 1.

The Rev. John W. Gunmere, rector of Zion Church, Charleston, was elected to fill the vacancy caused by Mr. Mitchell's retirement.

R. H. G.

KENTUCKY

Rt. Rev. C. E. Woodcock, D. D., Bishop

Annual Convention.

Owing to the serious illness and enforced absence of the Rt. Rev. Charles E. Woodcock, D. D., the one hundred and seventh annual Convention of the Diocese of Kentucky, meeting in Louisville, on January 23 and 24, elected the Rev. Dr. Henry L. Durrant, rector of St. Paul's Church, as President of the Convention.

The Rev. Dr. Durrant and the Rev. Arthur H. Austin, rector of Grace Church, were elected to the Standing Committee in lieu of the Very Rev. Dean McCready and the Rev. John S. Douglas, rector of St. Andrew's Church.

A new Canon presented by the Dean asking the Convention to give Women the right to serve on Vestries was referred back to the Committee on Canons.

BETHLEHEM

Rt. Rev. F. W. Sterrett, D. D., Bishop

Reading Convocation.

The Convocation of Reading had its winter session at Trinity Church, Pottsville, on Monday and Tuesday, January 28 and 29. The Rev. Lyman P. Powell of New York City spoke of his recent visit to Russia, illustrated by several movie reels. Prof. Percy Hughes, Head of Department of Philosophy at Lehigh University, spoke on Religion and its place in modern life, contrasting the views of John Dewey on the one hand and Pro. Whitehead and Mr. Bridges on the other.

Parish House at St. John's, Palmerton, Dedicated.

On January 20, Dean Howard W. Diller of Trinity Church, Pottsville, was the guest preacher at the afternoon service when St. John's new parish house was appropriately dedicated. The Friday evening before, the congregation had its annual dinner meeting and party with an attendance of over 250 people.

The Parish House was made by extending a room, which, when the church was built in 1906, was meant to house the Sunday School and which prior to the new Parish House was used for the kindergarten. The cost of the extension was approximately $5,500. The interior and exterior are along the same lines as the original church. The parish hall, which is the principal room in the addition, will accommodate 200 people at dinner. A dumb waiter connects this room with the basement, where there is a well-equipped kitchen, including an electric range. Another large room in the basement will be used for club meetings, classes and dinners and will accommodate seventy-five people.

Union Sunday School.

Hazard is a suburb of Palmerton. There is no church or Sunday school in the place. The Revs. George McKinley of St. John's Church and Mr. Wetstone of the Reformed Church, Palmerton, saw an opportunity for doing a service to this community. They have secured the basement of the Hazard High School and have organized a Sunday School with a regular attendance of more than 200.

The teachers come from the churches of Palmerton, Episcopal, Reformed, Lutheran, Methodist and Evangelical.

There is a fine cooperating spirit among them and an increase in church attendance is one of the results in all the churches of Palmerton. The International Lesson Leaves are used.

RHODE ISLAND

Rt. Rev. J. DeWolf Perry, D. D., Bishop

Over Paid.

The Diocese of Rhode Island closed the year 1934 in a very satisfactory condition, it was announced at headquarters this week. Fifty-one parishes or missions equalled or over-paid their expectation to the amount of over $3,000. The whole amount contributed was $64,679. Of this amount $38,807 was sent to the National Council, which was $439 more than was promised; $25,872 was retained for disbursement in the diocese—$294 more than was expected. Additional contributions for the deficit were received amounting to $7,209, making a grand total of $71,886.

The result of the canvass for 1935 shows a total contribution at the present time of $61,881. This is about $2,100 less than last year. It is hoped that the latter sum may be secured. Sixty per cent of the whole amount, $37,129, will be sent to the National Council for the general missionary work of the Church, and $24,752 retained for the missionary work of Rhode Island. While the results thus far obtained do not reach the amount hoped for at the beginning of the canvass, still, diocesan officials say, it represents many instances of real sacrifice on the part of parishes. One parish in particular, which lost over thirty families, due to industrial conditions, exceeded slightly its contribution of a year ago. One small parish added fifty per cent to its contribution. Four or more added twenty-five per cent. Others made small increases. Twenty-five at least gave more than in 1934.

F. W. Jones.

MASSACHUSETTS

Rt. Rev. Henry K. Sherrill, D. D., Bishop
Rt. Rev. S. G. Babcock, D. D., Suffragan Bishop

Junior Altar Guild of All Saints' Church, Belmont, Mass.

Much interest is centered in the study and work of the Junior Altar Guild of All Saints' Church in Belmont, Mass. The organizing and instruction are in charge of Mrs. Ira D. Potts, the directress.

The Guild has twenty-two members. They are making a thorough study of the church, exterior and interior, and of the clergy vestments, furniture, seasons, symbolisms, the sanctuary and the sacristy. At an impressive service a few weeks ago, the girls were formally admitted into the Junior Altar Guild and had a Corporate Communion. They have given a demonstration in the church of the care of the Sanctuary for the church service. They explained the symbolism and prepared the altar for the celebration of the Holy Communion. They then demonstrated the preparation for the period between services.

Mr. Grosvenor Betts has made and presented to the Juniors for his daughters, Mary and Linda Betts, a miniature sanctuary. The members of the Guild will make complete sets of hangings and linens for the vesting of the miniature altar. This small sanctuary will be valuable in the instruction for altar service.

The Juniors will take care of the work in the sanctuary under the supervision of the Senior Altar Guild members.

ATLANTA.

Rt. Rev. H. J. Mikell, D. D., Bishop.

Training Course for Counsellors.

Miss Dorothy May Fischer, National Young People's Secretary, conducted a week's training course for Counsellors of the Young People's Service League of the Diocese of Atlanta, the week of January 28. The classes were held at All Saints' Parish House, Atlanta, Ga.

Representatives from the City Union Service Leagues met Miss Fischer Tuesday afternoon for a conference, at which the young people presented their problems.

Young people from the entire Diocese of Atlanta gathered at All Saints' Church Sunday evening, February 3, for a joint meeting at which time Miss Fischer spoke.

This is the first Counsellors' Training Course to be sponsored by the diocesan officers, Robert M. Bandy, the president, announced.

MISSISSIPPI

Rt. Rev. T. DuB. Bratton, D D., Bishop
Rt. Rev. W. M. Green, D. D., Coadjutor

The One Hundred and Eighth Annual Council.

The One Hundred and Eighth Annual Council convened in St. Paul's Church, Meridian, on the evening of January 22. Unusual for Mississippi, the delegates went to the Council in the midst of one of the biggest snows we have had in a long time. However, the warm hospitality of the rector, vestry and congregation of St. Paul's made all forget the weather conditions.

At the opening service addresses were made by the Rt. Rev. Theo. DuBose Bratton, D. D., LL. D., and the Rt. Rev. Wm. Mercer Green, D. D. The Rev. Val. H. Sessions, D. D., was re-elected as Secretary of the diocese; the Rev. R. E. MacBlain was elected Assistant Secretary; Mr. C. W. Wachenfeld, Treasurer of the Council.

The Corporate Communion of Council was held on the morning of January 23. The Rt. Rev. Theo. DuBose Bratton was the celebrant, the Rt. Rev. Wm. Mercer Green read the Ante-Communion Office. The Rev. W. G. Christian the Epistle, and the Rev. Val H. Sessions the Gospel.

The Council, from the standpoint of numbers, was one of the smallest ever held, on account of the weather conditions, and sickness on the part of many. But the fellowship, cooperation, unity—such expressions gives a picture of one of the outstanding Councils held.

The reports from all departments of the work were encouraging. The name of the Field Department was changed to "The Department of Field and Evangelism."

A very outstanding resolution was passed concerning the Negro work:

"Resolved, That this Council notes and approves the relatively large part which our Colored congregations have had in the Every Man's Offering, and hails it as an earnest effort of further progress toward the goal of self-support, which goal must be kept always in mind for our Colored congregations."

On the second evening of Council, interesting and timely addresses were made by the following: Miss Mary L. Newton, "All Saints' College, Vicksburg"; the Rev. Duncan M. Gray, "The Relations of the Church to the College Student"; the Rev. John L. Sutton, "Mississippi Children's Society"; the Rev. Joseph Kuehnle, "The Spiritual Objective of the Department of Field and Evangelism."

Another encouraging resolution passed:

"That this Council give its approval and pledge its cooperation to the plan and objectives of the Forward Movement of the Church; and that the Secretary of the Council be instructed to advise the Presiding Bishop and National Council of this action; and that the Field Department be requested to assume the leadership of this Forward Movement in the Diocese of Mississippi."

The Council also approved of the petition from Prof. Strange in charge of Okolona Industrial School, our school for Colored youth, which was for cooperation in their efforts, including the raising of funds to build a new dormitory.

The 1936 Council will meet in St. Andrew's Church, Jackson.

Val. H. Sessions.

MARYLAND.

Rt. Rev. E. T. Helfenstein, D. D., Bishop

Pi Alpha Fraternity Institutes New Chapters.

On Thursday, January 24, the Supreme Council of the Pi Alpha Fraternity instituted at the Maryland Alpha Chapter House, St. Mary's Church, Baltimore, of which the Rev. W. Owings Stone is rector, two new chapters for St. Michael and All Angels' Church, Baltimore, and one each for Trinity Church, Elkton, Md., and St. Mark's Church, Aikin, Md. The last two chapters are in the Diocese of Easton, makinf this the fifth diocese in which the fraternity is represented. The other four are Harrisburg, West Virginia, Central New York, and Maryland. Fifty-two men in all were initiated, including the Rev. Dr. Don Frank Fenn, rector of St. Michael and All Angels', and his assistant, the Rev. Albert H. Frost, and Dr. J. Warren Albinson, who is in charge of the work at Elkton and Aikin.

The instituting officer was the Rev. Arthur G. W. Pfaffko, founder of the Fraternity. There were close to one hundred members of the Fraternity present at the small banquet which was served after the institution.

A. A. Hughes.

TENNESSEE.

Rt. Rev. Thos. E. Gailor, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. J M. Maxon. D. D., Coadjutor

Annual Convention.

The one hundred and third annual Convention of the Diocese met in St. Paul's Church, Chattanooga, January 23 and 24, and the annual Convention of the Woman's Auxiliary and the Daughters of the King were held in connection with this convention. The afternoon and night preceding the Convention was given over to the Diocesan Department of Religious Education under the Chairmanship of the Rev. Alfred Loaring-Clark. His talk stressed the need in our churches of a well-thought-out program of religious education, and mentioned the need of a diocesan secretary of Religious Education. He outlined some of the resources and opportunities of the Church Schools and for the benefit of leaders in Religious Education in the parishes sketched in brief outline the ideal setup for the parish, indicating the emphases necessary in the various age groups. Following his talk, Miss Annie Morton Stout, the Provincial Secretary for Religious Education, presented some ideas on the necessity of trained leaders. She mentioned a resolution which the Young People had passed in their Provincial Convention the past summer, asking for trained counsellors. She hailed this as an encouraging sign, counsellors, having hitherto been taken on sufferance. Mrs. Nicolson, Diocesan Counselor for Y. P. S. L., and the Director of Camp Gailor Maxon, presented the whole idea of the Diocesan Camp and its place in the religious development of the individuals of our churches and of the schools fostered by those churches.

At 8 P. M. of that same day the Department of Religious Education presented the moving picture, "The New World," by which so many were given a new conception of the work of the Church, when it was shown in General Convention.

After routine business elections were held with the following results:

New members of the Bishop and Council: Clerical—the Rev. Lyle G. Kilvington, Cleveland, Representative from East Tennessee; the Rev. Henry Bell Hodgkins, Columbia, Representative from Middle Tennessee; the Rev. Dr. W. J. Loaring-Clark, Jackson, Representative from West Tennessee. Lay—J. B. French, Chattanooga, Representative from East Tennessee; Geo. T. Finegan, of Nashville, Middle Tennessee; McClelland Joy, Memphis, Representative from West Tennessee. Negro Representative, the Rev. Hugh F. Merrill, of Columbia. The three directors of the Episcopal Endowment Corporation, whose terms expired this year, were re-elected: Charles Nelson of Nashville, Russell C. Gregg of Memphis, and William Whaley of Knoxville. Z. C. Patten, President of the Commercial National Bank of Chattanooga, is President of the Corporation.

The Bishop's Address.

In his opening address Bishop Gailor was outspoken in criticism of the old economic order, to which some highly privileged people look back with longing, and challenge his people to set before themselves the goal of a more nearly Christian social order. His utterance was of sufficient importance to be written up in the magazine, "Time".

Discipleship.

The Rev. Charles Clingman, D. D., addressed the Convention Wednesday evening on "Discipleship"—the keynote of the Forward Movement. His hearers went away not feeling more comfortable, but more determined to make their discipleship real.

Reports from the parishes and missions on the Every Member Canvass were not encouraging. The quotas accepted fell far short of the minimum amount needed to carry on the work of the Diocese of Tennessee's share of the work of the National Council. The Bishop and Council was ordered to make a special effort to meet this situation. Consequently the Department of Program has planned a series of regional conferences to be held in Memphis, Jackson, Sewanee, Nashville, Knoxville, Johnson City, and Chattanooga, between now and February 20. The Bishop and Council is to meet again on March 4, to receive returns from these conferences and to make plans accordingly.

Plans are being made for the wide use in the Diocese of the Forward Movement's Lenten folder on "Discipleship."

E. P. Dandridge.

NEBRASKA.

Rt. Rev. E. V. Shayler, D. D., Bishop.

Christian Organization.

Dr. Fred Clayton, rector of All Saints, Omaha, subjected a recent speaker at a Forum at the Y. W. C. A. to criticism in a sermon last Sunday. Quoting from a newspaper report of a lecture, Dr. Clayton said he felt he should make a slight protest. The reference said, "We must start with human needs, not with God, not with revelation, but with human experience." Dr. Clayton added, "We cannot throw everything overboard and start all over again. We cannot have religion without God." He criticized the speaker for this utterance in an institution which is maintained by the people of Omaha as a Christian organization, established to keep alive the spirit of God.

The Rev. George St. George Tyner has begun publication of an attractive parish bulletin, which is mimeographed. The cover design is a picture of St. Paul's Church, and the first page is a fine picture of the cross on the gable of the church, with rays of light shining upon it and two doves flying down in the rays. The other two pages are devoted to parish news.

W. J. H. Petter.

CHICAGO.

Rt. Rev. George Craig Stewart, D. D., Bishop.

Award Crosses of Honor.

For the first time an award of Cross of Honor goes to a layman. He is Angus S. Hibbard, prominent Chicagoan, and leader in numerous Church affairs. His selection is announced by Bishop George Craig Stewart, along with four other awards made in connection with the ninety-eighth annual convention of the diocese, February 4, 5 and 6.

In making the award to Mr. Hibbard, Bishop Stewart's citation declared his "buoyancy, vitality and boundless energy are witness to his perennial youth," and further termed him a "creator of new ideas to meet old problems; constructive builder of the Kingdom of God in business, in club life and in the church."

Mr. Hibbard is chairman of the Department of Publicity of the Diocese; member of the Diocesan Council, past president and director of the Church Club, member of the Cathedral Chapter, trustee of Seabury Western Seminary; chairman of the diocesan endowment fund and of the Bishop's Pence Committee.

Others to receive the Cross of Honor award are: the Rev. Dr. George H. Thomas, rector of St. Paul's Church; the Rev. William B. Stoskopf, rector Church of the Ascension; the Rev. Gowan C. Williams, rector, St. Mark's Church, Glen Ellyn; the Rev. Quinter Kephart, priest-in-charge, St. Paul's Church, LaSalle.

Each year five crosses are made by the awards committee for distinguished service to the Church in the Diocese of Chicago. Until this year the awards have been limited to the clergy.

MICHIGAN

Rt. Rev. Herman Page, D. D., Bishop

Parish Institute.

A Parish Institute on Religious Education was held recently in St. Mary's Church, Detroit, beginning on Thursday, January 24, and concluding with Choral Evensong at five on Sunday, the twenty-seventh. The leaders included the Rev. R. E. Charles, rector of Epiphany Church, Detroit; the Rev. C. C. Jatho, rector of St. John's, Royal Oak; Miss Elizabeth S. Thomas, Diocesan Director of Religious Education; Miss Beatrice Bennett; the Rev. L. H. Cone, rector of the parish; and the Rt. Rev. Herman Page, D. D., Bishop of the diocese. Ten sessions were conducted in the four days; rather intensive, but an excellent method of arousing the interest of the entire parish.

"Michigan Day."

Special observance was made, in a number of the parishes and missions in the State of Michigan, on Sunday, January 27, of the National Cathedral, which signalized that day as "Michigan Day" in their services. Special prayers were offered at the National Cathedral for the State of Michigan and its three dioceses; the political representatives, at Washington, from the State were invited to attend the services; and the Michigan flag was carried in the procession. In Michigan, prayers were offered for the Cathedral and its work. The State of Michigan is the first to sponsor a Sunday in the National Cathedral under a program that will eventually include all the States of the Union.

LOUISIANA

Rt. Rev. James Craik Morris, D. D., Bishop

Annual Session of Council.

The ninety-seventh session of the Council of the Diocese of Louisiana convened in Christ Church Cathedral, New Orleans, from January 22 to 24, inclusive. Preliminary meetings were held, with committee meetings in the morning and afternoon. An inspirational hour was held at night, the Ven. G. L. Tucker, D. D., delivering an address on "Louisiana's Part in the Sewanee Vision", followed by a pageant entitled, "The Holy Grail". The Council opened on January 23, with a celebration of the Holy Communion, the sermon was preached by the Rev. Chas. E. Shaw, rector of Christ Church, Covington. At this service the Junior Choirs of the city churches, consisting of about 125 persons, rendered the musical portion. Business session was held at ten o'clock A. M., the Rev. S. L. Vail, rector of the Church of the Annunciation, being re-elected Secretary, which was followed by appointment of committees and reports of various boards.

The Finance Committee presented its report at the afternoon session, showing all expenses of the diocese paid for the year 1934; $1,500 paid on loans, and a balance brought forward. Of sixty-nine parishes and missions, forty paid their assessments in full. The budget and assessment as submitted by that committee were adopted. The Bishop read his annual address at the night session, which was an able and most interesting report, showing the diocese to be recovering from the depression and the outlook very promising. Due to the efforts of the Bishop's committee of laymen the indebtedness of the diocese was reduced by slightly over $4,300. Following the Bishop's address, elections took place resulting in the Standing Committee being re-elected, composed of the Rev. Matthew Brewster, D. D., Rev. S. L. Vail, Rev. W. S. Black, D. D., Dr. Warren Kearny, W. B. Machado and A. Giffen Levy. Delegates to the Provincial Synod elected were the Ven. G. L. Tucker, D. D., Rev. W. S. Young, Very Rev. Wm. H. Nes, M. W. Lockhart, D. D., Rev. James M. Owens, D. D., Rev. S. L. Vail, Dr. Warren Kearny, George H. Terriberry, C. V. Porter, J. H. Percy, R. Leverich and Henry Palfrey.

At the sessions of January 24, report was read by the Board of Missions; reports from the Archdeacons and report of Committee on the Church's Program. Archie M. Smith was re-elected Treasurer; Rev. S. L. Vail, Registrar, and H. E. Grice, Custodian of Trust Funds. The election of the Board of Missions and Board of Religious Education followed.

At the night and final session, the Bishop read the appointments he had made on the various other boards and committees. The meeting closed with devotional exercises and a quiet hour of prayer and meditation conducted by the Rev. W. Tate Young, rector of Grace Memorial Church, Hammond, which was most inspiring. The Church of the Good Shepherd, Lake Charles, invited the Diocesan Council to meet in that city in 1936, which was unanimously accepted. The Council invited the Provincial Synod of the Fourth Province to meet in New Orleans in 1936. This was a most harmonious Council, a spirit of loyalty and cooperation being evident throughout the sessions.

F. H. G. F.

MISSIONARY DISTRICT OF SALINA.

Rt. Rev. Robert H. Mize, D. D., Missionary Bishop.

Bishop Mize consecrated St. Andrew's Church in the Silverdale rural community near Hays, January 13. The stone church, built by the men of the congregation, was crowded to capacity, with many persons unable to get in it. The church is in charge of the General Seminary's Associate Mission at Hays.

The report of the complete payment of last year's quota of $2,000, and the undertaking of a similar quota for this year, were high marks of the Diocesan Convocation held at Hutchinson, January 21-23. Plans were made for teams composed of a visiting priest and layman visiting all parishes and missions in the interests of the "quota", February 6-13. All clergy of the district agreed to take part in this interchange of missionary meetings. The Very Rev. John W. Day of Grace Cathedral, Topeka, addressed the Convocation at an evening service.

R. H. M., Jr.

(Continued on page 22.)

FAMILY DEPARTMENT

FEBRUARY.

2. Presentation of Christ. (Saturday.)
3. Fourth Sunday after Epiphany.
10. Fifth Sunday after Epiphany.
17. Septuagesima.
24. Sexagesima.
25. St. Matthias.* (Monday.)

* * *

COLLECT FOR THE FIFTH SUNDAY AFTER THE EPIPHANY.

O Lord, we beseech Thee to keep Thy Church and household continually in Thy true religion; that they who do lean only upon the hope of Thy heavenly grace may evermore be defended by Thy mighty power; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

GIVING THANKS.

We read that Christ gave thanks at His own table,
So meekly spread and served by Hands divine—
Thanks for the Covenant, new, and great, and stable,
Sealed with His blood, and symbolized by wine.

Oft had He given thanks in desert places
Where crowds, at rest on soft green grass, were fed;
His tender voice thrilled through the open spaces.
In blessing God for love-provided bread.

Now, in that upper chamber quietly sitting
Again He praiseth God with fervent zest;
Ah! surely it had been, for once, more fitting
If Peter, James, or John, the thanks expressed:

For Christ was giving thanks as One who shareth
The boons and benefits which must accrue
From that dark Cross; and not as One who beareth
An awful burden and a judgment due.

But, yet we know those thanks were deep and glowing,
Because a way was found His world to save;
That He—the Sacrifice, with grace o'erflowing,
Should taste for us the lonely Cross and grave.

—Winifred A. Iverson, in the Christian (English).

The Comfort of the Gospel.

There is a strangeness in life bound up with its changing character, a strangeness ready to pass in our experience into a sense of loneliness, a sense that in our life here we are never quite at home. Again and again this feeling is echoed in some verse of the Bible. In the Old Testament and in the New the note is often struck which sounds in David's thanksgiving, when he had seen the preparation made for the building of the Temple "We are strangers before Thee and sojourners as were all our fathers: our days on earth are as a shadow, and there is none abiding."

This voice of the Bible is the voice of humanity. It speaks within us as the verdict on the unhappiness and losses and calamities which we experience. It speaks through the poets and mystics who have known so well the insecurity, the instability, the essential transitoriness of life. Even the man who plays a winning game in all else over all other foes, is playing a losing game against time. And time makes the world sadder.

It is such a world, such a life, which each century, each generation, each person faces. Among all differences that remain constant, it is not that the world or life is in essence bad, but that we do not fit. That is the meaning of the protests against life to which some give voice, and which all of us at times feel; that is the meaning of the attempt to make man and his environment tally more exactly. Widely do such efforts vary from one another, while they range from the theories of sociologists and the labors of statesmen to that pursuit of pleasure which suggests that some believe that life's sting can be drawn if life be charged to the brim with whatever may satisfy a desire and excite a thrill.

But it cannot be done—not in this way. The sting of life as of death can be drawn only if we can bring into it something which gives us security and victory in the face of it and over it. It is this power which men have sought in religion, and it is this which in some way or other religion has claimed to do.

The answer of true religion to the victory of time and change in the world is through a victory which has overcome the world, the victory of faith. And in the Gospel wherein we stand that answer rises to a high level of joyful thankfulness. We rest on the friendliness of the Gospel, on its power to give us a home. It is this good news which makes the twenty-third Psalm the best-known and best-loved portion of the Old Testament. It is good news which receives its full interpretation in the last nine verses of the eighth chapter of Romans. The comfort of religion is not something to be despised. Such comfort must not become to our spirits as a drug or an opiate.

There is always the note of challenge. But it is inhuman to overlook the vast need in so many lives for a Gospel of consolation. And into the depths of human needs, with their message of a boundless because divine, consolation, come such words as these:

"Blessed be God, even the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Father of mercies and God of all comfort; Who comforteth us in all our tribulation, that we may be able to comfort them which are in any trouble, by the comfort wherewith we ourselves are comforted of God."

Doubtless we must beware of too emotional a religion. Piety of feeling must go hand in hand with sincerity of mind and resoluteness of will. But you cannot cut feeling out of life. A true Gospel must come home to people's feelings as well as to their minds and wills. Sentimentality in religion is a bad thing, but it is the corruption of something that is good. The Bible is not a sentimental book, but its power is not to be understood unless you remember what men and women have felt in reading or hearing it. The Word of God in the Bible has been to them a true word of consolation. Not on one page only have they entered into the experience of those who knew that God was their refuge.

That divine comfort is in those pages an experience of the present, not simply a promise for the future. There is that promise: "Sorrow and sighing shall flee away." . . . "God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes"; but that is only part of the truth. The fullness of the truth includes the assurance of God's Presence and never-failing providence in the midst of all that can befall us. God is our God, not because He keeps us in them. Man after man in the Bible story learned that lesson and passed on what he had learnt.—Rev. J. K. Mozley, D. D., in Guardian (English).

* * *

For the Southern Churchman.

COMMUNITY VALUES.

2. The School.

Upton H. Gibbs.

When a man with a young family is thinking about a change in location, one of the first matters he inquires about, is the school facilities in the neighborhood to which he contemplates moving. His children's education is a concern of paramount importance to him, and often the school situation will be the determining factor in his ultimate choice. The value of good schools to a community is a substantial asset. A community which shows an interest in its schools, by building and equipping them as they should be, shows that it is progressive and alive to its true welfare, and thus draws to itself, the better classes of people. The schools are an index to the quality of its citizens.

Culture and Character Centers.

The community value of the schools is shown in their being centers for culture and character building. Raw material in the shape of young children, is taken in hand, and their bodies and minds are trained and developed. Education in the true sense of the word, is not stuffing a child's mind with facts, but drawing out all the powers of his mind. Not only are his mental faculties developed, but he is also trained in their right use. Thus along with knowledge his character is formed. The principle of truth, honesty and obedience are emphasized, good habits inculcated and bad ones suppressed. The elementary rules of courtesy are also taught him, and respect for authority, for his elders and betters, as "manners maketh man."

Centers of Social Contacts.

The community value of the schools is shown in their being exceptional centers for social contacts. Here the children of all classes meet on a common level. When the late Theodore Roosevelt was President, he sent his boys to the public schools for this very reason. As a democratiizing influence, the school is unrivalled.

But not only for the children, do the schools serve in this respect, but also for the parents, through the Parent-Teacher Associations. At their meetings, "the Colonel's lady and Judith O'Grady" find themselves sitting side by side, and occupied in discussing mutual interests. Outside of the school room they may not meet, nor recognize each other, but while debating school management and curriculum for children, they discover that they have mutual ideas, and are "Sisters under their skins."

Centers of Altruism.

Again the schools are great centers in a community, especially rural ones, for altrustic work. The tax-payers expend large sums on their maintenance, the chief beneficiaries being often the children of non-taxpayers. The question of financial profit does not enter at all or is even considered. The schools exist for the benefit of the children and the community in general, and not for any one group of individuals. They are also made the base for various relief projects in which the children's services are enlisted.

Centers for Americanism.

But the ultimate object of the schools is to produce American citizens of the right type. The schools have been well termed the melting pot into which children of all nationalities and antecedents are poured. Here as in a crucible the foreign elements are separated and the residue is formed into American character, pure and simple. The biography of the Russian Jewish girl, Mary Antin, affords a striking illustration of this fact.

Truly then the welfare of our country depends largely on the efficiency of the public schools. Their maintenance and excellence must be kept up at all costs, or without them America will cease to be a democracy.

* * *

For the Southern Churchman.

PATTERNS.

Anne Reiley Nesom.

We live in a patterned world
From the depths of the infinite hurled
And set speeding, silently whirled
Along the appointed invisible track.
As out of chaos each object sprang,
Resisting dumbly what held it back,
The chorus of nature joyously rang
In praise of its patterned form,
Each element true to a norm:
The lichen, the leaf, the crystal of snow,
The heart of a bud, the worm aglow,
The minerals hidden from sight
Till quarried and brought to light,
And treasures revealed by the lens in time,
All styled to patterns of space and clime
To serve some use or rite.

The latest pattern maker is man;
He fashions and alters as privileged heir;
Assembling parts and choosing a plan,
Constructing here, destroying there,
Till exhausted like children at play
Who drop their balls or clay
To chase a shadow, to idle, or sleep;
The man who pauses to look must weep
At the havoc around him; disasters untold!
While before him are still fine patterns of old;
Will he gather the bits of priceless things
And merit the triumph devotion brings?

Happy Sally, the Little Scotch Woman.

Had I been to see Happy Sally? Well—no, I hadn't. A new minister can't be expected to call upon everybody in the first fortnight!

I was puzzled by the trustee's impatience. This was the third time of asking! Surely he could not have known much about the weary business of unpacking boxes and finding new places for everything.

"Forgive me!" he said, "if I am a bit of a nuisance. I'm keen that you should see her, that's all."

I asked why.

"Well," he said, "new ministers are usually a bit pensive and sore. They tell us about the friends left behind, and the difficulty of readjusting—that's the word isn't it? Now, a visit to Happy Sally will cure all that sort of thing in five minutes!"

And then, with rare delicacy and feeling, he told me things about Happy Sally that made me eager to verify for myself his striking description of an old woman's character.

Happy Sally, he said, was a poor, decrepit old body, who for nearly fifty years had kept a jovial countenance under conditions of extra-ordinary strain. Home life had been unspeakably hard by the drunken habits of her husband. He was a decent young fellow when she married him, but swiftly degenerated under the baneful influence of workmates. He became a common brawler, behaved like a maniac, and for weeks at a stretch made her life one long martyrdom of mental distress. And yet she never uttered a word against him, beyond an occasional expression such as "Puir fellow; he's his own worst enemy, and mae frien' a naebody!"

She had to cope also with physical ailments, which got worse as she got older. In fact she was just a bundle of infirmities. Yet her indomitable spirit never gave in. She had been known to chuckle with a sort of derisive delight when the doctor discovered some fresh malady!

"And now," said my friend as he finished his story, "take Philip's advice to Nathaniel, go and see!"

I went without a moment's delay.

As the door opened to my knock the old lady met me with a radiant face, though her figure was nearly bent double with rheumatism. I had heard the shuffling of feet along the passage, and in the ordinary way should have expected to see a face dull with anxiety and pain. I gave an involuntary gasp before a countenance wreathed with smile, as when one gets a mouthful of frosty air after leaving an effete atmosphere.

"The new meenister?" she asked. Without waiting for an answer, she took my hand in her shriveled fingers and said: "It's real kind o' ye to call so soon. Why, ye must surely have allowed yersel' time to unpack your belongin's. But come in, there's naebody to interrup'; an' we can have a bit crack by the fire."

She led the way to the kitchen, pulled an old armchair round by the fireplace for my use, and, seating herself in a rocking chair, looked me full in the face and said: "Now, meenister, ye'll likely be wantin' to hear my experience, seein' as I'm one o' your new flock."

"Indeed I do," I replied, "but first let me inquire concerning your health."

"Well," she said, "I'm noan varra weel, ye know. I hobble aboot the hoose as weel as I can, but that's naething to boast ower. Ye see, I've got housemaid's knee, and the rheumatics in my shoulder, and the damp doesna' seem to agree wi' me. But, bless the dear Lord, He knows, and I'm not laid up in bed wi' it, like some puir folk. Eh, meenister, but we live in a warold o' marcies!"

Before I could sympathize with her housemaid's knee, she was off again.

"An' then, ye just hear for yourself that my chest is a bit wheezy. Bronchitis is noan such a cheerfu' thing, and the cold winds tuch the spot. But, heart alive! What's bronchitis, so long as it doesna' interfere wi' me eatin' an' sleepin'? Sometimes I'll admit it does, and then I put a wee fire in my bedroom, and watchin' the flicker on the walls helps the lang nights to pass finely."

The old soul was wheezy, and I felt great pity for her, but could not get a word in edgeways to tell her so.

"An' then," she continued, "the doctor says my heart is shaky—in fact, full o' disease—an' will stop short one o' these days without much warning. But what if it does? Old Sally will be in gloryland in a twinkle!"

There was an unmistakable chuckle in her throat as she said excitedly: "Meenister, isn't it gran' to have the prospec's o' a Christian?"

I could not suppress a smile. Indeed, her hilarity was contagious, in spite of the pain she was in.

"My experience, meenister," she said, "is just bright wi' promise. My heart is full o' Christ, as the hymn book says, an' langs its glorious Master to declare. I mind the days o' revival when I was brought in."

"But you've not had it all smooth sailing?" I managed to say.

"Na, na! I've had it verra rough." She lowered her voice as she said: "Ye see, my man's niver taken to religion. He's a puir slave to drink, an' at times he raves an' says things he wadna' say an' do if he were in his right mind. Ye would think he had not heart of a human, but just the heart of a de'il! I'll no deny my lot has been bitter an' lonesome, but then, meenister—"

Happy Sally's eyes filled with tears.

"But, meenister shall I tell you where I've made my habitation through these lang years o' trouble?"

It needed no telling, but I was in no mood for checking the old lady's speech. Truly, her lips were dropping honey.

"Tell me!" I said with emphasis.

"The Most High!" she answered. "Ye ken the Word, Because thou hast made thy habitation; there shall not evil befall thee, neither shall any plague come nigh thy dwellin'. It's a gran' Psalm to reside in, is the ninety-first, meenister!

"Ower forty years ago I was just a young wife, an' my man's drinkin' habits were a sair trial to me. One day, when matters were awful bad, I knelt doon before the Buik, and my eyes just fell on that Psalm. Sin' then I've read it every day. I'm no scholar, but many's the crumb o' comfort I've picked up from the table prepared for me by the Lord in the presence o' my soul's enemy. The mornin's blackness has fled before the Lord's brightness. Ower and ower again I've felt the trickle o' rapture in my heart, like water runnin' down my face and on a hot summer's day so cool and refreshin'. I've experienced so much o' the dear Lord's presence that like them of old, I've just had to laugh outright. Ye ken the Buik says: Then was our mouth filled wi' laughter an' our tongue wi' singin'.

"It comes on—the laughter, I mean—maistly when the trouble wad lie heavy on my heart, and the pain o' my body wad afflict me. I shulda' be varra surprised, meenister, if the Lord ca's me home for it, wad I now?"

This is exactly what did happen to Happy Sally three months later. The iast sound she was heard to make on arrival at the gate of the city was a joyful little gurgle. As it died away in her throat the gates opened, and the old saint went through!

Need I say, I felt the house invigorated? It had been demonstrated to me, beyond question, that grace can triumph, not only over physical affliction, but also over incessant, nerve-racking anxiety.

Years have gone by, but oftentimes, even yet, I seem to catch sight of Happy Sally standing on the portals of the new world, her heart dissolved in laughter, and her tongue rejoicing in gladness.—The Reaper.

* * *

The Gauge of Love for God.

In an engine room it is impossible to look into the great boiler and see how much water it contains. But running up beside it is a tiny glass tube, which serves as a gauge. As the water stands in the little tube, so it stands in the great boiler. When the tube is half full, the boiler is half full; when the tube is empty, the boiler is empty. Do you ask, How do I know I love God? I believe I love Him, but I want to know. Look at the gauge. Your love for your brother is the measure of your love for God.—The Sunday School Chronicle.

* * *

What ought to be done can be done.
—Matt.

FOR THE CHILDREN

WHY NOT?

The pets we have about the place
All come and look into my face,
Eat from my hand, and every way
Show the good-will they cannot say.
They have no fear of me at all.
However weak, however small,
They seem to know they can depend
On one who shows himself a friend.

I wish that all the world today
Would operate the self-same way.
If animals and men could know,
Each, that the other would but show
Love and good-will, how it would bless
Earth everywhere with happiness!
This is what I would like to know:
Why have we never made it so?

—Girls' World.

For the Southern Churchman.

THOSE RECTORY CHILDREN.

Chapter VII.

Christmas Eve.

M. L. G.

Christmas Eve morning was a busy one at the Rectory. Winnie was helping Cindy with a "makin'" of tea-cakes. She had a pleasant part, the cutting of the thin dough into shapes with the bright tin cutters.

"Where's our little man-cutter, Aunt Cindy?" she asked.

"Dem chillen done tuk de man outen in de ya'd. Philip he promus' ter bring um back; he say he jes' want to make a mud man."

"Oh, he shouldn't make a mud man with our nice cutter!" cried Winnie, provoked. She ran to the back porch. "Philip! Bring back the man-cutter! You oughtn't to play in mud, anyway."

"We're havin' fun!!" Philip called back, but did not stir. He and Kent were over by the horse trough, busy in the mud where water had splashed out.

"Oh, Phil, please bring it back!"

"Will you make me an' Kent special mans?" Philip answered, turning around and waving the cutter.

"Oh, I reckon so, but hurry!"

"With raisin eyes?"

Kent came running up, Philip waiting to press the cutter into the mud once more.

"You needn't make us special mans, Winnie," said Kent, looking up into her flushed face, his own troubled in sympathy.

"I don't mind, Kent, there'll be lots. But I jus' don't like a muddy man-cutter."

"I'll wash him in the horse-trough!" Kent cried, eagerly.

"No, here's Aunt Cindy. She can clean him."

"Put um on de railin' dar," said Cindy as Philip at last gave up the cutter, "I'll jes' splosh um off, den I gwine scrub um twel he shine lak new." She poured a cup of water over the cutter, and disappeared with it into the kitchen, Winnie following.

"Le's go in, Phil," Kent said; "it's cold to play in mud."

"I know, but—oh, there's Aunt Ann Cross! Have you come to get your Christmus, Aunt Ann?"

"An' is that your little boy, Aunt Ann?" added Kent, as the old colored woman was followed from around the corner of the house by a small grinning boy.

"Yas, yas, chillun, he my gran'chil'," answered Aunt Ann Cross. "Lemme git inter de kitchen. I ain' goin' tek no clo'es out ter wash dis day, hit Chris'-mus." She went puffing up the steps, "Come on yuh, Atanner."

"What you call him?" asked Philip.

"He got a Bible name, "Ann Cross replied, taking her pipe from her mouth and putting it into her big apron pocket, for she knew she must not smoke inside.

"I didn't ever hear that name in the Bible," Kent protested.

"He name Simon a Tanner," answered Aunt Ann, "but dat too long; we calls him jus' Atanner."

"Oh, won't you let Atanner play with us?" cried the little boys. "Come on, Atanner, look at our mud men!"

Atanner followed them, silent but grinning more broadly. Aunt Ann turned to the kitchen door.

"Howdy, Sis Cindy! Howdy, Miss Winnie!"

"Howdy, Sis Ann! Tek yo'self a cheer," answered Cindy, waving a floury arm.

"I'll tell Mother you're here. I know she's been fixing Christmas all morning. Just wait a minute." And Winnie finished the row of tea-cake-men, put in hasty raisin' eyes, and ran upstairs to her mother's room.

"Mother, Aunt Ann Cross has come for her Christmas."

Mother looked up. She was kneeling on the floor where eight or ten big baskets were ranged, bulging with good things.

"Her's is almost ready, honey. Just let me put in this pair of gloves—"

"Are these for her, Mother? They look so big."

"You see, they're lined warmly, and that makes them bigger. They're only cotton, but they'll keep her warm driving through the woods. Now the grandchildren's candy. Here's rock candy—"

"That's pretty, too pretty to eat," Claire said, watching with great interest from her sofa.

"And here's horehound, and a candy cane apiece. That finishes Ann's. I'm going in the carriage to take these others, later on. You and David can come with me, Winnie. Uncle Danger can drive us and Father will be home then to stay with Claire."

"I'll like that!" said Winnie, running down to tell Ann Cross her "Chris'-mus" was ready.

Winnie and Mother were well packed in the carriage that afternoon, with so many baskets that they had to sit close together. David sat in front with Uncle Danger. There would be gates to open and shut, so David mustn't be packed in as Mother and Winnie were.

"To Uncle Jake's first, then to the Haverty's," Mother said.

"Yas'm, yas'm," answered Uncle Danger; "git up dar, Frank!"

"Aren't we pretty rich, Mother, to give so many folks baskets?" asked David.

"Well, the Trent ladies helped, and Aunt Mollie sent me five dollars, so they are good baskets this year."

"You sound glad, Mother."

"There's not a child that won't get something nice," Mother answered smiling.

Winnie snuggled closer. "I do like you, Mother!" she said.

At last the baskets were all taken, but the one for Phineas, the sexton. "He will be at the church," said Mother; "we'll go there; he lives so near he can carry it when he goes home."

"This is my last gate; I think I've opened forty!" David said as Uncle Danger stopped at the churchyard.

"It'll be warm in the church; smoke is coming from the chimneys."

"It was warm at the Haverty's," David said, jumping out. He opened the gate, waited for Uncle Danger to drive through, shut it and came running back. "But the air seemed so thick—tobacco and onions—whew!"

Inside the church the Havertys' cottage and its air was forgotten. Here cedar scented the dim aisles, festooning the walls from window to window. The beautiful star, green and white, hung high, above the chancel arch. Phineas was sweeping the last bits of cedar, running-pine and string into his big dust-pan.

"Good evening, Phineas. Uncle Danger has a Christmas basket at the door for you. How lovely you have made the church!"

"Thanky ma'am, thanky ma'am," answered Phineas, for the basket and the praise together. He was a tall, thin old colored man, quite lame, with white woolly head and beard. "Me an' dem Ladies' Aid fix um up. Hit ain't look han'somer, not in my time." He leaned on his broom, looking around, his face wrinkled with pleasure. "Fitten fer de Lawd Jesus ter come ter," he ended.

"Mother," said Winnie, as they drove homeward, "I think if St. John had been a colored man, he might have looked like Uncle Phineas."

"I think He might," Mother said; "there's something of the same look on the faces of all who've been near to Christ for many years. Phineas has been sexton forty years, and since we've been here—I'm sure ever since he's been here—he has made his work more than just work—an offering to Someone he loves."

"Dat so, dat so," Uncle Danger mumbled, so that only David heard, "Brer-Phineas a sanctified man, yessuh!"

They found Claire fast asleep in the big study chair while Father wrote on his sermon.

"Oh, I'm glad she's asleep!" The little anxious look that Mother always had until she saw Claire again melted away.

"Um—I smell supper!" whispered David.

"Run call the little boys, David. We mustn't be late, with the stockings to hang, and the tree to decorate!" Mother said. "Did the sermon get on well, dear?" She went over to kiss Father.

"First-class; it was quiet, and Claire still as a mouse. Three pages done. I won't make it long; Christmas tells its own story," Father said, helping her off with her coat.

David ran out, sent the little boys in and turned to the stable. "Need help, Uncle Danger?"

"Jes' lemme down a armful uh hay fum de lof', will yuh, please?" came Uncle Danger's voice from within.

David climbed the ladder, threw down the hay and stood leaning for a moment on the sill of the loft window. The air felt soft and still. It was quite dark but for stray gleams of the lantern below. A few flakes touched his face.

"Snow for Christmas!" he thought. "Christmas is the best time! What was that Mother had said about Uncle Phineas? An offering!

"I wish I could make that of my work all my life—an offering, like Uncle Phineas, like Father and Mr. Craig." David's head went down on the rough sill. "You would be welcome!" he said in a whisper, and did not know it was a prayer.

"All right up yander?" Uncle Danger swung the lantern up the ladder.

"Comin' right down. Oh, Uncle Danger, aren't you glad its Christmas!"

For the Southern Churchman.

PRIMROSES.

Lelia Kate Poynor.

Sweet little frolicking primroses,
How gaily you play in the wind,
Nodding and bowing and swaying,
Friend giving greeting to friend.

You make me think of fairies,
With happy hearts and free,
Bright and dainty and loving,
Bringing sweet treasures to me.

Always I've loved you, primroses;
Your faces bring a feeling of peace,
Of a joy which is deep and abiding,
And a friendship that never will cease.

If everyone knew your language
So simple and plain to me,
Friends you would claim without number;
Of enemies none would you see.

Beginnings of Old Colleges and Universities.

The University of Moscow was founded in 1755 by the Empress Elizabeth, and the University of St. Petersburg in 1819 by Czar Alexander I.

Trinity College, Dublin, was incorporated by royal charter in 1591.

The University of Edinburgh was founded in 1582 by a charter granted by King James VI of Scotland.

The University of Leyden, in the Netherlands, was founded by Prince William (the Silent) of Orange in 1575. Grotius, "father of international law," is one of its famous scholars.

The University of Copenhagen, Denmark, was founded in 1479.

The University of Jagielle, of Cracow, Poland, where Copernicus received his education, was founded in 1364 by the Polish King Kazimiers the Great, and endowed by Jagielle in 1400.

The first University in the German Empire was at Prague Bohemia, 1348.

The first college of the University of Cambridge was founded by Hugo, Bishop of Ely, in 1257.

The oldest Spanish University is that of Salamanca, founded in 1240.

The University of Paris was founded by King Philip II. about 1200.

The University of Oxford is said to have been founded by King Alfred in 872.

The University of Pavia, Italy, was founded by Lothaire, grandson of Charlemagne, in 825, and celebrated its eleventh centenary on May 5, 1925. —Baptist Observer.

* * *

Grandma's Spice Cupboard.

"My!" exclaimed Doris to Donald, one Saturday morning, "it is starting to rain. Feel that big drop!"

"I don't want to go indoors to play!!" said Donald. "It's not half the fun."

Doris started toward the back door, for the big drops were coming thicker and faster. Then as she got half-way to the kitchen she smelled something spicy. "Grandma's making gingerbread!" she called. "I don't care if it does rain!"

Donald skipped right after her then, and pell-mell into the kitchen. Sure enough, Grandma had her sleeves rolled up and was greasing a tin. But something very fragrant seemed to be already baking, judging by the closed oven door.

Doris sniffed. "Spice cakes, Grandma?"

Grandma nodded, smiled, and asked, "How can you tell?"

"By the good smell," said Donald.

"That's the spices," Grandma explained. "They are aromatic."

"What spices are they?" asked Donald, looking curiously into Grandma's cupboard.

"Oh, there are cinnamon, cloves, and nutmeg in those little cakes. I shall put ginger into the gingerbread, the way I do in gingersnaps." And Grandma commenced mixing a batter. When she put the ginger into the flour it began to look yellow.

"Tell us a story," begged Doris. "It's raining so we can't play outdoors."

"It will have to be a short story, I'm so busy. I'll tell you about the spices I am using. Guess where the ginger comes from!"

Donald began to think about geography. He had heard about the spice islands down in the South Seas near India. But that was as near as he could guess.

Grandma explained, "Ginger was first found high up in the Himalaya Mountains of northern India growing in places four thousand feet high. But now it is grown in the West Indies. You have heard of Jamaica ginger, haven't you?"

Doris said, "I know where the West Indies are—right down south of our own United States."

"The ginger root is thick like my finger," Grandma said as she gave Donald the molasses spoon to lick. "And they gather it when the stalks or stems of the plant wither. Then they grind it up, after first washing and drying it. It is the oil in it that makes it taste peppery."

Grandma put the gingerbread in the oven and took out a dozen little spice cakes.

"Tell us about the spices in those," teased Donald.

"Well, cinnamon is such a nice spice that I use it in apple pie, too," answered Grandma. "But instead of a root, it is the bark of a tree. You have read about it in the Bible, haven't you? They brought it by caravan from India. They call it the 'merchandise of Babylon'."

"What kind of tree is it?" asked Doris.

"It grows twenty to thirty feet high and sometimes a foot and a half through the trunk. Outside, the bark is grayish brown, and inside yellowish red. There are two crops of cinnamon bark. But the spring crop gathered in April is best. It is carefully cut off branches three to five years old. First the branches are skinned. After the bark is ripped off, it is sunned. It curls up in quills, which are stuck into each other like cornucopias. Then all are tied up into bundles as heavy as eighty-eight pounds each, and taken to market."

"My! I'd never think it was powdered bark from a tree to look at that spice box," exclaimed Donald, watching Grandma now sprinkling nutmeg as well as cinnamon on her apple pie. "Where does nutmeg come from?"

"That's the nut-middle or kernel of a fruit that is found in the tropics. It grows now in the West Indies. But at first it was grown mostly in Asia, Brazil, and Madagascar. The tree is twenty-five feet high."

"I'd like a nutmeg tree in our yard," said Doris.

"Oh, the fruit is hard," said Grandma. "You wouldn't enjoy eating it—even if it does look like a golden pear. Mace is another spice that comes out of the same fruit."

"Two spices from one fruit?"

"Yes, mace is the fleshy envelope inside the fruit that holds the nut kernel or nutmeg. It has a flavor much like nutmeg. Besides drying, it they flatten it. When ground into spice it looks like this—"

Doris peeped into the spice box, off which Grandma had taken the cover. Mace was yellow orange. "I'd never dream it came from a tree," said Doris.

"Citron really is a fruit," said Grandma, and she gave Donald and Doris each a little spice cake with a strip of gummy sweet citron on it. "Although the citron tree is grown in Southern Europe and is called 'cedrate' in Germany, it grew first in the forests of northern India. The fruit is shaped like a lemon. But some of the longest are nine inches. It is the rind, dried, that you children are eating."

"What are these little 'nails'?" inquired Donald, discovering something in his spice cake.

"A clove. The French named the clove from the word 'clou' or nail. But cloves are the flower-buds of a twenty-foot tree. They come from Sumatra and also from the West Indies."—Marion Brownfield, in Richmond Christian Advocate.

* * *

One of Nature's Musicians.

Twilight has come. The chickens have gone to roost. The lights in the house have been turned on. But—the radio is silent.

Through the open window one of Nature's artists is sending notes as pure and sweet as can be made. A mocking-bird, somewhere in the shrubbery, is reveling in the beauty of its own notes.

Have you ever been awakened in the dead hours of the night, when everything else was quiet and still, and heard the beautiful notes of some mocking-birds outside your window? Or did you know that you were listening to mocking-birds?

Long before radio artists acquired fame, the mocking-bird was recognized as a musician throughout most of the world. His notes range the scale. One moment the notes may be high and shrill, then soft and low, then a note of sadness may arise, suddenly replaced by one of joy, as, with a burst of music, he leaps into the air, then settles back to his perch.

Unless you know the mocking-bird when you hear him, you might be fooled into thinking that you were listening to another bird, for he can imitate many other birds. It is understood that a mocking-bird has been known to imitate over thirty different birds in ten minutes.

If you want to see a real display of courage, just watch anyone or anything approach the nest containing some young ones. A sudden burst of scolding fury will be after the intruder. The mother and daddy birds love their little ones, and do not hesitate to defend them. If we could just understand bird talk, there is no telling what we would hear at a time like that.

These nests may be found at various places in the shrubbery, trees, woodpiles, or fences, and at other places. Judging from the way the nest is made, I wonder if the birds do not have a knowledge of the medicinal or insecticide traits of various herbs and woods.

Do not kill these birds. When you see boys shooting at them with air rifles and bean shooters, tell them that the mocking-birds destroy many insects that might do harm to crops and fruits and vegetables. What little of these things the birds eat, they deserve for the good they do.

And, too, their singing in the trees and shrubbery about the house is so musical, so freely given, so care-free and joyous, who is there who would not wish to protect them and make them feel at home in the yard?

Someone has stated that one of the sweetest songs ever heard was that of a mocking-bird, singing, while the wind blew a gale, and the ocean rolled upon the wreck-strewn sand. In a time like that, who would not appreciate a bird with the courage and enthusiasm to sing in the face of danger?—Our Dumb Animals.

Classified Advertisments and Notices

All notices and advertisements, excepting positions wanted, will be inserted in this department at a rate of 20 cents per agate line each insertion. Special raes to contracts of any length. A rate of 15 cents per line is made to persons seeking positions. No advertisement accepted for less than 50 cents.

Copy for this department must be received not later than Tuesday of the week in which it is intended that the first insertion shall appear.

SPECIAL NOTICES.

CHURCH VESTMENTS.

Cathedral Studio, Church embroideries, Altar and Pulpit Hangings. Stoles from $6.50. Burse and veil from $10. Surplice from $8. Send for complete line of pure Irish linens by the yard. Silks, fringes and gold thread. Embroidered emblems ready to appy. Altar Guild Handbook, 50c.

50c. L. V. MACKRILLE
11 W. Kirke St., Chevy Chase,
Washington, D. C.
Telephone Wisconsin 2752.

CHURCH LINEN.

FINE IRISH LINEN specially selected for Church use. 36 inches to 54 inches wide, cut any length. Sample of 12 qualities on request. Mary Fawcett Company, 812 Berkeley Avenue, Trenton, N. J.

RAZOR SHARPENER.

SHARPENS ANY STRAIGHT RAZOR, or safety razor. Guaranteed by manufacturers, and I guarantee it to please you. 50 cents per cake, or 3 cakes for $1.00. I take subscriptions for all magazines published at publishers' rates, or less. Sold by a wheel chair invalid. Edward P. Broxton, R. F. D., Blythe, Ga.

FOUNTAIN PENS.

A FOUNTAIN PEN AT A 1933 VALUE, with the Spencerian quality and smooth writing ease famous for seventy-five years. Guaranteed. Points fine and medium. Colors, gloss black, green and gold, Burgundy, blue and black, grey pearl. Price $2.00. Sold by a shut-in wheel chair invalid. Edward P. Broxton, R. F. D., Blythe, Ga.

THE LOOSE-LEAF PARISH LIST

offers unique facilities as a tool for systematic workers. Free sample sheets on request. Rev. H. R. Hole, Box E, Hinsdale, Ills.

PHILATELIC.

Wanted—Confederate and United States Stamps, used on envelopes. Collections purchased. Highest prices paid. George Hakes, Belvidere, Illinois.

SITUATION WANTED.

EXPERIENCED WORKER WITH CHILDren desires new connection on or after March first. Successful with adolescents. Investigation of results at present post invited. Mrs. Erhard, Superintendent, Children's Cottages, Sayville, Long Island.

DEATHS

THE REVEREND ROBERTS COLES

Entered into the rest that remaineth for the people of God, on January 17, 1935, in the seventy-third year of his age, ROBERTS COLES, fourth son of Peyton Skipwith and Julia Isaetta Coles, of Estouteville Albemarle county, Va.

Born during the stirring scenes of the War Between the States and named for his young kinsman, Roberts Coles, of Philadelphia, whose heroic life was sacriced at Roanoke Island, he seemed marked from his birth for a life of more consecrated service than that of those who had preceded him in the long line of Skipwith and Coles.

From his earliest years he was markedly truthful, conscientious and dependable, and as he grew to maturity the impression that he was born for his Master's service deepened into conviction, and he gave himself freely and unreservedly to the ministry of the Episcopal Church in which he wrought faithfully in many parishes for nearly forty-seven years, the first and longest being twenty-two years at Jenkintown, Pennsylvania, where he greatly endeared himself to the people by his cheerful and loving service.

Even as a youth, he felt the urgent need of more laborers in the Master's vineyard, and with his young cousin, Robert Carter, of Redlands, devoted his vacations to ministering to the spiritual needs of the neglected people of the Ragged Mountains.

He lived to be his mother's vaunted "Tower of Strength", his family's refuge in time of stress and sorrow, the comfort of the aged and distressed, and through his joyous sympathy, a welcome companion of youth. In passing to his reward he has left his sons the goodly heritage of a spotless name and his widow a cherished memory of loyalty and devotion.

JENNIE P.BUFORD.

Winston Salem, N. C.

Personal Notes

Mission at Grace Church.

During the week of January 20-27, the Rt. Rev. Irving Peake Johnson, D. D., Bishop of Colorado, held a most successful Mission at Grace Church, Charleston, S. C., which attracted a great deal of interest. Bishop Johnson is considered one of the ablest and most original preachers in the American Church.

Rector Injured.

The Rev. Robert Crawford, rector of St. Barnabas, Omaha, fell on the icy sidewalk in front of his home last week and is receiving treatment for an injured knee at Clarkson Memorial Hospital. The Rev. G. St.G. Tyner conducted service at St. Barnabas Sunday in his place.

Priest in Hospital.

The Rev. Cleon E. Bigler, rector, All Saints' Church, Western Springs, Ill., underwent a major operation at St. Luke's Hospital, Chicago, January 28. He is reported as on the way to recovery.

The Rev. George Ralph Madson, Paris, Ky., has accepted the chaplaincy of Margaret Hall School, of the Order of St. Anne, Versailles, Ky. This is in addition to his present parochial work. For the past few months he has been acting chaplain.

The Rev. Morton C. Stone, formerly Chaplain of the City Mission Society at Wiltwyck, West Park, is now assistant minister at Christ Church, Bronxville, N. Y.

The Rev. Albert J. Hambret, Jr., assumed his new duties as rector of Grace Church, West Farms, N. Y., on January 1.

Two Clergymen Instituted by Bishop Taitt.

The Rev. Frank Cox, called to the rectorship of the Church of the Redemption, West Philadelphia, as successor to the late Rev. Robert J. McFetridge, was instituted Wednesday night, February 6. On February 8 the Rev. Edmund Bacon Wood was instituted as rector of St. Timothy's Church, Roxborough, where he succeeds the Rev. G. Herbert Dennison, who resigned last October. Bishop Taitt officiated at both institution services, respectively.

Mr. Cox is a native of Philadelphia, and was educated at the Episcopal Academy in that city, the University of Virginia, and the Virginia Theological Seminary. He was assistant at Calvary Church, Germantown, before accepting the call to the West Philadelphia Parish, and had also served as rector in Bromfield Parish, Virginia, and as rector of the Memorial Church of the Ascension, New York City. Mr. Clement S. Lowber, rector's warden of the Redemption, presented the keys to Mr. Cox at the service.

Mr. Wood was born in Staten Island, New York, and was educated at the old DeLancey School in Philadelphia, since merged with the Episcopal Academy; St. Stephen's College, New York, and the General Theological Seminary. In becoming rector of St. Timothy's Church, he returns to the parish in which he first served as an assistant, following his ordination by the late Bishop Garland. Prior to his call to St. Timothy's, Mr. Wood was rector of St. Mark's Church, Clark Mills, New York. Mr. Edgar F. Massey, rector's warden to the Roxborough Parish, presented the keys to the rector at the service.

Calls Accepted.

Canon Hiram R. Bennett, rector of Christ Church, Williamsport, Pa., Diocese of Harrisburg, has accepted a call to be rector of St. John's Church, Wilmington, Delaware. He will go May 1, 1935. The Rev. Mr. Bennett is an honorary canon of St. Stephen's Cathedral, Harrisburg, Pa., a member of the Executive Council of the Diocese, and Chairman of the Committee on Canons. He has been rector of Christ Church since 1923.

The Rev. Francis D. Daley, rector of St. Paul's Church, Lock Haven, Pa., Diocese of Harrisburg, has accepted a call to be rector of St. Luke's Church, Altoona, Pa. (Harrisburg). He will go March 1, 1935. Mr. Daley has been rector of St. Paul's, Lock Haven, since June 3, 1934, and was formerly rector of the Church of the Epiphany, Baltimore.

CONFIRMATION PAPERS

By

CANON F. E. HOWITT

1. Confirmation and Baptism.
2. Baptism and the Christian Covenant
3. The Baptismal Covenant—Repentance.
4. The Baptismal Covenant—Faith and the Faith.
5. The Baptismal Covenant—The Faith.
6. The Baptismal Covenant—Obedience.
7. The Lord's Supper.
8. The Means of Grace.

A series of informing pamphlets compiled by Canon F. E. Howitt. They have an inestimable value in instructing those who contemplate membership in the Church, and for impressing the already confirmed with the sacredness and meaning of this holy ritual.

Price, single pamphlet, each..... 5 cents
Complete set of eight.....25 cents

Order from

SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN COMPANY
Richmond, Va.

"The Old Testament lives for me now as never before."
—Bishop Francis J. McConnell.

"Should be read by every Christian and Hebrew teacher and pastor throughout the land."
—Dr. S. Parkes Cadman.

"You formulate, in a most penetrating way, the relationship of religion to reform."
—Professor Kemper Fullerton, Oberlin College.

"So interesting that I could not put it down."
—Professor E. A. Ross, University of Wisconsin.

GOD AND THE SOCIAL PROCESS

BY LOUIS WALLIS—author of Sociological Study of the Bible. Religious Book Club Selection—354 pages, cloth-bound, $2.00; postpaid, $2.15.

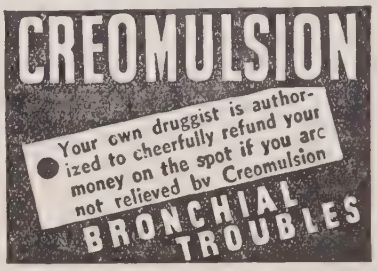
The University of Chicago Press
5750 Ellis Avenue—Chicago.

ORDINATIONS.

Priest.

The Rev. Harvey Daniel Butterfield was advanced to the priesthood, February 3, 1935, in the Church of the Good Shepherd, Rosemont, Penn. Bishop Taitt, acting for the Bishop of Vermont, officiated at the special service of Ordination. Br. Butterfield will at once enter upon his duties as assistant to the Rev. W. P. S. Lander, rector of the Good Shepherd, Paris. Mr. Butterfield, who is a native of Burlington, Vermont, and is a graduate of the General Theological Seminary, was ordained to the diaconate by Bishop Booth of Vermont, in May of last year, and before being called to the Rosemont Parish, was Vicar of St. Mary's Chapel, Carle Place, Long Island, a parochial chapel of the Church of the Advent, Westbury, Long Island.

The Rev. Edward R. A. Green, deacon, was ordained to the priesthood by the Rt. Rev. Herman Page, D. D., Bishop of Michigan, in St. Peter's Church, Tecumseh, Michigan, on the morning of Thursday, January 17. A luncheon to which the clergy of the diocese had been invited was served in the Parish House following the service. The sermon was preached by the Rev. C. L. Ramsay, rector of St. Paul's Church, Jackson, and the candidate was presented by the Ven. Leonard P. Hagger, Archdeacon of the Diocese.



Mr. Green is a native of Michigan, having entered the ministry from St. Paul's Church, Lansing. He was educated at the Michigan State College and the Seabury-Western Theological Seminary at Evanston, Illinois. He was ordained to the Diaconate by Bishop Page last June, and assumed charge of St. Peter's Church, Tecumseh, on September 1.

Richard C. Patton was ordained to the diaconate by the Rt. Rev. H. P. Almon Abbott, Bishop of Lexington, January 31, 1935, at the Church of the Good Shepherd, Lexington, Kentucky, during Diocesan Convention. He was presented by the Ven. Gerald H. Catlin, whom he will assist, and reside at Corbin, Ky. The sermon was preached by the Rev. J. Wilson Hunter.

The Rev. Winfred Pipes Jones, graduate of the University of Mississippi, and the Virginia Theological Seminary, was ordained deacon by the Rt. Rev. Theo. DuBose Bratton on January 8, 1935, in St. Paul's Church, Woodville, Miss. At ten o'clock John Ackland Jones, a son of the newly-ordained deacon was baptized by the Bishop. At 10:30 the Ordination service began. Mr. Roger Jones, a brother of the candidate, was the organist; the Rev. Joseph Kuehnle, rector of Trinity Church, Natchez, preached the sermon; another brother, the Rev. Giraul M. Jones, read the Litany; the Rev. T. B. Clifford, rector of the Church at Woodville, presented the candidate; the Rev. Cecil B. Jones, another brother of the candidate, administered the chalice to the new deacon. Immediately after the service, all the visitors were entertained at dinner in the home of the deacon's parents in Woodville. The Rev. Mr. Jones took charge of the Winona Field the first of February.

Deaths.

The Rev. William Francis Parsons died on Wednesday, January 23, 1935. Services were held in the Chapel of St. John the Baptist, Rose Hill, Portland, Connecticut, Friday, January 25, at 11 A. M.

ENDOWMENT INSURANCE

MATURING AT FACE VALUE AT AGE 60 OR 65

An Endowment policy combines investment with life insurance. The contract runs for a specified number of years, premiums to be paid during this period only. The policy then matures at face value, the proceeds going to the insured. Upon the insured's death prior to the normal maturity date, the face value is paid immediately to the beneficiary.

This form of insurance protects the future economic welfare of the individual insured and, also, protects his family in the event of his death.

For further information and rates, write to the

CHURCH LIFE INSURANCE CORPORATION

20 Exchange Place, New York

Educational

The General Theological Seminary

CHELSEA SQUARE, NEW YORK

The next Academic year begins on the last Wednesday in September

Special students admitted and Graduate Courses for graduates of other Theological Seminaries

The requirements for admission and other particulars can be had from THE DEAN, 1 Chelsea Square, New York, N. Y

SHENANDOAH VALLEY ACADEMY

Certificates accepted by universities, colleges, West Point, Annapolis. The Academy's experienced teachers, cultural atmosphere, limited numbers, military discipline enable it to prepare boys to succeed in college. For catalogue write: Col. B. M. Roszel, Supt., Winchester, Va.

ST. MARGARET'S SCHOOL

TAPPAHANNOCK, VIRGINIA.

A Church School for girls. Boarding Department limited to 70. Colleeg Preparatory Course and Intermediate Grades. Athletics. Very moderate cost.

Country life and simplicity without isolation. Beautiful grounds on Rappahannock River. Three dormitories for different stages.

EDITH LATANE, Headmistress.

ST. CHRISTOPHER'S

A Church Boarding and Day School Healthful, beautiful and historic surroundings. Boarding Department limited to 50 boys. Rate, $650. Reduction to sons of clergymen and missionaries. Illustrated catalogue on request.

REV. C. G. CHAMBERLAYNE, Ph. D., LL. D., Headmaster, Richmond, Virginia.

The Virginia Theological Seminary

ALEXANDRIA, VIRGINIA

For catalogue and other information, Address THE DEAN

The Beckford School

WOODSTOCK, VIRGINIA.

A school for younger boys. Second grade through Junior High School. On modern farm in Shenandoah Valley. Summer camp. Limited enrollment. Fifty dollars monthly.

EDMUND BURKE WHELAN, Headmaster.

The Bishop Payne Divinity School

The accredited Seminary of the Church for training colored men for the ministry. The curriculum covers the full course for Deacons and Priest's Orders. The degree of D. D. awarded.

For catalogue and information, apply to Rev. F. G. Ribble, M. A., D. D., Dean Petersburg, Va.

The Episcopal Theological School

Cambridge, Massachusetts.

Affiliated with Harvard University.

Dean H. B. Washburn, 3 Mason Street.

THOUGHTS for the THOUGHTFUL

"Nothing so dishonors the cause of God as self-righteousness."

"Trust your heavenly hunger rather than your earthly logic."

Immeasurable is the highest! Who but knows it?
And yet a human heart can perfectly enclose it.
—Richard Whitwell.

In the last analyss, directly or indirectly, the world has to trace nearly all of its great ethical and spiritual achievements to the Church.

We must sell all that we have, we must part with the last rags of our belief in our own goodness before we can enter into the Kingdom of Heaven. —Exchange.

"The streams that turn the machinery of the world rise in solitary places."

Our task is not to be imprisoned by things, nor to escape from them, but to consecrate and use them as what they are, the sacraments of God.—Raven.

The argument that the deepest needs of human nature have their satisfaction in reality may rest on faith. It does. But it is not unreasonable. It is the faith that the world has a meaning, that man is not a freak of nature. —Selected.

Turn the noblest end or ideal that you can see into action, and at its highest level. So will the life change and grow; what is cloudy will become clear; what is hesitating will become convinced; what is unredeemed will become purposeful; what is weak strong; what is little large; what is old new—looking unto Jesus, the Author and Perfector of our faith.—Rev. E. M. White.

All effort for humanity comes of the golden rule. The essence of the golden rule is the Gospel of Jesus of Nazareth. —J. N. Figgis.

Whatever the Lord wants His people to know and believe the pastor ought to know and believe. Whatever the Lord wants His people to do the pastor ought to do.—Mackey.

The Gospel to me is true: I am content to perish if it be not true. I risk my soul's eternal fate upon the truth of the Gospel, and I know no risk in it.—Spurgeon.

There is no doubt whatsoever that we all of us should consider far more seriously than we do whether we are giving in due proportion to the service of Christ. How many Christian people are prepared to sell out for the missionary cause, or for building churches in the new centres of population? The stewardship of money should enter far more into our calculations than it does at present.

Christ Church School

MIDDLESEX COUNTY, VA.

A country school for boys; well located. College preparatory, moderate cost. Personal attention; scholarships. Apply to Wm. D. Smith, Jr., Headmaster(for information, Christchurch, Va.

The Ewart's Cafeteria

EXCELLENT FOOD
REASONABLE PRICES

Richmond, Va.
112-114 N. 5th St.
Norfolk, Va.
112-114 Market St.
Washington, D. C.
522 13th, N. W.

FLOWERS BY WIRE EVERYWHERE

Mosmiller Florist

115 E Main St.
424 E. Grace St
RICHMOND, VA.

Royal Laundry

and
BAND BOX DRY CLEANERS
UNEXCELLED LAUNDRY
and Cleaning Service
Richmond, Virginia.

L. T. CHRISTIAN

FUNERAL DIRECTOR

Boulevard-Park and Patterson Avenue
Richmond, Va.
Office Never Closed
Prices to meet depressed conditions

Edwin S. Gorham, Inc.

Publishers and Booksellers.
Established 1900.

Church Literature and Art, Bibles, Prayer Books and Hymnals, Devotional Books, Parish Requisites.

Catalogues and Information on request.

18 West 45th Street, New York.

Some Important Facts in English Church History

EXAMINED AND REVIEWED

By

REV. W. P. WITSELL, D. D.

This is an illuminating and instructive review of the history of the Episcopal Church in England from the earliest records, with commentaries on the book with the above title compiled by the Rev. C. L. Wells, D. D., of Sewanee, Tenn.

As a digest of the records of the establishment and growth of the Church; its maintenance and continuity of existence as an independent religious body amid the vicissitudes of early English politics, and efforts of outside interference, this review affords a valuable fund of information to churchmen.

In pamphlet form,
Price, 25 cents

For sale by
SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN CO.
Richmond, Va.

DESIGNED FOR THE PROMOTION OF PRACTICAL PIETY, THE DIFFUSION OF RELIGIOUS AND GENERAL INTELLIGENCE, AND THE MAINTENANCE OF THE PRINCIPLES OF THE PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL CHURCH

Southern Churchman

IN DOMINUS FRUSTRA 1835

Vol. 100. RICHMOND, VA., FEBRUARY 16, 1935. No. 7.

RT. REV. PHILIP COOK, D. D., LL. D.,

Bishop of Delaware,
President of the National Council.

SEPTUAGESIMA.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Word Studies.

Mr. Editor:

In your valued paper of January 19, 1935, appeared a review by Kenneth Mackenzie of "Word Studies in the Old Testament," by B. A. M. Schapiro, 678 Bible House, New York City. (Fifty-cent edition.)

A copy (Vol. No. 1) of this remarkable work came into my hands a few weeks ago. I have read it with intense interest. The depth of meaning in a familiar sentence that we have read over hundreds of times, never dreaming of its hidden value, until Mr. Schapiro throws the searchlight of his knowledge of Hebrew on it, is truly wonderful, thrilling and awe inspiring.

For example Gen. 1:1. "In the beginning." Those words contain a declaration of the Trinity, Father, Son and Holy Spirit, in just that order. Each Hebrew letter has a deep meaning aside from its contribution in forming a word, and under Mr. Schapiro's skillful touch, the Scripture begins to reveal added majesty and authority. It was not Moses speaking, but "the Lord spake unto Moses saying." Eighty-two times it is recorded "The Lord spake unto Moses" (not to mention all the other Prophets).

In these days when the Verbal Inspiration of the Scripture is so vociferously derided, this startling revelation of the new depth of hidden meaning of every word, reveals the Mind and Hand of God, as "Holy Men of Old Spake as they were moved by the Holy Spirit." It is awe inspiring.

Hidden from us all these centuries, because no Hebrew scholar has taken the trouble to search out and set these things in order before us. Truly we can say, "But unto us God revealed them, through the Spirit, for the Spirit searcheth all things, yea, the deep things of God." 1 Cor. 2:10.

Important as are the findings of the archaeologists to confirm the "Word", nothing can compare with these new revelations of the hidden meaning of the text. Verily, "Thou hast magnified Thy word above all Thy name." Ps. 138:2.

This series of "Word Studies" should be in the hands of every Bible believer. "The things that are revealed belong unto us and to our children." Deut. 29: 29.

"I have yet many things to say unto you." John 16:12. Surely our Blessed Lord the Jehovah of the Old Testament is speaking a last word, in this uncovering of His own Word for our edfiication and comfort in these days of apostasy, doubt and unbelief.

An appreciation from a layman,

J. A. Werner.

Charlottesville, Va.

Usury.

Mr. Editor:

One great mistake which is now crippling the Church is the prevailing opinion that civilization can be saved by religious individualism. We should have learned, by this time, that in attacking social problems, individualism, whether economic or religious, is as impotent as a rope of sand.

The disastrous consequence of this heresy is three-fold: the Church has lost moral leadership; our well-meaning President Roosevelt is allowed to grope deeper into the dark jungle of depression; and 25,000,000 American citizens are being shamefully pauperized.

In the midst of this cruel chaos, intensified by innumerable nostrums hawked from every side, "the one thing needful" is unheeded. A voice, sad but gracious, is pleading as it did nineteen hundred years ago: "Ye will not come to Me, that ye might have life."

Our Blessed Lord suffered cruicfixion for teaching a social Gospel. And one of the major tenets of that Gospel was the denunciation of usury at any percentage. From Moses to Christ and on for the first one thousand years of Church history, usury was stigmatized as the enemy of humanity. Indeed the Hebrew language has pilloried usury as a venomous crime by employing the same word nashak for both usury and the bite of a serpent. Hence, the significance of the term employed by both John the Baptist and Christ, in condemning a moneyed aristocracy: "Ye serpents, ye generation of vipers."

But can we afford to abolish usury and thus knock the bottom out of our whole banking system? Can the Church disentangle herself from modern capitalism?

"Yes," is the answer of saints, apostles, prophets, martyrs. Some temporary inconvenience may ensue, but it will be followed by the realization that the yoke of Christ is infinitely lighter than the present insufferable yoke of mammon.

James L. Smiley.

Annapolis, Maryland.

Southern Churchman

SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN COMPANY,
Mayo Memorial Church House,
110 West Franklin Street,
Richmond, Va.

Officers.

President, RT. REV. H. ST. GEORGE TUCKER, D. D.
Vice-President, E. OTTO N. WILLIAMS.
Secretary-Treasurer, MR. JOHN H. COOKE.

Board of Directors.

RT. REV. H. ST. GEORGE TUCKER, D. D.
REV. CHURCHILL J. GIBSON, D. D.
REV. GEORGE P. MAYO, D. D.
REV. CHARLES W. SHEERIN.
MR. CARL H. NOLTING.
MR. ALEXANDER W. WEDDELL.
MR. E. RANDOLPH WILLIAMS.
MR. LANGBOURNE M. WILLIAMS, JR.
MISS SUSANNE C. WILLIAMS.

Voting Trustees.

RT. REV. ROBERT CARTER JETT, D. D.
RT. REV. H. ST. GEORGE TUCKER, D. D.
MR. JAMES M. BALL, JR.
MR. ROBERT B. TUNSTALL.
MR. LANGBOURNE M. WILLIAMS, JR.

Editors.

REV. CHARLES W. SHEERIN.....Editor
REV. F. W. NEVE, D. D.,
Associate Editor
MRS. CONRAD H. GOODWIN,
Associate Editor
REV. SAMUEL B. CHILTON,
Associate Editor
MRS. R. TATE IRVINE.....News Editor
JOHN H. COOKE..Secretary and Manager

Entered at the Post Office in Richmond, Va., as second-class mail matter.

SUBSCRIPTION PRICE.

$3.00 a year in advance. To the Clergy, $2.00. Six months, $1.50. Total subscriptions, three months, 50 cents; 10 cents a copy. Foreign postage, $1.00 additional.

For the convenience of subscribers subscriptions are continued at expiration unless otherwise ordered. Notice of renewal, discontinuance or change of address should be sent two weeks before the date they go into effect.

RECEIPT OF PAYMENT is shown in about two weeks by change of date on address label. If date is not properly extended after each payment, notify us promptly. No receipt for payment will be sent.

Notice post office address. The exact post office address to which we are directing the paper at the time of writing MUST ALWAYS BE GIVEN. Our mailing list is arranged by post office and not alphabetically.

Make all checks and money orders payable to the Southern Churchman, and not to an individual.

ADVERTISEMENTS.—Rates quoted on request. For classified see head of that department.

Representatives wanted in each Parish; liberal commissions.

News concerning the Church at large always welcome.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LITERATURE

Following the Improved

INT. UNIFORM LESSON TOPICS

QUARTERLIES and PAPERS

Samples on Application.

Address

UNION GOSPEL PRESS

Box 6059 Cleveland, Ohio

NOTICE—The "Bible Expositor and Illuminator," an Advanced Quarterly of 192 pages, in monthly parts but still a Quarterly, price 30 cents a quarter. $1.00 a year, payment with order.

Sample lesson on application.

CONTENTS

	Page
Letters to the Editor	2
Editorials	3
Church and World Problems as Others See Them	4
The Thousandfold Page—F. W. Neve	5
Septuagesima Sunday—W. E. Callender	5
Baptism and the Christian Life—Rev. George F. Cameron	6
The Practice of the Presence of God—Rev. A. C. Zabriskie, D. D.	7
Young People's Service League—Rev. R. F. Backford	10
Book Reviews	9
Church Intelligence	12
Family Department	18
Children's Department	20
Personals	22
Thoughts for the Thoughtful	24

MURPHY'S HOTEL

RICHMOND VIRGINIA

An old Richmond landmark that has kept the pace. In the heart of that portion of the city most interesting to the traveler.

Write

A. GERALD BUSH, Manager.

SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN

Catholic for every truth of God; Protestant against every error of man.

EDITORIALS

Vol. 100. RICHMOND, VA., FEBRUARY 16, 1935. No. 7.

Courage in The Church.

The Septuagesima Season gives us the note of courage for our studies and our behavior. Courage has been the quality most needed for the last five years, for it has certainly been true, as the President said, that the worst thing to fear is Fear.

In the Church we do need courage always, but in a world that is not altogether Christian we have to use, in a time of crisis, more courage than is usually evident. We must, for instance, be courageous enough to point out unchristian treatment of labor and yet not allow ourselves to merely echo economic gospel that happens to be the mere catchword of the moment. It is always easy to denounce, and sometimes it is popular to denounce, but the Christian will always weigh evidence and, following the method of The Master, he will save his denunciations for real injustice.

But there are other ways in which the Christian can use and should use courage. Have we, for instance, the courage to face the type of Christianity that is mere sentiment? That is often the hardest thing for laymen or clergymen to do. In every diocese there is work that has been going on for years that actually no longer has a place in a modern world. It might have had every reason to have been placed in existence fifty or sixty years ago, but the original reasons have disappeared and only sentiment keeps it alive today. Courage is needed to face realities, and if an orphanage, a church, or even a ministry has outlived its usefulness, it is better Christianity in the long run to abolish it rather than use the loyalty of the church people to support that which is not constructive.

The hardest place for the modern Christian to use his courage is in his social life. It is not popular, not smart, to be a devoted Christian. We may have left the age when physical persecution was feared, but we have certainly an intellectual persecution. The young men at college and in business who believe in the Church have often to be most courageous, and for those who are, we have the greatest admiration, for they are not always backed up by sane or helpful behavior on the part of church leaders. But when the world is overcome through a lack of standards and ideals, we need those courageous enough to live as they know a Christian should live.

Dean Gates of New York recently pointed out some of the modern folly. He will undoubtedly be denounced as a Puritan and out of date, but, unless we have a few willing to be courageous even when names are called, we will not have a Church with courage enough to lead the people out of darkness into light.

The Church and Liberalism.

There is a good bit of silly talk about liberalism. In the Church a number of people are either afraid of the term or feel that it implies all that is against their dearest traditions. As a matter of fact, Christ was the most liberalizing force that ever came into the world, and those who follow in His footsteps are bound, in some sense of the word, to be liberals.

On the other hand, there are those who delight to use the term liberal as applying to themselves and seem to feel that all who do not agree in every way must of necessity be back numbers. While unquestionably such serve a good purpose in at least challenging positions and making people think, they often serve to stir up strife and discord.

To every Christian there is the question as to how he should use that right kind of liberalism that is his by reason of his being a Christian. He will always find himself in a community that has certain standards and among those standards will be many that will not be in agreement with Christian principles. If a cheap liberal, he will, without studying the question, allow himself to make denunciations and actually hurt real liberal thought. As someone has said, the most dangerous enemy that real liberalism has is the liberal himself.

But a more constructive way to be a liberal is to try and understand his community and then to try and lead without, as it has been said of the late Theodore Roosevelt, getting out of sight himself. Leadership requires understanding. The modern Christian will have to understand the wild radical as well as the wild and pagan capitalist, and probably he will, in the long run, have a harder time with the latter than with the former.

As an example of bad liberalism, we have the example of one of our rectors who found a plant owned and controlled by his own people, where a system of patronage had been installed that at least paid fair wages and guaranteed proper health surroundings to the workers. But our good parson was not content with less than the ideal at once, and without trying to understand the owners or talk the problem over, he denounced them publicly and then thought his friends unsympathetic when he found himself unpopular.

On the other hand, those parsons who countenance evil conditions without even daring to face the owners and trying to persuade them of wrong and evil, have forgotten their role as prophets of the Church of God. But generally such admonition should be given with the understanding heart of love and real liberalism, such as Christ demands of men.

Church and World Problems as Others See Them

Newspaper Blood Money.

The Christian Century, February 6, 1935.

Mr. Elisha Hanson, counsel for the American Newspaper Publishers' Association, has tried to defend the publishers' opposition to all control of child labor by declaring that "the financial end of it does not concern us for one minute." Who believes him? Certainly not the editor of the New York Daily News, who says, "When our fellow-publishers talk of freedom of the press they mean freedom to hire children to deliver newspapers before light on winter mornings, because children are cheaper." And certainly not the editor of the trade weekly, Editor and Publisher, who writes of "that mean business of little ragged girls peddling papers in restaurants, gin mills and streets at midnight, and of tiny newsboys sleeping on bundles of papers at Brooklyn bridge entrance and similar city hot spots. Don't tell me—I've seen that spectacle for years! I hope never to witness it again, following the year of grace 1935."

Yet, it is to preserve their privilege to make money in such ways as this that the majority of the newspaper publishers of the United States are today fighting to block the necessary sixteen ratifications of the child labor amendment in the state legislatures now sitting! To the publishers who seek wealth on such terms we would say: Gentlemen, you have great control over the minds of our people. You may so muddle those minds as to win this immediate battle. But, gentlemen, this is blood money for which you are grasping. The blood is the blood of children. And if you succeed, be assured that the day will come when it will be required at your hands.

A Gallant Pioneer.

The Churchman, February 1, 1935.

On February 15 will occur the one hundred and fifteenth anniversary of the birth of Susan B. Anthony, the great pioneer of woman's rights who has been described by her biographer as "the woman who changed the mind of a nation". Women long ago won the right to vote in America, as they have in many other countries. Now, with suffrage a reality in so many countries and with the other collateral issues for which Miss Anthony fought making such rapid strides, her birthday is assuming a sacred and historical significance among those who are carrying on her work. This year they are planning a nation-wide observance of the day by radio, public gatherings, observance in schools and even in many cases in the pulpit. Miss Anthony's present day followers, who are the beneficiaries of the rights which her leadership secured but which she never enjoyed, do not forget the long, courageous, uncompromising battle that she waged. Though it is not remembered by the present generation, Miss Anthony was the chief figure in one of the most historic trials in America, a trial where she stood criminally charged in Rochester, New York, with the heinous crime of voting. This trial which occurred within the lifetime of many persons now living is referred to by her followers as "the Dred Scott case" in women's struggle for the ballot and her defiant justification of her act in a speech she made to the court is a veritable declaration of independence for women as citizens.

Unity in Convocation.

The Guardian, January 25. 1935.

The Convocations of Canterbury and York have had before them this week proposals for closer unity between the Church of England and other bodies of Christians as important as any that have ever been discussed. The proposals, in differing degrees, arouse alarm among some, but hope among more. Action must be cautious, but the opposition of anti-Christian forces is so powerful that there is no room for timidity in Christendom. The Archbishop of York went to the root of the matter in his trenchant answer to the criticisms of the Scottish scheme in the Church Union report. The idea that "men are either full members of the historic and visible Church and therefore entitled to communion, as of right, on all occasions, or they are not, and therefore not entitled to communion on any occasion" is an admirable example of the logical fallacy that has done so much to obscure the true meaning of Catholicism in Western Europe. The best Latin teaching of an earlier day would repudiate it. It is quite unacceptable to the spirit of Orthodoxy or of Anglicanism. As the archbishop said, "the crude dichotomy of a logical dilemma can never do justice to the intricate delicacy of spiritual realities." There are large bodies of Christians who have been estranged from Catholic order by this repellent attitude. They can be won; but only by a presentation more in keeping with the spirit of the New Testament.

The End of the Slums.

The Guardian, January 25. 1935.

The provisions of the new Housing Bill for England and Wales, and of the separate Measure for Scotland, were published last week. For the first time overcrowding is legally defined. It is laid down that the number of occupants of a house must be small enough to allow of separation of the sexes, except in the case of husband and wife and children under ten years of age. Two persons will be permitted to live in one room, three in two, five in three, seven and a half (a child under ten will be reckoned as a half person) in four. In a house of five rooms ten persons will be allowed, with two more for each additional room. Anything in excess of this scale will be statutory "overcrowding," though the size of rooms will be taken into account, and in rooms below normal size the permitted number of occupants will be reduced. Local authorities must survey the housing in their area, and after submitting proposals to the Ministry of Health will be obliged to carry them into effect. Whole areas may need to be redeveloped in districts where workers will have to be re-housed near their work, and where necessary land may be acquired compulsorily at market value. The scheme will be financed with the aid of a subsidy from the State and from the local authority, and particular attention is to be given to rural areas. All existing subsidies are to be consolidated at their present figure and paid into one housing revenue account of the local authority, which may adjust rents with the help of the pool.

The Visit of MM. Flandin and Laval.

The Record, January 25, 1935.

The visit of the French Premier and his Foreign Minister to London may be expected to turn largely upon the Rome Pact, and the support which they wish it to receive from the British Government. That our Government wish the independence of Austria to be maintained may be taken for granted, but the question of our joining an Eastern Pact, including the Little Entente—Czecho-slovakia, Roumania and Yugo-slavia—is quite another matter. It is understood that the Balkan Entente—Turkey, Greece, Roumania and Yugoslavia are wholly in favour of the Rome Pact. The whole problem of security and of European peace would be solved if Germany would agree to the Rome Pact, but she is not likely to do this unless specifically granted equality of armaments, and indeed her back may now have been stiffened by her success in the Saar.

THE THOUSANDFOLD PAGE

ARCHDEACON FREDERICK W. NEVE, D. D.

Some Greater Aspects of Christanity

Part I.

It is of the utmost importance to preserve a just and true proportion between the minor and the larger aspects of Christianity. There has been a tendency of late years to overlook, or to fail to emphasize, the greater truths and to spend most of our time and effort in dealing with the minor issues involved.

The Incarnation.

To begin with, the Incarnation, or the coming of Christ into the world, should be given a larger and more important place in human thought. For it is so far above any other event that has ever happened in human history, that it is impossible to exaggerate its importance. That Almighty God, the Creator of all things, should have condescended to enter this world in the Person of His Son, for the redemption of the human race, is so transcendent an event that the mind of man is incapable of comprehending its full significance.

The Relation of Astronomy to the Incarnation.

But the magnitude of this even has been far more greatly enlarged through the discoveries of Modern Astronomy. We now know that the Universe is vastly greater than it was supposed to be in the early days of the Church. And this vast extension of our knowledge of creation necessarily gives us a much larger conception of the greatness and power and majesty of the Creator. This being so, our ideas of the Incarnation and its importance must be correspondingly enlarged, just in the same way as our knowledge of nature has been adjusted to the discoveries which astronomy has made known to us. It does not seem, however, that such an adjustment to modern knowledge has been made with regard to the Incarnation. So far from its importance having been magnified, the tendency has been rather the other way. And in many cases it has been regarded as a merely natural event.

Christ's Human Nature Fully Sage-guarded.

The human nature of our Lord is amply safe-guarded by the record given us in the Gospels of His human life upon this earth, which will be read and studied by Christians down to the end of time. But His divinity cannot be minimized or kept in the background without entirely losing the true proportions of the Christian faith. And what is more, the human life of Jesus Christ and more especially His death, derive their eternal significance from a due and proper estimate of the greatness of the Incarnation. It was because He was the Son of God that we recognize His voice as speaking with divine authority; otherwise His proclamation that "God is Love," and that He Himself was the Saviour of the world, would have no more claim upon our assured acceptance than a saying of Buddha or Confucius.

The Church Impregnable and Invincible.

Christ referring to the confession of St. Peter, as to His Divinity, said:—"Upon this rock I will build my Church and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it." St. Matt. 16:18. This implies that belief in His divine nature gives to His Church an impregnable position, standing upon which she can never be defeated. St. John, the beloved disciple, in his first Epistle (4: 4-5) says:—"This is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith. Who is he that overcometh the world but he that believeth that Jesus is the Son of God?" Here we have an invincible weapon provided for His Church and for all her members, whereby victory is assured.

The Height of Foolishness.

To venture from the foundation which Christ Himself has laid as an impregnable fortress, which is proof against any and every attack of her enemies, would be foolish indeed, and to lay aside the invincible weapon which gives complete assurance of victory would be as foolish as the other. Those who would seek to weaken our faith in Jesus Christ as the Son of God are not to be trusted with our eternal destiny.

Human reason seems to resent the fact that it cannot set limits and boundaries to the thoughts of God. It ever seeks to bring them down to the lower level of the human mind; and so instead of attempting to rise to the contemplation of the great and mighty Mystery of the Incarnation, we find men reducing it to the human level and making it just as simple and as easily understood as any purely human event. Whereas the Mystery of the Incarnation is just as great and incomprehensible to the human reason as the Mystery of the Divine Nature, because the Divine Nature is involved. "It is well to remember that "God hath chosen the foolish things of the world to confound the wise; and God hath chosen the weak things of the world to confound the things which are mighty; . . . That no flesh should glory in His presence." 1 Cor. 1:27, 29.

A Correction.

The issue of February 9, 1935, third paragraph, third line, should read, "And which ultimately led to His death at their instigation (not investigation).

* * *

SEPTUAGESIMA.

Today we enter upon what is termed the Pre-Lenten Season. The original title given was simply "The Sunday called Septuagesima", the sub-title, or "The Third Sunday before Lent" was added in 1662. Septuagesima and the two following Sundays form the second stage of the Ecclesiastical year. It is the preparatory stage for Lent, the second stage closes with Easter Even, the third stage running from Easter Day to the Sunday after Ascension Day, and the fourth and last being Whitsuntide. The Collect for today is taken from the Sarum Missal, 1549, with the addition of the words "by Thy goodness" and the ascription at the end of the collect. This prayer is one of preparation for the season of Lent and expresses the distinctive notes of the Lenten Season; Confession of sin and a desire for deliverance from the "bonds of sin". In this short prayer we desire Almighty God to favorably hear our prayers, then we acknowledge our shortcomings and pray that we may "mercifully be delivered by Thy goodness." There are three important thoughts connected with this prayer: First, there are certain things which we must observe if we would have the Divine Power favourably to receive our petitions. If we turn to the Epistle of Saint John, we there find Saint John makes the statement, "I ask and receive because I keep His commandments and do those things which are pleasing in His sight." From this we learn that our prayers must be those of sincerity, combined with an earnest endeavour to do that which is right both in regard to Almighty God and also our fellow man. If we please the Father of Love then we will be led to be of help to our fellow man. The second thought is "That all have sinned and come short", therefore we acknowledge a just punishment for our offenses, and confessing our sins, we turn to Him "who is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from

(Continued on page 9.)

Baptism and the Christian Life

By the Rev. George F. Cameron, Rector, St. Mark's Church, Beaumont, Texas.

"I will give him unto the Lord all the days of his life." 1 Samuel 1:11.

Nothing has injured the Church more than the conception that Infant Baptist is a magical formula that works spells and charms over the young child, making him a dutiful citizen of the Kingdom whether anyone does anything about it or not. Somehow or other, parents have the idea that Baptism, within itself, is quite sufficient; and, in some peculiar way, makes the child a religious being for the rest of his life. That idea may be a partial explanation of why parents bring their children to Baptism, and straightway forget what manner of service they have witnessed. To their minds it is a kind of spiritual prophylactic that makes the young child forever immune to evil; and has its parallel in the physical realm where one successful vaccination makes the patient safe for life against the ravages of some contagious disease. The sacrament being completed, why worry the mind about it further? It is not necessary to remember it, for it works regardless of whether we pay any attention to it.

Later on in life, when anxious parents have found that Infant Baptism was not a magical formula, releasing them from all personal responsibility; that it did not work as easily as they expected, they make an indictment against the whole Church. They say they have tried religion and that it simply does not work; and they allege, in fact, a person can be as good outside the Church as inside. And they continue with illustrations of other parents who, having never submitted their children to the spiritual formula of Baptism, have offspring at least no worse than their own.

The Beginning of a Process.

The Book of Common Prayer nowhere implies that the sacrament of Baptism is efficacious to the extent that, within itself, it will make a person immune to evil, or that of itself it will subdue an unruly child. It says in so many words that it is "an outward and visible sign of an inward and spiritual grace," meaning that there is begun in the child a process of which Water is the sign. It is a means, not an end, whereby the child is to receive the spiritual grace. If it is not an act of worship, complete within itself, of what value is it? and how can it mean anything to the Church or to the child? What is the process that goes on in the life of the child?

In the first place, we notice the process is begun, not ended, with Baptism. It is both the hope and the intention of the Church that a process of training is begun in the young child's life and continues unto his life's end. And there is nothing mysterious about this spiritual educational process; it is as natural as any other influence that enters the child's life. But, if this development takes place, the child must be kept in contact with the Church. "The things belonging to the Spirit" will not live and grow in him unless there is a congenial soil and a sympathetic environment. He cannot "die to sin and rise to newness of life," unless he has an opportunity to mortify the sinful affections and a home atmosphere conducive to the growth of the spirit. In the baptismal service, the infant does not immediately become "dead to sin," nor does he straightway ascend to a plane of absolute righteousness. The teaching is that the service marks the beginning of a process of "becoming." But the process does not even begin, unless the road that lies ahead is open. The windows of his soul must be opened and kept opened.

The Process Is Natural.

Now, I say the process is as natural as any other in the child's life. The child grows physically because his parents supply him with wholesome food and other physical necessities. He grows to physical manhood, which state can be understood only in the light of the physical nurture which all his life he has received. So with a man's character. It does not just happen. It grows in accordance with the inexorable laws of life. But whether it grows to be a warped and twisted thing, or whether it grows to be a thing of beauty, depends upon the "process," the training and environment through which it has gone. A thorough student of anthropology can classify men, placing them in their respective racial groups, using as his guide the maner and substance of speech, the habits of dress, the social ideas, and the traits of character.

So with a "member of the church." It can easily be seen whether his parents thought of Baptism as the "ending" or the "beginning" of the child's religious life.

Bringing Ourselves to Baptism.

How can that process be "begun?" What are its practical aspects? and how can we put it into practice? Parents and sponsors who bring young children to Baptism must remember that they bring also themselves. The bringing of ourselves is a vital part of the service. (Were that understood, no parent would ever ask the minister if an unbaptized friend or relative could stand as sponsor at the child's baptism.) It is practically useless to bring a child to Baptism and straightway take him back into an environment that forbids religious teaching. For a child to be brought up in a home environment, created by parents who seldom, if ever, go to Church, is bound to be fatal to the process of growing in God's grace. Psychoanalysts invariably want to know the past of a patient's life. What has happened to him? What slight has he suffered? What disappointment has he endured? What has run at cross purposes with his life? Literally, what is the background of his complexes? All these things affect a person's life. Nothing just happens. There is a cause. And nothing can just happen at Baptism. What happens to the child is determined to a major degree by what happens to the parents and sponsors at the baptismal service. They are the ones who must help him "lead the rest of his life according to this beginning." He is "grafted into the body of Christ's Church"; but he cannot become a spiritual body, he cannot stand upon his own feet, unless he is given an opportunity through the environment and training of his home life.

Two Examples.

Two classic examples from Holy Scripture will suffice. How do we account for the prophetic leadership of Samuel, his spiritual courage, the people's esteem? His kindness and his justness were the fruits of a lifelong process, and we must go beyond them to find the cause of his greatness as one of the makers of his nation. The real cause lies in one of his earliest experiences, all unconscious to him. That event was born of a devoted and consecrated motherhood. Months before his birth he was given to the Lord by a mother in whose bosom the fires of the spirit burned brightly. Out of her heart, before ever Samuel was born, came this prayer: "O Lord of Hosts, if thou wilt indeed look on the affliction of thine handmaid, and not forget thine handmaid, but wilt give unto thine handmaid a man child, then I will give him unto the Lord all the

(Continued on page 9.)

The Practice of the Presence of God

By the Rev. A. C. Zabriskie, S. T. D.

An Address to the Students of The Virginia Theological Seminary.

The first function of a Seminary is to be a place where the Christian life is lived, where the main effort of people is to love God and their neighbours.

This distinguishes it from other graduate schools—Law, Medicine, &c.—whose primary function is to teach certain professional knowledge and skills. The Seminary must teach, must exact hard and sustained work, must even try to make men realize the pleasure of grappling with Anselm's ontological argument or the intricacies of Old Testament documentary theories. To serve God in this place manifestly includes making every possible effort to understand His revelations. But for one who is to be a Christian minister no amount of intellectual accomplishment can be a substitute for a life Christian to the core, and, therefore, no amount of mental training is as important as practice in Christian living.

Our chief responsibility here is to act toward each other, to think and speak of each other, as Jesus would do in our place. For me to say this is to confess my own failure at my main job. We read that when the Word was made flesh, the chief characteristics of His glory noted by men were grace and truth, which I take it mean love and reality, genuine concern for others and utter honesty. Ours it is to manifest those same qualities in our attitudes and dealings with all we meet, especially those with whom we are thrown most. In proportion as we do so speak and act and think, we shall be revealers of God and agents of His purpose.

Christian experience has shown that there are a good many practices which help us greatly in the effort so to live. It is of one of these that I wish to speak tonight, The Practice of the Presence of God.

One cannot use this phrase without referring to the man with whom it is usually connected. Brother Lawrence, whose real name was Nicholas Herman, lived in seventeenth century France. Of lowly birth, he served as a soldier and footman in one of the great houses; was converted quite dramatically when about twenty, and some thirty years later was admitted as a lay-brother into a Carmelite monastery. Never ordained, most of his service in the order was as cook or servant in the butlery. Yet, he became a great spiritual director, sought out by nobles and bishops. He wrote some letters which, together with reports of some of his conversations, form one of the spiritual classics. They are published under the title, "The Practice of the Presence of God." That title, which is the burthen of all his letters, reveals the secret of his life and his power. All the time and during every occupation, working, playing, reading, cleaning pots, suffering, he kept himself aware of God's presence. Every act he undertook he performed as in the sight of God, as an offering to God, out of love for God. Things that could not be done in this spirit he did not do. Every word was spoken similarly. Even when in Burgundy, buying wine for his house and clambering all over boats inspecting the casks, which was very distasteful to him, because he had no turn for business, and because his lameness made it necessary for him to roll himself over the barrels, he did it consciously as an act of service to God. Read his book some day.

Value of the Practice.

The values of this practice are as evident as they are numerous. Let us mention five:

1. It brings objectivity, than which I know nothing more important for a Christian life. Has it ever struck you that this matter of the outward-turned eye is one of the principal threads running through the Beatitudes? The blessed are "poor in spirt" because their mind is centred on something so wholly great; "mourners" because they have entered into the suffering and sin of the world; "pure in heart" because their whole attention is directed God-wards, undefiled by self-reference; "hungering and thirsting after righteousness", "peace-makers"—all these betoken an attitude the opposite of self-centred. Mrs. Herrmann has a great phrase, "Self-regard is the slum of the soul." Slums are centres whence spread disease and crime. Subjectivity is the breeding-ground of sin, nervous and mental diseases, instability, futility, wretchedness. It is a chief cause of lack of vision and accomplishment in the ministry. The practice of the presence of God is the world's best slum-clearance project. If your mind is turned toward Him you can't remain self-centred.

2. It enables you to express your religious insights, to externalize your emotions, if you prefer that barbarous phrase. One of the primary laws of child psychology, my wife informs me, is not to arouse emotions that can't be expressed; and for us who are still in our spiritual childhood it is equally true. A great emotional excitement about which we do nothing is positively bad; it weakens us spiritually and morally. We need emotion in our religion, lots of it, else we remain complacent and sterile; but we must translate that emotion into action.

The practice of the presence of God helps us here in three ways. It is the strongest incentive I know to moral effort; it prevents us from taking out our religion in emotion alone; it drives us to give ourselves, in cooperation with God's creative will. Again, it helps us see what we ought to do; by providing us with a steady centre of reference for the decisions we have to make it keeps us judging of the possibilities open to us from God's standpoint; it is the secret of a God-guided life and thereby frees us from that "human regard", as the old writers used to call it, which so paralyzes Christian aspiration. And, thirdly, it helps us see that every activity can be made an expression of deepest religious emotion, that the most humdrum tasks can be fit ways of putting into actions our profoundest insights, if they are the things God wills. It shows us that we don't have to wait for some great cause in order to express our discipleship, but that the duty at hand can be made an offering of love to our Father and a sacrifice for our brother's sake. It saves us from the delusion of so-called activism and delivers us from the wastage of emotionalism by directing our energies into immediate tasks.

These two things together mean that the practice saves us from that unreality which outsiders sometimes feel in ministers, and also from that romanticizing sentimentality which withers away when brought into contact with the more difficult tragedies of life.

3. The practice of the presence of God gives us courage, comfort, staying power; and in the last analysis, what are love and life but spiritual staying-power? Isn't the chief difference between love and its counterfeits spiritual permanence? If you are aware that God is with you, that He is deeply concerned for your work, and that it is His work which you have undertaken, then you can carry on quietly, despite obstacles, disappointments, apparent failures, betrayals. You are delivered from interior unquietness, from the fretfulness of incompleted tasks—and how many tasks we cannot complete—from the despair and the impatience which are equally destructive of Christian spirit and Christian accomplishment. You can carry on with serenity, with that controlled energy which is the hallmark of deep souls, with that carelessness about your popularity or prestige or comfort, which is the emancipation most of us need pretty desperately. All of which is to say that the practice of the presence of God brings interior peace, poise, perspective, the long-range view which underlie any constructive work for God's Kingdom. How badly they are needed in fevered days like these!

Seeing as God Sees.

This discipline compels one to that careful, candid self-examination, at regular and not too frequent intervals, which is necessary for growth in Christian living. This is something completely different from introspection. We need to take stock of ourselves periodically, to survey our actions and words, our motives and attitudes, from God's point of view that we may know wherein we are falling away from that quite definite standard toward which we ought to be progressing. The examination ought to be detailed and concrete, it ought to be made with reference to a definite pattern. This delivers it from the largely emotional self-depreciation which results from a vague general repentance and which is spiritually deadly because usually untrue. If you are aware of God's presence you can't help trying to look out at the world through His eyes, and that includes yourself occasionally—not too often but inevitably at regular intervals. If you look at yourself from His perspective you will see yourself truly. You will see much that is humiliating, for your sins will be very clear and also much that uplifts you, for you will see your possibilities and your worth to God.

Lastly, this awareness of God enables you to see other people more as God does. One looks at them realistically; one sees their faults and weaknesses, their powers and potentialities, their value to God. Obviously, this will mean a truer sympathy and a greater capacity to help, because the love will not be blinded by sentimentality. You will learn to understand both what they are and what they can become, and you will try to bridge the gap. Bishop Gore once said that for years in his early ministry it was impossible for him really to love many people when he first met them, or even to like them. Only after he had brought his attitude toward any given person into line with God's by praying for him and considering him sub specie aeternitatis could he overcome natural prejudices. That is true of lots of us, though we usually are not so candid about admitting it. The consciousness of God's presence is as a shield and buckler, when it comes to fulfilling the Second Great Commandment.

The Need of Discipline.

The practice of the presence of God means the effort to keep aware all the time of God's presence and to do everything one does for His sake. Prebendary Carlile was talking to a young friend once who asked him about his devotional habits. Said the grand old man, "Well, really I haven't any habits. You see it's a love-affair between us all the time." That represents a degree of spiritual maturity immeasurably beyond ours, but it also is a perfect example of the thing I am talking about.

How does one get that way? How does one attain to living constantly in His presence? For almost all us mortals it involves daily discipline over many years. I know no way of attaining it, or spiritual maturity in any of its other manifestations, except unfailingly steady discipline for years and years—even as I know of no way of attaining high mental growth or artistic skill other than by long, steady discipline. No greater mistake can be made than that of thinking that the spiritual life can be unregulated or that one can rely on pure spontaneity. That mistake is the principal reason why so many Christians, often ones who are conspicuously accomplished in other spheres, remain babes spiritually. If we would reach the stage where awareness of God forms the background of our whole life, where we converse with Him easily and frequently, where spontaneously we act and think in Christly fashion, most of us have got to work for it every day from now on. The reason why those of us who are older than you have made so pitifully little progress along this line is that we have not worked at it with sufficient intensity of purpose.

The first essential, I think, is to begin every day with an adequate period of meditation and prayer. You cannot be consciously thinking of God all the time. You have no moral right to do so, because if you are to do properly the jobs you undertake—be they studying, writing sermons, pastoral work—your whole attention has got to be concentrated on those jobs, and part of our moral obligation is to do the jobs we undertake as well as we possibly can. That means that the awareness of God has got to be, in Bishop Brent's phrase, "the canvas on which our whole life is painted", it has to be in the background of your mind rather than in the foreground most of the time. If this is to happen, you must immerse yourself in the realization of His presence so vividly at the start that its effect will last all the day long. To change the figure, God's presence has got to be so deeply impressed upon you at the outset that nothing can rub the impress out—even as a coin which has been subjected to the die in the mint retains the figure then stamped upon it through all sorts of vicissitudes. Nothing that I know of so allows God to put His impress upon you as waiting upon Him in silence, thinking profoundly and leisurely about Him, talking to Him—in other words, listening, meditation and prayer.

Such a period early in the day usually needs to be supplemented by a couple of others, similar in nature though briefer, somewhere about midday and in the evening. Most of us, because of our immaturity, cannot safely dispense with such subsequent times of quiet recollection.

Between these periods we need to turn our minds God-ward as often as we can; to offer to Him the things we are doing; to readjust our attitudes to His; to be inwardly still in His presence. It matters not where we are or what we are doing, whether in class-room or playing field or dining-room or movie, we can detach our minds momentarily from our surroundings and fix them upon God, we can reconsecrate ourselves to Him and return to our occupations for His sake, we can try to gain His perspective and ask His help, we can immerse ourselves in His influence and love and submit ourselves to His power and inspiration. It is a motion of the mind and imagination, a focussing of the attentian, a redirecting of the will and the affections. A wise old man once called it "ambulatory prayer". It is like the brief glances or words exchanged between intimate friends who are hard at work together. The glances or conversations last but an instant each, yet taken all together, they bring great refreshment, delight, inspiration.

If one observes without fail such regular stated periods of meditation and prayer, and if one constantly through the day goes forth to God briefly, then in time one may reach the height where one is steadily aware of Him as the great saints were (allowing always for those periods of desolation that try even the greatest) and spontaneously incarnate God's attitude as they did.

Singleness of Purpose.

Nobody will do this who has not a single-hearted desire to know and serve God. Singleness of purpose is the most important prerequisite to growth in prayer, as it is in character or anything else. "Though he slay me yet will I worship Him" is the text. Part of such singleness is sincerity, the refusal to fool yourself, the resolute effort to see and speak the truth and as many sides thereof as possible. Part of it is humility, the realization of one's own insufficiency and of the better thing that can be attained. Armed with these prerequisites any of you can so practice His presence that

He will become the glowing factor in your life, the source of peace and joy, of power and accomplishment. He will be able to make of you a revelation of Himself and an agent for the accomplishment of His purposes, one of the innumerable points at which His upbuilding grace comes to bear upon the history of mankind.

Charles F. Andrews.

I began by saying of the practice of the presence of God that it was a help to Christian living. I close by speaking of it as an end in itself.

Four or five years ago a long-bearded man sat on this platform as our speaker. He never once moved a muscle of his body or spoke above a tone, so quiet that those in the back of the room had to listen closely. Yet, for two hours he held everyone, students and faculty, in such fascinated attention as a light holds a moth. When he stopped no one stirred till Dr. Green asked him to continue. He spoke for more than an hour longer. In all my time here I have never experienced anything like it. The Passion Play at Oberammergau must exert a similar effect. The man's name was Charles F. Andrews. He spoke somewhat of India and of Gandhi, but chiefly of what it had meant to him under the utmost variety of conditions in England, Africa, India, America, Europe, to live consciously in the presence of God. What gave him his power over us was that as he spoke, intimately yet modestly, we knew that we were listening to a man for whom God was the most intimate and constant companion in the world. It was that that made him a medium throughout whom the spirit of God could shine and could play directly upon us, even as the sunlight can shine directly through a clear window-pane. Long years practicing the presence of Christ made him what he is, and if you read his book, "What I Owe to Christ," you will discover what a change has been wrought. A similar change can be wrought in us.

* * *

BAPTISM AND THE CHRISTIAN LIFE.

(Continued from page 6.)

days of his life." But the process of consecration did not end there. After the birth of Samuel, the wise mother took him to the Lord, and the prayer continued: "For this child I prayed; and the Lord hath given me my petition which I asked of him . . . . . and as long as he liveth he shall be lent unto the Lord." And Samuel worshipped the Lord there. So, Samuel's life is not explained altogether by its ending. Understanding comes when we know also its beginning. The spiritual environment of his birth and the religious training of his home life—these powerful influences explain the greatness of the man Samuel.

Next, there is the spiritual inheritance of Timothy. Paul loved Timothy and often thought of him in a prayerful relationship. One day, when Paul was writing to his young friend, he remembered especially the unfeigned faith that was in him. To what did he ascribe it? What was the source of Timothy's beauty of character, his lovable nature, and his sound mind? Paul makes them, in part at least, a spiritual inheritance. To his mind there was no mystery. "Look!" says he, "the unfeigned faith first dwelt in Timothy's grandmother Lois, and next in his mother Eunice. First, a religious home—next, a beautiful character. That's the secret.

The Christian Home.

It would be extremely difficult to explain to everyone's satisfaction in just what way the "consecration" of parents and the "dedication" of a child foreshadow the success and happiness of the man. Experts in the study of the mind tell us that we are actually conscious of very few happenings in our life; in fact, we are never aware of certain formative processes that go on all the time. To the average mind an incident is speedily forgotten. However, in reality, the personality does not forget it. Each incident is indelibly stamped upon the flexible clay of our being; and together they give the various hues and colors to our life. We are like a virgin photographic plate which, when exposed to the chain of life's events, registers all that it sees, whether we are conscious of it or not. These memory-pictures, whether victories or defeats, remain our life-long possessions and ever portray the being that we are. A child literally walks in the footsteps of his parents and other associations. All he knows is learned from his world of associations. The outside world is continuously becoming a part of him. And the process never stops. It goes on and on.

May we parents who bring our young children to Christ and His Church, bring also ourselves, that in a holy environment they may grow to have a prophetic leadership like that of Samuel's and a gracious nature like that of Timothy's. There should be a blessed trinity in every child's life: the Love of God, the Consecration of parents, and the Dedication of the child. May our homes have the benediction of that priceless trinity!

* * *

BOOK REVIEWS

REV. STAMO S. SPATHEY, Editor.

GOD AND THE SOCIAL PROCESS: A Study in Hebrew History: By Louis Wallis. 1935. University of Chicago Press. Pp. xv and 311, with Appendices and Index. Price, $2.

Research into the nature of the Old Testament documents seems to have reached a stage where the important conclusions have been arrived at, and now what remains is to re-read the history and theology of the Hebrews in the new light that has been shed upon them. In the next stage of Biblical study this book will play an important introductory part. It is refreshing to read and stimulating to further study. One feels, however, that upon first reading only a suspended judgment can be given.

The author begins his consideration of Hebrew history; he claims that of necessity he must so begin it, with the invasion and conquest of the central Canaanite highlands, which was consummated in the fall of Shechem. The Deuteronomic version which depicts a complete conquest of the whole land, he says, is based upon this partial conquest, complete as far as it went. The establishment of Hebrew clans in this section brought about a tension between the resident commercialistic ideas of land-holding in a society of landlords or baalim, and a more primitive desert society consisting of an aristocracy with a lower strata of alien slaves based upon a non-commercialistic land tenure guaranteed by a god who required mishpat or social justice.

Mr. Wallis endeavours to show that the various phases of this struggle led to the rise of a series of prophets and scribes who attempted to establish the principles of mishpat, by their preaching, respectively, and their construction of a mythology which professed to interpret the origin of their people in Egypt and the desert. As a consequence of their activity resulting in the temporary success of Josiah's reformation, the desert religion of the Hebrews became an ethical monotheism.

In the introduction, Mr. Wallis confirms the precedence of the prophets over the Law and explains that his purpose is to show that the rise of monotheism can be accounted for on a cause-and-effect basis, the crux of which was the struggle within the social process. His argument merits decidedly careful attention, but judgment upon its final worth will have to wait new study of the material in the originals. His book is lacking in thorough exposition of crucial points and seems to reiterate a few points to the exclusion of other considerations. There are difficulties which are passed over somewhat too easily and a great deal of material which one cannot help feeling has been ignored. The book contains no detailed examination of sources and very few references even of a secondary character. That it is a valuable contribution to the study of Hebrew history, however, cannot be denied, and it is certain that the struggle with the accompanying effects which he so clearly outlines must in any future reading of the Old Testament be given a prominent place, though it cannot be said to be the only consideration. It is to be hoped that many students of the Old Testament will read this book and pursue the investigation further and correlate it with other approaches.

Charles W. F. Smith.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S FELLOWSHIP SERVICE LEAGUE

The Reverend Randolph F. Blackford

WHY RURAL MISSIONS, or.
Why Help Support Churches in Small Towns or Open Country That Are So Weak They Need Help to Keep Going.

A Play to be Produced by Young People
(founded on facts)
Cast of Characters.

Rev. Mr. Winchester, Rector of a large city parish.
Rev. Mr. Johnson, the Country Parson.
Mr. Smith, a poor countryman.
Bob Forsythe, a crippled boy.
Mrs. Morrison, President of the P. T. A.
Mrs. Knox, President of the School Board.
Mary Jones, a poorly dressed little girl.

(This may be used either as a play or as a basis for a program.)

Scene I.

(Time, 3:30 P. M. City Rector's study, Rector at table with phone, seated.)

Rector (at phone): Hello. Yes, Mr. Jamison. That is splendid. I am delighted. That will just about pay for a new carpet for the church. Thank you very much for letting me know. Goodbye. (Hangs up phone.) Isn't that splendid when your Senior Warden calls up to tell you of an unencumbered gift to the church, given to be used where it will do the most good? (Knock on door.) Come in. (Enter Country Parson.) Come in, Mr. Johnson. I have not seen you for some time. (They shake hands.)

Parson: Mr. Winchester, I have come to see if you could not in some way help us in our mission church. You know our people are all pretty poor.

Rector: Yes, I know money is tight, and the truth is, I do not quite know that I can make an appeal for your work. We need so much ourselves. We need a new carpet, we need a new organ, and many other things. You see, if we compare our congregations, you have fifty communicants, I have five hundred, you see. Perhaps twenty-five new people come to your church in a year, and I have that many each week. I will tell you what to do. You sell your work to me, and I will do all I can help to help you.

Parson: Mr. Winchester, you don't understand that what I want help for, is so that I can reach more people. I need a new car, one that won't break down every time I go out. But I'll tell you what, give me twenty-four hours of your time and I'll show you whether the country church is worth-while or not. Drive me home and stay in my parish till noon tomorrow.

Rector: All right, I'll do that. It's twenty miles out to your rectory. We'll be there within an hour.

Parson: I will ask you to stop for a few calls with me on the way out. But let's go. (They both go out.)

Scene II.

(Time, 10:30 P. M. the same day. Parson's study. Phone on table in back of room.)

(Two ministers enter.)

Rector: My, but it is cold. Do you keep going rain and snow over these awful roads, regardless of the weather?

Parson: I can't change the weather, and I must visit my people. But sit down; let's rest a few minutes before going to bed. (Knock at door.) Come in. (Enter Mr. Smith.)

(Rector to background.)

Mr. Smith: I am certainly glad to see you. I have been everywhere.

Parson: What is the matter?

Mr. Smith: My sister, Mrs. Robinson, has just been taken sick. The Doctor says it is appendicitis, and she must be operated on immediately, or she will die. I have been to everyone I know, but they can't help us. You see, it's this way: Neither of us has any money, and it will cost a lot to have the operation. What shall I do?

Parson: I don't know, but I know who does. Let us pray to Him. (They kneel and pray silently.)

All: Amen.

Parson: Who is your Doctor?

Mr. Smith: Dr. Pringle.

Parson: Mr. Winchester, I want you to meet Mr. Smith. You two talk, while I phone.

(They shake hands and talk while Parson goes to phone.)

Rector: I am glad to meet one of my friend's members.

Mr. Smith: But I am not one of his members. I am not a member of any church, but I think I will join Mr. Johnson's church. He sure is a fine man. Did he tell you what he did for me?

Rector: No, what was it?

Mr. Smith: Last year I was awful sick and did not have any money. But he found out I had been in the Army during the war and got our American Legion Post here to get me to the Veterans' Hospital, and what's more, he got the Legion to take care of my wife and family while I was there, too.

Parson (returning from telephone): Well, I think I have gotten it fixed. I called up the Welfare and they suggested the Masons. I called up the Masons and they promised to help, and then I called up Dr. Pringle and he said he would operate and wait for his money. Then I got the hospital in the city and they said they will take your note secured by a mortgage on that land of yours near them, Mr. Smith, so all is set. Mr. Winchester, you know where your room is. You will excuse me, I know. I will have to help Mr. Smith with his sister. Good night. (They go out.)

Scene III.

(10 A. M. next morning. The Parson's study. Two ministers come in and take seats.)

Rector: Aren't you worn out being up all night like that?

Parson: Oh, no. I got in much sooner than I thought I would. You see, we had to go ten miles into the next county to get Mrs. Robinson. But we got her and took her to the hospital, and she was operated on and was resting nicely when we left. Mr. Robinson was right much cut up over it, as you may imagine. But we got home and were in bed by 4 A. M. (Knock on door.) Come in. (Enter Bob Forsythe, a cripple. Parson goes to him and shakes hands and introduces him.) Mr. Winchester, this is Bob Forsythe. Bob, I want you to tell Mr. Winchester about that mission you and the Scouts started.

Bob: All right, Mr. Johnson, in a minute. But I wondered if you thought there was any way I could work my way through college this year. You know I graduated from the high school last year, and have been studying stenography all this summer.

Parson: I don't know, but you two talk while I see what I can do. (Retires to phone and phones in dumb show while they talk.)

Rector: What was all this about your starting a mission?

Bob: Oh, that is just Mr. Johnson's way of putting it. You see, it was like this. It was about ten years ago, and Mr. Johnson had the boys off on a Brotherhood of St. Andrew camp. I was the mascot, but all the fellows were just fine to me on account of my being on crutches.

Sunday came and we were going to have service out of doors, but it looked like rain, so I suggested that we go to a farmhouse nearby and ask if we could have church there. The people were very poor, but were delighted. They said they were not members of any church, but they all came and brought a number of their neighbors. Mr. Johnson did not wear his vestments and they did not know what kind of a service it was. But they liked it and got us to come back again and again, after we came home, and now we have a nice little chapel out there, five miles from a railroad, or even a postoffice, and the best of it all is that a hundred young people have been baptized and confirmed in the mission. Wasn't that fine? Those farmers may be poor. Not one of them even owns his farm, but they are some of the finest people you ever saw. All the boys are so proud we helped. Mr. Johnson calls it my mission in particular, because my father is the lay reader in charge.

Parson (coming back): Well, Bob, I think I have got things fixed up for you. I first phoned the chairman of the underprivileged child committee of the Kiwanis, and he got busy and got a friend of his looking for a job for you at the University. But it will take a little money for you to start on, so I phoned the U. D. C.'s and the D. A. R.'s and they can lend you some money that you can pay back when you get through college. Then I phoned the State Rehabilitation Board at the State Capitol and, because you are a cripple, they will pay your fees and for your books. Now, how about your clothes? Can your people furnish them?

Bob: Yes, my father has always done that and says he will continue to do so. I certainly thank you, Mr. Johnson. I knew you were the man to come to, if you want to get anything done properly. But I must be going. I will write you from the University. (Exit.)

Parson: It is a wonderful satisfaction to be able to help a boy like that. (Knock.) Come in. (Enter Mrs. Morrison.) Good morning, Mrs. Morrison. May I present Mr. Winchester from the city?

Mrs. Morrison: So glad to meet you, Mr. Winchester. I just stopped in to remind Mr. Johnson not to forget that we are counting on him to speak to the Woman's Club this afternoon in behalf of the Milk Fund for those poor little half-starved children in the graded schools. You know, Mr. Winchester, we have lots of poor people in the country, and it is surely a wonderful thing to be able to give the ones that need it milk in the school. You just ought to see how their eyes sparkle when they come in to get it. But you won't forget, Mr. Johnson, will you? Goodbye. (Exit.)

Parson: Mrs. Morrison is the President of our Parent-Teachers' Association, and is a great worker.

Rector: Is she a member of the church?

Parson: Oh, no; she is one of the pillars of the Methodist Church here. (Knock.) Come in. (Enter Mrs. Knox.) Good morning, Mrs. Knox. Meet the Rev. Mr. Winchester from the city. They shake hands.)

Mrs. Knox: I am so glad to meet Mr. Winchester. I have heard a great deal of you and your church. Mr. Johnson, did you wish to see me about something?

Parson: Yes, I did. You see, Mr. Winchester, that Mrs. Knox is the chairman of our School Board. Some of the colored ministers came to me recently, saying that they heard their school would have to close at the end of next month.

Mrs. Knox: I greatly regret to say that is the case. You see, we are running behind this year and we don't believe in borrowing, so we must close either the colored or the white schools, and as the whites pay most of the taxes, it is only just the colored schools should close. We deeply regret it, but it must be done.

Parson: The ministers went on to say that they, the colored people, last year continued the school at their expense, the teachers volunteering to teach for whatever could be raised, and one taught for as low as $7 a month, the colored people giving her board. And this year they are willing to try and raise any amount you say, but hope the school board can help also.

Mrs. Knox: Well, if they are that anxious, it does look as if we ought to do something.

Parson: Furthermore, they pointed out that it means spending money now for schooling, or later a larger amount for bigger jails, as the school helps to make their people law-abiding.

Mrs. Knox: That is true. Mr. Johnson, you may tell them that if they will raise $100, the school board will borrow the other $700 to keep their school going the other two months. I am glad to have met you, Mr. Winchester. Good morning, Mr. Johnson. (Exit.)

Parson: I consider that one of the best pieces of work I ever did. The colored people are often so helpless. (Knock.) Come in. (Enter Mary Jones, excitedly.) Why, what is the matter, Mary?

Mary: Please come quick, Mr. Johnson, Mother and Father are having a terrible quarrel. I don't know what is going to happen.

Parson: All right, Mary. I'll come right away. Mr. Winchester, it seems you will have to go back alone to the city. It is now noon, so I can not keep you any longer. I appreciate your coming.

Rector: I have enjoyed being with you a great deal. Come and see me when you can.

(Exeunt.)

Scene IV.

(City Rector's study, several days later. Knock on door.)

Rector: Come in.

Parson (entering): Well, Mr. Winchester, how did you like your taste of a country parson's life?

Rector: I see why they call you the "Parson," all right. Parson means "The Person", and you seem to be the Person of that whole community. It looks like everything goes through you, whether of your own church or not. But what happened to that man and his wife who were quarreling so when I left you?

Parson: Oh, I got them reconciled, and more than that. Yesterday I baptized Mary, the little girl that came for me, and her baby brother, and Mr. and Mrs. Jones have promised to be in my confirmation class.

Rector: I congratulate you.

Parson: But did I convince you we need to keep our country churches open?

Rector: Your work is decidedly different from mine.

Parson: Yes, and we need men to be especially trained for it, as well as equipped.

Rector: Yes, you have convinced me. Just before you come in the other day a rich parishioner gave us $1,000 to go where it would do the most good. We had intended to use it for a new carpet, but last night we had a vestry meeting and I told them of your work, and they decided it should go to buy you a new car and to take care of it. So here you are. (Hands check.)

Parson: This is delightful, Mr. Winchester. I do hope you will convey my thanks to your vestry, and I appreciate your part in it more than I can say.

Rector: Not at all, Mr. Johnson. Your work needs all we can do for it.

Curtain.

* * *

SEPTUAGESIMA.

(Continued from page 5.)

all unrighteousness," therefore we pray "that we may be mercifully delivered by Thy goodness." Notice here, that it is not by our goodness, if there be such, but by His mercy, and by His goodness we may be freed from "those sins which so easily beset us." In closing this collect how appropriate it is that we should offer our ascription of praise to Him who hath made intercession for us.

William E. Callender.

CHURCH INTELLIGENCE

INVITATION ACCEPTED.

The Archbishop of York has accepted the Presiding Bishop's invitation to spend the month of December, 1935, in the United States, participating in a series of notable events. The Archbishop's first appearance will be in the Cathedral of SS. Peter and Paul, Washington, D. C., with the Presiding Bishop and the Bishop of Washington. Later Archbishop Temple will visit other Cathedral centers and a limited list of American universities. He will take part in the semi-centennial celebration of the Student Volunteer Movement, to be held in Cleveland, Ohio.

The Archbishop, now in his fifty-fourth year, is among the foremost intellectual leaders of the Anglican Communion, and many of his books have been widely read in the United States, "Christ the Truth," is, perhaps, the best known; his latest is "Nature, Man and God." A brief biography in The Churchman's Handbook lists his recreation as "walking."

It will be remembered that Archbishop Temple's predecessor, Dr. Lang, visited the United States during the World War. The late Archbishop of Canterbury, Dr. Davidson, attended General Convention in 1904 in Boston.

* * *

PLANS FOR REORGANIZATION OF PHILADELPHIA DIVINITY SCHOOL.

Plans were adopted by the Joint Boards of Trustees and Overseers of the Philadelphia Divinity School at their Mid-Winter meeting, for a reorganization of the school on the basis of the program considered by these same boards at its special meeting in December.

Under the plans as adopted by the Joint Boards, which will first necessitate some changes in the Constitution of the school, the present Board of Trustees will be increased from nine to twelve; all of them laymen as required by the laws of the State of Pennsylvania. The Board of Overseers will comprise twelve clergymen, a reduction of eighteen as compared with the existing number. Hereafter there will be no laymen members of the Board of Overseers.

Rules governing the school provide that no changes in the Constitution can be effected without sixty days' notice. Consequently, before the new plans can be put into actual execution, it will be necessary to hold another meeting of the Joint Boards. This has been fixed for March 26. In the interim the way will be paved for all the present members of Joint Boards to tender their resignations so as to prepare the way for the smaller boards to take over the joint management.

Notwithstanding the school has assets amounting to approximately $1,000,000, economic conditions of the past few years caused the school to suffer reduction in its income from investments. Last April the school term, which normally ends in June, was shortened about one month and various economies were effected. Realizing there had to be a change in theological education, a special committee of experts, none of whom was connected with the school officially, except one, was requested to submit a program.

This committee, comprised of the Rev. Dr. John H. Mockridge, co-rector of St. James' Church, Philadelphia, as chairman; the Rev. Dr. D. A. McGregor, Executive Secretary of the National Department of Missions; Dr. H. Flander Dunbar, of New York, a widely known and distinguished psychiatrist and head of the Association for Clinical Training of Theological Students, the membership of which is composed of physicians and theologians, and the Rev. Dr. W. Arthur Warner, Secretary of the Philadelphia Divinity School and of wide experience in Christian Social Service.

In an interview, following the meeting of the Joint Boards on January 22, when the plans were adopted providing for the suggested program being put into operation, Dr. Warner said:

"When the program was first submitted to the Joint Boards those bodies named a committee of their own members to evolve a plan. This committee comprised of the Rt. Rev. Frank W. Sterrett, Bishop of Bethlehem, as chairman; the Rev. Dr. E. M. Jefferys, rector of St. Peter's Church, Philadelphia, president of the Standing Committee of the Diocese of Pennsylvania; the Rev. N. B. Groton, rector of St. Thomas' Church, Whitemarsh, Penn., who is President of the Associate Alumni; and Messrs. Parker S. Williams, Charles S. Cheston and Dr. Charles E. Beury, all of them prominent laymen, Dr. Beury being President of Temple University. Before they reported on the plan, the members of this committee held a number of meetings and received the cooperation of the committee of which Dr. Mockridge was Chairman.

"As adopted the plan provides that everything shall be centered in training in pastoral theology so that the school may develop a ministry that will be able to meet human needs in our own day, and that the student body may have real human contacts, each student to receive at least nine months' clinical training during his course. There is no intention to minimize educational training.

"It provides that six members of the Board of Overseers shall be men who are known for their pastoral ability and who will actually serve. There will be a Dean and, in addition, a new office of Warden is to be created. The Rev. Dr. George G. Bartlett, the present Dean, who is in full sympathy with the new plan, will resign as Dean, and it is understood he will be elected as Warden, as the Joint Boards believe the duties of that office will require a man with the practical qualifications of Dr. Bartlett.

"No resignations of the present faculty have been asked, nor will they be asked to resign. Eventually there will be a faculty of four professors, one of whom will be the Dean. No steps have as yet been taken in selecting the new Dean. Under the new plan the faculty will give their entire time to the school. Other professors will be called in from time to time in connection with special subjects.

"A very important part of the program and of the plan as adopted is the matter of re-financing. There is a feeling of confidence that this will not be difficult. Between now and the meeting on March 26, an organization will be initiated for re-financing the school for a period of three years."

S. H. Warnock.

* * *

CONFERENCE ON STUDENT PROBLEMS.

Fifteen of the college clergy in the Fifth Province conferred at Brent House, Chicago, January 3 to 5, on student problems in religion and ethics, and on the relation of college work to present-day conditions. The Rev. Dr. T. O. Wedel, National Council Secretary for College Work, led the discussions, Bishop Stewart spoke informally; Bishop Jones, student pastor at Antioch College, led a meditation, and the group also learned something first-hand of the work of Brent House among Oriental students. The conference was called by the Rev. Alden D. Kelley of Madison, chairman of the Provincial Commission on College Work.

* * *

MISS MOORE ACCEPTED BY THE NATIONAL DEPARTMENT OF MISSIONS.

Announcement was made yesterday that Miss Florence Moore, one of the leaders in young people's work of the Church in Philadelphia, has been accepted by the National Department of Missions as a missionary teacher in China, and has left for San Francisco to embark for the Orient. Miss Moore is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Oliver Moore, West Philadelphia, and she is going as the representative of the Girls' Friendly Society, which is undertaking her support in the missionary field as its special missionary object.

Miss Moore, who is a graduate of the 1934 Class of Temple University, where she was active in various organizations and in athletics, has been assigned to St. Faith's School in Yangchow, where she will be assistant to Miss M. Althea Bremer, the head worker of the school. This noted school was founded about twenty years ago and in the troubles of 1927, when Yangchow was overrun by soldiers and the Church compound was occupied by no less than twenty-six different detachments of troops, the school went to smash. Until recently the school was closed.

For a number of years, ever since she was a little girl, Miss Moore said she had wanted to be a missionary, and when one talks with her one knows she has a mind.

"I have always wanted to go to China," she said. "No—none of my family have ever been there, so I can't claim an ancestral urge, like Nora Waln. I have always just wanted to. I made up my mind when I was a little girl."

Miss Moore is a member of Epiphany Church in West Philadelphia, where she has always been active in parish work, teaching in the Sunday School, leading in a Girl Scout troop and working in the Young People's Fellowship. Until she received notice of her acceptance for missionary service in China, she was Chairman of the Diocesan Service Committee of the Fellowship. She became a member of the Girls' Friendly Society about eight years ago.

"I have always been interested in religious education," said Miss Moore, "and to teach in a girls' school. So I inquired around and found that Temple University in Philadelphia, which, of course, is my home, gave just the courses I needed. I also enrolled for some courses at the Church Training School, because I wanted to know more and more about the Church and its work.

"And now I am going to do just what I wanted to do and what I prepared myself for. No, I have no illusions about adventure in a romantic land of pagodas, chrysanthemums and Chinese lanterns. I know there will be plenty of hard work and that lots of things will not be easy. I want to serve and have tried to prepare myself for service, and that's the whole story, except that I can't tell how grateful I am to the Girls' Friendly Society for sending me."

INNITZER COMMITTEE ON RUSSIA CONVENES AT VIENNA.

Cabled despatches from London indicate that the joint Committee on Russia recently formed under the chairmanship of Cardinal Innitzer of Austria met in Vienna on February 4. The Committee represents the Roman Catholic, Protestant, Orthodox and Jewish organizations and churches who are interested in helping religious groups in Soviet Russia. Rabbi Feuchtwang of Vienna is the leader of the Jewish Section, Dr. Henry L. Henriod (Geneva) represents the Universal Christian Council for Life and Work, and Dr. Adolf Keller, also of Geneva, represents the Central Bureau for Relief of European Evangelical Churches.

In a preliminary joint statement the Committee records its conviction that large parts of the Russian people are on the verge of starvation because of the drought. What harvest there was does not benefit the "non-privileged" classes, among whom are all persons who persist in attending religious services or in exercising the religious profession in any creed. Shortage of food products over wide areas of the Soviet Union is confirmed by the decree of December 26, 1934, which admits that the drought did considerable damage to crops.

The statement stresses the humanitarian aspect of the situation and it is expected that a resolution based on the data contained in it will be formally tendered to the Soviet Government through its Vienna representative, together with a request for uncensored information and a plea for permission to aid the stricken people.

(Note: The Soviet Government has always obstinately refused to admit the presence of famine anywhere in Soviet Russia or to allow relief agencies to come to the aid of the sufferers. William Henry Chamberlin in his new book, "Russia's Iron Age", based on fourteen years' residence in Russia, makes the statement that millions died in the famine of 1932-1933, because the government blockaded the affected areas against relief agencies and exercised the strictest censorship of the news from these districts which included the Caucasus, the Ukraine, and Chernigov Province.)

* * *

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT ENDORSES OBSERVANCE OF BROTHERHOOD DAY.

"I am pleased to note that Brotherhood Day, instituted last year by the National Conference of Jews and Christians, was very widely celebrated," the President wrote. "Its observance this year on February 24 offers an opportunity to mobilize the forces of goodwill across the country and to promote common effort on the part of religious groups in all that makes for human welfare and good citizenship. Its association with the birthday of our first President will remind our people of his broad and tolerant spirit and his consistent support of the principles of religious liberty and freedom of conscience."

Brotherhood Day will be observed in hundreds of communities in every state of the union this year under the national chairmanship of Dr. John H. Finley, educator and publicist. A statement outlining the purposes of the observance issued by the National Conference declares: "Brotherhood Day aims not only to wipe out all discords that may still derive from religious differences, but also to emphasize the great constructive tasks which all Americans of every faith have in common. It aims to mobilize the goodwill of people, and their natural friendliness and cooperativeness against the fomentors of group hatreds. Especially in these times, when distressing economic conditions break down the normal resistance of good folk to pernicious propaganda, Brotherhood Day is a call to arms for members of every faith to stand by their belief in human fellowship."

* * *

A NEW GOSPEL.

It is thrilling news that among the fragments of Greek papyri from Egypt recently acquired by the British Museum there are two imperfect leaves and a small scrap which may "fairly claim to be the earliest bit of Christian writing at present known to be extant." The date is not later than the middle of the second century. Mr. H. Idris Bell, the Keeper of the Manuscripts, described the contents of these precious fragments on Wednesday in The Times, and all his readers will await with anxious expectation the book on the subject, which is promised by the Museum. One passage in the imperfect leaves seems to refer to the famous question about the lawfulness of paying tribute to Caesar. Another seems to be a version of the healing of the leper, and it contains a new detail. There are also "striking agreements" between this new Gospel and St. John; three passages which are separate in St. John are here put into a sequence. Mr. Bell only hints at important conclusions which may be based on the discovery when he says that at last we may have been brought into touch with a source used by St. John. —The Guardian.

* * *

LENTEN READING.

A new book for Lenten reading, entitled "The Revealing Christ," is to be issued under the direction of the Presiding Bishop, written by a number of distinguished Churchmen, compiled and edited by the Rev. Canon Bernard Iddings Bell with the assistance of the Rev. Drs. Frederic S. Fleming and Karl Morgan Block, published by Harper and Brothers.

The contents are arranged in ten sections, the first four being brief meditations intended for reading on Ash Wednesday and the Thursday, Friday, and Saturday of that week; the remaining six chapters are intended for the six weeks of Lent, with sections indicated for each week-day. The book may thus be read as a whole or as a series of daily meditations throughout Lent. Titles and authors are as follows:

The Lenten Call, by the Presiding Bishop.

Prayer, the Rev. Dr. Frederic Sydney Fleming.

Fasting, the Rev. Dr. Bernard Iddings Bell.

Almsgiving, the Rev. Dr. Karl Morgan Block.

The Need of the Revealing Christ, the Rev. Dr. Howard Chandler Robbins.

The Foreshadowing of the Revealing Christ, the Very Rev. Dr. Philemon Fowler Sturges.

The Character of the Revealing Christ, the Rt. Rev. Dr. Robert Edward Lee Strider.

The Message of the Revealing Christ, the Rev. Dr. Joseph Fort Newton.

The Kingdom of the Revealing Christ, the Rt. Rev. Dr. George Craig Stewart.

The Passion and Triumph of the Revealing Christ, the Rt. Rev. Dr. Philip Mercer Rhinelander.

For many years past the Bishop of London has focused the attention of his diocese on some one small book for Lenten reading. While no one's reading in that season is limited to one volume, there is much value, it is felt, in centering attention on one book with a vital subject presented from many points of view.

"The purpose of God to reveal Himself precedes every attempt to seek Him," writes the Presiding Bishop in the meditation which opens the book. "The souls of men find comfort and assurance in the presence of a Saviour who goes before them into life. . . . The knowledge of God, made possible for us through His entrance into the world that He has made, is the substance of one's experience with Christ in Lent. In that knowledge is the only satisfaction for the deepest human need."

VIRGINIA.

Rt. Rev. H. St. George Tucker, D. D., Bishop
Rt. Rev. Frederick D. Goodwin, D. D., Coadjutor.

Theological Seminary Notes.

A more optimistic feeling regarding the financial outlook of the Church and a refreshened interest in the missionary enterprise were reported by Dr. Lewis Franklin, vice-president and treasurer of the National Council, when he visited the Virginia Seminary recently.

Dr. Franklin attributes the new interest in missions and brighter prospects for the Church's meeting her future financial obligations not so much to recovery in business conditions as to a new spirit among Church members which developed at the General Convention. Delegates gathered at Atlantic City full of discouragement and lacking hope, but as they got into the stride of working out the manifold problems a grim determination sprang up, a resolve that the Church must hold her line and not further retreat or retrench.

The National Council at its meeting February 12 has considered the budget for 1935, now set at $2,313,000. Dr. Franklin feels confident that the Church will be able to meet this budget and hold it without further cuts.

The Church has issued orders that the missionary budget for 1935 must be balanced and no further debt incurred.

The reawakened and wider interest in missions arose at Atlantic City, and Dr. Franklin felt the visits of thirty teams of three persons each, which visited 400 cities in the month following General Convention, considerably aided in the revival of mission interest.

Dr. Franklin views the missionary enterprise "as the sweeping power of God through the years." We are to judge the mission venture in terms of contrast, he suggested; and to note how marvellously Christianity has won its way in Japan and China within recent years from the most insignificant beginnings. Dr. Franklin said he had never found any man opposed to missions once he had been informed of the true nature of the enterprise.

Valuable Lectures.

The winter term at the Virginia Seminary has been conspicuous for a series of valuable extra-curricular lectures by persons prominent in the Church's life.

The Rev. John W. Suter, Jr., D. D., of New York, lectured in January and also Professor James Thayer Addison, of the Cambridge Seminary; Dr. Lewis Franklin, treasurer of National Council, and Miss Grace A. Lindley, Executive Secretary of Woman's Auxiliary.

The Rt. Rev. William Remington, Missionary Bishop of Eastern Oregon, was among the January visitors to the Seminary Hill.

Theological Seminary Notes.

Christianity, in spite of its relatively small number of adherents, exerts in present-day China an influence far out of proportion to its numerical strength, Professor James Thayer Addison of the Episcopal Theological School, Cambridge, Mass., told Virginia Seminarians January 26, in the last of three special lectures on China.

The great influence of the Christian movement in China is attributed to its work in educating the younger Chinese, now taking foremost parts in the rise of the new nation, and in its consistent interest and leadership in all efforts toward social reform.

Dr. Addison emphasized the vitality of the Christian movement in China today, and the fact that young Chinese look to Christianity for guidance and information in solving their manifold problems. Of all religions only Christianity has met and helped the Chinese to overcome their problems.

Christianity suffered a decided setback during the Nationalist Movement of 1925-1928, the lecturer said, but really benefited by the trials of those years. A winnowing of weaker and half-hearted members took place and the great majority who remained loyal were strengthened in their faith. The nationalist movement served to accelerate a movement towards further placing of responsibility for the Chinese Church upon native shoulders and towards developing a truly indigenous Christianity. The other salient feature in history of Christianity in China during the last ten years has been the efforts towards union among missionary bodies. One-third of the total number of Protestant communicants belong to the Church of Christ in China, a merged body of Congregationalists and Presbyterians.

There are four distinct attitudes apparent on the part of the Chinese towards Christianity in China. The prevailing attitude of the vast bulk of four hundred and twenty millions of Chinese is complete indifference. Among the more educated classes, however, especially those who are ardently nationalistic, Christianity is viewed as a foreign importation, as an alien cultural invasion. The extreme form of this nationalistic antipathy is the Communistic attitude which declares Christianity to be a form of economic imperialism and which condemns it as it does all religion as a deadly drug on the people. Communism is especially virulent in its attacks on Christianity, because it is the one religion of all in China which is demonstrating real vitality and ability to spread. Taoism, Confucianism, Buddhism and Mohammedanism are steadily waning in influence, Dr. Addison reported.

The typical attitude of the young Chinese today is that of the agnostic or secularist. The missionary problem today in China and in other foreign lands is not to try to persuade devotees of a native religion to turn to Christianity, but to make religion of any kind at all appealing to skeptical youth. The situation abroad as at home is that of an irreligious rising generation. The people who are leading the way in the new China of today are secularists.

Dr. Addison estimated that there are today about 2,500,000 Roman Catholics in China, and between 600,000 and 700,000 Protestants.

F. W. Kates.

Sons. at the Episcopal High School.

The following boys attending the Episcopal High School this session are sons of graduates of the Seminary:

Alfred Rives Berkeley, Jr.,
Edward Ryant Dyer, Jr.,
Edward Howard Goodwin (son of the Rev. W. A. R. Goodwin, D. D.),
John Gravatt Goodwin (son of the Rev. Robert A. Goodwin),
William Arthur Rutherford Goodwin, Jr.
Julian Jacquelin Mason (son of the Rev. W. Roy Mason),
Bruce Kinlock Nelson (son of the Rev. Robert B. Nelson),
Robert Edward Lee Strider, II,
Beverley Dandridge Tucker, Jr.,
Joseph MacNaughton Waterman, Jr.,
John Armistead Welbourn, Jr.,
Theodore St. Clair Will, Jr.

ATLANTA.

Rt. Rev. H. J. Mikell, D. D., Bishop.

Dr. Frances Wei, President of Central China College, Wuchang, China, will conduct a Quiet Day for the clergy of the Diocese of Atlanta on Wednesday, February 20, in the Church of the Holy Trinity, Decatur, just outside of Atlanta, Georgia.

There will be a celebration of Holy Communion at ten o'clock, which will be followed by prayers, a meditation and addresses by Dr. Wei. Luncheon will be served at one o'clock.

The women of the city will be privileged to hear Dr. Wei speak for one hour from two to three o'clock. Following this, Dr. Wei will again address the men and the meeting will close about five o'clock.

Dr. Wei, who is traveling about the country, speaking in interest of the Forward Movement of the Church, was one of the most interesting speakers at the General Convention. Bishop H. J. Mikell and the clergy of the diocese are looking eagerly to having Dr. Wei with them.

A. B. Gray.

NEW YORK.

Rt. Rev. Wm. T. Manning, D. D., Bishop
Rt. Rev. A. S. Lloyd, D. D., Suffragan
Rt. Rev. Chas. K. Gilbert, D. D., Suffragan

Grace Chapel Commemorates Thirty-ninth Anniversary.

Grace Chapel in the Parish of Grace Church, New York, commemorated the thirty-ninth anniversary of its present building at 410 East Fourteenth Street, with a special service Sunday afternoon, February 10, at four o'clock. Dr. W. Russell Bowie, rector of Grace Church, preached the sermon. Attending were the Rt. Rev. Benjamin M. Washburn, D. D., of Newark; the Rev. Horace E. Clute, rector of St. George's Episcopal Church of Brooklyn; the Rev. Sidney T. Cooke and the Rev. Eliot White, who were all formerly associated with the chapel. A processional of representatives of the various groups and departments of the chapel was a feature of the service.

The Rev. E. Felix Kloman of Grace Church will act as vicar of the chapel during the next three months in the absence of the Rev. Francis A. Sanborn, who is ill. Grace Chapel serves as a neighborhood settlement center. The present building is the fourth it has occupied. The first chapel was built in 1849 at Madison Avenue and Twenty-third Street, which later became the Church of the Incarnation. The second was erected in 1860, on Fourteenth Street near Fourth Avenue, and when this was burned in 1872, another was built on the same site four years later. The present structure was consecrated on February 12, 1896.

Grace Chapel provides a varied recreational, educational and social program for children and adults in the district. This includes gymnastics and athletic games for men and boys, girls' crafts, such as pottery, weaving, etc.; boys' crafts, such as metal and wood work; a sewing class, a language class and a music school. A primary children's group meets daily from Tuesday through Saturday, and social groups of different ages have their meetings here. Services are held Sundays at 11 A. M. and 8 P. M. The chapel staff consists of the Rev. Frederick W. Leech, Miss Lois F. Tilley, assistant for Social Service; Mr. Sam F. Schneider, director of Boys' Work; Mrs. Chester O. Root, director of Girls' Work; Mr. L. Clinton Eley, organist, and Mrs. Eley, leader of the choir and instructor in the Music School. The Church Army recently established its headquarters in the building next to the chapel.

WASHINGTON.

Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman D. D. Bishop.

The annual corporate communion of the men and boys of the Potomac Assembly of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew will be held at Epiphany Church February 22, the birthday anniversary of George Washington, at 8 A. M. Bishop James E. Freeman will be the celebrant.

A fellowship breakfast will follow with Bishop Freeman and Leon C. Palmer, General Secretary of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, from Philadelphia, as speakers.

The Conference on Interracial Relations, which has been in session in Washington, held an open meeting on Tuesday, February 12, at New York Avenue Presbyterian Church at eight o'clock in the evening. Canon Anson Phelps Stokes of Washington Cathedral, was the leader in the discussion of this meeting.

The motion picture, "The New World," which received such enthusiastic praise at the Convention in Atlantic City this past fall, will be shown at the Willard Hotel on Monday evening, February 18, at 8 P. M., for the Woman's Auxiliary of the diocese.

An important event in the music life of the diocese will take place on Passion Sunday afternoon in the Great Choir of Washington Cathedral, when the combined choirs of St. Paul's Church, Baltimore, and Washington Cathedral, will sing the Crucifixion, by Sir John Stainer. Both of these choirs are recognized leaders in the field of all male choirs and much may be expected from such an arrangement.

The D. C. Chapter, American Guild of Organists, is meeting at the several churches each month and, so far, this year has visited three of the Episcopal churches: In November, the meeting was at Epiphany Church, when the Rev. F. Bland Tucker gave a delightful address on the subject of Hymnology. The December meeting was held at St. Alban's, following an annual Guild service of Evening Prayer, conducted by the Rev. Charles T. Warner, D. D., and sung by St. Alban's Choir under the direction of its organist and choirmaster, Walter H. Nash, F. A. G. O.

St. Stephen's was the scene of the February meeting, when the organist and assistant rector, the Rev. John Robinson, and his assistant organist, Miss Claudine Ferguson, were hosts to the Guild.

M. M. W.

PENNSYLVANIA

Rt. Rev. Francis M. Taitt, S. T. D., Bishop

Alumni of Philadelphia Divinity School Meet.

Bishops and other clergy of the Church from various dioceses will attend the Annual Mid-Winter Meeting of the Associate Alumni of the Philadelphia Divinty School, which will be held in the Christian Association of the University of Pennsylvania, Thirty-sixth and Locust Streets. The Rev. Canon

Ernest C. Earp, rector of the Church of the Redeemer, Bryn Mawr, will be the special preacher at the Alumni service to be held in St. Andrew's Collegiate Chapel of the School, at 5:30 P. M. The Rev. William B. Spofford, of New York, editor of "The Witness", will be the special speaker at the Alumni Dinner in the Christian Association building at 6:30 P. M.

Galilee Mission.

Leaders in public relief and community social service work, including officials of the Welfare Federation, and prominent clergy and laymen of the Church took part last Monday in commemoration of the thirty-eighth anniversary of the widely known Galilee Mission, a rescue work for men, which also includes in its operation a Boys' Home, recently organized to care for and restore to their families scores of boys who have "taken to the road" as a result of economic conditions.

The commemoration was held in the central headquarters of the Mission in Vine Street, and also included a tribute to its Director, George W. Wilkins, who, in addition to heading the social rehabilitation work at Galilee, has been prominently identified with the Citizens Public Relief Work, and is the organizer and director of the City Shelter for Homeless Men.

The program included addresses by the following widely known clergy of the Church, among the institutions of which the Galilee Mission is one: the Revs. Charles E. Tuke, D. D., C. E. Snowden, D. D., John Craig Roak and N. Herbert Caley. William A. Lippincott, Jr., representing the University of Pennsylvania Christian Association, also made an address.

On Sunday night Mr. Wilkins was in charge of the program. Speakers included the heads of virtually all the recognized organizations in the city conducting a similar type of work as Galilee Mission.

The Rt. Rev. Francis M. Taitt presided and made the principal address at the meeting on Monday night. Other clergy of the Episcopal communion who were among the speakers were the Revs. Edward H. Bonsall, Jr., C. Herbert Reese, George H. Toop, D. D., and Louis C. Washburn, S. T. D.

The choirs of St. Alban's Church, Olney, and of St. Matthew's Church, Philadelphia, rendered a musical program.

New Members of Normal School Faculty.

The Rev. William H. Pickford, head of the faculty of the Church Normal School of the Episcopal Church, which specializes in teacher-training for the Sunday Schools of all parishes of that communion in this diocese, yesterday announced the appointment of new members of the faculty, who will be added to the teaching staff when the school re-opens for its second semester on Thursday next.

One of the new members of the faculty is the Rev. Dr. Daniel A. MacGregor, head of the Department of Religious Education of the National Council and widely known as a Bible authority. Dr. MacGregor is one of the committee of experts, which at the request of the Trustees and Overseers of the Philadelphia Divinity School, recommended the recent program that resulted in the adoption last Tuesday by the Joint Boards of the plans for reorganization of the Divinity School. Dr. MacGregor will conduct a special course on the Bible in the Normal School.

Another addition to the Normal School Faculty is the Rev. Dr. Franklin Joiner, rector of St. Clement's Church, Philadelphia, who will conduct a special course on "Personal Religion". The Rev. Dr. George Cadwalader Foley, retired professor of Systematic Divinity at the Philadelphia Divinity School, recognized as one of the foremost theologians in the United States, will conduct a special course in Theology.

S. H. Warnock.

MICHIGAN

Rt. Rev. Herman Page, D. D., Bishop

Annual Convention.

Nearly seven hundred persons, including clergy, laymen and women, gathered in Detroit January 30 and 31, for the One Hundred and Second Annual Convention of the Diocese and the concurrent Convention of Women. The members of the two Conventions came from the 125 parishes and missions in the diocese, which comprises the eastern half of the lower peninsula. Before the session of Convention, on January 29, the Rt. Rev. Herman Page, D. D., Bishop of the diocese, requested the clergy to attend a meeting at St. Paul's Cathedral, Detroit, at which a number of matters to come before the Convention the next day were discussed.

The Convention opened at St. Paul's Cathedral on Wednesday, January 30, with a joint service of Holy Communion. Bishop Page delivered his annual address.

Following the service, the Diocesan Convention organized in the Cathedral House, and the Convention of Women adjourned to the Central Branch of the Y. W. C. A., where the remainder of its sessions were conducted. Officers of the Diocesan Convention included Bishop Page, President; Charles O. Ford, Secretary; Frank J. Weber, Treasurer, and the Rev. F. B. Creamer, rector of Christ Church, Detroit, Chairman of the Committee on Dispatch of Business. Mrs. Walter C. Chaffee, Diocesan President of the Woman's Auxiliary, and Mrs. James H. McDonald, Chairman of the 1935 Convention, were in charge of the Convention of Women. At both Conventions, officers and committees were elected, reports received, and plans made for the current year. A visitor to the Convention of Women was Mrs. Robert G. Happ, of South Bend, Indiana, a member of the National Board of the Woman's Auxiliary, who addressed the Convention on the subject, "Know Your Church."

The Executive Council, the Trustees of the Centennial Fund and the Trustees of the Diocese, all entrusted with the handling of large sums of money in trust for the Diocese, reported conditions slightly improved in 1934 over those of 1933, and spoke encouragingly of the outlook for 1935. The Diocese stayed within its income for 1934, and overpaid its pledge to the General Church.

A number of changes were made in the Diocesan Canons, chiefly with a view to modernizing and simplying lengthy Canons so changed and amended over a period of years that the original intent had been somewhat clouded. The revised Canons more accurately interpret actual procedure and in some instances place responsibility upon small elective groups. Among the Canons amended were those on Lay Delegates, Parish Meetings, Trustees of the Diocese (in which the Bishop is made a member of the body instead of acting purely in an ex-officio capacity), the Church Pension Fund, the Annual Diocesan Budget, the spreading of which over the parishes is now left entirely to the discretion of the Council by any method it may choose, the Executive Council, and the Ecclesiastical Court in Marital Relations. This latter Canon has been re-named "Of the Separate Jurisdiction of the Bishop and of the Ecclesiastical Court in Marital Relations", and, as the new name implies, now gives the Bishop equal power with the Court in deciding cases of application for annulment or for communicant status and the right to apply for Baptism or Confirmation, in case the applicant elects to apply to him.

The Convention of Women of the Diocese, following the joint session at the opening service in St. Paul's Cathedral on Wednesday morning, at which Bishop Page made his annual address, adjourned to the Central Y. W. C. A., where the remainder of its sessions were held. An unusually large Convention attended the meetings, nearly 500 women, including delegates and visitors. The guest speaker was Mrs. R. G. Happ of South Bend, Indiana, a member of the National Board of the Woman's Auxiliary, on the subject, "Know Your Church."

At the Annual Convention dinner on Wednesday evening, 850 persons heard the address of Dr. Francis C. M. Wei, of Central China College, Wuchang. The Rt. Rev. Herman Page, D. D., Bishop of the Diocese, acted as Toastmaster. One of the features of the Convention was the singing, both at the opening service and at the Convention Dinner, of the twelve English boy choristers of the London (England) Choir School, who are making a "good-will tour" of the United States with Carlton Borrow, A. R. C. O., their director. They sang unaccompanied and undirected.

St. John's Church Votes to Remain in Present Location.

The congregation of St. John's Church, Detroit, at its seventy-sixth parish meeting, voted unanimously to maintain the church in its present location. Thus ended a long period of indecision and anxiety for this historic old parish, founded over seventy-five years ago and still operating on its original site. The widening of Woodward Avenue, Detroit's principal north-and-south thoroughfare, has been going on for some months, and while it has been possible for the city planners to avoid most of the churches along the street, it has been apparent that St. John's, now almost downtown, but once "out in the country", would somehow be affected. The decision to remain on the present site will permit the making of plans for the preservation of as much as possible of the present fabric of the buildings, including the many beautiful memorials presented to the church since its founding. One of the most notable of these is a super-reredos in Venetian Mosaic, presented to the Church by members of the family of the late Governor Henry P. Baldwin of Michigan, one of the founders of the parish. It is considered one of the finest examples of Venetian Mosaic to be found in the United States.

Under the leadership of the Rev. Irwin C. Johnson, rector of St. John's, the parish is launching an enlarged program of service to the down-town community, hoping particularly to reach the young men and women living near the church.

Hostel for Boys of Teen-Age.

A new feature of the work at St. John's is the opening of a hostel for teen-age boys, known as "Faber House", a memorial to the late Rt. Rev. W. F. Faber of Montana, a former rector of St. John's, who died last summer. The hostel will be housed in the old rectory, next to the church; the building has been renovated, largely through the work of unemployed boys and men, and remodeled to provide living quarters for twenty-five young men and a supervisory staff. Game and reading rooms will be provided, and the gymnasium and athletic equipment in the Parish House will be made available for their use. Faber House will be conducted under the supervision of the rector, and will be used for employed young men under twenty years of age, who will be given living quarters at a nominal cost. The new project has been made possible by members of the parish and other interested friends.

KENTUCKY

Rt. Rev. C. E. Woodcock, D. D., Bishop

Merging the Diocese of Kentucky and the Diocese of Lexington.

At the recent session of the Convention of the Diocese of Kentucky a motion was made and carried that a committee be appointed to confer with a like committee from the Diocese of Lexington, having in mind the consolidation of the two dioceses.

The Convention of Lexington met a week later and also appointed a similar committee. These committees expect to have a joint conference shortly.

There seems to be a feeling that the Church would prosper with only one diocese in the state, as it was forty years ago. The apparent reason for agitating the consolidation, at the bottom, is lack of money. Both dioceses are largely missionary and the hard times and depression of the last few years have almost prohibited any extension in the rural work of either diocese.

The Diocese of Lexington was created in 1895, its territory being taken entirely from the mother diocese. Its first Bishop was the Rt. Rev. Lewis W. Burton, D. D., who was rector of St. Andrew's Church, Louisville, at the time of his election. The See City of Lexington has a population of 45,000 and two churches, old Christ Church and the Church of the Good Shepherd. The Rev. Christopher P. Sparling, D. D., rector of Christ Church, was at one time in charge of St. John's Church, Louisville. Both Newport and Covington are larger than Lexington, but they are on the edge of the diocese, across from Cincinnati. The mountains of Eastern Kentucky are in the Lexington diocese, and the greater part of the work is missionary and under present depressed conditions, most discouraging.

The Diocese of Kentucky takes in Louisville with a population of 350,000, and all the western part of the state. There has been talk of merging three of the largest churches in Louisville, but it is hoped nothing will come of the agitation. Should a calamity like that happen, the diocese could not support itself, nor pay the salary of a Bishop. There is much missionary work needed to be done both in and out of Louisville, handicapped for lack of funds—cancelling the overhead of one diocese would leave more money for missionary effort.

All this is, of course, tentative. Nothing can be done finally, until the merger is approved by the General Convention meeting in Cincinnati in 1937. In the meantime may prayers be offered, that those persons to whom is entrusted this important investigation and decision may be guided by the Holy Spirit and a way found for the further upbuilding and growth of God's Kingdom upon earth.

John J. Saunders,
Diocesan Chairman,
Committee on Publicity.

Memorial Service—Mrs. Sarah Pringle McCraven.

St. Paul's Parish in Henderson, Ky., has sustained a grievous loss in the sudden and unexpected passing into life eternal of Mrs. Sarah Pringle McCraven. A daughter of a former rector of St. Paul's Church, the Rev. J. Maxwell Pringle (1868-1880); she was most faithful and loyal to the Church she loved; her life was a quiet service given with her whole heart to those in need. She was a shining example of unassuming saintliness, rare and beautiful.

The meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary, held in the rectory on February 4, opened with a memorial service to all the members who have passed into the greater life of service and growth. The service was held in the St. Thomas' Chapel in the rectory, and was led by the Branch President, Mrs. Susan G. Weever. Mrs. Juliet Alves Johnstone read the following tribute, which she had written to Mrs. McCraven:

". . . The room is more than mute,
It holds the stillness of an altar,
The light of days' deep flowering;
And from her submissive form
With gently folded hands
It passes, leaving her earth-home
Serene—She who heeded
Our heart-cryings, our fragile dreams
Of tarnished baubles, a child's
Naked hands held out for bread—
It passes in full-blossomed grace,
Bequeathing this flower-hushed Amen!
—Juliet Alves Johnstone."

ALABAMA.

Rt. Rev. W. G. McDowell, D. D., Bishop.

N. A. L. A. Course.

A most helpful Mission on the Bible was recently held in Montgomery by the Rev. Gardiner L. Tucker, Executive Secretary of the Department of Religious Education in the Province of Sewanee. He came at the invitation of the three parishes of the city and gave two courses of lectures, one at the Church of the Ascension and the other at a local hotel.

The theme was "The Eternal Covenant," which was a presentation of the Bible in dramatic form. It proved very popular. The attendance was most gratifying, being made up of representatives from the three parishes and also many others. This is one of the N. A. L. A. courses and many expressed a desire to stand the examination and to get credit for the course.

Twenty-fifth Anniversary.

The twenty-fifth anniversary of the laying of the cornerstone of the Church of the Ascension, Montgomery, was celebrated on January 25. At this service there was an address by Algernon Blair, senior warden of the parish and one of the original founders of the church. The present rector, the Rev. P. N. McDonald, has been in charge of this parish since 1919.

A conference of the clergy of the diocese has been called by Bishop W. G. McDowell to meet in St. Paul's Church Selma, February 19-21. At that time Bishop Maxon of Tennessee will be leader, and the subject will be "Our Discipleship."

OREGON.

Annual Convention—Bishop Sumner Honored.

The forty-sixth Annual Convention of the Diocese of Oregon was held in St. Stephen's Cathedral, Portland, on Wednesday, January 30, and was distinguished by many features of exceeding interest to Churchmen in the Diocese.

In the first place, this convention marked the twentieth anniversary of the Episcopacy of Bishop Sumner, who came to Oregon from the Cathedral, Chicago, Illinois, in January, 1915, who, in his Convention Address, detailed the progress of the diocese since that time. The Bishop was honored by the clergy and laity of the diocese at the Annual Convention dinner with a gift of over one thousand dollars, which, at his request, will be used in the missionary work of the diocese.

Another feature which made this Convention memorable, was in the large number of delegates who attended and shared in the business of the Convention. It was estimated that over twenty-five per cent more members and delegates were present than in the last two or three years, and interest in Convention proceedings was high.

The presence of the Rt. Rev. Thomas Jenkins, Bishop of the Missionary District of Nevada, gave to the Convention a happy, personal note, especially to Bishop Sumner, for, as Bishop Sumner announced, Bishop Jenkins was the first priest called by Bishop Sumner to the diocese after the latter's arrival, and it seemed only fitting that he should be with us at this time. Bishop Jenkins, during his visit, had consecrated the new church of St. Hilda's Mission, Monmouth, which he had founded while rector of St. Barnabas' Parish, McMinnville. He had also addressed the Diocesan Woman's Auxiliary at their annual service in St. David's Church, Portland, and was to be the special speaker at the diocesan dinner. His many friends were glad to welcome him back to his old home.

The Rev. A. J. Mockford, rector of St. Paul's Parish, Oregon City, was elected Secretary of the Convention, and the Rev. Richard F. Ayres, vicar of St. Michael and All Saints' Church, Portland, assistant secretary. The Rev. Messrs. Oswald W. Taylor, R. A'Court Simmonds and the Ven. H. D. Chambers were elected clerical members of the Standing Committee of the Diocese.

Francis H. Ball.

NORTH TEXAS

Rt. Rev. E. C. Seaman, D. D., Missionary Bishop.

Bishop Seaman's Tenth Anniversary.

In the Missionary District of North Texas the tenth anniversary of Bishop Seaman's Consecration was observed on January 18, with a service of Holy Communion, following a quiet hour in Creighton Chapel of Seaman Hall, Episcopal Student Center of Texas Technological College in Lubbock. The Bishop conducted a meditation, basing it upon the Consecration vows, and was also the celebrant, assisted by the Rev. Lyle S. Barnett of Lubbock, who arranged the observance; the Rev. Alex B. Hanson, of Colorado, and the Rev. W. H. Martin, of Stamford.

Luncheon was served afterward by Mrs. M. V. Gray, house mother of the Hall.

The Bishop's wife and children are spending the winter in Tucson, Arizona, where a daughter is under treatment for acute arthritis and responding to it.

Twenty-fifth Annual Convocation.

At the twenty-fifth Annual Convocation of the Missionary District of North Texas in St. Andrew's Parish, Amarillo, the Rev. F. A. Foster, rector, January 20 and 21, attendance was unusually good, although a sudden "norther" brought zero weather the first night.

The Rev. Willis P. Gerhart of Abilene was the preacher and Bishop Seaman the celebrant at the Corporate Communion of the District on Sunday morning.

At a joint session of Convocation and the District Branch of the Woman's Auxiliary, Mrs. Benjamin S. Brown of Kansas City, President of the Woman's Auxiliary in the Province of the Southwest, was the first speaker. Her address was followed by the first annual address of Mrs. Thomas Fendol West of Lubbock, District President of the Woman's Auxiliary, and Bishop Seaman's annual address, which reviewed the progress of twenty-five years, of which Bishop Seaman has served in the District for nineteen years as General Missionary, Parish Priest and Bishop. The address dealt also with the Forward Movement, asking the District's whole-hearted cooperation. The Bishop proposed the creation of a Cathedral Parish modeled in part after that of St. Paul's, Boston, and in part after that of Gethsemane, Fargo, N. D. Convocation next day voted approval of the proposed plan.

St. Mary's Mission, Big Spring, was admitted to the status of a Parish, the first such development in the District. The Rev. P. Walter Henckell, formerly of Dalhart in North Texas, became the first rector on February 1.

Fancher Upshaw, District Treasurer of the Church Program, reported that, including the Every Man's Offering, the District had raised the full amount of its 1934 National Council quota acceptance, although it is not known that the special offering will count on the quota.

The District Branch of the Woman's Auxiliary undertook definite responsibility for a share of the 1935 quota, and Convocation approved the objective assumed by District representatives at General Convention.

The Convention Assessment, C. J. E. Lowndes, Treasurer, for this year, includes an item of $180, to apply on next Convocation's expenses. Emmanuel Parish, San Angelo, by rotation, is the place for the 1936 meeting. St. Luke's Mission, Stamford, has also invited it.

The Bishop announced the transfer of the Rev. Newton C. Smith from the pastoral care of the Pampa field to the Clarendon-Childress-Quanah field, his residence continuing in Amarillo for the present.

NORTH CAROLINA.

Rt. Rev. E. A. Penick, D. D., Bishop.

Theodore Partrick, Jr.

Editorial from The Raleigh News and Observer:

Never a quieter gentleman came to Raleigh as a minister than Theodore Partrick, Jr., who took not the world for his parish but his parish for his whole world. The city would never have known him if it had waited to feel his presence in any lash of words from his pulpit. But the city—a city that extended from Hayes Barton to the penitentiary, from the proudest Episcopalians, born to pews as to the purple, to the most churchless boy lost in crime—did know him and love him, not as a man in a pulpit, but as a man close at hand in trouble, gentle and simple and kind, who made it his ministry to bless men in their suffering and not to terrify them in their sins.

He was not a great scholar though he had a scholar's love for the tradition of his Church and of his country and of the English past, which lay behind them both. Last summer in a belated vacation from a crowded ministry he found at last the time and the money to indulge his old enthusiasm and his intelligent curiosity about the past of the traditions in which he stood. He came back content and strengthened to the work of his heart.

He was not a great preacher. He often said so himself, sometimes unduly depreciating his ability. He had no ambition to be a great preacher. He wished rather to speak in direct helpfulness to individual men and women who needed to be helped. His distinction and Raleigh's loss is to be found in the fact that he had, as few men Raleigh has known have had, that genius for goodness which is the greatest art of all.

Raw-boned in his clericals and almost laconic in his language, he was a man without the least pretentions to priestliness. There was no oil of unction on his tongue. There was not the least solemnity about him. He laughed briefly but heartily and often. He saw life with both sympathy and humor.

His dying somehow makes heaven simpler, certainer, more credible. In the obviousness of his goodness and his faith, immortality is no more than a man opening a door, certain of welcome. So as we miss him in his death, also from his death we may take heart. As he followed in so much gentleness and humility and faith One greater than himself, so we may follow him and hope for welcome, too.

Poem.

To Rev. Theodore Partrick, Jr.

We place your body in the tomb,
To wait a distant day;
But down the years we'll often meet
The things you gave away:
Good fellowship, a helping hand—
Encouragement and prayer—
A firmer faith in God and man—
And eagerness to share—
Friendship and unselfish love,
The best you had to give;
And on the hills and down the years
This part of you will live.

Alex C. D. Noe.

Ayden, N. C.

RHODE ISLAND

Rt. Rev. J. DeWolf Perry, D. D., Bishop

Mrs. Sibley Rebukes Father Coughlin.

In a thinly veiled referenec to Father Coughlin, Mrs. Harper Sibley of Rochester, N. Y., speaking on Missions in Grace Church, Providence, rebuked the fiery broadcaster for his share in the defeat of the World Court measure. With the same intimate and moving appeal that has won her high leadership among the women of the Church, Mrs. Sibley has performed a fine service in this city and state for the twin causes of missions and international understanding. The impression she has left is profound.

As the only woman on the interdenominational commission of fifteen which appraised the Christian missions of the Orient and wrote the provocative "Rethinking Missions", she described the peoples of India, China and Japan as she saw and knew them. It was a sympathetic point of view she took in each of her three broadcasts, in her address at the annual parish meeting of Grace Church and in the extended interview she gave to The Providence Journal. Coming so soon after the shock of the unexpected defeat of the World Court treaty, her interpretation of the Orientals, especially the Japanese, in terms of brotherhood, comforted thousands of church folk in despair over the prospect of national isolation.

Social Workers Stirred Up.

Our social workers, just as they were getting ready for Social Service Sunday, the Third Sunday after Epiphany, were all stirred up this week and put on the defensive by the lecture Canon Bernard Iddings Bell gave last Monday night at "The School of Christian Life", conducted by the Diocesan Department of Religious Education at St. Martin's Church, Providence.

The first statement to which they disagreed was, "I can see no difference between the Church League for Industrial Democracy and the League for Industrial Democracy. They have pretty much the same program and they use pretty much the same methods to carry it out."

His second was:

"There is really no such thing as progress. A social order comes up, flourishes, declines and disintegrates, or is destroyed. But a remnant of the righteous is saved and that remnant brings in a new order, which breeds its own evils, sometimes worse than those they supercede. The idea that sacrifice and suffering today can be endured or even rejoiced in because as a result the day after tomorrow the Millennium will be ushered in, is all bosh. There is neither history nor religion in it. Sacrifice and suffering are religious because through them we attain spiritual truth." Then he added for good measure that he was looking for the collapse of our present Capitalistic order.

Along came a meeting of the Rhode Island Chapter of the Church League for Industrial Democracy on Wednesday night in the same parish house, with Dr. Norman B. Nash, professor of Christian Ethics in the Episcopal Theological Seminary at Cambridge, as guest speaker.

He made an interesting address on what the General Convention did for Social Service, but before he could begin CLID spent half an hour shooting at the Canon, and when Dr. Nash came to question period the shooting was resumed.

The gravaman of the Canon's offense is that he labeled as a bit of Rousseauvian fallacy the very first tenet of the social worker: Society contains within it the power to reform itself.

The Rev. Russell S. Hubbard, rector of the church and chairman of the Rhode Island CLID Chapter, in the end said the word that best disposed of the imbroglio for a lot of us. And that was: "It's a fine thing to have the Canon in the Diocese. He deliberately stirs us up so as to make us think. But it won't do to take all his teachings straight. As a gadfly, though, he is an unqualified success."

F. W. J.

MISSOURI

Rt. Rev. F. F. Johnson, D. D., Bishop
Rt. Rev. Henry K. Sherrill, Bishop

Annual Convention.

The ninety-sixth Annual Convention of the Diocese of Missouri, held January 22, in the Bishop Tuttle Memorial, St. Louis, was honored by the presence of the Rt. Rev. James De Wolf Perry, D. D., Presiding Bishop, who spoke to the Convention on "Church Unity," and of the Rt. Rev. William P. Remington, Bishop of Eastern Oregon, who spoke on the Forward Movement of the Episcopal Church.

The Convention opened with a service of the Holy Communion in Christ Church Cathedral. In his annual address to the Convention following the service, Bishop Scarlett urged the support of two national issues now before the country: The President's plan for social security, and his proposal that the United States enter the World Court.

The annual diocesan service of dedication was held in the Cathedral Tuesday evening. The choirs of several churches, vestries and members of

(Continued on Page 22.)

FAMILY DEPARTMENT

FEBRUARY.

2. Presentation of Christ. (Saturday.)
3. Fourth Sunday after Epiphany.
10. Fifth Sunday after Epiphany.
17. Septuagesima.
24. Sexagesima.
25. St. Matthias.* (Monday.)

* * *

COLLECT FOR SEPTUAGESIMA SUNDAY.

O Lord, we beseech Thee favorably to hear the prayers of Thy people, that we, who are justly punished for our offenses, may be mercifully delivered by Thy goodness for the glory of Thy name, through Jesus Christ our Saviour, Who liveth and reigneth with Thee and the Holy Ghost, one God, world without end. Amen.

THE GIFT OF WILL.

Laid on Thine altar, O my Lord divine,
Accept my gift this day, for Jesus' sake;
I have no jewels to adorn Thy shrine,
Nor any world-famed sacrifice to make;
But here I bring within my trembling hand
This Will of mine—a thing that seemeth small,
And only Thou, sweet Lord, canst understand
How, when I yield Thee this, I yield mine all!
Hidden therein, Thy searching eye can see
Struggles of passion, visions of delight,
All that I love, or am, or fain would be—
Deep loves, fond hopes, and longings infinite.
It hath been wet with tears and dimmed with signs,
Clenched in my grasp, till beauty it hath none.
Now, from Thy footstool, where it vanquished lies,
The prayer ascendeth, may Thy will be done.
Take it, O Father, ere my courage fail,
And merge it so in Thine own will, that e'en
If in some desperate hour my cries prevail,
And Thou give back my gift, it may have been
So changed, so purified, so fair have grown,
So one with Thee, so filled with peace divine,
I may not know or feel it as mine own,
But, gaining back my will, may find it Thine.

—Selected.

For the Southern Churchman.

COMMUNITY VALUES.

III.

The Church.

Upton H. Gibbs.

The third institution which is necessary to every community in order to express itself is the Church.

There are some who regard this as non-essential, though beneficial. Schools they acknowledge are necessary, but a community can dispense with a church. But experience tells another story. It was Mr. Barnum, the prince of showmen, who said that he had traveled extensively throughout the length and breadth of the land, and that whenever he came across a village or town without a church, it was invariably in a decayed and dilapidated condition.

A community represents a composite body, made up of individual human units, each of whom contributes his quota to the corporate communal life. The preponderating influences furnished by these units determine the character of this communal life, for good or evil. "Righteousness exalteth a nation, but sin is a reproach to any people," is the verdict of history as well as that of the wise king. Moral decadence is the beginning of the end for any nation, no matter how powerful. The church is that institution which stands for righteousness, that is, obedience to God's will and commands. Its specific function is to make known God's will and commands. The church, then, is vitally necessary to any community.

We are told that life consists in correspondence with environment, and that the larger the scope of the environment, the greater the extent of the life. Our human constitution is such, that it is intended to reach out to the most extended environment, from the lowest to the highest; in short, from earth to heaven.

The higher a man reaches out, the higher in the scale of being he attains, and this is manifested in his life and influence. So the character of the communal life will be affected by him. Those like him will prove the salt of the earth.

In the city of New York a mammoth cathedral is in process of construction, as "a house of prayer for all people." It will cost about thirty millions of dollars when completed.

The justification for this enormous expenditure is the preservation of the soul of that city. New York, with its skyscrapers, palatial commercial and residential buildings, and immense bank deposits, stands as a citadel of mammon, or materialism. The feeling has grown that it must be known as standing for things higher, and that this cathedral will give decided witness that the city is not given up entirely to gross materialism, but has a spiritual consciousness. Situated on a high eminence, it will testify to all beholders that Almighty God is supreme.

The home, the school and the church form a trinity of values without which a community is poor indeed. It cannot hope to enjoy and conserve an expanding life, but must perforce shrink into itself and commit communal suicide.

* * *

Transformed Lives.

In our Lord's spirited protest against the evils fostered by a formal and powerful religion, decidedly His most daring and provocative action was the cleansing of the Temple. Each of the four Evangelists includes in his account of the life of Jesus this scene within the sacred precincts, in which the stern young Prophet of Galilee is seen forcibly ejecting the money-changers and drovers and putting a summary end, for one day at least, to the activities of the Temple market. According to the synoptists, Matthew, Mark and Luke, the cleansing took place near the end of our Lord's ministry, at the commencement of Holy Week, and was the direct occasion for the plot by the priests and scribes to destroy Him. So long as Jesus confined His protest to the spoken word, His enemies were resentful but inactive; once, however, He took definite steps to end a highly lucrative business, those who profited by it determined to put an end to Him.

The account of the cleansing in the Gospels according to St. Matthew and St. Luke follows directly upon the story of the triumphal entry into Jerusalem on the day known to us as Palm Sunday, and, apparently, the two events took place upon the one day. Entering the Temple, Jesus beheld the wild confusion of buying and selling, arguing and disputing, and, aflame with a righteous zeal for the honour of God's house heatedly purged the outer court of its nefarious trafficking. It was an action based upon passion, a holy passion which discerned an obvious wrong and proceeded forthwith to protest against it. St. Mark, though, gives a different account of the incident. Jesus, he says, on Palm Sunday went into the Temple, and, "when He had looked round about upon all things, went out unto Bethany; and, on the morrow, He went into the Temple and began to cast out them that sold and bought." This recommends itself to us as the truer and more significant version of our Lord's action. First Jesus entered the Temple and took careful note of everything there; He was made heartsick over the sordid scene of petty gain and petty pilfering within a few yards of the Holy of Holies; with great effort He restrained His passionate desire to expel the intruders and forced Himself to retire to Bethany, where He could pray and reflect upon the situation; then, next morning, with mind fully made up, He returned and acted in accordance with a fixed determination. Mark then, suggests that the cleansing of the Temple was based upon reason and conscience. Jesus was not carried away with a flood of emotion: He took time to deliberate, even to sleep upon the matter, and thus, when He acted, His deed meant infinitely more than if it were motivated by a hasty, passionate protest.

This story of the cleansing may be of aid to us in that several considerations regarding our own life arise from it. We note, first, that the Temple-market had been in existence for some time, possibly many years, and, because it was established by long usage and had received the sanction of the religious authorities, no one, save Jesus, raised any objection to it. Undoubtedly serious-minded and devout people regarded it as regrettable, and piously hoped that something might be done at some time to put an end to this abuse. But because people had become thoroughly accustomed to the market in the Temple, it was simpler and much more expedient to keep one's opinions to one's self and, publicly, view the traffic with a tolerant eye. Jesus, then, was the first person to be roused to indignant and active protest. Had He been more conventional in His conduct, He would have taken constitutional means to register His dissent from the practice, tolerated by all others. The proper procedure would entail a written statement to the High Priest setting forth His views and the request that a commission might be appointed to enquire into the matter. In due course, the Sanhedrin would be acquainted with the petition, a certain amount of discussion would follow, and, because the market was so profitable to the Temple authorities, ingenious reasons would be found for its continuance, and, in the end, the troublesome Prophet of Galilee would be told that "at the present time it is inadvisable to take any action in the matter." But Jesus had neither the time nor the patience to bring the question before the church courts. The whole business was wrong, and because it was wrong, He acted upon His own authority and took drastic measures to put the wrong right.

As we review our lives in the light of Christ's standard of conduct, we may discover a number of habits, practices and opinions which have long been accepted by us as part of our normal mode of living, but which cannot bear the scrutiny of our Lord. Our soul's health benefits by a periodic cleansing, when these undesirable and unchristian ways of life are resolutely discarded. Any attempt to break the habit or give up the cherished practice by gradually modifying it is fore-doomed to failure; when we pause to argue the matter with ourselves, then we seek to rationalize our conduct, to find ways and means for justifying it, and the result is a more complete enslavement. Self-reformation comes by revolution, not by evolution. As a prominent American novelist confessed with respect to his addiction to the drink-habit: "For ten years, I have tried to give up drink by saying, 'I will take less tomorrow than today', and 'Someday I hope I may be free', but it was only when I said quite definitely, 'I have quit', that all argument was over, and since that day I have not touched one drop."

The next point to be noticed is that when Jesus cleansed the Temple, He was not content with half-measures. He made a clean sweep of the whole market. Luke says: "He cast out all them that sold and bought." There was no attempt to discriminate, to play favorites, to eject some while allowing others to carry on business. All were in the wrong and all must go. In our effort to effect a similar cleansing of the self, under the guidance and with the power of God, it is perilously easy to make certain concessions on condition that we retain certain much-loved indulgences. By giving up something, we think we can with an easy conscience keep some other thing much dearer to our heart. Thus, for example, Mrs. Pontifex, the worthy rector's wife in Samuel Butler's story gave up puddings containing blood, in order to conform to the requirements laid down in the Council of Jerusalem (Acts 15), but retained her petty meannesses and little duplicities so cordially detested by her son, Ernest. One writer has stated the problem quite succinctly: "Man is a tragic being, for the very reason that he cannot be said either to have turned from God or to have turned to Him with all his heart." Augustine, as unconverted, offered mankind's typical prayer when he said: "O God, make me good, only not yet!"

We miss the whole point of the meditation, however, if we conclude with the resolution to cleanse our lives of all that is un-Christlike. As a result of the cleansing of the Temple, the Gentiles, who were admitted only to the outer court, were able to enjoy proper and uninterrupted worship of God. By driving out the intruders, Jesus restored this section of the Temple to its appointed use. Similarly, by purging our lives of all undesirable qualities, we make them fit mediums for the proper service of God. In a word, religion is not negative; it is positive; it consists not so much of giving up things, as of taking on things. Unless we make it our business to fill the gap left by the expulsion of the un-Christlike, we leave ourselves open to the attack of evil in some other form. Jesus, ever a profound psychologist, never spake so truly of our human nature as when He said: "When the unclean spirit is gone out of a man, he walketh through dry places, seeking rest; and finding none, he saith, I will return to my house whence I came out . . . and they enter in and dwell there; and the last state of that man is worse than the first." An inactive Christian runs the danger of losing both his Christianity and his manhood.

When Christ enters a man's life, and that man is prepared to receive Him, first comes cleansing, then consecration finally witness in word and in deed. In such manner did Isaiah, through his vision, learn to serve God, and such also was the experience of St. Paul. Paul's words, therefore, the outcome of a rich experience, set the norm for our lives: "Let the word of Christ dwell in you richly in all wisdom; teaching and admonishing one another in psalms and hymns and spiritual songs, singing with grace in your hearts to the Lord. And whatsoever ye do, in word or deed, do all in the name of the Lord Jesus, giving thanks unto God and the Father by Him."—Rev. H. R. Hunt, in Canadian Churchman.

* * *

Our Robins' Nest.

Down under our study window stands a tree that we have watched grow from a planted stripling until now it is as high as the house and has become a familiar friend, bidding us good morning and good night with every rising and setting sun. Late this spring two robins were noticed flitting in and out of its dense greenery and their work was apparent as they carried slender twigs and bits of straw and cotton: a nest was growing somewhere inside and strange yearnings and hopes were stirring in their little red breasts. At length one stayed on the nest and kept the eggs warm, while the other fed her at intervals and thus the mates served together impelled by their common instinct.

In due time they were carrying food to the little inmates which had been released from their tiny shells and woke up to the fact that they were hungry. If any thing can be more greedy with a more voracious appetite and a greater digestive capacity than bird babies, we have not seen it, for they open their mouths clear back through their anatomy and appear to be all mouth and stomach. The mother bird would put her day in making repeated visits to the nest and we could see her thrusting her bill down the throats of her babies and disgorging the food she had gathered and prepared for them. The storm beat upon that tree and swayed it violently in the wind, but parents and children in that rocking nest feared it not but persevered in their patient work.

Finally it was noticed that the nest was visited no more and was left empty. When the young robins were thrust out by the parents had not been noted, and doubtless the parents seemed to the little creatures somewhat rough about it as they were pushed out and told to look out for themselves. But this was best for the birdies and thus they found their wings and the wide freedom of the sky.

The whole incident is full of theology and is a revelation of God. The love of those robins was only a drop out of His infinite heart with which He saturates the whole creation and puts some drops of it in our hearts. If at times He roughens the nest and pushes us out, we should know that this too is an exercise of His wisdom and care. "He guides me and the birds."—Presbyterian Banner.

* * *

How Children Give.

I once called at a friends house a little before Christmas when all the children and their mother were busy arranging their Christmas gifts. I enjoyed hearing them talk, for the children had the true Christmas spirit. As they prepared their little gifts, wrapping them in pretty paper and fastening on address tags with the words, "Do not open until Christmas," I could see that they took as much pleasure in giving as they would in receiving.

Then Laura, the eldest girl, said, "Don't put, 'Do not open until Christmas' on Mrs. Robinson's present, because she is having a hard time to get along and may need her sweater right away. We must see that she gets it in time to save her from buying another."

The little ones agreed with this. They had all been carefully brought up, and unconsciously put themselves in the place of each recipient. It is delightful when children do this, but it is largely a matter of teaching. I well remember once overhearing a child say,

"I won't give anything to Myrtle, because she didn't give anything to me last year."

It was unpleasant to hear such a remark from a young child, but she had evidently heard her parents or her elder sisters or brothers say something quite similar. Under such conditions it is difficult to teach a child to give graciously and kindly without looking for a return. When young children make certain disagreeable remarks it is hardly fair to scold or punish them. We should find out how they learned to think and talk as they are doing. A child may be imitating someone. Of course, it is by imitation that children learn to talk. For this reason we should be very careful of our conversation in their presence, above all at Christmas time. We do not want them to copy our faults in case we are unfortunate enough to have some, do we?

In order that our children may understand that "It is more blessed to give than to receive," we should be happy in our giving. We should speak very kindly about the people to whom we decide to give present, and let the children see that we do not give with the thought of receiving in return.

Children should love giving. It is a natural attitude. I think my little girl has always loved to give. I cannot remember a time when she did not do so. However, you can spoil this pleasure for a child by ungraciousness in accepting such little gifts as wild flowers, pretty stones or shells. When a child rushes into the house thrilled with the joy of some gift for Mother, and the parent says crossly, "Take away that rubbish," the child is not encouraged in the art of giving. It is the mother's fault if a little later the child does not like to give.

Children especially enjoy giving what they have made with their own hands, so the wise mother helps them to make gifts instead of giving them a great deal of pocket money to spend, and then, of course, she shows her appreciation of the special gift they have made for her. Father, too, should learn to take the children's gifts in the spirit in which they are offered. If he and Mother talk these matters over together beforehand, he is not likely ever to say, "I do not need this," even if that is the actual truth. And in later years, how we all treasure these home-made gifts! —Mrs. Nestor Noel, in National Kindergarten.

* * *

For the Southern Churchman.

WEAVERS.

Maude Forrest Mumma.

Countless weavers in the night
Spun their webs of crystals bright;
Everywhere their trace is seen
On bush and tree and mosses green.

The grapevine with its silv'ry skeins,
The fence a web of crystal veins;
The ivy drips its spangles too,
The henhouse is agleam with dew.

The berry bushes tangled lie
Within the mesh and humbly vie
In witchery and tracery fine,
With every glistening tree and vine.

The fields, like pools of shining glass,
Reflect the sunbeams as they pass;
And lend to all this brilliant sight
A dazzling dream of fairy light.

FOR THE CHILDREN

For the Southern Churchman.

A NOTION.

F. J. Earl.

Some are looking
Back, I know,
Some too far ahead.

Some see only
Black and white,
Some see only red.

Some are looking
Down, some up
For another's sin.

I've a notion
We should see
God is looking in.

For the Southern Churchman.

THOSE RECTORY CHILDREN.

Chapter VIII.

M. L. G.

The happy Christmas day came and went so quickly that it seemed to have wings. There were the stockings to be examined in Mother's room, and presents to enjoy and exclaim over. Kent and Philip had their shoes off and their boots on in two minutes, Winnie was happy with a new drawing-set and a lovely box of paints. She had a clever hand with a pencil, and had longed to try to work with real "oils". Though she would leave the paints to exclaim about her boots, the muff and "tippet" the Trent ladies had sent and the many pretty things, her own and the other childrens', she would come back to finger lovingly the fat little shining tubes, each with it sown mysterious name, "sepia," "ultramarine," "carmine," "jade." David was trying in turn each of the tools in his new box, and Claire lay in utter content with Aunt Mollie's present, a fine brown-and-black spaniel climbing in delighted freedom over her sofa, for he had had three days of prison life in a stall in the stable, far enough away for Claire not to hear his plaintive whines. He seemed to know from the first that he was Claire's property, and after a lively frolic with the boys, he settled down on the foot of her sofa for a nap.

"What you goin' name him, Claire?" asked Kent, patting the dog with a sticky hand.

"I can't name him 'Aunt Mollie'," Claire said, wrinkling her forehead in perplexity, "nor Rover, because I don't want him to run so far as Roy does."

"Name him Chris'mus," suggested Philip, "Chris'mus sounds sort of jolly."

"I know!" David cried, "call him Noel. We learned a little Christmas verse in French class, and Christmas was Noel'."

"I b'lieve I'd like that. Don't you think Noel would do for him, Mother?"

"Splendidly. But here's Uncle Danger with your breakfast."

"Christmas gift, Uncle Danger!" cried Claire.

"Chris'mus gif', Miss Claire, Chris'mus gif'! Dese yuther chillens, dey don' tol' ole Danger Chris'mus gif' so loud his years mos' ache!" He set the tray carefully on the low table and pushed it, with David's help, up to the sofa. "Ain' dis a Chris'mus, sho! Looky dar, saw an' hammer an' all—"

"An' see our boots, an' the little horse an' wagon!"

"Is I evah seed de like!" Uncle Danger exclaimed. "Marse Santy Claus done treat us good dis year, yassuh! Howsumevah," he went on, "Cindy gwine ring de breakfus' bell 'fore you can say scat. Co'nbread ready, bacon sizzlin'—" he went out smiling and mumbling to himself.

Father, Mother, David and Winnie went to church, through the flying snow. They left two happy boys and two excited dogs, running around the "circle" made by the driveway in front of the house, the new boots making fine deep tracks. Claire was contentedly dressing Amy in the little new dresses, capes and bonnets that Mother had been making for many hours when Claire was asleep.

The Duncan children had for several weeks been practicing the Christmas hymns, singing one each evening at prayers. It was pleasant to know them all and to join in with all the vigor they liked, for in this little church all sang. The wheezy little organ, at which Mrs. Pace worked valiantly, almost rocked with her effort. The little choir—Mother was the only alto—led, but all followed, to "Shout the glad tidings, exultingly sing."

"If Mrs. Pace huffs and puffs much more she'll puff the church down," whispered David. Winnie giggled. Mrs. Pace was so far from being a threatening wolf, Mother caught her eye, but only smiled. After all, it was Christmas! Winnie's thoughts were a delicious maze of music, the cedar ropes, her pretty round muff, a copy of "Little Women" that she had just peeped into before starting, and the fat tubes of paint. But when sermon time came and Father's deep voice told of angels in the night, shepherds stumbling in haste to a stable, the young Mother with her white-wrapped Baby, who was so wonderfully God Himself loving His way into human life—David and Winnie, not understanding all, were yet carried beyond the thought of presents, beyond the warm church with snow swirling outside the square-paned windows, into that cave whose manger held the Brother of us all.

After the service the people lingered, exchanging greetings, planning gatherings, laughing as they packed themselves into sleighs.

"Don't forget that day you're to spend with us at Ivanhoe," said Miss Alice Trent, to Winnie. "All of you."

"Yes, ma'am, if Claire's well enough." Winnie replied with shining eyes, for a day at Ivanhoe was a great treat.

"Sarah can show you something about your paints—she used to do china-painting."

"Oh, thank you, Miss Alice!"

"I can't reach your Mother, so many are around her—will you tell her for me?"

"Yes, ma'am, I will!" Winnie was overjoyed at the idea of having help in her painting, yet a little fearful of tall, dignified Miss Sarah.

The rest of the day passed in play, reading and, at twilight, the gathering around the fire for coral-singing. Each child had a favorite, and they sang them in turn down to Claire's little carol:

"Cold, cold, cold the night,
The night was starry bright,
When shepherds heard the angel note,
The angel note from Heaven afloat
That told to earth the story!"

"Mother," said Claire, when she was tucked in bed that night, and the lamp was out, leaving only the dancing firelight, "I know it won't be long before I have to go to the hospital. But I don't mind it so much now. Things like Christmas seem so true—I don't know how to say it—"

"It is so true," Mother answered, "perhaps you mean that you feel Jesus will be with you and make it easier. Is that it?"

"Yes, that's it!" Claire smiled. "An', Mother, will you see if Noel's real happy, and tell him he can come back in the morning?"

"Yes, I'll see to him. Now I must go, dear. I think Kent's crying."

"Phil bwoke my china kity," Kent was sobbing, as Mother opened the door across the hall.

"I wanted a Puss-in-Boots, like in my book," Philip explained. He was on the floor, picking up the shattered pink china cat. "I got her in tight—she was funny, Mother, sticking out—but she over-toppled my boot. I'm sorry as—as a elephun, Kent." Tears were in his eyes.

"Thas all wight," Kent said, his sobs growing less, "I got a lot of new toys, anyway, today. But—I did like my china kitty."

"She didn't know how to purr, Kent," Philip said, trying to comfort him.

"I tell you what," said Mother, seeing both little boys so distressed, "Uncle Phil sent me ten dollars to buy whatever I liked, and the first thing I'd like is a china kitty. Aunt Mollie can get it for fifty cents. We'll have it here by New Year!"

* * *

Theft or Salesmanship.

Great Aunt Alice had died leaving her oldtime cottage with its quaint furnishing to Dotty's mother, and the family had taken possession almost immediately.

"The house is old," Dotty's mother said, "but better than many modern bungalows. By finishing the attic we can have a very comfortable home."

Things which had accumulated during many years were moved from the attic to the barn awaiting the day when thoughtful consideration could be given each article. Tommy Trousdale watched the moving from the roof of his father's garage next door.

"That is a lot of junk you have," he told Dotty. "Dad says the whole outfit is not worth five cents."

Dotty's parents did not share this view. Everything was put inside the barn and the doors securely fastened—that is, everything but an old sewing machine. Dotty's father had said he could easily convert that into a little table just the size and shape needed for the kitchen. This sewing machine was left under the shed of the barn.

For a while Dotty watched proceedings indoors, then she went to the yard where Tommy again told her of the low value of the family hoardings. Presently the junkman came through the alley, and Tommy sold him a bundle of old newspapers, magazines, bottles and old iron that he had collected. How proud he was of the three pennies received for his labor! He exhibited them triumphantly to the watchful Dotty.

The junkman drove to Dotty's back gate. "Anything to sell?" he asked the child.

Dotty shook her head, remembering that Tommy had said her whole barn full of things was not worth a nickel. How discouraging this was; Tommy had received three cents for much less than the barn held.

The junkman spied the old machine. "I'll give you a nickel for that," he offered, pointing to it.

"Oh!" Tommy gasped from his side of the fence. Dotty knew he was impressed by so grand an offer.

"Will you sell it?" the junkman asked.

Dotty must have nodded. Anyway the man came in, got the machine and gave her a shining new nickel which she held up for Tommy to see before running into the house.

It was noon; her father had just come home for lunch. "Look," Dotty cried, holding up the coin.

"Where did you get it?" her mother asked.

"I sold the old sewing machine to the junkman," Dotty declared proudly.

"When?" asked her father.

"Just now."

Her father disappeared by the back door and presently returned announcing he had traded the junkman out of the machine.

Dotty's parents had heard Tommy give his father's appraisal of the value of the things in the barn. They knew the junkman had taken advantage of the child. Dotty was fortunate in having parents who tried to see things from her viewpoint. They knew that to the child the sale upheld family pride and was a matter of good salesmanship. With these two virtues in mind they made their explanations as to why it was best to get the old machine back.

A few days later Dotty's mother overheard her tell Tommy: "That machine I sold for a nickel was worth more, so Father went after the junkman and got it back. Everything in the barn is worth something and I am not going to sell anytihng else without first asking Father or Mother."—Minerva Hunter, in Reformed Church Messenger.

* * *

Jumper Runs Away.

There were three children in the family—Jumper, Fluffy, and Feather-tail, and, oh, what perfectly delightful times they did have in their own big oak tree! To be sure, there was not very much room to play inside the little squirrels' nest, but there was plenty of room outside, and it was safe enough, too, so long as they stayed in that particular tree. Mother Squirrel was very cross indeed, if they broke the bounds and swung over into the limbs of a big tree near by, and she worked herself into a real temper if they ran down the tree trunk onto the smooth lawn, then up into the maple at the edg of the park.

One day in the late autumn, Mother Squirrel started on one of her trips to a certain far-away chestnut. She was working very hard, laying in the winter's supply of nuts. Jumper, Fluffy, and Feather-tail were, of course, quite large enough to help, but the grass in the park was kept very short and smooth, with so few pieces in it where young and inquisitive little squirrels could hide, so it was really far safer for them to remain at home, daytimes at least.

"Now, remember," cautioned Mother Squirrel for the tenth time that day, "you are not to play outside your own tree, especially while I am gone."

"We will remember," promised Feather-tail.

"If you don't, something dreadful will surely happen to you," warned Mother Squirrel, as she scooted out of her storehouse and down the tree. The day was nearly over and she still had a great deal to do.

"She's always saying that," grumbled Jumper. "Nothing ever does happen."

"Well, it might," declared little sister Fluffy. "Mother knows."

For a while all three played tag happily together as usual, then Jumper grew tired of the big oak tree. "I want to go over to the maple, where you see up and down the street," he decided, "and I'm going, too! Are you coming with me?"

"No, we're not!" cried Feather-tail, crossly, and you better mind what Mother says, Jumper Squirrel!"

But Jumper flirted his big tail and whisked down the tree. He was over the lawn and into the maple before you could say, "Jack Robinson!"

My, what a tree to play in! And the view!—why, you could see whole blocks up and down the street, and far over the roofs of the house on the other side! Jumper looked and looked.

Suddenly a terrible "ding-dong! ding-dong!" sounded out from the big house just across the street. Jumper knew it was the schoolhouse bell, but never before had it sounded so close, so almost on top of him. It made him afraid—oh, very much afraid! And when a moment later, a great crowd of noisy boys and girls poured out of the big doors, the little squirrel was really too frightened to move. So he sat very still on the big limb that hung right out over the sidewalk.

A number of children passed beneath without seeing him and he began to wonder if after all he wasn't going to escape notice. And then—the very noisest, biggest boy of all looked up into the maple, straight at Jumper.

"Hey!" he shouted, "look there, will you! There's a young squirrel!"

"Oh, let's make him run!" cried another boy.

"Sure, I'll make him!" And the biggest boy picked up a stick and threw it into the tree.

Poor Jumper never knew how it was that he was able to fly down that tree, over the lawn, and up his own familiar oak, for all those noisy, terrifying humans were right at his heels, it seemed. But he reached the home nest at last, but half dead with weariness and fear. Mother Squirrel was there now, but she was too frightened herself to say a word to him.

"Say, I know they've got a lot of nuts laid up there!" cried the biggest boy whose name was Jack.

"Let's shin up the tree and get 'em," suggested another.

"Not in these clothes," said Jack. "We'll wait till tomorrow. It's Saturday, and we can have a lot of fun getting the nuts and squirrels, both."

The others agreed to this, and presently the whole crowd of them trooped away.

Mother Squirrel sighed with relief, but her face was very sad. "I must get busy at once," she said, "and find us a new home in this park. Daddy will come and help me hunt, and after we have found some place that will do, you children may help carry the nuts into it. But until then don't any of you so much as show the tip of his tail out the door here."

In a moment she was gone, and the three little squirrels huddled fearfully together in the little home nest that must soon be given up. Jumper was wishing, oh, so hard, that he had been good and obedient. But wishes didn't help a bit—it was too late for them now.

Nearly all that night Mother and Daddy Squirrel searched, and at last, just before dawn, they found a very small place in an old pine tree away on the other side of the park. And then what a hurrying and scurrying there was, for as many as possible of the winter store of nuts must be moved into the new home without delay. Each of the five squirrels filled his pockets full and made as many trips as he could. (Of course you know that a squirrel's pockets are in his cheeks.) But even though they worked very hard and fast, when the sun arose in the morning, there were a great many nuts left in the old home.

The boys came soon, dressed now for tree climbing. Up went Jack, and all the others with him, for the oak was a large one, and could hold a dozen boys and never feel it. They came to the squirrel hole, and one of them reached in a cautious hand. But no squirrel was there.

"They've left," said the boy disgustedly.

"But there's a bushel or two of nuts in here," said Jack. "Let's go and get buckets or something to put 'em in."

This they did, and before noon had come, the boys had stolen all the store of nuts that the squirrels had taken days and weeks to gather.

Now Jack had at home a little sister named Gracie, and Gracie owned two very nice things—a tender, loving heart and a brand new red purse with a whole handful of pennies in it. She heard, of course, about the robbing of the squirrels' nest, and she felt so sorry about it. When she had told Daddy and Mother, they felt sorry, too.

"I tell you what we'll do, Graciekins," said Daddy: "You and I will go down to Peter's store and buy new nuts for the squirrels. You have quite a lot of money in that red purse, haven't you?"

"Oh, yes, I have!" replied Gracie, her eyes dancing with delight. "Can we go right off?"

"Yes, come on," said Daddy.

"Here," cried Jack, who had been listening with a dreadful shamed feeling in his heart, "here, Punkin, I'll give you some of my pennies, too—all of them, and you can get the squirrels a lot of nuts. I'm sorry we took theirs all away."

"Thank you, Son," said Daddy gravely, as he took the offered money.

Mr. Peters was a very understanding person. When he heard about the squirrels, he declared he would give some nuts on his own account, for hadn't his boy Tom been one of the number who robbed the poor squirrels?

So bag after bag was filled, with walnuts and butternuts, hickory nuts and chestnuts, and hazelnuts, too. There were more, oh, a great many more than Gracie's little red purse and its fourteen pennies could have paid for. Then on top of all that, good Mr. Peters put into a special bag a half dozen very large nuts—can you guess what kind they were? Yes, doughnuts! "For dessert," he said, with a twinkle in his eye.

That evening, Gracie and her father put all the nuts into an old half bushel basket, with the doughnuts on top, and together they went to the park. It was very dark and still there. Daddy did not go near the oak that was so close to the schoolhouse road, but made straight for the other side of the park. There, after a little looking around, he spied a broken-off limb high up on an old pine tree, and on that they hung the basket.

Now, it happened that this was the very pine where the new squirrel home was being arranged. And when, an hour or so later, Mother Squirrel crept cautiously down the tree, she saw the strange but wonderfully good-smelling thing that hung there.

Was it—yes, it was—nuts! Every kind and all kinds—even doughnuts! My, wasn't the heavenly Father good to send them such a surprise? Just when they needed it so much, too!

"Jumper, Fluffy, and Feather-tail!" she called, "come down here quickly! Some one has brought us a feast! If you will each work very hard tonight carrying these nuts up to the storehouse, you shall have a whole suguary doughnut apiece as a reward!"

And at the doughnut party, Jumper told them solemnly that never, never again would he leave the home tree until Mother said it was quite right and safe to do so.—S. S. Times.

Classified Advertisments and Notices

All notices and advertisements, excepting positions wanted, will be inserted in this department at a rate of 20 cents per agate line each insertion. Special raes to contracts of any length. A rate of 15 cents per line is made to persons seeking positions. No advertisement accepted for less than 50 cents.

Copy for this department must be received not later than Tuesday of the week in which it is intended that the first insertion shall appear.

REV. CHARLES W. SHEERIN.

Memorial adopted by vestry of Grace and Holy Trinity Church on January 2, 1935, and ratified and approved by the congregation at its annual meeting on January 16, 1935.

"We, the members of this vestry, are unwilling to permit the severance of Mr. Sheerin's relations with this church as its rector to take place without entering upon its records a brief memorial of our esteem for him as a man, our affection for him as a pastor, and our high opinion of him as a preacher of God's Word.

"Five years ago, in response to our call he came to us, a stranger to most of our congregation, but his earnestness and intelligence in the promotion of every parish activity, his sympathetic and generous nature, his lofty Christian character, and his zeal as a priest of the Church soon not only won for him the deep admiration and warm affection of his new parishioners, but also inspired them under his leadership with his own eagerness for greater accomplishment.

"The entire period of our beloved rector's ministry with us has been one of pronounced financial depression, which has involved many of our own people in great suffering and want and created unprecedented demands upon our social service department. How well it has functioned under his administration is known to all in the community. His broad human sympathy, kindly understanding, untiring patience and cheerful disposition have combined to fit him admirably for leadership in this work.

"No sketch, however brief, on Mr. Sheerin's career as our rector would be complete without emphasizing his work in attracting young people to the services of the church and in maintaining their interest. In this, recognized as one of the most difficult problems confronting the church today, his success has been extraordinary.

"And yet, with all these labors, we are proud to say that Mr. Sheerin has found time to contribute in no small measure to the work of the Diocese, with the result that he occupies today a most prominent position among its clergy.

"In the departure of Mr. Sheerin, not only Grace and Holy Trinity Church, but this entire community and the Diocese of Virginia, suffer a loss which it will be difficult to repair. For his continued growth and success in his new field the prayers of his congregation and of us, its vestry, are offered."

A true copy—Teste:
C. P. MOFFATT, Register.

A Memphis, Tenn., physician, hunting big game in Africa, went to the leper mission colony at Elat, Cameroun, and this is what he says:

"Those of you who are a little cool in your belief regarding foreign missions should visit a foreign mission field. . . . I wish you could see the little brown, sleek bodies of the children who are doomed (to leprosy) if we over here do not do something about it. Dr. Weber tells me that it takes only about three years to cure one of these cases and it costs approximately $30. A good many of us have spent more than thirty dollars foolishly for luxuries and entertainments within the past year. Practically any of us would pay more than thirty dollars to be relieved of a bodily discomfort, and yet think what thirty dollars would mean to a leper: health again, the thankfulness that comes for a life, and in all probability a soul saved."

NOTICE.

The Christmas appeal was most successful, and I have thanked all the good friends far and near, not only in Richmond and Virginia, but many other States.

The total amount was $245.70.

For the year 1934 (a grand total, which includes Pete Banks, under Mrs. Robert Harrison and the Juniors, with Miss Allison in charge), $1,647.20.

All contributions gratefully acknowledged by

EVELYN P. MERIWETHER.
Pres.-Treas. Richmond Branch American Mission to Lepers. Address: 2243 West Grace Street, Richmond, Va.

SPECIAL NOTICES.

CHURCH VESTMENTS.

Cathedral Studio, Church embroideries, Altar and Pulpit Hangings. Stoles from $6.50. Burse and veil from $10. Surplice from $8. Send for complete line of pure Irish linens by the yard. Silks, fringes and gold thread. Embroidered emblems ready to appy. Altar Guild Handbook, 50c.

50c.

L. V. MACKRILLE
11 W. Kirke St., Chevy Chase,
Washington, D. C.
Telephone Wisconsin 2752.

CHURCH LINEN.

FINE IRISH LINEN specially selected for Church use. 36 inches to 54 inches wide, cut any length. Sample of 12 qualities on request. Mary Fawcett Company, 812 Berkeley Avenue, Trenton, N. J.

RAZOR SHARPENER.

SHARPENS ANY STRAIGHT RAZOR, or safety razor. Guaranteed by manufacturers, and I guarantee it to please you. 50 cents per cake, or 3 cakes for $1.00. I take subscriptions for all magazines published at publishers' rates, or less. Sold by a wheel chair invalid. Edward P. Broxton, R. F. D., Blythe, Ga.

FOUNTAIN PENS.

A FOUNTAIN PEN AT A 1933 VALUE, with the Spencerian quality and smooth writing ease famous for seventy-five years. Guaranteed. Points fine and medium. Colors, gloss black, green and gold, Burgundy, blue and black, grey pearl. Price $2.00. Sold by a shut-in wheel chair invalid. Edward P. Broxton, R. F. D., Blythe, Ga.

PHILATELIC.

Wanted—Confederate and United States Stamps, used on envelopes. Collections purchased. Highest prices paid. George Hakes, Belvidere, Illinois.

HOUSE OF THE NAZARENE: SAINT AUGUSTINE, FLORIDA; offers rest and quiet in comfortable and pleasant surroundings. Invalids requiring nursing cannot be received, nor those with mental difficulties. Apply to Sister-in-Charge.

SITUATION WANTED.

EDUCATED WOMAN DESIRES POSITION as secretary or domestic manager, etc. Box AG.

CHURCH INTELLIGENCE.

(Continued from page 17.)

other organizations were in the great processional. Bishop Perry preached the sermon and the service was conducted by Bishop Scarlett, Dean Sidney E. Sweet, Dr. Karl Morgan Block and the Rev. Stephen Bayne.

The convention closed with the annual meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary on Thursday.

IN THE GARDEN.

When I lie upon my face
And look down to the ground,
I see the funny little things
That creep and crawl around!

When I lie upon my side
And look out either way,
I see the things that stand on legs,
And walk or run all day!

When I lie upon my back
And look away up high,
I see the things with lovely wings
That fly up to the sky—

—Irene Brock McElheran, in The New Outlook.

The good deeds shining white-robes saints have wrought
Make sharp contrast with sinners' evil part;
And yet, with both the lives of men are fraught.
So only God can judge the inmost heart.

—Blossom Bennett.

Snow.

We had plenty of snow this winter, but few realize its service to nature. R. Collyer in "Nature and Life," tells us that "under a drift of snow two feet deep the temperature was twenty-seven degrees above zero when the thermometer registered thirteen below, showing that the soil beneath the snow beds was from thirty-two to forty degrees higher than the temperature of the air. The value of this fact in preserving the life and vigor of plants is at once apparent." For this reason snowdrops and other small plants are not infrequently found in full flower under two or three feet of snow. Is not this the mission of hardship and suffering for the human heart? To suffer in the Spirit of Jesus is to learn sympathy. The Christian life grows stronger and faith more sure. This is true also in the experience of a nation that has the heart to understand.—Selected.

Personal Notes

Bishop E. V. Shayler of Nebraska suffered a heart attack last Tuesday while attending a meeting at Brownell Hall, Omaha. He is slowly recovering, and it is hoped will be able to resume work in a few days.

Clerical Changes.

The Rev. Paul Micou has announced his resignation at Easter-time of the rectorship of St. Mark's Church, Fall River, Mass., where he has served six years, in order to become rector of Nelson Parish and St. John's Church, Rippon, Jefferson County, West Virginia, with residence in Charles Town.

Mr. Micou was for eight years the College Secretary of the National Council. Between that post and the Fall River rectorship he was for four years rector of the Memorial Church of St. Luke the Beloved Physician, Philadelphia, Pa.

He is the son of Professor Richard W. Micou, who was Professor of Theology in both the Philadelphia Divinity School and the Virginia Theological Seminary. He took his M. A. at the University of Virginia, and his B. D., at the Virginia Seminary.

CONFIRMATION PAPERS

By
CANON F. E. HOWITT

1. Confirmation and Baptism.
2. Baptism and the Christian Covenant.
3. The Baptismal Covenant—Repentance.
4. The Baptismal Covenant—Faith and the Faith.
5. The Baptismal Covenant—The Faith.
6. The Baptismal Covenant—Obedience.
7. The Lord's Supper.
8. The Means of Grace.

A series of informing pamphlets compiled by Canon F. E. Howitt. They have an inestimable value in instructing those who contemplate membership in the Church, and for impressing the already confirmed with the sacredness and meaning of this holy ritual.

Price, single pamphlet, each..... 5 cents
Complete set of eight.....25 cents

Order from

SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN COMPANY
Richmond, Va.

The Rev. Benjamin Russell Priest, assistant at Christ Church and St. Michael's, Philadelphia, and in charge of that parish since the death last summer of the Rev. Dr. Gilbert E. Pember, has accepted a call to the rectorship of the Church of the Advent, Cape May, N. J.

The Rev. Carl L. Appelberg, rector of St. Martin's Church, Marcus Hook, Pa., has resigned that parish to devote his entire attention to the work of the Marcus Hook Branch of the Seamen's Church Institute.

The Rev. Francis B. Barnett, rector of St. Andrew's Church, Yardley, Pa., has resigned that parish to become Chaplain of Christ Church Hospital, Philadelphia. All the resignations go into effect beginning March 1.

Ordinations.

The Rev. Henry Ridgway Fell was ordained to the priesthood in All Saints' Chapel, Trenton, New Jersey.

The Rt. Rev. Albion W. Knight, Bishop Coadjutor of the Diocese of New Jersey, was the officiating bishop. The Rev. Milton A. Craft, rector of Grace Church, presented Mr. Fell for ordination, and the Rev. Dr. John W. Foster, of Sewaren, preached the sermon. The Rt. Rev. Ralph E. Urban, Suffragan Bishop of the diocese, assisted.

Visiting clergymen included the Rev. Edward R. Hardy, Ph. D., of the General Theological Seminary, New York; the Rev. Charles P. Otis and Brother Morley, S. S. J. E., of New York; the Rev. John Leatherbuly, of Sparrows Point, Md. Canon Samuel G. Wells and the Rev. Robert B. Gribbin, both of this city, attended the service.

Mr. Fell was admitted to the diaconate last June in Trinity Cathedral, when Bishop Paul Matthews officiated. Since then he has had charge of St. Mary's, Keyport, and the Mission of St. Mark's, Keansburg.

The Rev. Mr. Fell, well known in Trenton, the son of Mr. and Mrs. J. Henry Fell of Trenton, has also Southern connections, being the grandson of Major and Mrs. Henry Armand London, for so many years devoted communicants of old St. Bartholomew's Church, Pittsboro, North Carolina. He graduated in 1927 from the Woodberry Forest School at Orange, Va. From there he went to Rutgers, graduating in 1931, and then continued his theological studies at General Theological Seminary, New York City, graduating in May, last.

Deaths.
Rev. Theodore Partrick, Jr.

The Rev. Theodore Partrick, Jr., beloved rector of the Church of the Good Shepherd, Raleigh, N. C., died February 4, 1935, at Rex Hospital, after a desperate forty-eight-hour battle to overcome the fatal grip of influenza-pneumonia.

The funeral was held at 3:30 o'clock Wednesday afternoon, February 6, at the Church of the Good Shepherd. It was conducted by the Rt. Rev. Edwin A. Penick, Bishop of the Diocese of North Carolina, assisted by Dr. Milton A. Barber, rector of Christ Church, and the Rev. Joseph F. Fletcher, Chaplain of St. Mary's School.

No tragedy in the long history of the Church of the Good Shepherd, one of the foremost parishes in the Diocese of North Carolina, struck with such unexpected and shocking force as the death of Mr. Partrick.

Mr. Partrick came to Raleigh four years ago last October, resigning from his charge at Scotland Neck to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of the Rev. Henry G. Lane, now rector of St. Mark's at Richmond.

Prior to his acceptance of the call to The Good Shepherd, he had attracted attention in the Diocese of North Carolina by his wise counsel, and also by his able editorial direction of The Carolina Churchman, the official diocesan organ.

Also he was known and admired throughout the state because of his association with the North Carolina National Guard as Captain and Chaplain of the One Hundred and Twentieth Infantry.

Mr. Partrick was born June 2, 1889, at Clinton, N. C., and would have been forty-six years old next summer. His parents were Theodore and the late Mary Anna Hall Partrick. Mr. Partrick was married to Miss Watson Kasey, of Halifax, Virginia on June 12, 1918. He attended the University of North Carolina from 1907 to 1909, and then from 1911 to 1914. During the interim between 1909 and 1911 he served as a teacher.

After leaving the university, Mr. Partrick entered the newspaper field, and in 1912 he assumed the editorship of the Sampson Democrat at Clinton. He continued with the Sampson Democrat until 1917, when he decided to study for orders in the Protestant Episcopal Church. He studied at the Virginia Theological Seminary, meantime being ordained deacon in 1918. He graduated and in 1920 was ordained to the priesthood. His first charge was at Southport, and next he served at Lumberton and Plymouth. From Plymouth he went to Scotland Neck, where he was rector until he accepted the call to the Church of the Good Shepherd, October 1, 1930.

On three occasions he was chosen as one of the diocesan delegates to the Triennial Conventions of the National Church. He served as a delegate last fall, when he attended the General Convention at Atlantic City, N. J. The other Conventions were in 1925 and 1931.

Mr. Partrick was a trustee of St. Augustine's College.

He is survived by his widow and two children, Louise and Hall; his father, Theodore Partrick, Sr., of Clinton; two sisters, Mrs. W. R. Noe, of Wilmington, and Mrs. Ferd B. Johnson, of Clinton; and two brothers, Edward and Frank Partrick, of Clinton.

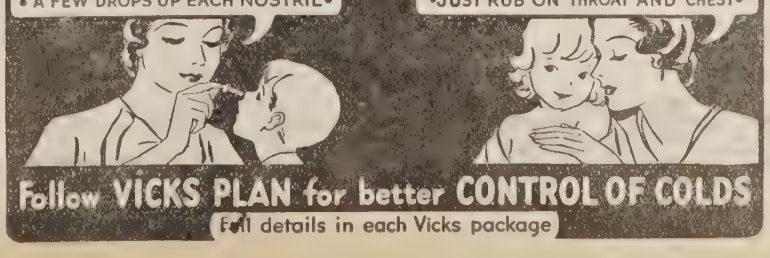
R. GEISSLER, INC.
450 SIXTH AVE. NEAR 10th ST. NEW YORK
Church Furnishings
IN CARVED WOOD AND MARBLE · BRASS · SILVER FABRICS + WINDOWS

CHOIR VESTMENTS
Cassocks, Cottas and Caps. Special low prices. Samples and prices on request. Poplin Canterbury Caps, $1.00 each. Paper Patterns for Choir and Church. Vestments for sale.
HENRY HAYTER, 8205 Riverside Drive, Box 618, Rte. 1, St. Petersburg, Fla.

Church Furnishings
Gold, Silver and Brass
Church and Chancel Furniture
Write for Catalogue
for Episcopal Churches
W. & E. SCHMIDT CO
308 Third Street, Milwaukee, Wis.

CAUTHORNE PAPER COMPANY
The South's Most Progressive Paper House
ALL GRADES OF PRINTING AND WRAPPING PAPERS
Richmond, Va.
This paper is printed on paper supplied by the Cauthorne Paper Company

CREOMULSION
Your own druggist is authorized to cheerfully refund your money on the spot if you are not relieved by Creomulsion.
COUGHS



PARKER'S HAIR BALSAM
Removes Dandruff-Stops Hair Falling
Imparts Color and Beauty to Gray and Faded Hair
60c. and $1.00 at Druggists.
Hiscox Chemical Works, Patchogue, N. Y.

HARD OF HEARING?
SEND FOR THIS 30-DAY TRIAL TREATMENT

Which has restored the hearing, removed head noises and eliminated catarrh of the head to so many people. This treatment has been used by over 1,157,000 sufferers in the past 34 years. Write for full information about this ethical treatment used by a prominent ear specialist in his office practice, now simplified for home use.

DR. W. O. COFFEE CO.
1694 St. James Bldg. Davenport, Iowa

FOR EASTER
PLAYS
PAGEANTS
OUR SPECIAL OFFER FOR 1935
We will send you 14 plays, pageants and services for examination upon receipt of 10 cents (stamps or coin, to cover cost of mailing) with the understanding that the plays, etc., are to be either paid for within thirty days or returned to us within ten days. Packet includes 1935 catalog of Easter supplies and helps.
Send 10 cents for Easter Packet No. 35
MEIGS PUBLISHING COMPANY
41 W. Washington St. Indianapolis, Indiana

HERE'S THE AID TO FEWER COLDS...
VICKS VA-TRO-NOL
• A FEW DROPS UP EACH NOSTRIL •
HERE'S THE AID TO SHORTER COLDS
...VICKS VAPORUB
•JUST RUB ON THROAT AND CHEST•

Follow VICKS PLAN for better CONTROL OF COLDS
Full details in each Vicks package

Educational

The General Theological Seminary

CHELSEA SQUARE, NEW YORK

The next Academic year begins on the last Wednesday in September

Special students admitted and Graduate Courses for graduates of other Theological Seminaries.

The requirements for admission and other particulars can be had from THE DEAN, 1 Chelsea Square, New York, N. Y

SHENANDOAH VALLEY ACADEMY

Certificates accepted by universities, colleges, West Point, Annapolis. The Academy's experienced teachers, cultural atmosphere, limited numbers, military discipline enable it to prepare boys to succeed in college. For catalogue write: Col. B. M. Roszel, Supt., Winchester, Va.

ST. MARGARET'S SCHOOL

TAPPAHANNOCK, VIRGINIA.

A Church School for girls. Boarding Department limited to 70. Colleeg Preparatory Course and Intermediate Grades. Athletics. Very moderate cost.

Country life and simplicity without isolation. Beautiful grounds on Rappahannock River. Three dormitories for different stages.

EDITH LATANE, Headmistress.

ST. CHRISTOPHER'S

A Church Boarding and Day School

Healthful, beautiful and historic surroundings. Boarding Department limited to 50 boys. Rate, $650. Reduction to sons of clergymen and missionaries. Illustrated catalogue on request.

REV. C. G. CHAMBERLAYNE, Ph. D., LL. D., Headmaster, Richmond, Virginia.

The Virginia Theological Seminary

ALEXANDRIA, VIRGINIA

For catalogue and other information, Address THE DEAN

The Beckford School

WOODSTOCK, VIRGINIA.

A school for younger boys. Second grade through Junior High School. On modern farm in Shenandoah Valley. Summer camp. Limited enrollment. Fifty dollars monthly.

EDMUND BURKE WHELAN, Headmaster.

The Bishop Payne Divinity School

The accredited Seminary of the Church for training colored men for the ministry. The curriculum covers the full course for Deacons and Priest's Orders. The degree of D. D. awarded.

For catalogue and information, apply to Rev. F. G. Ribble, M. A., D. D., Dean Petersburg, Va.

The Episcopal Theological School

Cambridge, Massachusetts.

Affiliated with Harvard University. Dean H. B. Washburn, 3 Mason Street.

THOUGHTS for the THOUGHTFUL

"This world is the small end of life."

Successive victories, however small, mean complete conquest in the end.—Selected.

Nothing stays good unless we try to make it better.

Woe to the person who always expects to be the center of affairs, who wants everyone to think about him. Such a one starts life on the thorny road of hurt feelings.

Your situation is always new to God. He can and will always begin over again to deal with you and give you another chance.—Rev. S. M. Shoemaker.

"Church history proves that Christianity advances best in face of opposition."

In those communities where Christ's teachings are most studied and applied, one is reminded of nature in spring time. "Everything shall live whereso-ever this river runneth."

Our prayers are just that "saying please" without which the will of God for our betterment can never advance to fruition.—Figgis.

"Not by Eastern windows only
When daylight comes, comes in the light,
In front the sun climbs, oh! how slowly!
But westward look, the land is bright!

"Who never ate his bread in sorrow,
Who never spent the midnight hours
Weeping and watching for the morrow,
He knows ye not, ye unseen powers."

The apprehending of Christ as Lord, the energizing of the will to heed His Voice to go the way of His Cross in bringing His principles to bear on all facts of human life constitute from beginning to end a superhuman undertaking.—John R. Mott.

Service is the visible proof of fellowship with Jesus and the protecting badge of discipleship. Just as the strong muscle develops through use, so the sincere Christian grows in strength and beauty as his spiritual muscles are employed in unselfish service to God and man.

The little duty neglected, the little sin allowed, the little self-denial refused, the little trial met with impatience and rebellion—these sap the strength of the soul, and undermine the finest foundations of character.—E. L. G.

Divinity School

Of the Protestant Episcopal Church in Philadelphia
42nd and Locust Streets
Graduate Courses in Theology. Privileges at the University of Pennsylvania
Address: The Rev. G. G. Bartlett, D. D Dean.

Christ Church School

MIDDLESEX COUNTY, VA.

A country school for boys; well located. College preparatory, moderate cost. Personal attention; scholarships. Apply to Wm. D. Smith, Jr., Headmaster(for information, Christchurch, Va.

The Ewart's Cafeteria

EXCELLENT FOOD
REASONABLE PRICES

Richmond, Va.
112-114 N. 5th St.
Norfolk, Va.
112-114 Market St.
Washington, D. C.
522 13th, N. W.

FLOWERS BY WIRE EVERYWHERE

Mosmiller Florist

115 E Main St.
424 E. Grace St
RICHMOND, VA.

Royal Laundry

and
BAND BOX DRY CLEANERS
UNEXCELLED LAUNDRY
and Cleaning Service
Richmond, Virginia.

L. T. CHRISTIAN

FUNERAL DIRECTOR

Boulevard-Park and Patterson Avenue
Richmond, Va.
Office Never Closed
Prices to meet depressed conditions

Edwin S. Gorham, Inc.

Publishers and Booksellers.
Established 1900.

Church Literature and Art, Bibles, Prayer Books and Hymnals, Devotional Books, Parish Requisites.

Catalogues and Information on request.

18 West 45th Street. New York.

Some Important Facts in English Church History

EXAMINED AND REVIEWED

By

REV. W. P. WITSELL, D. D.

This is an illuminating and instructive review of the history of the Episcopal Church in England from the earliest records, with commentaries on the book with the above title compiled by the Rev. C. L. Wells, D. D., of Sewanee, Tenn.

As a digest of the records of the establishment and growth of the Church; its maintenance and continuity of existence as an independent religious body amid the vicissitudes of early English politics, and efforts of outside interference, this review affords a valuable fund of information to churchmen.

In pamphlet form,
Price, 25 cents

For sale by
SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN CO.
Richmond, Va.

DESIGNED FOR THE PROMOTION OF PRACTICAL PIETY, THE DIFFUSION OF RELIGIOUS AND GENERAL INTELLIGENCE, AND THE MAINTENANCE OF THE PRINCIPLES OF THE PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL CHURCH

Southern Churchman

DOMINUS FRUSTRA NISI 1835

Vol. 100. RICHMOND, VA., FEBRUARY 23, 1935. No. 8.

O GOD OF GOD! O LIGHT OF LIGHT!

O God of God! O Light of Light!
Thou Prince of Peace, Thou King of kings,
To Thee, where angels know no night,
The song of praise forever rings:
To Him Who sits upon the throne,
The Lamb once slain for sinful men,
Be honor, might; all by Him won;
Glory and praise! Amen, Amen.

Nations afar, in ignorance deep;
Isles of the sea, where darkness lay;
These hear His voice, they wake from sleep,
And throng with joy the upward way.
They cry with us, "Send forth Thy light,"
O Lamb, once slain for sinful men;
Burst Satan's bonds, O God of might;
Set all men free! Amen, Amen!

Sing to the Lord a glorious song.
Sing to His Name, His love forth tell;
Sing on, heaven's hosts, His praise prolong;
Sing, ye who now on earth do dwell;
Worthy the Lamb, for sinners slain,
From angels, praise; and thanks from men;
Worthy the Lamb, enthroned to reign,
Glory and power! Amen, Amen!

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

The Church's Mission and Founder.

Mr. Editor:

I was deeply shocked to find your valued paper advocating the miscalled Child Labour Amendment, which thirty-six states rejected in the years from 1924 to 1927.

When the clergy turn from the cure of souls to matters of government, the consequences throughout history have been bad, almost without exception. I do not mean, of course, that the Church has no concern with secular life —on the contrary—but the Church forgets its mission and its Founder, when it seeks to promote the views of its clergy by law and by force. There is no child labour evil in this country, as the Census demonstrates. The alleged "100,000 children in industry" are practically all fourteen or over, and employed only when not required to be in school, and possessed of licenses under laws imposing suitable regulations on the hours and conditions of their work. But even if this were not so, it could be no argument for overturning the Constitution and the Declaration of Independence and enacting that the liberties and livelihood of one-third of our population be held only on sufferance of a remote, irresponsible body of politicians, each intent only on catching votes, and which has many times defied reason and passed tyrannical and absurd laws, as the South more than any other section should know.

Thos. F. Cadwalader.

Baltimore, Md.,
February 12, 1935.

Newspapers and Young Children.

Mr. Editor:

I enclose a flier entitled, "Why the Newspapers Oppose the Federal Child Labor Amendment." The opposition of most newspapers to the Federal Child Labor Amendment has been so bitter, and their discussions of the Amendment have been so misleading, that it was deemed necessary to let the public know what prompts this opposition, namely, the fear that if the Amendment were ratified a federal law might interfere with the use of young children for sales and delivery of newspapers.

The present opposition arose after an attempt was made to secure reasonable child labor provisions in the newspaper code, and more than sixty newspapers throughout the country which supported the Child Labor Amendment in 1933 have attacked it editorially since the question of code regulation arose.

Gertrude Folks Zimand.

New York, Feb. 9, 1935.

* * *

Born and Bred on Southern Churchman.

Mr. Editor:

I am delighted with the fine new dress the Churchman has put on, as well as the improved contents, so send my hearty congratulations. I may add that I was virtually "born and bred" on the Southern Churchman; it's children's page was read to me until I could read it myself. My father subscribed to it from the early thirties until his death in 1899, and from then on I have subscribed; often denying myself luxuries to do so, as home would seem empty without its weekly visit. The first editor I can remember was Dr. Sprigg. With all good wishes for your success in the New Year.

Ellen Meade Cosby.

Halifax, Va.

Preventive Religion.

February 8, 1935.

Mr. Editor:

The Rev. T. H. Prince, D. D., of Halifax, N. C., said in a sermon he preached in St. Stephen's Episcopal Church, New York, August 5, 1934: "The great religious mortality of the present time comes about because religious institutions are largely in the control of those who place greater emphasis upon rescue measures of salvation than upon preventive measures."

Surely the most intelligent method of dealing with this recognized "religious mortality" of today, is to use preventive measures. The Roman Catholic Church adheres to the wise statement of the Jesuits regarding the value of the first ten years of a child's spiritual life and instructs them at that age.

The Church is losing its children—because of the multitude of those whose parents have little or nothing to give them of the Christ—and the small proportion of those who get to a Sunday School, and who, most likely, will there acquire little that will help them in after years. Until the clergy give of themselves to this vital task of instructing the very young—until they teach them reverence and give them reason to love the Church, and love their rector—the terrible loss in the Church's ranks must continue!

May not this subject be considered of sufficient importance to arrest the attention of those who can, through the Power of God, remedy this condition—the clergy!

Mary Addison Ingle.

Washington, D. C.

CONTENTS

	Page
Letters to the Editor	2
Editorials	3
The Church and World Problems as Others See Them	4
The Thousandfold Page—F. W. Neve	5
Profitable Leisure—Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman, D. D.	6
Sexuagesima—W. E. Callender	6
The Tie That Binds—Mary F. Goodwin	7
The Forward Movement—Rt. Rev. Henry Wise Hobson, D. D.	8
The Evangelicalism of the Liberal Evangelicals—Rt. Rev. R. E. L. Strider, D. D.	10
Poem, Communion—William Tyler Olcott	11
Woman's Auxiliary	12
Young People's Service League	13
General Intelligence	14
Family Department	18
Children's Department	20
Personals	22
Thoughts for the Thoughtful	24

Help Wanted in Institutions and Hospitals.
Male and Female. Inexperienced and Experienced. All kinds of positions practically everywhere. Write now, enclosing stamp.
Scharf Bureau, Dept. 2-15-88, 145 W. 45th Street, New York.

Southern Churchman

SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN COMPANY,
Mayo Memorial Church House,
110 West Franklin Street,
Richmond, Va.

Officers.

President, RT. REV. H. ST. GEORGE TUCKER, D. D.
Vice-President, E. OTTO N. WILLIAMS.
Secretary-Treasurer, MR. JOHN H. COOKE.

Board of Directors.

RT. REV. H. ST. GEORGE TUCKER, D. D.
REV. CHURCHILL J. GIBSON, D. D.
REV. GEORGE P. MAYO, D. D.
REV. CHARLES W. SHEERIN.
MR. CARL H. NOLTING.
MR. ALEXANDER W. WEDDELL.
MR. E. RANDOLPH WILLIAMS.
MR. LANGBOURNE M. WILLIAMS, JR.
MISS SUSANNE C. WILLIAMS.

Voting Trustees.

RT. REV. ROBERT CARTER JETT, D. D.
RT. REV. H. ST. GEORGE TUCKER, D. D.
MR. JAMES M. BALL, JR.
MR. ROBERT B. TUNSTALL.
MR. LANGBOURNE M. WILLIAMS, JR.

Editors.

REV. CHARLES W. SHEERIN.....Editor
REV. F. W. NEVE, D. D., Associate Editor
MRS. CONRAD H. GOODWIN, Associate Editor
REV. SAMUEL B. CHILTON, Associate Editor
MRS. R. TATE IRVINE.....News Editor
JOHN H. COOKE..Secretary and Manager

Entered at the Post Office in Richmond, Va., as second-class mail matter.

SUBSCRIPTION PRICE.

$3.00 a year in advance. To the Clergy, $2.00. Six months, $1.50. Total subscriptions, three months, 50 cents; 10 cents a copy. Foreign postage, $1.00 additional.

For the convenience of subscribers subscriptions are continued at expiration unless otherwise ordered. Notice of renewal, discontinuance or change of address should be sent two weeks before the date they go into effect.

RECEIPT OF PAYMENT is shown in about two weeks by change of date on address label. If date is not properly extended after each payment, notify us promptly. No receipt for payment will be sent.

Notice post office address. The exact post office address to which we are directing the paper at the time of writing MUST ALWAYS BE GIVEN. Our mailing list is arranged by post office and not alphabetically.

Make all checks and money orders payable to the Southern Churchman, and not to an individual.

ADVERTISEMENTS.—Rates quoted on request. For classified see head of that department.

Representatives wanted in each Parish; liberal commissions.

News concerning the Church at large always welcome.

MURPHY'S HOTEL
RICHMOND VIRGINIA

An old Richmond landmark that has kept the pace. In the heart of that portion of the city most interesting to the traveler.

Write

A. GERALD BUSH, Manager.

SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN

Catholic for every truth of God; Protestant against every error of man.

EDITORIALS

Vol. 100. RICHMOND, VA., FEBRUARY 23, 1935. No. 8.

Brotherhood Day.

"Have we not all one Father?" is the motto put out by The National Conference of Jews and Christians for Brotherhood Day scheduled for February 24.

We have sympathy for those who claim that almost every Sunday is asked for as a special celebration by some organization or other. Of course, the wise rector or church will discriminate, and while probably all the days are important, there will be some that will stand out in their importance and just cannot be ignored.

Such a day, to our mind, is Brotherhood Day, and the reasons are many for its importance. For one thing, there obviously is a lack of brotherhood in our modern world. Germany is full of bitterness on racial questions, while Jews in other lands are threatened with persecution. There is the constant menace in America of "shirts" of one hue or another that may revive all the horrors and foolishness of the nineteen-twenties and the Ku Klux Klan. In many places there is an unwarranted feeling against Roman Catholics.

If we are really Christian in our belief, we cannot be sharers in feelings of intolerance. The situation in Mexico, from which we have refrained in editorial comment by reason of lack of proper information, reminds us that when Christianity is weakened and persecution sets in, it is often the persecutor which suffers most.

Certainly in the spirit of George Washington we find that it is not of the true American spirit to practice intolerance in religion. In the Spirit of Christ we can find no place for bigotry.

In all of our churches we can find place for prayer to encourage our people to be understanding in spirit towards others. Mass meetings arranged with Jews and Romanists should find Episcopalians ready to cooperate. Lists of social service and civic projects which are dependent upon all races and religions could be mentioned, either during the service or during the announcements to show the interdependence of the various groups for real achievement.

There is a foolish theory that our great Church is above observing any of these "days". But today we are all weak enough to need Brotherhood Day, and can we boastful enough to say that Brotherhood Day needs us?

The Theme of Discipleship.

Our Forward Movement under Bishop Hobson's leadership is urging us to make as our real theme for Lent the whole subject of Discipleship. To many it will seem that this is mere carrying of coals to Newcastle, for doesn't our Book of Common Prayer remind us in every service that our task is found in this great theme?

That is just the trouble. We have grown so accustomed to being called disciples that we have taken it for granted that we were in fact. In fact we have not been real disciples at all, and it is probably from the indifference of our discipleship that most of the ills of our world can be traced.

When we look at the original disciples of Our Lord, we can see that they did not actually become full disciples until after the Resurrection of Our Lord. Fear filled their hearts on that first Good Friday, and it was not until forty days later that we find men like Peter really exercising in a truly brave and Christian way, the discipleship that gave them strength and purpose in life.

True discipleship means that we have cast out Fear. True discipleship means having a purpose in life. And in our fearful and anxious modern life we are often comparable to caged animals walking about in endless search for happiness that never comes. We have revealed in our lack of purpose the lack of discipleship.

If we are willing to try and restore some of the "lost radiance of the Christian religion" and to make our worship a reality in our lives, we will probably discover the secret of true living. But it cannot be restored by, nor can we find it only in, the ethical discourses of the modern pulpit, nor in the negligent prayer life practiced too often by our people, both clerical and lay.

We hope that the suggestions of the Forward Movement will not be discarded in the waste-baskets of our church officials. The themes they suggest are not new, but they are neglected, and if they are neglected they eventually will mean the lack of usefulness of our branch of Christ's Church.

Our Young People's Page.

Ever since we have been editor of this old paper, we have had many requests for a page for young people and their work in their fellowships and service leagues. We are glad that such a page has been added, and we hope that our readers will tell their friends interested in this important part of the Church's work of our new feature.

The Rev. Randolph F. Blackford is well qualified to edit such a page. He comes from a family that in a most wonderful way guided an important part of the

(Continued on page 5.)

Church and World Problems as Others See Them

Capital Punishment in North Carolina.

Nell Battle Lewis, in the Raleigh News and Observer.

I have carefully read all the stories of the twenty electrocutions of 1934 as published in The News and Observer. Any one who does that will be impressed by the thing that was so forcefully brought out in the study of capital punishment in North Carolina published several years ago by the State Board of Charities and Public Welfare. The reader will find, in the main, the pitiful stories of the ignorant, the friendless, the underprivileged, in very strong probability, if not certainty, the mentally defective and the psychopathic dying in North Carolina's electric chair. The people we kill are the people who can't save themselves, the ones who haven't money or influence; the ones, in general, who have come from the poorest sort of environment and who have the poorest sort of heredity.

Capital punishment is wrong. Basically, it is wrong for a very simple reason: it is founded on the idea of retribution, of revenge, and carries this idea to the most extreme degree possible. Revenge itself is against the highest law, the law by which the older teachings of vengeance were superseded and in which, as Christians, we at least profess to believe. The prevalence of the idea of revenge is what makes so much of our criminal "justice" unsatisfactory and ineffective. In the long run vengeance doesn't work, that's all. It just doesn't work. "Ye have heard that it hath been said by them of old time . . . but I say unto you . . ." That "but" is the crux of the one unanswerable argument against capital punishment. Some time the world is going to find out that Jesus, first of all, was practical and that what we now call idealism is in the end the only practical way of carrying on the affairs of men.

Even if we don't feel equal to practicing the Christian principles which we have professed for so many centuries, at least we could go about the infliction of capital punishment more intelligently. It is extremely doubtful whether, if we knew all the circumstances preceding the crime, the play of hereditary and environmental forces on the criminal, we would ever find a case in which the death penalty was just. At least we could try to learn more about those forces in each case of the condemned. That is, first of all, we should shift the emphasis in punishment from the crime to the criminal.

One of the most obvious ways in which we could do this would be by giving, if not to the accused, then certainly to the condemned, a thorough mental examination. Despite all the confusing and conflicting testimony of opposing psychiatrists in numerous criminal trials that has befuddled and disgusted the public, there is not the slightest question that mental abnormality of some sort, deficiency or aberrancy, is a factor of far greater importance in the criminal make-up than is now recognized, either legally or generally. The studies of the twenty-six men sentenced to death in this state which the Board of Public Welfare made proved this beyond argument.

Preparation for Confirmation.

The Guardian, February 1, 1935.

How far is preparation for confirmation effective? Obviously about half of those confirmed fall away, at any rate from the regular practice of communion, if Easter numbers are a sure guide. The Bishop of Lichfield has drawn attention to certain weaknesses which may account—at any rate in part—for this leakage. Candidates are presented who are not really ready for so great a step as conscious full membership of the Church. He asks, What is the aim of preparation? Is it to produce "well-instructed Churchpeople" or "soundly converted Christians"? Some will say, rightly, that both should be aimed at. But if the latter aim is lacking the former will not be of much permanent avail. The trouble is, of course, that children are now often so ignortant of the rudiments of religion that neither aim is accomplished. Nor can there be a success unless more time is devoted to preparation. The bishop confesses that when he looks at his old notes he finds "too much of self and not enough of 'God' in them." It is a defect all too common. In this respect a wholesome change might be made in the character of many episcopal utterances at the time of confirmation. Too often they are merely moral exhortations, or else the whole Catholic faith packed into half an hour. In either case they do not conduce to the surrender that confirmation demands.

Peace in the Pacific.

Editorial, Federal Council Bulletin, February, 1935.

The maintenance of peace in the Pacific is a matter of the profoundest concern to the Churches of Christ. Now is the time to effect a reconciliation of conflicting policies. A policy of drift would be inimical to peace. Japan has denounced the Washington and London naval treaties of 1921 and 1930 and has announced that with the termination of these treaties on December 31, 1936, she will no longer be a party to them. Japan demands parity of naval strength with the United States and Great Britain and they have refused to accede to this demand. Talk of a naval race fills the air.

The churches do not pretend to know a great deal about tonnages, gun calibre, or naval ratios. They can make no contribution to a solution of the technicalities of naval negotiations. This fact, however, does not preclude them from having very clear convictions regarding the possible effect of naval policy upon the peace of the world. The churches are certain that a naval race between the United States and Japan can only result in disaster for both countries.

The request of the Japanese government for naval parity must be viewed in the light of Ambassador Saito's suggestion (not yet, however, officially made by the Japanese government) of greatly reduced tonnages and the total abolition of capital ships. If Japan were granted parity, and if, simultaneously, the naval tonnages of the United States, Great Britain and Japan were reduced by fifty per cent and battleships and aircraft carriers were abolished altogether, the peace of the Pacific would more certainly follow than if these three countries were to enter upon a mad race for naval supremacy. Does any serious-minded student of world affairs doubt that a trans-Pacific war would be well nigh impossible were the United States, Great Britain, and Japan to abolish all offensive craft, and at the same time reduce by half the tonnage of all vessels in other categories?

The Washington and London treaties will not elapse for nearly two years. During this time churchmen have a priceless opportunity to urge that a basis for further and continued agreement be reached between the naval powers upon which the peace of the Pacific depends. As an immediate measure in the interest of a better understanding between the United States and Japan they may well urge that the silly naval maneuvers scheduled for next summer in the Pacific be speedily abandoned.

THE THOUSANDFOLD PAGE

ARCHDEACON FREDERICK W. NEVE, D. D.

Some Greater Aspects of Christanity

Part Two.

There are two very important questions relating to Christianity which deserve attention. One is as to what Christ was when He was here on earth in the First Century, and the other what He is now at the present time. The first is receiving plenty of attention and has always done so, but the latter has, somehow or other, been left entirely in the background, except on certain special occasions, when some season of the Church Year, such as The Ascension, necessitates some reference to it.

Christ Needed Now.

And yet the needs of the immediate present would seem to bring clearly before us the question as to the help which Christ can give to us in meeting the great and threatening problems which confront us now. Christianity teaches us that Christ is the Saviour of the world, and, if that be so, we need His saving power to be exercised on our behalf, not merely in a strictly spiritual sense, as in the forgiveness of our sins, but also with regard to the actual conduct of world affairs which man, with all his many gifts, such as that of reason, has not shown himself able to control. One of the great truths which was revealed to the world when Christ was here on earth, was that God is on our side in furthering our best and highest interests and that He was even willing to send His Son into the world to die upon the Cross, in order that our eternal salvation might be secured. Christ made it clear that God is Love, and that His own loving devotion to even the lowest and poorest of mankind was a manifestation of His Father's feeling and disposition towards us. For He said to His disciples on the night before His death, when Philip asked that they might be shown the Father:—"Have I been so long time with you and yet hast thou not known me, Philip? he that hath seen me hath seen the Father: and how sayest thou then shew us the Father?"

Christ's Love Always the Same.

The Epistle to the Hebrews says:—"Jesus Christ the same yesterday and today and forever." This gives to His daily acts of loving service to suffering humanity, an eternal significance and we can, therefore, apply them to the present situation. We believe that Jesus Christ has the same love for men now as when He died for them upon the Cross, and that in the supreme place of sovereignty over all creation to which He was raised by the Father, at His Ascension, Love is the governing motive. We may be sure, no matter how dark things may appear to be, that He is making "all things work together for good to them that love God." It may be said, of course, that things do not look that way at the present time, but it would seem that God's purpose has always been to train men to work in fellowship with Him and in harmony with His divine will. He does not do for men what they can do for themselves, with His help, save in such exceptional circumstances as the coming of Christ into the world and the redemptive work wrought out by Him.

Love and Service.

Christ made it absolutely clear that love is the central law of the universe and that service is the way in which love most perfectly expresses itself. He, Himself, said of Himself, "I am among you as He that serveth." And He showed that human greatness must be measured by the extent and quality of the service rendered by us to our fellowman. When the law of service becomes fully recognized as the central law of our civilization, the troubles, economic and otherwise, will pass away, because everyone will desire to promote the interest of others as well as his own. Christ, as He was when He was here on earth, and Christ, as He is now, as the supreme Ruler of the universe, under His Father, are one and the same Person. We believe that the same law which governed His life and actions then is the same law which rules the universe, and by throwing in our lot with Him and seeking to do His will here on earth as it is done in heaven, we may bring heaven and earth nearer and nearer together all the time.

The Universal Good.

The Kingdom of God on earth is not necessarily a long way off, it may be brought to pass very soon, if we will make the law which rules the heavenly places the law which binds men together in a unity of purpose which means the universal good. The law of service is not something alien to human nature, but rather the fulfilment of the purpose for which it was created. We can make this law our own whenever we will, and as soon as we do so we shall find that we have gained a sense of freedom which will be an inspiration to us and make us realize that we have never understood the real and truest meaning of life till then.

The Isolation of Our Lord's Life on Earth.

If we isolate the earthly life of our Lord and consider it apart from the Eternity out of which He came and the Eternity into which He passed, we gain only such a partial view of it as to lose in a great measure its eternal significance. The law by which He lived then is the law by which He lives now and that is the law of love manifesting itself in service. The glory of God was revealed then in Him, for St. John says:—"We beheld His glory, the glory as of the only begotten of the Father, full of grace and truth," and we shall behold His glory once again upon this earth when we have learned that the true glory of man, as well as the glory of God, will be revealed, when mankind, as a whole, has come to live a life of service as He did.

* * *

EDITORIALS.

(Continued from page 3.)

youth of our Church through many years of great service, and he has that quality that cannot be defined, but which means an interest in that which pertains to the youthful mind.

But he cannot run such a page alone. He needs the help of those faithful counsellors and leaders of young people's work, and we hope that he will have the support of all such.

Profitable Leisure

By the Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman, D. D., LL. D., D. C. L., Bishop of Washington.

Bishop Freeman.

There is a fine passage that comes to us from the Apostle Paul that may well be weighed and considered today, namely: "Whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report; if there be any virtue and if there be any praise, think on these things." It is a challenge to be wise and to be reflective: "Think on these things."

A young and highly intelligent young man has just left my office and as he went he said: "Our greatest trouble today is, we are not thinking." I have heard such an observation more frequently of late from the young than from those of mature years. Is it that we are drifting, satisfied to let each day and each recurring incident take its place without respect to the reasonableness and logic of events and their inevitable consequences? Take our so-called periods of leisure, periods where we indulge in recreations or amusements, or indeed in reading and social intercourse, how much of it is with design, for mental, cultural and spiritual enrichment, how much of it calls into exercise our finer tastes and faculties? The ever-present radio with its noisy programs, consisting mostly of cheap clatter and discordant sounds with only now and again something fine, informing and elevating; the stage and notably the screen, with much that is common and appealing only to the baser things of our nature; our literature, often erratic and sensational; all this and more is hardly conducive to reflection, nor is it designed to elevate and refine the tastes of young and old alike. Obviously, there must be periods for play, for complete relaxation and surrender to those things that are entertaining and diverting. This we all need, possibly more so in these trying days than ever before, but if it means excessive indulgence, if it consists in filling all the leisure hours with things that give no fresh impulse to thought, no refreshment to the mind, no stimulus to the imagination, we wonder what must ultimately become of our finer faculties and sensibilities. Unexercised they atrophy and decay. There are occupations, recreations and indulgences that are wholesome and refreshing. Life without them would be gray and colorless. Each day, rightly apportioned, demands some form of diversion. Is it not possible that there are diversions that have in themselves the kind of stimulation we need and that are in consonance with St. Paul's admonition; that are true, and honest, and just, and pure, and lovely and of good report? Yes, and may they not be quite as appealing and attractive as the highly colored, highly spiced pabulum purveyed by cheap and tawdry entertainments?

It does not require a highly cultivated taste to enjoy the more wholesome, more profitable things that may be had and had at the lowest cost. A brilliant author speaks of the crowds on ocean liners so occupied with light and frivolous pastimes that they have no time to gaze upon the changing wonders of the mighty seas over which they sail; so much occupied that "they cannot gaze upon wonder." Along with this cheap appraisal of the ever-unfolding miracle of nature, what treasures reside in our libraries, our galleries, our conservatories of music; yes, and what unused and sometimes unrecognized riches are at hand even in modest homes! Kinship and friendship, what treasures, what revealing and refreshing hours they yield. Again, what satisfaction of those deeper, finer qualities in our nature is found in periods of reflection and quiet contemplation when spirit communes with spirit and God seems near and the larger plan of life unfolds itself; when as in a mirror we behold our real selves, and catch fore-glintings of that larger, fuller life towards which we are hastening on.

Some time for work, some time for play, and some time for serious thought upon life's choicer, more enduring values, this means a rounded, symmetrical, well-balanced life, a life that grows richer with the multiplying years and comes at length to the haven of its own choosing. I saw a fine legend carved upon an ancient sun dial in a churchyard in Scotland that was suggestive:

"I am a shadow, so art thou;
I mark time, do'st thou?"

To mark time is to know and love the best, the things that are "of good report."

* * *

SEXAGESIMA.

Today is known as Sexagesima, or the Second Sunday before Lent, the sub-title being added in 1662. The Collect is taken from the Sarum Missal, 1549 (Sacramentary Gregory), with some alterations. The original Collect prayed for "defense" by the protection by the teacher of the Gentiles (Saint Paul). This was excised and justly so by the Reformers, and prayer for defense by God's power substituted. A few remarks concerning Septuagesima and Sexagesima, although I believe I referred to them some time ago, may prove of interest. The week before Septuagesima is in the East called "Exhortatory Week," because the faithful are then exhorted to prepare themselves for the Great Fast. The Nestorians term it the "Ninevites Week," on account of a Fast which they observed in the Commemoration of the repentance of Nineveh. The Armenians name it the "Artziburion." Septuagesima almost everywhere retains its Latin name. In the Eastern Church it is called the Sunday of the "Prodigal Son," that being their Gospel for the Day. The week that succeeds it is in the East termed "Apocreos," because from Septuagesima Sunday meat is forbidden. The week following is in the East termed "Cheese Week," and in Russia until the revolution, "Butter Week", because, until the close of the following Sunday, cheese and butter are allowed to be eaten. The Friday of Septuagesima, in the North of Germany, was known as the "Kindfest" or "Kind-tag," being by a peculiar rite kept as "The Festival of the finding of the Child Jesus in the Temple." In the Tyrol, the Thursday before Quinquagesima was called "Mad Thursday," because kept as a special Carnival. In the Collect for today it is well to notice the acknowledgment made "that we do not put our trust in any thing that we do, that our power for good is not of ourselves, but that by Thy Power we may be defended against all adversities (both of body and of soul). Our strength comes not by our own weak wills, however strong we may imagine them to be, and it is well in this connection to bring to remembrance the

(Continued on page 7.)

The Tie That Binds

Mary F. Goodwin.

It is generally conceded today that the peace of the world, and perhaps the fate of our Western civilization rests upon the friendship between England and America. There is no better way by which these peoples can learn to know and understand each other than through a knowledge of the work of their respective churches. It is the privilege and responsibility of every member of the church who may have an opportunity to travel abroad to learn more of this "tie that binds."

In many cities in England one finds in the churches names that are familiar, families whose scions sought their fortunes in the new world when America was still under the rule of Great Britain, but nowhere is this contact so close as in the great city of London. There one is amazed at the richness of historical confacts and associations. Only a few can be mentioned here, the visitor finds them out for himself.

During the eighteenth century, the old Church of St. Bartholomew fell on evil times. Although it is the oldest church standing in London, its situation in Smithfield was at that time most unfortunate. Parts of the once handsome Priory Church were used for secular purposes, and in the now finely restored Lady's Chapel, Benjamin learned the art of printing. Nearby is the Church of St. Sepulcher, part of which withstood the great fire of 1666; in here we find the tomb of Captain John Smith, "Sometime governor of Virginia and Admiral of New England," as his epitaph, written by himself, tells us. This building is near Newgate, and until 1890 the church bell was tolled as men were executed in that grim prison. In still earlier days, when executions took place at Tyburn, a handbell, which is still preserved, was rung the midnight before under the window of the condemned man's cell. As the prisoners were led past the church the next morning, sitting in the hangman's cart, a small bunch of flowers was handed to each man by some member of this church, a touching service rendered for many years. Only God knows what these little posies meant to the men going to their death. Some of them may have been rudely thrown away, some dropped forgotten in the cart; others, we imagine, were handed to friends as farewell gifts, and some may have been grasped in the hands of the criminal as he met his death, a token of his hope for better things to come.

Time and space forbid a detailed enumeration or description of the close ties which Americans find in the various churches in the city; a few of these, however, must be mentioned. In the city proper one finds in old All Hallows the font in which William Penn was baptized; nearby is the Church of St. Nicholas Cole, on a tablet on the wall is the name of a late rector, the Rev. Fitzgerald Keith Stribling Marshall, and what Virginian will not feel at home on reading that? Across the river, in the beautiful Cathedral of St. Saviour is the tomb of a brother of John Harvard; higher up the river, on the same side is the Palace of Lambeth, the city residence of the Archbishop of Canterbury, in the chapel of which were consecrated our two Bishops White and Provoost; so through the many churches we find our roots in the names of the men who were the connecting links between the Mother Church and her daughter in America.

Westminster Abbey is, of course, one of the first places in London visited by the traveler. Almost immediately in front of the western doors of this edifice is the entrance into the Dean's yard, on which faces the ancient Westminster School for Boys. Crossing the yard, and leaving through a quaint gateway known as the Dean's Gate, one enters Tufton Street, on which a hundred yards away faces the headquarters of the "Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts"—the "281" of the Church of England. Visitors are always welcome here, the attendants are glad to show them the various committee and conference rooms, many of which are furnished in memory of the heroes of mission fields. Americans are usually shown a small picture which hangs in the entrance hall, of the first church built under the auspices of the Society in a "foreign" land—it is of the Goose Creek Church near Charleston, South Carolina. This little building was erected in 1702 and is still standing. It is, I believe, the only church in the United States which still has the royal arms of Great Britain hanging over its pulpit.

There is a room in which our countrymen take personal pride. The great Board Room, adjoining the Chapel, was panelled in black walnut and furnished by our Church in America in commemoration of the three hundredth anniversary of the planting of the Church of England in America in 1607. This room is so arranged that, by opening the folding doors, it becomes a part of the chapel. In this chapel, as in our own Missions House in New York, noon-day prayers are held daily for the spread of the Kingdom of God.

In the old days missionaries sent frequent reports of their work back to headquarters. If one finds favor with the secretary who has them in charge, one may see them. It is the hope of the authorities to establish a library with adequate facilities for making such papers and other historical material available to the student, but the time has not come when this may be done.

In this building one is apt to meet bishops and other missionaries from the four corners of the world, and one grasps as never before the immensity of the missionary work of the Church of England in foreign lands. It was the privilege of the writer to attend a few years ago, the annual meeting of the Society in Albert Hall. There were about three thousand people present. Representatives came from every part of the world—India, China, Japan, Canada, Australia, and the Island Possessions in both the old and new worlds. We listened to reports and addresses which held the large audience spell-bound. One felt overcome by the magnitude of the work and the significance of that gathering. The desire to share in it was partly satisfied by joining in the great missionary hymns one sings at home, such as "O God Our Help in Ages Past," a hymn which is always used at such gatherings in England.

Certainly a good American Churchman can find no place in London which stirs him more than the headquarters of the "Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts."

* * *

SEXAGESIMA.

(Continued from page 6.)

words, "Let him that thinketh he standeth take heed lest he fall." How many examples we find both in sacred history and also secular, proving the truth of this. The really strong man of God relies not on his own strength, but on that aid which comes to us by prayer. Read the Collect for today and also the Epistle, taken from Second Corinthians, eleventh chapter and nineteenth verse. You will see how wonderfully they are interwoven, St. Paul not relying upon his sufferings or works, his glory not in them but in the Cross of Jesus Christ our Lord.

William E. Callender.

The Forward Movement

By the Rt. Rev. Henry Wise Hobson, D. D.

This Address Was Broadcast in Episcopal "Church of the Air" Series, February 3, 1935.

"Forward, March" is the command which has sounded to the members of the Episcopal Church. It is a command which has ever stirred the minds and hearts of loyal soldiers who are eager to go into action in behalf of a cause which they hold dear. We are called to share in a Forward Movement in our Church. That "we" includes not only those members of the Episcopal Church who are sharing in this broadcast, but all of the clergy, laymen and women, young people, and boys and girls, who are included in the two million who make up our Church's baptized membership.

A resolution was adopted by unanimous action of the House of Bishops and the House of Deputies at the General Convention meeting in October, which provided for the appointment of a commission of five Bishops, five Presbyters, and ten Laymen who should "prepare and carry out definite plans in collaboration with the National Council, for an organized effort to reinvigorate the life of the Church and to rehabilitate its General, Diocesan and Parochial work." Those appointed as members of this Commission are fully conscious of the magnitude of our Commission and of our own inadequacy to meet it. Yet, we have begun our work with faith and courage. Our spirit is not the result of any confidence in self, but is based first upon the firm conviction that it is God's purpose that in our day the Episcopal Church, as well as others of the great Communion of Christendom, shall exert a new power in the life of the world; and second, upon the knowledge that we can depend upon the loyalty and cooperation of the Bishops, other clergy and many devoted members of the Church. In other words, we have faith in God's eagerness to perform the miracle which our times demand; and in the readiness of the leaders and people of the Episcopal Church to unite in preparing and carrying out plans for a Forward Movement. We have no expectation of telling the Church what this program must be or how it is to be fulfilled, but we know that there are many who stand ready to give to the Church their vision, their courage, their service and their faith as we unite in facing the present emergency.

For this is an emergency—and a serious one. This call to a Forward Movement, which found expression in the resolution of General Convention, is really a cry from the agonized hearts of those who are deeply concerned about the fact that our Church has not simply been standing still, but actually in retreat. There's no use trying to fool ourselves with any blind optimism about certain conditions which are amply proven by every honest investigation.

The Present Situation.

It is not my intention to be a prophet of gloom by spending much time painting the dark side of our picture. But there are still too many ostriches in the Church who refuse to look truth in the face. Let's be honest and admit that the work of our Church which made steady progress in many parts of the world through a century of missionary advance, is today crippled for want of adequate support. Work which heroes have established through years of struggle and sacrifice is threatened and, if the present retreat continues, will have to be abandoned. Honesty not only forces us to see what is happening in the advance posts of the Church's work, but also reveals that the shrinkage of material support, which has caused such a financial emergency, is really a symptom of a far more deep seated sickness in the life of the Church.

Other symptoms are evident when we open our eyes. We see, for instance, that the great majority of our Church members are woefully ignorant so far as any real knowledge of the Christian religion or the Church is concerned. They know little about the life or teaching of Him whom they have promised to follow. They have only the haziest understanding of the history or fundamental teachings of the Church. They have little or no understanding of how Christian principles might be brought to bear on the solution of the problems of our day. We have a Church in which the majority of our members, when judged by any standard to determine their Christian intelligence, are in the moron class.

We can see further that considerably less than half of our Church members are awake to the fact that regular attendance at corporate worship is an essential for spiritual well-being. That in spite of the fact that many thousands of men, women, and young people stand before the altar each year and solemnly say "I do" in answer to the question, "Do you promise to follow Jesus Christ as your Lord and Saviour?" they also slip away by the thousands and join the "lost communicant" army of slackers.

We must admit also that the Church has not been successful in the enlistment of the youth of our day. They deserve a program which will arouse their enthusiasm and offer them a way of life appealing to their spirit of adventure and their readiness to make heroic sacrifice in a great cause.

While admitting that frequently the Church receives no credit for what it has done and is doing, we must face the fact that the Church is not exerting any very great influence on social, economic, political, national, or international life today. It was said of the first disciples when they came to Thessalonica: "These that have turned the world upside down are come hither also." Millions of those who call themselves Disciples today are not doing much to turn upside down those conditions and situations in modern life which are contrary to the Gospel as taught and revealed by Jesus. We've compromised again and again and again until the average Church member is a complacent individual who has pretty well accepted the standards of the world. You look at him and see no difference between him and a person without Church affiliation, and as a rule it's a surprising thought to him that he ought to be different.

The Demands of Jesus.

These, and other symptoms, can all be traced back to one fundamental sickness in the Church—a failure on the part of the majority of our members to live up to the demands of Discipleship. Jesus of Nazareth called certain men to be His followers. He made great demands of them. He had no use for them unless they were ready to meet these demands. That same Jesus—the living Christ—calls us today to be His followers. He is making just as great demands of us as He made of those first disciples. He has no use for us unless we are ready to meet these demands. And the Church is in retreat because in its ranks are a vast number of people who call themselves followers of the Master who have never faced the question of what it means to be a follower of Jesus, or have found the demands too strenuous and have thought it possible to water them down and still hold their places in the ranks of the Disciples of Christ. It couldn't be done nineteen hundred years ago, and it can't be done now.

The Church will stop its retreat and begin an advance when its members seriously face the demands which Christ makes of them and become His loyal Disciples.

What does the Forward Movement expect to do in this situation? In answering this question it should first of all be made clear that the Forward Movement is not to be a whirlwind campaign to raise money. God knows how great the need is for more adequate support of the Church's work. The tragic condition in many parishes and dioceses as well as in the mission fields, cries out, "Help or we perish!" In the very near future, more money must be given to the Church or irreparable harm will be done to its work. It must not be said that the Forward Movement is a "spiritual" effort not concerned with the problem of finance. Such a statement assumes a dualism which is a lie. Vital spiritual life expresses itself in an eagerness to give of all that we have, money included, for the fulfillment of Christ's demand that His Gospel be made known to all the world. Therefore, the Forward Movement must have as part of its objective, the development of a truer sense of responsibility on the part of every member of the Church for the support of the whole program of the Church.

However, the financial emergency must not blind us to the fact that no adequate solution of our problems will come from the mere use of campaign methods to raise money. It might be possible through a well organized approach, to extract a million or more additional dollars from the pockets of Church members during the coming year, but unless those who give are changed in spirit the relief would be but temporary, and financial stringency would soon set in again. The Forward Movement, therefore, must go deeper, and intends to go deeper. It will present a long time program of education and enlistment.

The educational phase of the program includes first of all a thorough study and understanding of the present needs and opportunities of the Church. To this end members of the Commission have been going throughout the Church holding conferences with Bishops and other leaders, meeting with clergy and lay people, and seeking in every possible way to gather the true picture of the present situation. The primary purpose of these conferences is not to enlist the support of those to whom we have gone, for we are confident that their backing is already assured. We have gone to them because we depend so fully upon their counsel, and realize that the Forward Movement program must be built not by us, but out of the minds and hearts of many who are so richly equipped to lead in this venture. These visits have given us both a unique opportunity to gather suggestions for our program, and the privilege of entering into a closer fellowship with many loyal members throughout the Church who are ready to share in the advance which must be made.

Second, the educational program will present to the Church through every possible channel, vivid and arousing information pertaining to the needs and opportunities which confront us. The Commission is convinced that an ignorant Church is always a retreating Church, and that an informed membership must be one of the first steps in any advance.

The enlistment program makes no new appeal. It is not concerned with the organization of any special groups. It will not use any unique formula. It presents a call which is as old as the Gospel itself—the same call which Jesus gave to Peter and James and John—"Follow Me." It will issue this call not through a new organization but through the Church as already organized. The goal is the enlistment of men and women, young people, boys and girls, in a program which will demand of them that they live as true Disciples of Christ and loyal members of His Church. In other words, they shall do the essential things which our Lord and the Church has always demanded of those who dare to call themselves Christians.

What are some of these things?

Our Discipleship.

First of all, there must be an honest recognition of our individual failures, and of the fact that, because we have failed, this retreat of which I have spoken, has set in. We must face our frequent lapses, our disloyalty, our hypocrisy, and have a sincere feeling of sorrow for our past neglect. It's the first and necessary step of repentance—an about face. The Disciple must turn—turn from his present state to God. Turn not once, but as he begins each day, and again and again during the day, as some temptation would lead him astray, or some selfishness would cause him to wander. A Forward Movement requires that men today shall face anew the demands of John the Baptist.

Second, we members of the Church, or those who would become members, must make a definite decision that our pledge to follow Christ shall be the supreme end and purpose of our lives. Half-way following must cease; compromise must end; spasmodic loyalty must go. The Disciple must realize that to take the Master's way means to follow Him in all things; to be ready to have Him order and control every area of his life. For He asks us, as He asked James and John, "Can ye drink of the cup that I drink of?" The Disciple who does not follow is a deserter.

The third step essential to a Forward Movement is one which I have touched on already—the development of an informed and intelligent Church membership. It is fairly easy to stir up enthusiasm by the use of various well-known methods, but we must keep constantly in mind that enthusiasm which has no foundation in knowledge is a dangerous state. The Disciple must learn—learn about Christ, His life, His teachings; learn about the Church, its history and its work; learn about His fellows, their problems, their suffering and their rights; learn about the world, and how the relations of races and nations can advance or impede the fulfillment of God's purpose. The Church has been trying to educate its members, but we've done a poor job of it. We must face the task anew and through special literature, the Church press, classes, conferences, sermons, addresses, individual study, seek to shed an ever fuller light to dispel the darkness of our minds.

Fourth, we must learn to pray. I dare not start on this subject in this address, except to say that we have done much talking about the importance of prayer, but have taught very few how to pray. It's a hard but essential task. Without prayer the individual and the Church are helpless. When the first Disciples saw the results of prayer in the Master's life, they asked, "Teach us to pray." He had a hard time doing it, but at last, when they had learned the secret, they received the power of the Holy Spirit. It is this power that the Church needs today, and it will come only as its members learn to pray.

The fifth requirement which the Forward Movement presents as essential for the Disciple can be well expressed in Jesus' words to His followers: "He who would be first among you shall be servant of all." The Christian must make service the motive of all life. The Davenport pastoral of the House of Bishops called us to place the service motive in business and industry ahead of the profit motive. I have heard people say: "That's just foolish idealism." Not unless Christ was a fool. He rejected the idea of broken-up compartments. Life was all one to Him. When He demanded that His followers be servants of all, He meant all. It must be made clear today that we can't be Christians unless our first motive is service—service in the Church; service in our communities; service in professional life, in business and industry; service in politics; service in nation and the world. The Disciple must learn to serve—yes, to be a servant of all.

A sixth point in our program for Discipleship must be the re-establishment of regular corporate worship as an essential for those who count themselves members of the Church. I have already spoken of the neglect which surrounds us. It is not going to be easy to overcome this habit of neglect, but overcome it we can. The Church always moved forward when there was present in the hearts of its members a love for God, which made them eager to join each other in the corporate acts of praise, thanksgiving, prayer and fellowship combined in common worship.

Seventh, it must be made clear that there's a vast difference between the giving that most Church members indulge in and the sharing that Christ demands of His Disciples. Most of us have given of our leftovers, while the Master calls us to share our all. It will hurt. It hurt Him. It will cost. It cost Him His life. Only as we learn to share our time, our money, our minds, our strength, our love, shall we open our lives so that God's power can flow through us to bring about a Forward Movement in the life of the Church.

Ideals to Be Made Clear.

You may say that these several phases of the enlistment program are just vague ideals. Ideals, yes, but the Forward Movement must see to it that the demands of Discipleship are no longer vague. They must be presented without compromise or watering down. We must not be afraid of making great demands. Christ called men to an adventurous life of daring in which misunderstanding, persecution, sacrifice, and even death took their toll. It is time that the Church called in the same spirit. It means we are launched on a long-time program to convert and enlist, to educate the clergy and people of our Church. Among the first definite steps in this program is the publication of a Lenten pamphlet on Discipleship which will be distributed throughout the Church. Already four hundred thousand copies of these pamphlets have been ordered, and it is hoped that the great majority of the individuals and families in the Church will make use of it for daily Bible reading and prayer during Lent. They will probably be distributed in your parish. When you receive your copy, I ask that you use it faithfully. I also ask that you pray for the Forward Movement, and that you take your full part in the fulfillment of its program. You are not asked to do something new or different, but to do better the very things that we, as Christians, have already promised to do. We are called to take our religion just as seriously as the first Disciples took the religion which Christ called on them to accept. He proclaimed a Gospel not as something we can take or leave—or something we can dabble with—but as an essential for every one of us. And being an essential for us, it is essential for all men, and we must give it to others. That Missionary spirit is the very life blood of the Gospel, and, unless we share in that spirit, we are not followers of the Master.

Jesus says to us again today: "He would come after me, let him deny himself and take up his cross daily, and follow me." He calls us to be His companions and to travel His way—an adventurous way counting no cost too heavy and no sacrifice too great.

Thank God for those who through the centuries of the Church's life have dared to answer His call, and for the many loyal followers of the Master who are members of the Church today. It is because we know that there are many who are daily following the way of Christ that we dare to go forth on this venture. We are certain that the spirit which is in them can become contagious; that what we see in them can be caught by others; that through the loyalty and devotion of faithful Christians throughout the Church a new spirit can be fanned into flame and pass from man to man, from parish to parish, from diocese to diocese, until the Church is united in a victorious body which will march forward as Disciples of Christ, proclaiming to a struggling, yearning, suffering world the healing power of His Gospel.

The Evangelicalism of the Liberal Evangelicals

By the Rt. Rev. R. E. L. Strider, D. D.

A careful scrutiny of the wording of the title by which this group is known is necessary if one would fully appreciate the importance of that for which its members stand. If one may judge from what one hears, it might be supposed that the most distinctive principle of the Liberal Evangelicals is their liberalism. But that, I believe, is not altogether true. The group does, of course, stand irrevocably for the freedom of the human mind and spirit, and it will tolerate their enslavement in no respect whatsoever. That is a necessary aspect of our emphasis, but it is not the primary aspect. The noun in our title is "evangelical" "Liberal" is an adjective. And even as the strength of a man's literary style inheres in his nouns, not in his adjectives, so it may be that, while liberalism must be given its necessary place—and assuredly it has its necessary place—the abiding contribution made by our group to the life and thought of the Church will grow out of our loyalty to the evangelical tradition. Without, then, minimizing our liberalism, I would suggest that we lay the heavier emphasis upon our evangelicalism.

But what do we mean by evangelicalism? There have been evangelicals in the Church from the time of the Apostles, and as I read Church history it is they who on the whole have been striking the truest notes in the not invariably harmonious symphony of Christendom. The early British Church, which we recognize as the spiritual Mother of us all, was a strongly evangelical Church. While most of the Western World was becoming increasingly fascinated by the purely ecclesiastical and legal aspects of Christianity, the British Church was laying heavy emphasis, indeed almost exclusive emphasis, upon personal piety, evangelical fervor, and missionary zeal. From those early days the evangelical strain has persisted in English Christianity. The Wesleyan movement centered in a revival of evangelicalism, but though the Wesleyans finally left the Church, the evangelical note did not. It continued, it became the rallying cry of a distinguished and influential group, it has survived into our modern day, and to it many of us trace the most vital elements in our Church's life.

The essence of evangelicalism resolves itself into two basic and inclusive convictions. First, the conviction of the immovable centrality of the Person of Jesus Christ. The human mind, by virtue of its very constitution, demands a reality which is changeless, which forever remains fixed and stable amid the shifting scenes of earthly existence. That reality is not to be found in the physical universe. Neither the stars, which the poets speak of as the "constant" stars, nor the so-called "everlasting" hills, nor the solid earth which seems so firm beneath our feet, nor any material phenomenon whatever, can be thought unchanging. Nor are the ideas of the human mind unchanging. Times, fashions, views of truth change, and we change with them. There is but one Pole Star which never wavers, but one fixed point in all the feverish gamut of human life and thought, and that is the flaming, living personality of Jesus. Not the written records about Jesus, for they have come to us through men and, therefore, cannot always be inerrant; not His words, for them likewise we are not always sure; nor the creeds, and not the Church He founded, for these, too, are growing, living things and must forever change; but He alone, the supreme and matchless One, Jesus Christ the same yesterday, today, and forever. Evangelicalism stands or falls with faith in that deathless and stupendous fact.

The second foundation stone of evangelicalism is the conviction that Jesus Christ must somehow find reflection in the personal lives of men and women. The evangelical believes that no religion can be true which is not demonstrated to be true in the fields of human experience. The evangelical knows that Christianity is not a cult, nor a philosophy, nor as some believe, an iridescent dream, but a life. If it is not lived, it is not real. It is not enough for you and me to preach the Christ, if we be evangelicals we shall in some degree exemplify Him. It is not enough that modern men, women, and young people be baptized, confirmed, admitted to the Holy Communion, and enrolled as members of the Church. They must also go forth into the busy, hectic ways of modern life, so to think, to serve, to live, that men will know they have been near to Jesus. Apart from Him our world is lost. And Christ's points of contact with our world must be the consecrated lives of those who are baptized into His Spirit.

Thus, Mr. Chairman and friends, not only is the evangelical the heir of the centuries that are gone, he is also the prophet of a new and better day, because he knows that there is no wisdom wise enough to solve the problems of the race, and no force mighty enough to overcome the evil of the world save the wisdom and power generated in the life which dares to hide itself with Christ in God. To the high privilege and the solemn responsibility of such a life our evangelicalism calls you and me today.

* * *

COMMUNION.

Who walks within the cloisters of the night,
And views on high the maze of whirling spheres,
Stands in the presence of a holy light
That sanctifies the moments of his years.
He drinks the juice immortal suns have pressed
From clusters of the vintages of space
He eats the bread the centuries have blessed,
And given unto brothers of the race.

The night stands as a venerable priest
Before an altar rich in candle blaze,
And he who kneels in sacramental feast
Is he who finds the centre of the maze.
When men with stars commune they understand
In part, the great creation of His hand.

William Tyler Olcott.

BOOK REVIEWS

REV. STAMO S. SPATHEY, Editor.

THE CHURCH MUST DECIDE: By Spencer Miller, Jr. Paper. Pp. 11. Published by The Morehouse Publishing Company, Milwaukee, Wisconsin. Price, 10 Cents.

This is volume thirteen of the New Tracts for the Times and well deserves a place in that worthy undertaking. It is the address given by Mr. Miller at the General Convention of the past autumn. So far as it was able, we believe the Church did decide, in its publicized position, regarding the issues Mr. Miller sets forth. But the Church can only decide. It has no power to enforce the decrees of justice and good-will which it whole-heartedly longs to bring to pass. It can deal persuasively with its members who are directors of large corporations; it can breathe its sorrows over non-employment and reach down for relief, visiting the sick and exhausting itself in social rectification. But protesting against prevalent injustice has not seemed to arouse the cupidity of non-church people to any sense of criminal motivation.

So do all it can, the masses think the Church to be an institution for religion; and they have no serious regard for the voice of the Church in any outspoken cry for reform. Little by little, the Church may "dig in" and get a foothold, which is what our author believes it should do. And so we all wish it might. But not until the Church herself is clear of doubtful ways and devious practices, not until her members are torch-bearers of the "true Light that lighteth every man that cometh into the world," can a lasting impress be made. God help us to respond to Mr. Miller's appeal.

Kenneth Mackenzie.

THE CENTENNIAL HISTORY OF ST. BARTHOLOMEW'S CHURCH IN THE CITY OF NEW YORK, 1835-1935. By the Rev. E. Clowes Chorley, D. D., L. H. D. Pp. 435. Privately printed. Price, $3.

This is an exceedingly interesting account of one of the outstanding churches of New York, written by a profound student of the history of the Protestant Episcopal Church. The volume is not merely the story of one congregation by itself, but Dr. Chorley has shown the background of the wider life of the Church in 1835, into which the new congregation was born, and has linked up its life with the development and growth, and great movements of thought in the Church since that day. For that reason the book will be of great and permanent value to all who are interested in the life story of the Episcopal Church.

St. Bartholomew's Church, in its ministry to the poor and needy, the unchurched and the forgotten, has rendered a great service to its city, and has been a leader and an inspiration to many another congregation and minister seeking to serve community needs more widely. To this reviewer's mind the author's account of St. Bartholomew's work on the East Side and at its Community House, its regular services conducted at times in six different languages in order to minister to foreign groups, is the high point of the book—a thrilling story of opportunities grasped and work accomplished.

G. M. B.

INTOLERANCE: By Winfred Ernest Garrison. Pp. 270. Price, $2.50. Published by The Round Table Press, Inc., 354 Fourth Avenue, New York.

Dr. Garrison is one of the editors of The Christian Century, and an Associate Professor of Church History in the University of Chicago. He has rendered a real valuable service to the student of history in that he has compiled into one volume the best and most thorough analysis of Intolerance, one of the most interesting—we may say the most damaging state of mind of the human race.

The author's treatment of his subject is informative and scholarly. As far as the reviewer can remember, no other book of this nature has ever been written to treat exclusively the subject of Intolerance. His definition is "Intolerance is the quality of mind closed to influences from those who differ and disposed to limit their liberty or to visit them with the token of displeasure." Introduction p. xi. Dr. Garrison traces Intolerance through history, religious, political and cultural. This makes the reading of the book very informative and interesting. In chapter five he traces, very ably "The Roots of Western Culture." Here he gives a brief but illuminating outline of Greek classical culture and its contribution to our Western Civilization. He thinks that the Greeks were very tolerant in comparison with the Hebrews, only the poisoning of Socrates by the Athenians. The author ends with a fine but limited outlook of "The New Morality" and the new Intolerance, saying that "The root of much bitterness that has marred the history of mankind and that has constituted the history of Intolerance has been eagerness for economic advantage, or for power or prestige, masquerading as loyalty to lofty ideals or to the nation or to the will of God." And this exhortation—"Exorcise fear and hatred, cease to judge men by classes, recognize self-interest and group-interest for what they are and keep them in their right place. . ."

Spathey.

THE WOMAN'S AUXILIARY

Woman's Auxiliary Executive Board, February 8-11.

The Executive Board of the Woman's Auxiliary, the sixth to assemble since the national organization took that form in 1919, met on February 8, with all the re-elected members present and seven of the eight new members. The board has new officers for the year, and a new list of standing committees for experimental use. Officers and committee chairmen are:

Mrs. James R. Cain, Columbia, S. C., chairman; Mrs. Edward M. Cross, Spokane, Wash., vice-chairman; Mrs. Paul H. Barbour, Mission, S. D., recording secretary. Clearing Committee, Mrs. J. F. Morrison, Indianapolis, Ind.; Christian Citizenship, Mrs. Cross; Finance, Mrs. Julius E. Kinney, Denver, Col.; United Thank Offering, Miss Sallie C. Deane, Richmond, Va., with Mrs. Paul H. Barbour special correspondent with Diocesan U. T. O. Custodian; Personnel, Mrs. Henry Hill Pierce, New York City; Program, Miss Mary E. Johnston, Glendale, Ohio.

Both because the board had many new members and because the present situation is complex and critical, more time than usual was given to obtaining as complete a picture as possible of the Church's national work. The Presiding Bishop, the National Council President, and the executive secretary of every department but one whose executive was out of town, outlined the present situation, especially in relation to the work of the Woman's Auxiliary. The points emphasized by these addresses, matters which are fundamental in the Church's work of this new triennium, are communicated to the diocesan presidents by the eight provincial members on the board, and the diocesan presidents pass them on to parish presidents, a process which also is applied to all the work of the executive board, reports of the staff and action of committees.

The Forward Movement and its relation to the Auxiliary was presented by Bishop Hobson, chairman of General Convention's Commission on a Forward Movement. The Bishop emphasized the fact that the Forward Movement is no new venture, but rather a movement to reinvigorate the life of the Church and rehabilitate its work through the long-established agencies of parish and diocese, especially by the education and enlistment of every Church member. It is this desire to reach individuals which makes the Woman's Auxiliary methods of marked value in assisting the Forward Movement, since the Auxiliary is equipped to reach the women and has already for many years emphasized the need and value of religious and missionary education.

It is the desire of the Forward Movement to coordinate plans and programs, so that the whole Church through its Bishops and other clergy may have a united program in prosecuting its work at home and abroad. In this week of coordination the Woman's Auxiliary is also of value as it has long worked with that aim in view in its own programs. The provincial representatives on the executive board are reporting further to the women of their provinces on Bishop Hobson's address. He said that the Auxiliary's program for 1935-37, outlined by the triennial meeting under the theme, "If we be His disciples," is in closest harmony with the spirit and aim of the Forward Movement.

The educational secretary, Miss Margaret I. Marston, is to visit a number of mission fields in the Orient, starting late in the summer. The executive board voted, and the National Council later approved the action, to use income from legacies at the disposal of the Auxiliary to meet the cost of this visit.

As there had been no meeting of the board in December, time was given at this meeting to discuss a number of matters referred from the triennial convention. It will be remembered that the triennial left to the board the appropriation of the last $2,000 (plus interest) remaining from the building fund of former United Thank Offerings. After hearing from the secretaries of the domestic and foreign missions departments, the board voted $1,000 toward a combined parish hall and chapel at Yerrington, Nevada, the center of a wide agricultural area of apparently permanent settlement, and the remainder toward the amount urgently needed for reconstruction in Kyoto and Osaka since the typhoon of last September.

The board's committee on finance brought in its customary statement showing the balances of Woman's Auxiliary funds and legacies. A few appropriations were made from the Emery fund and the expense fund.

Three of the four women members of the National Council were entertained at dinner by the executive board, the vice-chairman, Mrs. Cross, presiding, as the chairman is one of the Council members. Miss Hibbard was unable to be present.

The board attended a tea given by the New York Diocesan Woman's Auxiliary for the women members of the Council.

Miss Nannie Hite Winston of Louisville, Kentucky, a former member of the board, was asked to continue to serve as a representative on the Commission on Interracial Relations in Atlanta.

More than 3,000 copies have been ordered of each of three addresses given at the triennial, Missions in This Age, Christian Citizenship, and the Life of the Spirit.

An Explanation of the Book of Remembrance of the Diocese of Washington.

The "Book of Remembrance" was purchased by a number of devoted women in our diocese and presented in memory of loved members of the Woman's Auxiliary, who had passed to higher service.

Every parish in the Diocese of Washington has a page or more with the name of the parish in beautifully illuminated lettering. Names of members of the Woman's Auxiliary are memorialized by being inscribed in the book under the name of their parish.

The Secretary for the book has received several letters from Virginia and North Carolina asking for information as to what steps should be taken for having names inscribed therein.

It would not be fitting or possible for us to inscribe names from other dioceses in our book. But the custom we have inaugurated is a beautiful one and well worthy of being copied by other dioceses.

Esther H. Harding,
Secretary, Diocese of Washington.

ANNUAL MEETING OF THE WOMAN'S AUXILIARY.

Nebraska: Striking new trends in missionary work were mentioned by Dr. H. Prince of Lake Forest, Ill., in his address to the Woman's Auxiliary annual meeting. These are the humanitarian emphasis as expressed by the great modern hospitals and the turning over in increasing volume of work to the native clergy. Only 6 out of 98 ordained missionaries in one area in Japan are American, the others are all native Japanese. Bishop Shayler also delivered an inspirationad address.

Mrs. W. W. Hoagland, Omaha, was elected President for the fifth time. Mrs. T. Beeson, Fremont, Vice-President.

Mrs. A. J. Ford of Hastings revisited the diocese, speaking on "Better Church Schools". A summer Conference at Doane College, beginning on June 17, was announced.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S FELLOWSHIP SERVICE LEAGUE

The Reverend Randolph F. Blackford

"Prize Program."

This program is designed to be presented to the League the Sunday prior to the annual Every Member Canvass. It is for the purpose of instructing the communicant members of the League in the financial side of the Church and to see that each communicant does their part in its support, no matter what the amount may be. The direct result of this program in Trinity Church, Miami, and St. Andrew's Church, Tampa, was that nearly one hundred per cent of the members responded and did their part in the support of the Church, both at home and abroad.

After the usual devotionals and business of the League, the leader of the program announces the Canvass and explains what the Canvass is for. After a short talk on the responsibility of each communicant to do their part in the support of the Church Program (rector should assist in this), she states that in order for each person to understand what is done with the money they give to the Church, a descriptive talk on the budget is to be presented. (Note: the same procedure is done for the Diocesan budget and General Church.)

The leader obtains the budgets from the Parish Treasurer and Diocesan Office. Then, on a large sheet of paper, perhaps three by nine, the budgets are listed by percentage with the proper spacing for same; they are marked on paper with the item of each percentage given. The leader, or a person for each item, explains each one of these. After each has been explained, another person with a large pair of grass sheers cuts off that part that has been explained. In this way, the budget items are clearly understood and the budget explained.

The Treasurer of the Parish follows with a short talk on the way the finances of the Church are conducted and ends his talk with a request that all the communicant members do their part when the canvass is made the following Sunday.

This program can be enlarged and made a fine program for presentation to the entire parish with illustrations and other materials. Or, it can be made very simple for a very small League of only five or more members.

The average young person knows little or nothing of how a Parish or Mission operates and their responsibility in its upkeep. This program, if earnestly presented, will do much to educate our young people.—St. Andrew's League, Tampa, Fla.

The Program of the National Church.

(For this program two charts are prepared by pasting pieces of paper together until they are one hundred inches long. These are held up by two members of the League in turn, while the leader talks. The first has divisions marked as follows: Foreign Missions, at 50 inches; Continental Missionary Districts, 18 inches farther on; Aided Dioceses, 6 inches farther; Overhead, 15 inches farther, and Sundries, 10 inches farther. The last inch is marked in red and called Debt. The second chart is marked as follows: 1934 Expectations from Dioceses, 46 inches; Estimated Increase in giving at 12 inches farther; Interest from Trust Funds, at 16 inches farther; Estimated Miscellaneous Income, at 3 inches further; United Thank Offering, at 9 inches farther, and Challenge, at 14 inches farther. If desired, the actual amounts of each may be put in the space appropriate to it. The first chart is to be cut and the second to be unfolded.)

Leader: I suppose that every one of us at times has liked to take things apart, or at least to look into great machines, just to see the wheels go round. When we put our money into the red side of the envelope, people often think that it goes to a vague kind of thing called Missions, by which we mean that it is sent far away to distant lands.

But while some of it does go to far-away places, we believe it is worthwhile to stop and see just where each bit of it goes. In this Diocese, about ——* of it stays right here in the diocese. So that of every ——— dollars given only ——— goes to New York. The dollar that does go there is divided like the strip of paper in this chart. (Two assistants open first chart to full length.) Fifty cents of it goes outside of the United States. Some of this goes to China and some to Japan, about fifteen cents to each. Then two or three cents each go to a half dozen other foreign countries, like Liberia in Africa, or Brazil. I will now ask one of my assistants to cut off the fifty cents that goes to the foreign field. (First assistant does so with scissors.)

Now, what becomes of the other fifty cents? Of it, eighteen cents goes to what we call the Continental Missionary Districts. These are territories that are either so sparsely populated, or so poor that they can not pay their own bills. For instance, Alaska is one of them and Arizona is another. In the East, South Florida has only been a diocese for twelve years. This eighteen cents helps them pay their Bishops and other things. (Assistant cuts off this eighteen inches.)

We next come to a section that is marked Aided Dioceses. Six cents of the dollar goes here. But you may well ask what this is. We reply that almost half of the dioceses get back some money from the central fund to help them with work in their own dioceses. Some get very little, but some get back more than they send. I will ask that that part be now cut off. (Assistant cuts off this six inches.)

We now come to fifteen cents of the dollar that is marked Overhead. We have grouped this together, so as to cover all office expenses, and also the work of the Departments of Social Service, Publicity, Finance and Religious Education. These Departments have their office in New York, but are constantly helping both dioceses and parishes all over the country. (Assistant cuts off this fifteen inches.)

We are near the end now, for there seems but one more. It is ten cents for Sundries. This covers all sorts of little items, like the Seaman's Church Institute, and the American Church Institute for Negroes, with its many schools for that race. (Assistant cuts off this fifteen inches and holds up the one-inch colored red.)

Assistant: What is this red inch about?

Leader: That is a sad story. This year, or rather in 1934, the Church went deeply into debt. That cent out of every dollar that goes to the National Church is set aside to pay on that debt. (Assistant puts it down.)

Assistant: We hate to be in the red, but if we are, I suppose we have to pay our debts, and also see that we do not go in the red again. And what provision has been made to keep the Church from going in the red again. It must take millions to run the Church.

Leader: It does, indeed. It will cost two million, seven hundred thousand dollars to do the work of the National Church after every cut has been made without permanent injury to the work.

Assistant: How in the world can they expect to raise that amount in this time of depression?

Leader: That was the problem that faced General Convention that met last October. For, as you well see, they did not think they could count on people giving much more in 1935 than in 1934, and that was only forty-six per cent of the total. (Assistants hold up the second chart, so folded that only the forty-six inches show.) So they called in each Bishop and asked how much he thought his diocese could raise in 1935, and when this was added up it was twenty-five per cent more than in 1934. (Assistant adds the twelve per cent to the chart by unfolding.) But this was only twelve per cent of the total to be added. So they did some more figuring and some one remembered some trust funds they had that bore interest, and this added sixteen per cent more. (Assistant adds the sixteen per cent by unfolding chart.) But even this only made it up to seventy-four per cent of the total.

Then someone remembered that there where a lot of little funds that came in from various sources, like people dying and leaving money to the Church, so that added three per cent more. (Assistant adds the three per cent by unfolding chart.)

Then the Woman's Auxiliary said that they would devote the United Thank Offering for 1935 to this cause. This is an amount raised in what is known as the "little Blue Boxes" as a special thank offering by the women of the Church. This amounted to nine per cent more. (Assistant adds the nine per cent by unfolding chart.)

And that was all and it lacked fourteen per cent of the total, or nearly $400,000, which would mean that a great deal of work would have to be abandoned. So they drew up another budget, showing how they would work if they did not get this amount. Then someone suggested that they give the original budget and leave that fourteen per cent with the hope that the Church would met it as a Challenge, and that the givings of the Church would not be twenty-five per cent more than in 1934. But that in 1935 the Church would give fifty-five per cent more than last year. It was an act of faith that we must all pray and work will not be in vain. (Assistant unfolds Challenge.) So there we have it, the Church's work crippled, unless we do far more than last year.

---

*Proportion should be secured from rector and inserted here.

CHURCH INTELLIGENCE

NATIONAL COUNCIL MEETING, FEBRUARY 12, 13, 14.

The Emergency Schedule of $2,313,-115 is balanced. For the first time in four years the Church is free from the immediate necessity of further cuts. In explanation of this gratifying achievement, the Treasurer of the National Council, Dr. Lewis B. Franklin, made the following statement:

The National Council presented to General Convention a proposed Budget in support of the Missionary Program of the Church for the year 1935 in the sum of $2,700,000. General Convention approved this Budget, but because the gifts of the Church in 1934, plus income from other sources were so far below the total needed to finance such a Budget, the Convention also adopted an Emergency Schedule of $2,313,115, the difference between these two figures, $386,885, being designated as the "Challenge."

The Convention also issued specific instructions to the National Council that its appropriations for 1935 must be brought within the limits of the probable income with a margin of safety.

General Convention also changed the entire method of apportioning responsibility for meeting the Missionary Budget. Heretofore each diocese had been assigned a quota based upon the current expenses of its parishes and missions. The new method provided that the National Council should agree with each diocese as to the "Objective" which it would assume as its share of the Budget.

The "Objectives" agreed upon with the dioceses reached a total large enough to meet the "Emergency Schedule" only. The National Council was, therefore, compelled to take from a budget already reduced thirty-six per cent from the figure of a few years ago, a further amount of $386,885.

After the completion of the Every Member Canvass each diocese reported to the National Council the total of its "Expectation" for 1935. In many cases this equalled the "Objective" agreed upon, but the total was $190,000 below. After counting upon every available resource in sight the officers of the Council estimated that there would be a shortage in the amount necessary to reach even the Emergency Schedule to the extent of $143,790, and late in January announced this fact.

Within a few days of this announcement a member of the Church offered to give $20,000 if four other individuals could be found to give in like amount. When the Council met on February 12, these five gifts of $20,-000 each were in hand. The printed statement issued by the Council about January 25, stated that the Council had in hand three individual gifts of $20,000, each conditioned upon a fourth such gift being secured. The reason why this statement referred to the fact that four gifts instead of five were needed, was that prior to the publication of this statement, a member of the Church had pledged more than $20,-000 for a much-needed building in the mission field, and the one who had made the conditional offer agreed to accept this gift for a building as one of the additional four gifts needed, even though it did not help to balance the Budget. When the Council met, this gift for a building had been replaced by a gift of $20,000 applicable to the Budget. Not all of these special gifts of $20,000 each come direct to the National Council, one of them applying in full to help in meeting the large "Expectation" of the diocese in which it originated, and one-half of another gift also applying to the diocesan "Expectation." The National Council will, therefore, receive direct from these five gifts of $20,000 each the sum of $70,-000 and a designated mission field will receive a new building in addition.

The officers of the National Council appealed to the Deputies of General Convention and to a limited number of individuals throughout the Church for help in raising the balance needed after the securing of the gifts heretofore mentioned. At the time the appeal was made, the balance needed was estimated at $63,780. The response to the appeal was immediate and generous and when the National Council met on February 12, the Emergency Schedule was insured and the missionary fields were relieved of a threatened further reduction.

Appreciation of the gifts received from individual donors was formally expressed by the adoption of the following:

Resolved: That the National Council expresses its heartfelt thanks to those who have so generously responded to the appeal for supplementary gifts and have thus made possible the maintenance of the Emergency Schedule of 1935.

To convey some part of the National Council's gratification and encouragement over the present situation, the Council requested the Presiding Bishop and the President of the Council to issue a messages, which follows:

Message to the Church.

From the Presiding Bishop and the President of the National Council:

What seemed impossible a short time ago has been accomplished. The National Council is able to announce that the budget is balanced on the basis of the Emergency Schedule prepared by General Convention. A threatened deficit of large amount has been turned into a small balance on the right side through the loyal and generous response from friends of the missionary work of the Church. To these as to many dioceses and parishes grateful acknowledgment is made.

The financial report in detail is set forth in the statement issued by the Treasurer.

The first fruits of this successful result was to be seen at once in the three-day meeting of the National Council just completed. Instead of struggling with a deficit, allocating another cut and hurriedly planning a supplementary appeal, the members of the Council were able to give their attention to the work itself, and to enter upon their constructive task of directing the Church's activities. To these projects they turned with glad and serious deliberation.

The important work of restoration still lies ahead. The Council recognizes the fact that the Emergency Schedule is the least that should be done. But it marks a turning point from which the Church can go forward. The retreat is stopped and the advance will follow.

It is the desire of the Council to share this encouraging news with the whole Church. Its officers makes the announcement with the joy of those who bring good tidings. "The night is far spent: the day is at hand."

Lent with its spiritual calls can be welcomed with a full sense of the blessings that the season brings. The discipline of our souls, the more complete knowledge of God through Christ, the deepening of our communion with Him will strengthen us to meet without fear the opportunities which are ours as a Christian people, as a Church. Let us thank God and take courage.

James DeWolf Perry.
Philip Cook.

Personnel of Meeting.

Every one of the thirty-two Council members had indicated the intention to be present at the February meeting, but the death of Miss Rebekah Hibbard's father later prevented her coming. All the other members attended, including the three newly-elected women, Mrs. James R. Cain, Miss Eva D. Corey and Miss Elizabeth Matthews.

Three new Council members elected to fill vacancies were present for the first time, as the Council had omitted its December meeting: the Rev. Dr. Paul Roberts succeeding Dean Dagwell, Mr. Ralph W. Hollenbeck succeeding the late Col. Proctor, and the Rev. Dr. G. P. T. Sargent succeeding the late Dr. Silver.

The Rev. Dr. William H. Milton presented his resignation, but the Council declined to accept it.

This was the first meeting of the Council since Bishop Francis had resigned from it, Bishop Page of Michigan succeeding him as the member elected by Province V. Bishop Stevens is the new member, representing Province VIII., succeeding Bishop Sanford.

The Secretary of the Council was re-elected, the Rev. Franklin J. Clark. By direction of General Convention, the President of the Council appoints the vice-president; Bishop Cook re-appointed Dr. Lewis B. Franklin. The triennial convention of the Woman's Auxiliary nominates and the Presiding Bishop appoints the Executive Secretary of the Auxiliary; Miss Grace Lindley was so nominated in Atlantic City and the Presiding Bishop reported her appointment to the Council. The Executive Board of the Auxiliary nominates the other secretaries, for the Presiding Bishop's appointment, which was also reported.

Mr. James E. Whitney, whose appointment as assistant treasurer, to succeed the late Charles A. Tompkins, was officially confirmed in that office and introduced to the Council.

The Committee on Trust Funds was re-elected: Messrs. Kidde, Newbold and Sibley; the National Council president and treasurer are members ex-officio.

Among the offices discontinued by the limitations of the Emergency Schedule is that of counselor for the Presiding Bishop's Advisory Commission on Ecclesiastical Relations, and the resignation of the present counselor, the Rev. Dr. Robert F. Lau, was announced. Dr. Lau will shortly join the staff of the Cathedral of St. John the Divine, New York, and will thereafter give one day a week to assistance in the work of the Commission.

Mr. Spencer Miller, Jr., part-time consultant on industrial relations for the Social Service Department, is to be released from that office for two months in the early summer to attend the conference under the auspices of the International Labor Office in Geneva; some sixty-two member-nations of this Office represent ninety-eight per cent of the world's population.

The Council listened with interest to a presentation of the progress and aims of General Convention's Commission on a Forward Movement, made by the Rt.

Rev. Henry Wise Hobson, D. D., Bishop of Southern Ohio, and Chairman of the Commission.

Mr. Samuel Thorne spoke to the Council on current activity of St. Luke's International Medical Center, Tokyo, and more especially of proposed plans to make some worthy recognition of the life and work of the founder, Dr. Rudolf B. Teusler.

Among a number of missionaries and other distinguished visitors at the Council meeting was Dr. Francis C. M. Wei, President of Hua Chung College, Wuchang, China.

Miss Olive Meacham, brought home by the closing of the Julia C. Emery Hall, a school for girls at Bromley, Liberia, by the recent budget reductions, told the Council and also the Executive Board of the Woman's Auxiliary something of the work of Emery Hall. The Executive Board is to consider the subject at its April meeting, and the Council asked its officers also to give further attention to the matter.

Bishop Roots, Bishop Roberts, Bishop Maxon, Miss Winifred Moore, and Miss Henrietta Barlow of Liberia, Miss Helen K. Shipps and Miss Sarah G. White of St. Luke's, Tokyo, were among the visitors at the Council or Executive Board meetings.

* * *

LENTEN MANUAL.

"Discipleship," the Forward Movement Lenten Manual, is commending itself to the Church at large. By February 10, half a million copies had been distributed on orders from nearly all of the continental dioceses and districts at the nominal charge of $1 per hundred, carriage paid.

The Forward Movement Commission is re-issuing the six-page folder, "The Episcopal Church," which was given away at the Century of Progress, Chicago. This pamphlet and the reprint of Bishop Hobson's nation-wide radio address can be obtained from the Forward Movement free of charge.

The headquarters of the Forward Movement are at 223 West Seventh Street, Cincinnati, Ohio. From here, the literature is distributed, and here the Forward Movement Commission will meet again during the last two days of February. The Rt. Rev. Henry W. Hobson, Bishop of Southern Ohio, is chairman of the Commission.

* * *

AMERICAN WOMAN TO FILL FOREIGN POST.

Miss Ruth F. Woodsmall, who has been a member of various commissions studying social conditions and problems of the Near East and Oriental countries and who for a number of years has been identified with the work of the Young Women's Christian Association, has just received word by cablegram of her election as general secretary of the World's Council of the Y. W. C. A.

Miss Woodsmall will assume her new duties on September 1, in Geneva, Switzerland, headquarters of the international organization. As chief executive she will be in close touch with the work in fifty countries.

For many years Miss Woodsmall has been associated with the National Board of the Y. W. C. A. in New York, particularly with its foreign program, having conducted the American-sponsored work in Turkey and Syria for eight years shortly after the World War.

* * *

ANGLICAN SOCIETY HOLDS MEETING.

The annual meeting of the Anglican Society was held in the Parish House of Trinity Chapel, New York, on February 14. In spite of stormy weather, the attendance broke all records, with people coming from as far as Cleveland, Boston, Atlantic City, Philadelphia, and Albany, in order to be present. The Secretary reported an increase in membership during the past year from 117 to 173. Ten Bishops now belong to the Society. The following officers were re-elected for 1935: Bishop Oldham, President; the Very Rev. Milo Gates, Vice-President; the Rev. J. Wilson Sutton, Treasurer, and the Rev. Charles E. Hill, Secretary. The following committees were reappointed: Executive, Literature, Lectionary. A new committee on Extension was appointed. In the evening a meeting open to the general public was held. The speakers were Bishop Oldham and Professor Gummey of Philadelphia. The former outlined a fourfold positive program for the Society: First, to make the Lord's Service the primary service on the Lord's Day; second, to promote a reverent and intelligent Anglican ceremonial; third, to inspire a greater loyalty to the Catholic Faith as this Church hath received the same in the Book of Common Prayer; fourth, to make the Society better known and extend its influence more widely throughout the Church by means of publicity, literature, meetings, etc. Dr. Gummey made a spirited and scholarly address on the liturgical principles and work of the Society.

Literature explaining the aims of the Anglican Society may be had free by writing to the Secretary: the Rev. Charles E. Hill, Ballston Spa, N. Y

VIRGINIA.

Rt Rev. H. St. George Tucker, D. D., Bishop
Rt. Rev. Frederick D. Goodwin, D. D., Coadjutor.

Memorial Service to Dr. Teusler.

A large congregation from the several churches in the city gathered in Monumental Church, February 10, to honor the memory of Dr. Rudolph Bolling Teusler, the founder and builder of St. Luke's International Medical Center of Tokyo.

In addition to both of the Bishops of the diocese, there were many clergy of the city in the chancel. The Rev. George Ossman, rector of the church, conducted the service, assisted by the Rev. E. L. Woodward, brother-in-law to Dr. Teusler. Before introducing the speakers, Mr. Ossman spoke of Dr. Teusler's connection with Monumental Church during the four years of his residence in Richmond. He was followed by Dr. Wm. T. Sanger, president of the Medical College of Virginia, the Alama Mater of Dr. Teusler.

Dr. John W. Wood, Executive Secretary of the Department of Foreign Missions, made the principal address. He spoke of the long years through which Dr. Teusler had conducted his poorly-equipped hospital in Tokyo, while he was formulating and carrying out his scheme for greater things which finally culminated in the plant as it stands today in Tokyo, the greatest medical center in the East, and a lasting monument to the friendship of the Church in America for the Japanese people. It has been said that a government decree in Tokyo forbids any edifice to be built higher than the palace of the emperor. An exception was made in the case of St. Luke's, and now the cross on that building towers over every structure in the city. Dr. Teusler died in Tokyo last August, shortly after the formal opening and dedication of the hospital.

Bishop Tucker, who had been closely associated with Dr. Teusler in Tokyo, made the concluding address, in which he said Dr. Teusler was one of the four greatest missionaries who had worked in Japan. He, as had the other speakers, paid tribute to his singleness of purpose, his courage and selflessness in his labors.

Dr. Wood Pleads for Continued Interest.

Dr. John W. Wood, of the National Council, spoke in Grace and Holy Trinity Church last Sunday morning, and at night he preached at St. Andrew's. Dr. Wood did not make a plea for funds, but for continued interest in the work of the Church. He also told the congregations something of the work in foreign lands, reporting to them, as he explained, what their representatives were doing in their various fields of service. Dr. Wood has been associated with the missionary work of the Church for thirty-five years, and there is no one who is more conversant with the details of the general mission fields. He speaks of many of them from his personal observation, as he has visited many of them several times.

SOUTHWESTERN VIRGINIA

Rt. Rev. Robert C. Jett, D. D., Bishop

A Valuable Layman Leaves the Diocese.

His many friends in Southwestern Virginia hear with deep regret of the acceptance by Colonel George Lloyd Barton, Jr., of his appointment as headmaster of DeVeaux School at Niagara Falls, New York. Colonel Barton has been for a number of years at the head of the History Department at Virginia Military Institute, Lexington, Virginia. The placing in a Church paper of this notice about his leaving Virginia is prompted by the fact that he is one of the most loyal and devoted churchmen in the Diocese of Southwestern Virginia. As a vestryman of R. E. Lee Memorial Church, Lexington, as Missions Treasurer in his parish, as lay reader and in other ways, he has performed notable service for the Church for many years. Any part of the Church can ill afford to lose so valuable a member, and Colonel Barton will be greatly missed in this diocese.

Council May 14 and 15.

Preparations are going forward for the Council of the diocese, which will be held in Grace Memorial Church, Lynchburg, the Rev. Richard H. Lee, rector, on Tuesday and Wednesday, May 14 and 15. Not all of the details have yet been arranged, but the announcement is made with much pleasure that the Rt. Rev. Henry Wise Hobson, D. D., Bishop of Southern Ohio, and Chairman of the Commission on the Forward Movement in the Church, will address the Council on Tuesday evening.

Another interesting feature will be the official presentation by Bishop Jett of the emblem of the Order of the Sangreal, which has been awarded to the Rev. Frank Mezick, for his devoted and faithful service as a country pastor and as rector of the churches at Arrington, Massie's Mill and Norwood in Nelson County since 1902. Few clergymen have ever so endeared themselves to the people in a whole county, both in and outside of his own congregation, as Mr. Mezick has done in these thirty-three years, and few have more fully deserved such an honor as is now being bestowed upon him.

As usual there will be a laymen's mass meeting on Monday evening, preceding the Council, the details of which are being arranged by Mr. M. A. Smythe of Roanoke, President of the Laymen's League.

Big News From Abingdon.

On February 4, a second son, Hugh Penn Wellford, was born to the Rev. and Mrs. John Simmons Wellford of Abingdon, Virginia, where Mr. Wellford is the rector of St. Thomas' Church.

T. A. S.

SOUTHERN VIRGINIA.

Rt. Rev. A. C. Thomson, D. D., Bishop.

Galilee Church, Virginia Beach.

The Rev. Reginald W. Eastman, rector of Galilee Church, Virginia Beach, completed five years as rector of that church last month. He will observe his fifth anniversary as rector of historic Eastern Shore Chapel, Oceana, on the first Sunday in March.

A native of the State of New Hampshire, he graduated at Middlebury College, class of 1925 with B. A. degree, and from Philadelphia Divinity School, class of 1928. He was ordained deacon by the Rt. Rev. John T. Dallas, D. D., of New Hampshire, in 1928, and priest by the Rt. Rev. Thomas C. Darst, D. D., of East Carolina.

Galilee Church School has an enrollment of over 130, including a Men's Bible Class of twenty-five. This is a growth from forty in 1930. Women's Auxiliary of forty members. Y. P. Fellowship with fifteen members. During the past five years over fifty have been presented for confirmation, including eleven adults.

The history of Galilee Church goes back to 1887. The men who founded it were the Rt. Rev. B. D. Tucker, D. D. (then rector of St. Paul's, Norfolk), Barton Myers, Sr., Robert Hughes, Sr., Frederick Taylor of Norfolk.

The first church is now used as a parish house. The new church was completed in 1926. At the entrance to the church, on the left hand side, is a tablet bearing this inscription:

"This building is erected in loving recognition of the services and godly leadership of our beloved Bishop, the Rt. Rev. Beverley Dandridge Tucker, D. D., LL. D., 1926."

On completion of payment of the church debt, Galilee will be consecrated as a memorial to the late Bishop Tucker.

WASHINGTON.

Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman D. D. Bishop.

Boy Scouts Celebrate Twenty-fifth Anniversary.

On February 10, the Bishop of Washington conducted a special service in celebration of the twenty-fifth anniversary of the organization of the Boy Scouts of America, in Washington Cathedral. He spoke on Christian Citizenship. A host of Scout leaders and Scouts from the city were present. The occasion also was related to Lincoln's anniversary.

Memorial Service.

A memorial service honoring those who fell in battle, from the 360th U. S. Cavalry, was held on Sunday, February 10, at St. John's Church, Lafayette Square. Dr. Oliver Hart, rector of St. John's, is chaplain of the 360th Cavalry, with the rank of Captain. This regiment was observing its seventeenth anniversary. Bishop James E. Freeman was the speaker. Governor Harry W. Nice, newly-inaugurated executive of Maryland, was present.

New Chairman of Red Cross.

Rear Admiral Cary T. Grayson, well-known Washington Churchman, private physician to the late President Wilson, and distinguished citizen, has been appointed by President Roosevelt as Chairman of the American Red Cross, succeeding the late Judge John Barton Payne, whose funeral was recently held at St. John's Church, Washington.

Efforts in Behalf of Dr. Arthur Kraus.

Dr. Arthur Kraus, termed "one of the unhappiest men in the world," spent some days in Washington recently and conferred with Bishop Freeman and others in the interest of his citizenship in America. Dr. Kraus' story has appeared in full in the Church press. He was abruptly dismissed from City College of New York some months ago, following a demonstration which he instituted in protest against alleged cruelty and injustice in academic circles in Poland, whence he emigrated to this country. Efforts are being made by numerous friends of the clergy and also in academic circles to get him re-established in his profession, the chair of philosophy.

Bishop James De Wolf Perry and a group of bishops from the several Provinces held a conference at the College of Preachers, February 5 to 7, on the "Work of the Episcopal Church in the United States."

T. F. O.

WEST VIRGINIA

Rt. Rev. W. L. Gravatt. D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. R. E. L. Strider, D. D., Coadjutor

Lay Mission.

Dr. Glazebrook of the Commission on Evangelism recently completed a Mission at Christ Church, Point Pleasant, W. Va., which was very successful. It proved decidedly that the congregation is very desirous of one who has sat in the pews for some thirty years, and Dr. Glazebrook was able to reach them with many Bible truths that pulpit orators cannot do.

Dr. Glazebrook has a very charming personality; and is very much at home in the families of the rich, as well as of the poor. He is also very acceptable in the homes of those who are sick. His familiar way of talking with God and saying prayers on various occasions is unique and striking; and Christ Church Parish was thoroughly aroused and responded splendidly to his appeal. On the closing week night of his Mission, forty-six men gathered in the Parish House Friday night to a supper provided by the Guild, and were very enthusiastic over him as a missioner.

The Church has made a real forward movement in putting Dr. Glazebrook into the field; and it looks as if his work with a few other laymen will add greatly to the prestige of the Church.

From Point Pleasant he went to Baltimore, and after his Mission in Baltimore, he is going to spend four weeks in the South.

F. T. Cady.

PENNSYLVANIA

Rt. Rev. Francis M. Taitt, S. T. D., Bishop

Annual Inspirational Service—Y. P. F.

Members of upwards of sixty Young People's Fellowships from Episcopal Church parishes throughout the city and other parts of the Diocese of Pennsylvania, united in their Annual Inspirational Day Service, February 17, in the Chapel of the Mediator, Philadelphia. The Rev. William P. S. Lander, rector of the Church of the Good Shepherd, Rosemont, was the special preacher. The Very Rev. Granville Taylor, Dean of the West Philadelphia Convocation, was in charge of the services, assisted by the Rev. B. Janney Rudderow, Vicar of Holy Trinity Memorial Chapel, and the Rev. Robert C. Hubbs, of St. Ambrose, Kensington.

The Fellowships comprise one of the most active youth organizations of the Episcopal communion, numbering about 2,500 young men and women between the ages of sixteen and twenty-five, engaged in various forms of Christian social service in their respective parishes and in hospitals and other institutions of the city. The music was rendered by a combined choir representing the participating Fellowships.

Mr. E. M. Hackney, Chief Probation Officer of the Criminal Courts of Philadelphia, on February 17, addressed the Clerical Brotherhood of the Episcopal Church in the Church House, on "The Probation Department as an Adjunct of the Criminal Court."

Mr. Samuel F. Houston, Senior Lay Canon of the Cathedral Chapter, officiated at the 11 A. M. service Sunday in St. Mary's Chapel of the Cathedral Church of Christ, Upper Roxborough.

S. H. Warnock.

LEXINGTON

Rt. Rev. H. P. A. Abbott, D. D., Bishop.

Ninetieth Anniversary.

St. Paul's Church, Newport, celebrated its ninetieth anniversary Sunday, February 10. The Rt. Rev. H. P. Almon Abbott, D. D., Bishop of Lexington, preached to a large congregation at the festival service.

The first Bishop of Alabama, Dr. N. H. Cobbs, while a priest, conducted the first services of the church in Newport in 1844. The parish was organized February 10, 1845, and admitted into union with the diocese in April of the same year. Well-known former rectors include Bishop Harris, Dr. Estell, Dr. Charles Clingman, Rev. Robert Nelson. The history of the parish was the subject of the rector's sermon on February 17.

The celebration of the anniversary began Friday, February 8, with a parish banquet, presided over by the rector, the Rev. Beniah H. Crewe. The Rev. Herman Page, rector of St. Paul's Church, Dayton, Ohio, made the principal address. Clergy from neighboring parishes attended, as well as city officials. The birthday cake was cut by the Mayor of Newport, and two of the oldest members of the congregation, Mrs. Josephine Casner and Mrs. Edmund Thompson.

The first church building was purchased from the Methodists. The present one was built in 1870-73, is of stone, with a very tall stone steeple. The parish house, one of the best in the Diocese of Lexington, was built in 1928, during the rectorship of the Rev. Frank E. Cooley, at a cost of $45,000.

The Rev. Beniah H. Crewe has been rector since December 22, 1931.

ARKANSAS

Rt. Rev. E. W. Saphore, D. D., Suffragan

Social Service Observance in Christ Church, Little Rock; Bishop William Scarlett of Missouri, Preacher.

On Sunday, February 3, a special community service in behalf of social welfare was held in Christ Church, Little Rock, the Rev. W. P. Witsell, D. D., rector. The church was completely filled, even in the gallery, chairs being used in the aisles and still some standing throughout the service.

The rector had arranged a special order of service for the occasion consisting of appropriate hymns, Scripture lesson and prayers, including a social service litany, which was joined in by the congregation in general. All relief agencies at work in the community, both governmental and local, were largely represented in the audience.

Bishop Scarlett of Missouri delivered a stirring message, which was enthusiastically received by the large congregation.

In the sermon Bishop Scarlett declared the United States will never become as great a democracy as it should be if its object is to make the individual primarily a larger consumer of economic goods and if "the present maldistribution of wealth" continues so that "in a land of plenty millions face insecurity."

"There has been a decided turnover in the last few years," he said. "It is to a more spiritual interpretation of the universe that we are turning today. And without pressing this too far, without generalizing unduly, without placing into the mouths of scientists conceptions which they may not be willing as yet to accept, one is content in passing, merely to call attention to the fact that the picture is changing today and that the path intellectually is being opened once more for the spiritual aspirations of mankind.

"And if, my friends, there is an objective reality behind all spiritual experience, if there is a deeper spirit in the universe which answers to the spiritual needs of the spirit of man, coming to him when he is bewildered, as a light, when he is in terror, as a strength, when he is in joy, as a glory; if it is possible for the spirit of man to make contact with the holy spirit of God whereby 'one's world becomes radiant and one's life a high romance,' it is a vast pity to miss it.

"We need this absolute background against which to test the relative problems of our day. We need such an absolute standard against which to judge our own relative standards. We need such an absolute ideal in order to achieve inner freedom from slavery to lower values and to lesser loyalties in order to win that freedom of those men of old, who, when faced by a king with the threat of death, could say, 'If you take away my goods, you only take away my Prayer Book, and I have committed that to memory; if you take away my life, you only usher me the sooner into the presence of my Maker.'

"Only in God are the lesser loyalties of men fully transcended. Social workers particularly need this inner vision in order to become highly energized in the pursuit of their ideals."

RHODE ISLAND

Rt. Rev. J. DeWolf Perry, D. D., Bishop

Rev. Humphrey Beevor, Speaker.

The intellectuals in England are turning to religion in large numbers. The Roman Church and the Anglo-Catholics are the chief beneficiaries of the movement. An alliance between groups of devout Evangelicals and Anglo-Catholics, which is taking the place of the old entente cordiale between the moderates of both parties, is making rapid headway, and is the hope of the Church. The "Oxford Groups" are not now and never have been strong among the youths of Oxford.

All this and more of interest and edification the Rev. Humphry Beevor, librarian of Pusey House, Oxford, and a writer of standing in the religious and literary world, told a group of clergy gathered this week to hear him at the parish house of St. Stephen's Church, Providence.

For an hour and a half he talked, analyzing with clear insight and in simple terms the current of religious though in Great Britain.

"The young men of old Church families, whose parents lost all touch with religion, are," he declared, "eagerly looking into the teachings of Christianity at Oxford these days. But they have to be taught the rudiments. At home they received no training or instruction.

"What the Church needs most of all is an output of books on her history and teachings written in a popular way that will appeal to the intellectuals who are not interested in theological niceties. The Roman Church is turning out such books, and they are being read far and wide. To them is due in considerable part the turn toward that faith.

"The disestablishment of the Church in Wales has been a great gain. So long as it was, in their opinion, forced upon them, the Welsh took pains to spurn it. But now that it is making an appeal on its own merits, there is a strong movement to enter it. Indeed, so many evangelical clergy are seeking Orders that many have had to be rejected, because of lack of training and education.

"In England disestablishment would mean an increase in numbers, but it would make it impossible for the Church to maintain its great historic shrines like Westminster Abbey and Lincoln Cathedral."

W. W. Jones.

VERMONT.

Rt. Rev. S. B. Booth, D. D., Bishop.

Growth of Parish.

Bishop Dallas of New Hampshire visited the Church of the Good Shepherd, Barre, Vermont, and confirmed a class of thirty-seven, fourteen of whom were adults and twenty-three children. This parish has grown from eighty-six communicants in 1931 to over 250 communicants in 1935, although there has been no increase in the city's population. In addition, the parish in sponsoring an advanced social service program, with a fresh air camp for boys in summer. Last year over 400 boys applied for admittance to this camp, which was able to receive only 160. The largest boys' club and the largest boy choir in the state have been organized and have had three successful years. The rector, the Rev. Albert Clayton Baker, B. D., completed the third year of his rectorate in January. In addition to the growth in church organization, the church has been completely renovated and all bills have been paid. It has met its quota in full. It has a vestry of fourteen men—two more than the canons allow—and has had practically a 100 per cent attendance at all vestry meetings for two years.

CHICAGO.

Rt. Rev. George Craig Stewart, D. D., Bishop.

Reaction—Look Forward With Hopefulness.

A reaction against "attractions of society and the social life, amusements and self-pleasures," which tend to draw laymen away from the Church, is seen by the Commission on State of the Church in the Diocese of Chicago in its annual report. The Rev. Dr. Herbert W. Prince, rector of the Church of the Holy Spirit, Lake Forest, is chairman of the commission.

"We believe the last few years have witnessed a very serious decline in loyalty to the Church on the part of hundreds, perhaps thousands, of our laymen," says the report. "Even those who are regarded as the best laymen we have. We believe the snare of the 'world, the flesh and the devil' is a real snare, which has caught and withdrawn large numbers of our people from a whole-hearted attachment to Christ and His Church. We believe the attractions of society and the social life, amusements and self-pleasure, have eaten deeply into the life of the Church. It is one of the effects of a protracted period where fear has loosened the hold of faith.

"It is the realization of this widely spread situation that makes this committee all the more conscious of the beginnings of change. Man after man tells us it is high time to use strenuous efforts to make the Church real to men and her task a task of first order, not second, third, fourth, but first. There seems to be a gathering courage to tackle the task. As laymen express it, they are ready 'to get down to brass tacks'."

The commission pays special tribute to Bishop Stewart for the five years of his leadership which are termed "probably the most difficult, certainly the most complicated and precarious, five years in the whole century of our history. It is impossible properly to estimate what his leadership has actually done for us and the diocese. It is beyond dispute that under ordinary leadership the diocese may easily have been overwhelmed during this five-year period. Instead, he has preserved the diocese inviolate and given us reason to look forward with hopefulness."

Call Laymen's Congress.

Call for a national congress of young men interested in the missionary cause, to meet in Chicago May 2-5, was issued at a meeting of 200 leading laymen of various denominations held at the Union League Club, February 16. Bishop Stewart participated in the meeting and Mr. John R. Mott, missionary leader, was the principal speaker.

Modern world tides and the influence which religion does or should have upon such will be the general theme of the congress. Among the speakers will be: Bishop Stewart, Dr. Robert E. Speer, New York; Dr. Ralph E. Diffendorfer, New York; Cleland B. McAfee, New York; Bishop E. L. Waldorf, Chicago, Methodist Church.

"The problems attending the present chaotic condition of the world are not merely economic and physical and not merely national and local, but spiritual and universal," declares the call. "A purely economic program for the solution of such problems leaves many factors untouched. A purely political program has proved provincial. A purely social service program has proved superficial. A spiritual program, dealing with and permeating all the factors, is indispensable. Our present chief problem is to make Christ known to the world."

The congress is under the sponsorship of the Laymen's Missionary Movement of which Dr. John C. Acheson, president of Macalester College, St. Paul, Minn., is chairman. Mr. F. J. C. Borwell, churchman, is one of the vice-chairmen.

ATLANTA.

Rt. Rev. H. J. Mikell, D. D., Bishop.

First Meeting in New Pro-Cathedral.

The Diocese of Atlanta in its twenty-eighth annual session, met for the first time in the new Pro-Cathedral of St. Philip in Atlanta, on Wednesday, January 23 and 24, and was largely attended. The historic significance of the meeting was the emphasis thus placed upon making the new Cathedral, which is contemplated, the diocesan centre for many of its activities.

Further history was made in the approval by Council of the action of the Executice Board in accepting the proposal of the National Church to take over the entire support of its colored work and thus become an entirely independent diocese. Hitherto the National Church has to a large extent maintained this work in the diocese, but on account of lack of funds has had to decrease its appropriations from year to year, until it was necessary to request the diocese to become entirely responsible for the work.

The following officers were elected:

(Continued on page 22.)

FAMILY DEPARTMENT

FEBRUARY.

2. Presentation of Christ. (Saturday.)
3. Fourth Sunday after Epiphany.
10. Fifth Sunday after Epiphany.
17. Septuagesima.
24. Sexagesima.
25. St. Matthias.* (Monday.)

* * *

COLLECT FOR SEXAGESIMA.

O Lord, Who seest that we put not our trust in anything that we do; Mercfully grant that by Thy power we may be defended aganst all adversity; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

* * *

STILL A STRANGER.

A Stranger came to Galilee
To teach the truth quite openly
Some listened well to what He said,
While others scorned the Heavenly bread
But He spoke out heroically
In spite of them.

The Stranger lived in Galilee
With gracious service, constantly,
He helped the poor and heavy-laden
He healed the sick and conscience-stricken
And bore His Cross to Calvary
In saving them.

And still He walks through Galilee
Where'er the haunts of men may be,
No Stranger now, but Lord of Light
And Love and Mercy, Truth and Right—
But Stranger still, if hopelessly
We follow Him.

—Herbert Beecher Hudnut.

* * *

The Irony of History.

The Gospel of Christ is rooted in history. It is not a vague, mythical religion that grows out of the shadows of the past. Christianity has a birthday. It has a relation to the calendar. It is embedded in history and you can put your finger on the day and say, There, that is After Christ and that is Before Christ. It is a religion based on fact and not on theory. This was the reason for writing into the creed, "Crucified under Pontius Pilate." Christianity is part of the warp and woof of history.

But the irony of history is that Christ came unto His own and His own received Him not. Students are often disturbed because they find the Bible so full of Christ and the literature of that day so empty of Him. It is even disputed whether the name of Jesus occurs in the history of Josephus and young people wonder why it is that Christ, who figures so much in the history of the New Testament, is not given a paragraph in the secular history of His day. Well, He came and went and the world of His day took no notice of Him.

That is what is meant by the irony of history. It is nothing unusual. It is common. We are doing the same thing today. Look at the last newspaper you have read. Do you imagine for a moment that the flaming headlines of yesterday or today will mean much to the people a thousand years from today? Do you imagine that the things that the editor thinks are important and which he puts in red or black type will be carried down in red or black type when history is written a thousand years from today, or two thousand years? That is what St. Luke was thinking about when he began his history of the Christian movement. He was a capable and trustworthy historian and every discovery made among the rubbish heaps and monuments of the past have confirmed his accuracy. Let us look at what he wrote: "Now in the fifteenth year of the reign of Tiberius Caesar, Pontius Pilate being governor of Judaea, and Herod being tetrarch of the region of Ituraea and of Trachonitis, and Lysanias tetrarch of Abilene in the high priesthood of Annas and Caiaphas, the word of God came unto John the son of Zacharias in the wilderness."

Now that is a strange way of writing history. The important thing, he says, is not Herod, or Caesar, or Caiaphas, but this man John who came out of the unknown, out of the wilderness, with the Word of God. See what a sweeping view he gives of history. He wants to be accurate and so he checks and double checks the year when all this happened. It checks with the calendar of the Church and with that of politics, for it had something to do with both. He said it was the year when Annas and Caiaphas were high priests of the Church. It was in the fifteenth year of the reign of Tiberius Caesar, the dictator of the Roman Empire who held the world in his grasp. It was when Herod was governor of Galilee where he held sway for forty years. It was in the days when one by the name of Pontius Pilate was governor of Judaea—somewhere between the years 25 and 36 A. D. It was during the reign of Philip who was a dictator of Ituraea and Trachonitis, the wild area to the north of the Sea of Galilee among the mountains; and when Lysanias the unknown was king of Abilene, the small obscure kingdom under Mount Lebanon. That was the historical and ecclesiastical background. It is all recorded here and after these great names of Caesar and Herod and Pilate and Caiaphas—who were the Hitlers and Mussolinis and Stalins and King Georges and Roosevelts of that age—have been set down, Luke proclaimed the fact that the name of the greatest of historical influences was an unheralded man by the name of John to whom the Word of God came in the wilderness. It sounds like an afterthought, a postscript, a footnote. It reads like an anti-climax, but it is the way God writes history. The important thing about that age was not Caesar or Herod or Pilate, but the coming of a man of God out of the wilderness with a message. And the things that you and I are exalting and proclaiming as important and big, may be small in comparison with some obscure event which is under the very eye of God this moment. The things that count when the centuries have gone are always the inner things, the things of the spirit. It was so then and it is so now.

Let us not misunderstand what has been called the irony of history. The Word of God came to John, but it might have come also to Caesar and to Pilate and to Caiaphas. Indeed it did come to them. It came to Pilate and he knew quite well that it did come to him. It came to him in the conviction of the innocency of Jesus when he said, "I find no fault in Him." It came to him in the message of his wife. It came to him in his own conscience. The Word of the Lord came also to Herod. Herod heard the Word of God in the message of the great forerunner of Jesus who brought him face to face with his sin and his God. The Word of God came to the high priest and he knew that he was face to face with judgment, but there was no response and the way was blocked.

Let us make no mistake about it. The Word of God is an open Word. It is like lightning illuminating the entire heavens for all to see, but people can be blind, they can be too busy. The bushes may be all on fire with the presence of the glory of God, but only Moses has eye to see. The voices may be echoing through the temple for everyone to hear, but only Isaiah has ears to hear the song, "Holy, Holy, Holy is the Lord God Almighty."—Rev. H. T. Kerr, in Presbyterian Banner.

* * *

Fo rthe Southern Churchman.

NIGHT'S RELEASE.

Alice Maude Spokes.

In early prayers, when dawn still clings,
And night has caressed me in folded wings,
While courting death from hour to hour
In shadowy bonds of mysterious power,
I bless Thee, Lord, for night's release,
And rejoice in freedom of morning's peace.

* * *

The Sacrament of Words.

How many people there are who say that they could never talk with anyone about their experience of God! It seems to them that only specially called people could possibly do that! I remember hearing a good church woman say of a much younger woman, "She seems to have this power with people"—as if it were an astonishing thing that one person could help another to find God! Well, some day God is going to do with you what He has done with many of us, put you next to a dire human problem, and make you know that either He can get through you to that person, or He cannot help them. Set your little fears and your respectable timidities and your conventional reserve over against a spirit in danger or agony, look up and tell God how much it goes against your grain to do this kind of thing—and then ask Him whether He wants you to nurse your temperamental inhibitions, or to say something honest and loving and hopeful and personal to that other person! And if God is a reality to you, if He has done things in your life that you recognize as His handiwork, you will be astonished, not the difficulty, but at the naturalness and ease with which you step out of the great silent majority of Christians who have never got their mouths open for Christ, and become witnesses for Him. He does not want you to thunder a sermon or a creed at them, just a personal experience with some reference to their own need. I was never more astonished in my life than to find that the first time I did that, a person's life was changed. God took the sacrament of simple, honest words, and worked through it.—From a Sermon by Rev. S. M. Shoemaker.

* * *

What We Carry Out.

When the end of life's journey is reached, we take with us none of our possessions, but we carry out what we have become by the exercise, right or wrong, of the powers that belonged to our original equipment. What we have gained of knowledge and wisdom goes with us. The moral strength that was slowly added to us by long and strenuous battling with the wrong—that, too, goes over. The love that has grown through the years by the repeated performance of kindly and, sometimes perhaps, costly service, and by reason of suffering bravely shared—that belongs to us for ever. And so with all the good things that make up Christian character. If, on the other hand, we have lived as cowards, we shall carry out a craven spirit full of apprehension. If we have cultivated an evil temper, an ugly and defiant spirit; if we have lived grossly and impurely; if we have practiced dishonesty and have lived with a lie in the soul; these things will most surely be recorded within us, and we shall carry them over—to judgment. "We brought nothing into this world." True; and yet we came with gifts that told of God's hope for us. "For neither can we carry anything out." True again; and yet we shall take with us that which determines our weal or woe for all eternity.—Rev. Dr. Oscar Hardman, in Guardian (English).

* * *

For the Southern Churchman.

WE SHALL BE CHANGED.

Martha Young.

My fervent prayer, Father, is this:
That you will make me fit
Whether to live, whether to die
It matters not one bit.
If I am to be granted life,
Let me have living grace;
If I must enter death's dark doors
Fit me to see Christ's Face.

* * *

God Our Refuge.

There was an article in the Atlantic Monthly not long ago entitled "Lantern in the Storm." It was written by a father who had lost a beloved boy of fifteen—a boy beloved by all who had known him. A blister on the foot in a holiday camp, followed by infection—and the boy was gone. In a beautiful and poignant passage, the father says this:

"So this was reality! All that had seemed impossible—that this boy's life could come to this untimely end; that bacteria could destroy anything so good, so beautiful, so healthful as this boy; that the lowest should triumph over the highest—all this, which had seemed impossible and unreal, was real! And all that had seemed real—that victory would be on the side of goodness and beauty; that my boy's life was defended by invisible allies which were equal to his need; that the Eternal goodness must have provided effective support within the natural order for such a life—all this was unreal!"

The truth of the matter is, of course, that the old belief did not go unchallenged even in the days when the Psalter was being compiled. It was a man who had discovered that the comforting idea that goodness was the guarantee of safety and the royal road to prosperity did not always work out, who wrote the book of Job; and he wrote it deliberately to challenge the common and orthodox belief. And one has only to look the facts of human experience full in the face to see how utterly indifferent to character, calamity and suffering really are. However religious people may be; however hard they may try to do the will of God as they see it, they are not on that account spared the bed of pain or the blow of adversity. Not wilful sinners only maintain a physician's practice or fill our hospitals; not people only who never say their prayers or go to church are plunged into despair by business failure or other loss of material means. All these accidents and visitations are part of the mysterious economy of life, and fall with bewildering impartiality upon good and evil alike. "Fire burns and water drowns," as Canon Farrar said, "whether the victim be a grown-up criminal or a little child"; and if we might look for a protecting hand anywhere, one would suppose it might be looked for in the case of a little child. But children, no less than men and women, are liable to pain, accident and disease.

In the second place, if religion did really offer us immunity from the ills of life, it would become the greatest bribe in the world to make us good, and goodness that is bribed is not truly goodness at all. Jacob, you remember, struck a bargain like that with God: "If thou wilt prosper me in the ways in which I go, and bring me back in safety . . . then shalt thou be my God. . . ." That is not a very high conception of religion when you think of it; but Jacob was not the last man to expect God to merit and win his devotion in that way.

But the truth of the matter is: God, in His providence, has not chosen to bribe men to a moral life by making them immune from misfortune; nor has He disposed that good and evil shall fall discriminately upon good and evil men respectively. "He maketh His sun to rise on the evil and on the good, and sendeth rain on the just and the unjust"; and just and unjust alike are subject to the same natural laws which operate in His universe.

And life, as we know it, is like that. Whether events are due to human folly or to what we call natural causes, they involve the religious man as they involve everything else; and the universe being as it is, things cannot be otherwise.

And so I return to what I said a moment ago: that we are much nearer the heart of true religion when, without any fear of life at all, we go deeper down than the body to find the true, saving grace of God in the inner man—in the final, secret perils of the soul. This is where the power and security of religion really lie; where God shows Himself a true refuge and strength, and a very present help in trouble. We are to go to God for comfort and succour and help and then go out to meet the experiences that come to us and to others; and because we have been with God and trust in God we shall meet them in a different way and win from them a different result.

God will be our refuge and our strength truly enough; not by any special act of physical deliverance, but by an inward gift of grace that will help us to hold our own and eventually carry us through.

Our Lord Jesus Christ is the supreme instance of this truth. He goes into the Garden of Gethsemane to seek a refuge; a refuge from events, from physical dangers. "If it be possible," He cries, "let this cup pass from me."

But in the silence He realizes that God does not hold up the universe, not even the freedom of the wills of wicked men: No! not even when the life of His "beloved Son" is at stake. The glory of that awful hour lies here. Jesus could not evade events—or, rather, God did not change events for Him. He had to meet them—and He did meet them. He accepted the cross and endured it. And in that lay the kingdom and the power and the glory. We know now that God can do something better for a man than shield him from suffering and adversity. He can give him grace to meet it, willingly and with fortitude. And so He becomes our greater refuge and our truer strength; saving us not from, but in, sorrow and misfortune; adding His strength to ours that we may keep our souls and win the final crown of life.—Rev. F. J. Moore, in Canadian Churchman.

* * *

"We Did Not Know Them."

In a town of 4,000 persons the seven-year pastorate of a young minister was terminated by his sudden death. His wife continued to live in the community. Four years after her husband's death she said to a friend, "When my husband was pastor and I was the wife of the pastor we thought we knew the members of the church and the people of the community. I now find that we did not know them. In this conversation and in their actions they threw up a smoke screen which they thought the presence of the minister required. Since I am no longer the minister's wife they have gradually come to omit the smoke screen and I scarcely know them. It is a pity that Charles (her husband) during those seven years of devoted service preached and ministered to a smoke screen. If he had known these people as they were his ministry could have been much more helpful."

* * *

For the Southern Churchman.

THE QUEST.

Anne Reily Nesom.

Though level stretches white with dust
My spirit plods because it must;
Nor sees at dawn the sunrise gleam
Emblazon day with glorious dream
Of triumph won from evil hour
By courage and devotion's power.

I thirst; for lack of hope I faint;
My weary heart makes deep complaint
As on and on, the endless road,
I falter with a heavy load;
Where is the spring I long to find?
And where are herbs, my wounds to bind?

This much I know, the Lord of Life
Directed me from the sence of strife
Where crowds oppressed with many a need
Compete for gain, for succor plead.
Not that the field He chose for me;
Some truth is here He would have me see.

Blindly I stumble as I go
Along this path, for I must know
The purpose of this dreary quest;
Of faith and love is it a test?
Or is there a soul whom I should serve
Hidden in shadows 'yond the curve?

I strain my eyes; I try to see
In shadows grey what there may be
For mind to learn or hand to do
In this dull waste I journey through.
Help me, O Lord, to find Thy plan
For my best good and the help of man.

See Him as He Is.

Since Christ is an intercessor, I infer that believers should not rest at the cross for comfort; justification they should look for there; but being justified by His blood, they should ascend up after Him to His throne. At the cross you will see Him in His sorrows and humiliations, in His tears and blood; but follow Him to where He is now, and then you shall see Him in His robes, in His priestly robes, and with His golden girdle about Him. There you shall see Him wearing the breastplate of judgment, and with all your names written upon His heart. Then you shall perceive that the whole family in heaven and earth is named of Him, and how He prevails with God, the Father of mercies, for you. Stand still awhile and listen, yea, enter with boldness into the holiest and see your Jesus as He now appears in the presence of God for you!—John Bunyan.

* * *

The Cross of Jesus is the revelation of God's judgment on sin. Never tolerate the idea of martyrdom about the Cross of Jesus Christ. The Cross was a superb triumph in which the foundations of hell were shaken. There is nothing more certain in Time or Eternity than what Jesus Christ did on the Cross: He switched the whole of the human race back into a right relationship with God. He put the basis of human life on Redemption, i. e. He made a way for every son of man to get into communion with God.—Oswald Chambers.

FOR THE CHILDREN

For the Southern Churchman.

FLOWERS.

Maude Forrest Mumma.

I thnk that flowers can feel, don't you?
And love the touch when it is kind;
They drink afresh the morning dew,
That we their choicest blooms may find.

I think that flowers can see, don't you;
And know the hearts that they make glad;
It is delight to them most true,
To cheer the sick, the lone, the sad.

I think that flowers can smile, don't you?
And love to please us with their grace;
When we these smiles from Heaven view,
Glory fills each lifted face.

I think that flowers can hear, don't you?
And never like the unkind word;
These messengers from Heaven's blue,
Know only songs that love has heard.

* * *

For the Southern Churchman.

THOSE RECTORY CHILDREN.

Chapter IX.

Preparations.

M. L. G.

"Winnie, will you step into the study?"

Winnie, just in from school, put down her books, and looked up in some wonder at Mother. It was strange to hear Mother's voice quiver and see her hand shaking as she stood in the doorway. Winnie would as well have expected the door itself to tremble.

"Is it something wrong, Mother?" Winnie hung up her coat in haste.

"No, darling, Father and I want just to talk to you and David. He's here ahead of you." Mother smiled, her hand steadied on the door-knob. "Claire's having her nap, and the little boys went with Uncle Danger to the store, so we can be quite alone."

Father and David were seated in the glow of the "Open Franklin." Father patted the broad arm of his chair, and Winnie settled herself there, with his arm around her. The world seemed secure again.

"We've been telling David," said Father, "that you and he will have to be very grown-up and important people around here for awhile. Dr. Carrington was here this morning. He finds Claire—not doing so well. He thinks she should be taken to Baltimore right away. The specialist will be there in a few days; Dr. Carrington thinks it best to put her in the hospital's care a little ahead. So we must leave tomorrow morning, and you and David will hold the fort."

"But Aunt Mollie, isn't she coming?" asked Winnie in dismay.

"We sent her a telegram this morning, and have her answer here—she's down with grippe, can't get here for some days. I may be back myself before a week is gone, if Claire gets along well."

"Nothing could happen in just a week," said David stoutly.

"I would feel better, dear, to know someone's here, at night, anyway," Mother answered.

"The trick of it is to think of the right person," Father's hand was rumpling Winnie's curls as he talked. "Mrs. Pace is first choice of all hands—but she can't bring Buddy, she thinks he's coming down with measles. I couldn't ask the Trent ladies, their house is heated more than ours, and not so draughty. Miss Parmenter—"

"Oh, let's not ask Miss Parmenter!" Winnie cried quickly.

"All right, let's not ask Miss Parmenter. And that leaves the little Hollowell ladies and Mrs. Innis. The Hollowell ladies have all they should do with their shop. We mustn't put more upon them. It seems that the lot falls upon Mrs. Innis."

"She's scared of thunderstorms," said David with some scorn; "she gets on a feather bed and says the Collect for the week. I heard her tell Mrs. Pace."

"Well, she won't be required to take those measures in January," Father said, with his little chuckle.

"But I mean—if the house should catch on fire or burglars come—"

"O David, don't!" Winnie hid her face on Father's shoulder.

"Well, but if! She'd go squealing around—"

"Now, son! Mother broke in gently.

"I believe she's our man—or rather, our lady," Father said. "She would be kind and patient, with the little fellows. She hasn't anyone at home who needs her, and her head is older than you children's, at any rate. David, shall we drive 'round there when Uncle Danger gets back from the store? There are some matters we can talk over together while we drive."

David stood up, looking as tall as he could. "Yes, sir, I'll be glad to."

"And you, Winnie, will you help with the packing?" Mother said briskly, seeing Winnie's eyes filled with tears that she wouldn't let fall. "And we can fix your room for Mrs. Innis. You'd better have mine, to be nearer Kent and Philip. Come, dear, help get our Claire's things."

They went upstairs into Mother's room.

"She doesn't look so very well," Winnie whispered, going over to Claire's bed. There were dark shadows under Claire's closed eyes and wisps of golden hair lay damp on the too-white forehead. Winnie's heart felt as though it had been squeezed.

"O Mother, she couldn't be—she couldn't—" Tears choked her voice. Mother's arm was quickly around her.

"It need not mean that," Mother said quietly, her hand stroking Winnie's shoulder. "Not so far as we know now. We must take each step as it comes—not look too far ahead. And no matter what happens—" her voice stopped, then went on more steadily, "Mother couldn't really lose either of her two girls."

Winnie could only cling to her.

"There, now, my darling, we have work to do, and we must not let Claire wake and find us downcast. Uncle Danger brought the trunk into your room; we'll take Claire's things in there. Do you think her dark-green or the brown dress best for the train?"

The door opened and Cindy's face appeared.

"Miss Sarah Trent, she downstairs, Mistis. She say Kent done tell huh in de sto' y'all gwine tek Miss Claire 'way. She brung some fruit, an' whatenah!" Cindy's eyes rolled.

"And we didn't even hear the wheels on the driveway!" said Mother briskly. "I'll be right down, Cindy. And, Winnie, if you'll just finish taking these to the trunk and be here in case Claire wakes, it will help me most of all."

The clothes were soon carried out. Winnie saw where Mother had been putting fresh ribbon in one of Claire's little wrappers. She took up the work, weaving the ribbon in and out around the waist-line. Sitting in Mother's chair near Claire's bed her thoughts grew happier. She tried to picture Claire as coming back and growing strong, as she never could be without this going away.

"What makes you smile, Winnie?" she heard in Claire's weak voice.

"Oh, are you waked up? O Claire, I was just thinking what fun we'll have someday!"

"Fun?"

"You know the two limbs of the old apple tree back of the barn? I've told you what fine horses they make. Suppose you get real well and you ride on one tree-horse and I on the other—"

Claire's eyes were bright. "And if I can run 'round the circle with the dogs, like Kent and Philip—"

"Yes, and swing in the high swing and climb up into the loft!"

Claire's laugh rang out. "O Winnie, that's a lot of nice things to do. I'll hurry all I can and get well!"

* * *

The Little Lost Hope.

Betty looked under the bed and over by the chest of drawers and pretty nearly everywhere, but she could not find her lost shoe.

"Oh, dear!" said she, very much put out. "Where can it be? Perhaps I left it downstairs last night."

"Which is a very bad habit," remarked the Chest of Drawers.

"Yes, indeed," said the Big Rocking Chair.

"An extremely bad habit," agreed the Bed. "There is a place for everything, you know."

"Certainly," added the Little Red Rocker.

Betty really looked dreadfully provoked. It certainly was no concern of theirs that she could not find her shoe, but she thought it best not to say anything, for they were talking just like mother talked, and, of course, everybody knows that mother-talk is always, quite right.

Then she took another look, behind the door, in the closet, under the little red rocker, and when the shoe was not to be found there, hippity-hop she went downstairs.

"Do-o-ng!" clanged the Grandfather Clock in the lower hall.

"Ting!" echoed the little Swiss Clock on the mantel.

"Half-past eight," exclaimed Betty. "Oh, dear! I fear I will be late for school. Have you seen my other shoe, Grandfather Clock?"

"Tick-no! Tick-no!" answered the Grandfather Clock in his stern way.

"Have you, Little Swiss Clock?"

"Tock-not! Tock-not!" retorted the little clock quickly.

"Oh, my! Oh, my!" wailed Betty. "I have to eat my breakfast, feed the gold fish and gather my books together. Then if I look again for it I am sure I shall never get to school on time."

"Tick-no," agreed the Grandfather Clock.

"Tock-not! tock-not," repeated the Little Swiss Clock.

Then hippity-hop went Betty into the living-room, peering into every hole and corner.

"Ha!" cried the Big Mirror, who saw almost everything. "What is the trouble, Betty?"

"I have looked high and low, but I cannot find my shoe," answered Betty in great distress. "Perhaps you have seen it, Big Mirror?"

"I have indeed," replied the Big Mirror, in a reproving tone of voice. "You pulled it off down here last night, Betty; and what is more, you left it down here."

"Oh! so I did," said Betty, very much elated. "I remember that I left it beside the Wing Chair."

But when Betty looked beside the Wing Chair her other shoe was not to be found.

"Have you seen it, Wing Chair?" she asked.

"I won't tell," replied Wing Chair, mysteriously.

"The puppy was in here a moment ago," said the Big Mirror. "You had better run quickly, Betty, and see if he has carried off your shoe."

Betty went hippity-hop all through the house searching for the puppy, and at last she found him in the kitchen under the cabinet, fiercely shaking her shoe.

"Stop, naughty puppy!" she cried, endeavoring to grab the shoe, but the puppy was much too quick, and round and round the room he raced with the shoe in his mouth.

Betty raced round and round after him, crying, "Drop my shoe! Drop my shoe, naughty puppy!"

But, of course, the puppy did not drop the shoe, for he was having a perfectly beautiful time, thinking all the while that Betty was playing with him, and he shook it and shook it and growled with impish glee.

"Then, just as Betty was about to catch him, he darted under the big kitchen stove.

"Now," he said, cocking his little head side-wise and peeping out, "You can't possibly get me."

"Oh, yes, I can," cried Betty thoroughly out of patience, and down she went on her hands and knees and recovered her little shoe from the puppy's sharp teeth.

"There!" she cried. "I did!"

The puppy cocked his head sidewise again and didn't say a word.

"I am glad Betty found her shoe," said the Stove.

"I'm glad, too," said the Kitchen Chair.

"So am I. So am I!" said the Kettle, beginning his steam-song.

And the puppy under the stove went off to sleep, dreaming of the fun he had with Betty's shoe.

So, Betty hurried and reached school on time, after all. But after that she always saw that her shoes were in her room when she went to bed. That saved her a lot of trouble, and she was able to get to school on time.—Exchange.

* * *

Stoppers.

"To me," chuckled Jerry, "there is nothing as thrilling as the bobbing of a cork."

"Yes, after hours of patient waiting," laughed Jimmie.

"There wouldn't be half the thrill in fishing, if you couldn't watch for the bobbin' of the cork," agreed Daddy. "And I'll venture to say, that of the millions of corks used every year, few people give them a thought, or have the remotest idea where they come from."

"They hang from trees, don't they?" queried Jerry.

Jimmie and Daddy laughed.

"Oh, yes," giggled Jimmie, "they hang like apples, all sizes and kinds. A wonderful sight." And he went off into peals of mirth.

"Never mind," said Daddy, observing Jerry's embarrassment. "They really do come from trees, Jerry, but they are not in this shape."

"I don't know much about them," said Jerry. "I do know that they are dandy for fishing and have true 'stopping powers', but that is the limit of my knowledge. Do tell me about them."

"Gladly," answered Daddy. "In the first place, upwards of fifty per cent of the world's cork is produced in Spain and Portugal. The very finest is grown in various part of the six provinces.

"Whew," gasped both boys. "Plentiful, I would say!"

"Wait until you learn how long it takes to grow it," smiled Daddy. "As you know, cork is a very elastic tissue consisting of thin-walled and nearly cubical cells. It is really the outer bark of the cork tree, or cork-oak tree as it is called. These trees are very tall, from twenty to sixty feet in height and about three feet in diameter. The leaves are evergreen."

"How old do the trees have to be before their bark can be used?" interrupted Jerry, eagerly.

"There is something strange about that," answered Daddy. "The age of maturity varies in different parts of the tree. From eight to nine years are required for the trunk; from ten to eleven years for the first branches, and from eleven to twelve years for the second branches. It yields its best cork when it is about forty years old, but often goes on growing new coverings of bark until it is at least a century old."

"Good night!" ejaculated Jimmie. "How do they take the bark from these remarkable trees, and how often?"

"Not until the sap flows freely through the tree—usually from June to the beginning of September—does the 'stripping' take place. And it certainly takes an artist to 'strip' a cork tree. An amateur would ruin a tree.

"First, the trunk and the larger branches are completely stripped of the outer layer of bark. A ring is cut around the trunk at the base and another one just beneath the lower branches; a vertical cut joins the two rings, and the bark is then easily removed. The bark from the first stripping is so coarse and full of hole that it is worth very little on the market, but fortunately the tree at once begins to grow a new coat, and in eight or ten years is ready to be stripped again.

"When the cork has been stripped off it is allowed to dry or 'season' for a few weeks. Then it is boiled, to remove the tannic acid and to loosen the rough outer layer so that this may be easily scraped off. The cork is then packed in bales and is ready for shipment to all parts of the world."

"But how are its 'stopping powers' formed?" asked Jimmie, quickly.

"Stoppers are made almost entirely by machinery," answered Daddy. "The layers of bark are first put through a steam bath, so that they may be softened, ready for the scraping and cleaning process. A machine equipped wtih sharp knives cuts the layers into strips, which are sent to a machine that punches out the stoppers. The waste pieces are sent to smaller machines for the cutting of smaller stoppers. If they are to be made smaller at one end, they go through another machine. As a final step, they are held against a sandpaper wheel until the surfaces are smooth."

"But what is done with the waste from the smaller ones?" asked Jerry, alive with curiosity.

"Some of this is used in the making of lineoleum, which consists of cork powder mixed with linseed oil and spread on canvas.

" 'Spanish black,' a very fine color for paint, is made from the burning of linoleum, which consists of corkboards, life-saving belts, floats or buoys for fish nets, shoe soles, and numerous things are all made beneficial with cork."

"Well," sighed Jerry, "who would have ever imagined that 'cork' was as useful as all that?"—June Douglas, in The Presbyterian.

* * *

For the Southern Churchman.

ISN'T IT FUN TO DO?

Magda Brandon.

Isn't it fun to do;
To play you are mother, and mother is you?
Now she is your girl and quite willing to mind;
You are her mother, you're wise and you're kind;
Isn't it fun to do?

Isn't it fun to do;
To put on her shoes, and her other things, too?
You put on her dress, and her gloves, and her hat,
Have fun playing grown-up—talk this and talk that;
Isn't it fun to do?

Isn't it fun to do;
When someone at home's making candy, and you,
After candy's been poured into well-buttered dish,
May scrape out the kettle as clean as you wish;
Isn't it fun to do?

Isn't it fun to do;
To walk in the rain in a dress not so new?
To walk in the road in a faded old dress,
And splash in the puddles, shoes off, stockingless;
Isn't it fun to do?

Isn't it fun to do;
To visit younr auntie on paper that's blue?
You write her a letter, and press in a kiss;
By painting your lips, can't you see what it is?
Isn't it fun to do?

Isn't it fun to do;
When shadows come creeping, it's sleepy-time, too;
To kneel, pray your prayers, and then happily go
To bed, mother there to tuck covers just so:
Isn't it fun to do?

—Stories for Primary Children.

* * *

Faith in the Promises.

A person comes to the bank with a check. He believes it to be honestly his, and the signature to be correct. He puts it down on the counter, and the clerk puts out the money. But see, the man does not take it. He stands and loafs about; and the clerk looks at him and wonders what he is at. At last, when the person has been there long enough to wear the good man's patience out, the clerk says, "Did you bring the check to have the money?" "Yes, I handed it in." "Well, then, why do you not take the money and go about your business?" If he is a sensible man, he delays no longer; nay, he would not have delayed so long. He takes the money and departs in peace. Now, dear soul, if thou hast a promise from God—"He that believeth is not condemned," or "He that believeth hath everlasting life": dost thou believe? Then take the blessing and go about your business.—Spurgeon.

* * *

Courage is almost a contradiction in terms. It means a strong desire to live taking the form of a readiness to die.—G. K. Chesterton.

Classified Advertisments and Notices

All notices and advertisements, excepting positions wanted, will be inserted in this department at a rate of 20 cents per agate line each insertion. Special raes to contracts of any length. A rate of 15 cents per line is made to persons seeking positions. No advertisement accepted for less than 50 cents.

Copy for this department must be received not later than Tuesday of the week in which it is intended that the first insertion shall appear.

SPECIAL NOTICES.

CHURCH VESTMENTS.
Cathedral Studio, Church embroideries, Altar and Pulpit Hangings. Stoles from $6.50. Burse and veil from $10. Surplice from $8. Send for complete line of pure Irish linens by the yard. Silks, fringes and gold thread. Embroidered emblems ready to appy. Altar Guild Handbook, 50c.

L, V. MACKRILLE
11 W. Kirke St., Chevy Chase,
Washington, D. C.
Telephone Wisconsin 2752.

CHURCH LINEN.
FINE IRISH LINEN specially selected for Church use. 36 inches to 54 inches wide, cut any length. Sample of 12 qualities on request. Mary Fawcett Company, 812 Berkeley Avenue, Trenton, N. J.

RAZOR SHARPENER.
SHARPENS ANY STRAIGHT RAZOR, or safety razor. Guaranteed by manufacturers, and I guarantee it to please you. 50 cents per cake, or 3 cakes for $1.00. I take subscriptions for all magazines published at publishers' rates, or less. Sold by a wheel chair invalid. Edward P. Broxton, R. F. D., Blythe, Ga.

FOUNTAIN PENS.
A FOUNTAIN PEN AT A 1933 VALUE, with the Spencerian quality and smooth writing ease famous for seventy-five years. Guaranteed. Points fine and medium. Colors, gloss black, green and gold, Burgundy, blue and black, grey pearl. Price $2.00. Sold by a shut-in wheel chair invalid. Edward P. Broxton, R. F. D., Blythe, Ga.

PHILATELIC.
Wanted—Confederate and United States Stamps, used on envelopes. Collections purchased. Highest prices paid. George Hakes, Belvidere, Illinois.

HOUSE OF THE NAZARENE; SAINT AUGUSTINE, FLORIDA; offers rest and quiet in comfortable and pleasant surroundings. Invalids requiring nursing cannot be received, nor those with mental difficulties. Apply to Sister-in-Charge.

NOTICE.
"The Virginia History Committee" is offering to the readers of The Southern Churchman. mimeographed copies of a valuable article on Lee, originally published in the "Southern Churchman", under the caption, "Putting First Things First", which, among other things, contains remarkable tributes to the Statesmanship of Lee, by three well-known New Englanders: Gamaliel Bradford, General Morr's Schaff and Dr. A. W. Littlefield. Four cents will secure one copy of this article, and ten cents will secure three copies of it. Address Mary D. Carter, Virginia History Committee, Upperville, Virginia.

CHURCH INTELLIGENCE.

(Continued from page 17.)

Rev. F. H. Harding, Secretary; Mr. H. M. Heckman, Treasurer; Judge E. E. Pomeroy, Chancellor; Rev. Wm. S. Turner, Registrar. The Rev. Messrs. J. M. Walker, Mortimer Glover and Dr. W. W. Memminger were elected the clerical members of the Standing Committee, and Judge E. E. Pomeroy and Messrs. Frank E. Bone and Mac D. Dexter, lay members.

Examining Chaplains: Rev. Messrs. J. M. Walker, H. Fields Saunenig, Charles Wood and G. W. Gasque.

Delegates to the Provincial Synod: Rev. Messrs. W. W. Memminger, D. D., R. R. Claiborne, Jr., David C. Wright, Jr., L. W. Blackwelder, Russell K. Smith, Charles E. Wood and J. D. C. Wilson, and Messrs. E. C. Pusey, Fred S. Gould, Mac D. Dexter, H. C. Chandler, T. Firth Lockwood, Floyd E. Baird and Mrs. E. B. Harrold.

On Wednesday evening at the Piedmont Driving Club the motion picture, "The New World," was shown to a large gathering, and this was followed by a diocesan reception.

The annual meeting of the Woman s Auxiliary was in session at the same time as the Diocesan Council. A splendid year of work was reported in the various activities of the Auxiliary. An address was made by the Rev. C. C. J. Carpenter, rector of St. John's Church, Savannah, and by Miss Grace Lindley, Executive Secretary of the Woman's Auxiliary. An informal reception was given to Miss Lindley and the new officers of the Auxiliary. A group of singers from the Fort Valley N. & I. School sang selections and helped the members to visualize something of the important work being done for the Negroes in this school.

F. H. H.

SITUATION WANTED.

EDUCATED WOMAN DESIRES POSITION as secretary or domestic manager, etc. Box AG, care Southern Churchman.

DEATHS

WINIFRED GRAVES CRENSHAW.

"Enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."

There are some people whose hearts literally radiate through their bodies, and through the lives of others. Such was WINIFRED CRENSHAW. Although not possessing the means to do all the things she would have loved to do for those less fortunate than herself, yet because she did all she could with what she had, because she gave of herself unstintingly and enthusiastically month by month and year by year, she had hundreds of friends and admirers in every walk of life.

Her chief charm was in unfailing loyalty, a downright sincerity and bighearted friendliness that reached out to all with whom she came in contact, which made her a unique and lovable personality, whose memory will linger in the hearts of her friends until that meeting in the other life, where such lives as hers will receive their just reward.

ELLISON CAPERS ANDREWS.

Fell asleep at his home near Arden, N. C., on Sunday, February 10, ELLISON CAPERS ANDREWS. He is survived by his wife and two young daughters. He was buried at River Side Cemetery, Asheville, N. C., on Monday, the eleventh, by Rev. Edgar Neff. Mr. Andrews was a devoted and beloved brother of Mrs. E. N. Joyner, of Lenoir, N. C.

Rev. E. N. Joyner.

MICHIGAN

Rt. Rev. Herman Page, D. D., Bishop

Visit From Dr. D. A. McGregor.

More than usual interest in Religious Education is being shown at the present time in the diocese, due to the visit of the Rev. D. A. McGregor, Ph. D., Executive Secretary of the National Department of Religious Education, and to an intensive Parish Institute on Religious Education, held in the Church of the Epiphany, Detroit.

Dr. McGregor arrived in the diocese February 19, and met with the Diocesan Department of Religious Education at luncheon that day. In the evening he attended and addressed a dinner meeting in St. Paul's Cathedral, which, like others of a similar nature held in various parts of the diocese, was planned especially for clergy church school teachers, but was thrown open to all interested persons. On Wednesday evening, Dr. McGregor met with the Saginaw Valley Normal School in Trinity Church, Bay City; on Thursday, with the Flint School of Religion in St. Paul's Church, that city; and on Friday, with the representatives of parishes in the Jackson Region in St. Paul's Church, Jackson.

On Sunday, February 24, Dr. McGregor will preach in St. Joseph's, Detroit, at the morning service, and at the vesper service in Christ Church, Bloomfield Hills. He will conclude his program by addressing the Diocesan Woman's Auxiliary at their monthly meeting in St. Paul's Cathedral on Monday, the twenty-fifth.

FLORIDA.

Rt. Rev. Frank A. Juhan, D. D., Bishop.

Three-Day Conference.

The clergy and laymen of the diocese have just closed a three-day conference period, in the Church of the Good Shepherd, Jacksonville, led by the Rt. Rev. Irving Peake Johnson, D. D., Bishop of Colorado.

For two days, January 28 and 29, Bishop Johnson met with the clergy and discussed the Ministry in its threefold office, Priestly, Prophetic and Pastoral, as well as many other aspects of present-day church life, problems and opportunities.

On January 30, the Bishop met in an afternoon conference with some fifty laymen from Jacksonville and vicinity, and from a number of other congregations throughout the diocese.

Personal Notes

The Rev. Canon H. Adye Prichard, D. D., rector of St. Mark's Church, Mt. Kisco, N. Y., returned last Monday from a quick trip to England, during which he spoke at the preaching service at Westminster Abbey on Sunday, January 20, as one of the exchange preachers between this country and England.

The Rev. Henry F. Kloman is living in the rectory and supplying at St. John's Church, Cold Spring Harbor, Long Island, through February, while the rector, the Rev. Lyman C. Bleecker, is on vacation in Florida, recuperating from illness. Mr. Kloman recenly resigned as rector of Emmanuel Church, Cumberland, Md.

At a recent meeting of the Protestant Episcopal Church League, held in New York City, the Rev. Wilbur L. Caswell was elected First Vice-President of the League.

Miss Kathleen Platt, Student Secretary of the two Florida dioceses, serving the Episcopal girls of the Florida State College for Women, in Tallahassee, has recently announced her engagement to the Rev. Girault M. Jones, rector of Trinity Church, Pass Christian, Mississippi. It is understood that the marriage will take place early in the summer. Bishop Juhan has not yet announced Miss Platt's successor.

The Rev. Gordon V. Smith and Miss Leone Hollister were married on January 23 at Grace Church, Grand Rapids, Bishop McCormick officiating, assisted by the rector, Rev. L. B. Whittemore. A suitable gift from the clergy of the diocese was presented in token of their affection for Mr. Smith and their appreciation of his faithful work in the diocese. He has accepted a call to Ponca City, Oklahoma. Until the spring, St. James, Albion, and Trinity, Grand Lodge, will be under the charge of the Archdeacon, with the assistance of the neighboring clergy and of local lay-readers.

Ordinations.

Mr. Alfred Palmore Harrison, a senior in the Philadelphia Divinity School, was made a deacon on Monday morning, February 17, 1935, at a Service of Ordination in the Bishop's Chapel, at the Church House, Philadelphia, the Rt. Rev. Francis M. Taitt, S. T. D., LL. D., officiating.

Immediately following, Mr. Harrison became assistant to the Rev. Dr. Louis Gouverneur Morris at Calvary Church, Germantown, succeeding the Rev. Frank Cox, recently called to the rectorship of the Church of the Redemption, West Philadelphia.

Mr. Harrison is a native of Philadelphia, and is a graduate of the Germantown High School, Brown Preparatory School, and Trinity College, Hartford-Conn. He has been a member of the Church of the Redemption, West Philadelphia, since childhood, and his Presenter was the rector of that parish, the Rev. Frank Cox.

The Rev. Robert Bruce Mason was ordained by the Rt. Rev. Bishop E. V. Shayler to the priesthood at St. James, Fremont, Nebraska, on February 13, 1935. The candidate was presented by the Rev. D. J. Gallagher and the sermon preached by the Rev. G. St. G. Tyner of St. Paul's, Omaha, a former parish of the ordinand. The Rev. Mr. Tyner urged greater spirituality in the clerical life, and stressed the need of silence before God a sa necessity for true Communion. At the close of the service a luncheon was served by the ladies of the parish, and several speeches were made by clergy present, a notable contribution being offered by the Rev. P. Markovich, priest of the Serbian Orthodox congregation of St. Nicholas in Omaha, who also took part in the laying on of hands.

The Rev. John M. Burgess was ordained to the priesthood on January 25 at St. Philip's Church, Grand Rapids, Mich., by the Rt. Rev. John Newton McCormick, D. D. The Archdeacon presented the candidate, and the Rev. L. B. Whittemore preached the sermon. Also participating in the service were the Rev. Messrs. Fowkes, Higgins, Farney, Hanson and Moffatt, and Dr. Wilkinson was in the congregation. The church was crowded to the doors and the service was very impressive. A luncheon for Mr. Burgess and the visiting clergy was given by the Bishop at Grace Church Parish House. Mr. Burgess has been appointed as priest-in-charge of St. Philip's.

Dr. Thomas' Funeral March 2.

Arrangements have been made for the funeral of the late Dr. George H. Thomas, for twenty years rector of St. Paul's Church, Kenwod, Ill., to be held in St. Paul's on Saturday, March 2. Dr. Thomas died at Tuscon, Ariz., February 5, but the funeral has been postponed pending the delayed arrival of Mrs. Thomas and other members of the family in Chicago. The Rev. Donald W. Crawford, assistant to Dr. Thomas, has been appointed priest-in-charge of St. Paul's until the vestry selects a successor.

Deaths.

The Rev. William Francis Parson, retired priest of the Diocese of Cennecticut, died in the Middlesex Hospital, Middletown, January 23, bringing to a close a very loving and fruitful ministry of more than forty years.

Born in Boston, February 13, 1869, the Rev. Mr. Parsons was graduated from St. Stephen's College in 1888, receiving later the degree of M. A., from the Berkeley Divinity School in 1891. He was ordained deacon in 1891, and priest in 1892. In 1892 he married Miss Ethel Stocking of Portland, and in the same year became rector of St. Stephen's Church, Schuylersville, N. Y., remaining there until 1896. After a year as curate of Christ Church, Troy, N. Y., he was successively rector of St. Luke's, Troy, 1896-1904; St. Andrew's Church, Darien, Ga., 1904- 1909, and the Church of the Incarnation, Atlanta, Ga., 1909-1911. He was Examining Chaplain, Diocese of Georgia, 1907-1909, and held the same office in the Diocese of Atlanta, 1909-1911. From 1911 to 1917, he was on the Missionary Staff of the Diocese of Rhode Island with residence in Phillipsdale, R. I. He was rector of the Church of the Ascension, Wakefield, R. I., from 1917 to 1921, and of St. Peter's Church, Weston, Mass., 1921-1927. In May, 1927, he returned to Connecticut, and became missionary-in-charge of Lyme and Niantic. From this work he retired in August, 1933, on advice of his physician, and went with Mrs. Parsons to her family home on Rose Hill, Portland. Surviving are Mrs. Parsons and one son, Paul S. Parsons, of Hartford.

The funeral was held on January 25, in the Chapel of St. John the Baptist, Rose Hill, Bishop Budlong of Connecticut, and the Very Rev. Sidney W. Wallace, Archdeacon, officiating.

THE FORWARD MOVEMENT

Lenten Folder

"DISCIPLESHIP"

Is available to parishes and individuals.

25 or more copies one cent apiece

Under 25 copies two for five cents

Postpaid

Forward Movement Headquarters

223 West Seventh Street

Cincinnati, Ohio.

CONFIRMATION PAPERS

By

CANON F. E. HOWITT

1. Confirmation and Baptism.
2. Baptism and the Christian Covenant
3. The Baptismal Covenant—Repentance.
4. The Baptismal Covenant—Faith and the Faith.
5. The Baptismal Covenant—The Faith.
6. The Baptismal Covenant—Obedience.
7. The Lord's Supper.
8. The Means of Grace.

A series of informing pamphlets compiled by Canon F. E. Howitt. They have an inestimable value in instructing those who contemplate membership in the Church, and for impressing the already confirmed with the sacredness and meaning of this holy ritual.

Price, single pamphlet, each..... 5 cents
Complete set of eight.....25 cents

Order from

SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN COMPANY

Richmond, Va.

R. GEISSLER, INC.
450 SIXTH AVE. NEAR 10th ST. NEW YORK
Church Furnishings
IN CARVED WOOD AND MARBLE · BRASS · SILVER FABRICS + WINDOWS
EST 1877

CHOIR VESTMENTS

Cassocks, Cottas and Caps. Special low prices. Samples and prices on request. Poplin Canterbury Caps, $1.00 each. Paper Patterns for Choir and Church. Vestments for sale.

HENRY HAYTER, 8205 Riverside Drive, Box 618, Rte. 1, St. Petersburg, Fla.

Church Furnishings

Gold, Silver and Brass

Church and Chancel Furniture

Write for Catalogue

for Episcopal Churches

W. & E. SCHMIDT CO.

308 Third Street, Milwaukee, Wis.

CAUTHORNE PAPER COMPANY

The South's Most Progressive Paper House
ALL GRADES OF PRINTING AND WRAPPING PAPERS
Richmond, Va.

This paper is printed on paper supplied by the Cauthorne Paper Company.

CREOMULSION

Your own druggist is authorized to cheerfully refund your money on the spot if you are not relieved by Creomulsion.

COUGHS

..chest COLDS

PROVED BY 2 GENERATIONS

SONGS OF THE SPIRIT

By

MRS. GENEVIEVE SCOTT WRIGHT.

A book of inspirational verse that will make a welcome present to relative or friend.

Order through Southern Churchman.

Price, $1.00.

Educational

The General Theological Seminary

CHELSEA SQUARE, NEW YORK

The next Academic year begins on the last Wednesday in September

Special students admitted and Graduate Courses for graduates of other Theological Seminaries.

The requirements for admission and other particulars can be had from THE DEAN, 1 Chelsea Square, New York, N. Y

SHENANDOAH VALLEY ACADEMY

Certificates accepted by universities, colleges, West Point, Annapolis. The Academy's experienced teachers, cultural atmosphere, limited numbers, military discipline enable it to prepare boys to succeed in college. For catalogue write: Col. B. M. Roszel, Supt., Winchester, Va.

ST. MARGARET'S SCHOOL

TAPPAHANNOCK, VIRGINIA.

A Church School for girls. Boarding Department limited to 70. College Preparatory Course and Intermediate Grades. Athletics. Very moderate cost.

Country life and simplicity without isolation. Beautiful grounds on Rappahannock River. Three dormitories for different stages.

EDITH LATANE, Headmistress.

ST. CHRISTOPHER'S

A Church Boarding and Day School Healthful, beautiful and historic surroundings. Boarding Department limited to 50 boys. Rate, $650. Reduction to sons of clergymen and missionaries. Illustrated catalogue on request.

REV. C. G. CHAMBERLAYNE, Ph. D., LL. D., Headmaster, Richmond, Virginia.

The Virginia Theological Seminary

ALEXANDRIA, VIRGINIA

For catalogue and other information, Address THE DEAN

The Beckford School

WOODSTOCK, VIRGINIA.

A school for younger boys. Second grade through Junior High School. On modern farm in Shenandoah Valley. Summer camp. Limited enrollment. Fifty dollars monthly.

EDMUND BURKE WHELAN, Headmaster.

The Bishop Payne Divinity School

The accredited Seminary of the Church for training colored men for the ministry. The curriculum covers the full course for Deacons and Priest's Orders. The degree of D. D. awarded.

For catalogue and information, apply to Rev. F. G. Ribble, M. A., D. D., Dean Petersburg, Va.

The Episcopal Theological School

Cambridge, Massachusetts.

Affiliated with Harvard University. Dean H. B. Washburn, 3 Mason Street.

THOUGHTS for the THOUGHTFUL

We are punished not for our sins but by our sins—Fosdick.

"God singles no one out for trial."

Give us better men and we shall soon have a better world. Give us the Kingdom of God and it will enable us to solve all human problems.

God has no place for the people who will serve Him when it suits them best. In His army, only the minute-men can serve.

If Jesus is the perfection of our own true manhood, then to reach our own fulfilment is to live in Him. And love, not self-conscious imitation, is the way to such life.—Canon Raven.

Let us not confuse all the issues of life and death as we do by saddling the good and beautiful Will of God with the ills we make for ourselves.—Basil King.

"Each one of us has it in him to become a mirror of the Eternal."

"Our freedom is bought at the price of mistakes."

The slogan of the twentieth century must be that little but tremendous word —together. It is only together that we can ever hope to solve our tremendous problems and build a world in which the life of each is known to be essential to the fullest life of all.—J. H. Randall.

I do not know that there is any goal for any life that it is either right or reasonable to have or possible to advise than this—the likeness of Christ —no voyage, that is to say, that is not faring deliberately to God, according to the loftiest and loveliest revelation of God that has been given to us.—Rev. E. Milner-White.

What this generation needs to do is to return to the thought that there is a Pilot and that He is able to bring the ship into its desired haven, that there is a King who is able to subdue all His enemies and to govern all His domain, that the present is interwoven into His purpose and to Him is not a puzzle nor an enigma or conundrum.—Ex.

The Christian ideal of cross-bearing is at the bottom of all human life that is worthy.—Figgis.

We are apt to consider this age of ours to be critical in history. Of course it is; all ages are critical. This of ours is just as great and just as puny as any other age. It is just as full of despair and as full of hope. It is just as full of the vision capable of new creation as it is of the contemptible taking or leaving things as you find them. Do not allow yourself to be paralyzed by the fogs of thought over limited areas, and single problems, however important.

Christ Church School

MIDDLESEX COUNTY, VA.

A country school for boys; well located. College preparatory, moderate cost. Personal attention; scholarships. Apply to Wm. D. Smith, Jr., Headmaster(for information, Christchurch, Va.

The Ewart's Cafeteria

EXCELLENT FOOD
REASONABLE PRICES

Richmond, Va.
112-114 N. 5th St.
Norfolk, Va.
112-114 Market St.
Washington, D. C.
522 13th, N. W.

FLOWERS BY WIRE EVERYWHERE

Mosmiller Florist

115 E Main St.
424 E. Grace St
RICHMOND, VA.

Royal Laundry

and
BAND BOX DRY CLEANERS
UNEXCELLED LAUNDRY
and Cleaning Service
Richmond, Virginia.

L. T. CHRISTIAN

FUNERAL DIRECTOR

Boulevard-Park and Patterson Avenue
Richmond, Va.
Office Never Closed
Prices to meet depressed conditions

Edwin S. Gorham, Inc.

Publishers and Booksellers.
Established 1900.

Church Literature and Art, Bibles, Prayer Books and Hymnals, Devotional Books, Parish Requisites.

Catalogues and Information on request.

18 West 45th Street, New York.

Some Important Facts in English Church History

EXAMINED AND REVIEWED

By

REV. W. P. WITSELL, D. D.

This is an illuminating and instructive review of the history of the Episcopal Church in England from the earliest records, with commentaries on the book with the above title compiled by the Rev. C. L. Wells, D. D., of Sewanee, Tenn.

As a digest of the records of the establishment and growth of the Church; its maintenance and continuity of existence as an independent religious body amid the vicissitudes of early English politics, and efforts of outside interference, this review affords a valuable fund of information to churchmen.

In pamphlet form,
Price, 25 cents

For sale by
SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN CO.
Richmond, Va.

DESIGNED FOR THE PROMOTION OF PRACTICAL PIETY, THE DIFFUSION OF RELIGIOUS AND GENERAL INTELLIGENCE, AND THE MAINTENANCE OF THE PRINCIPLES OF THE PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL CHURCH

Southern Churchman

DOMINUS FRUSTRA NISI 1835

Vol. 100. RICHMOND, VA., MARCH 2, 1935. No. 9.

CATHEDRAL OF ST. JOHN THE DIVINE.

North Transept.

QUINQUAGESIMA.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Russian Theological Academy in Paris.
February 20, 1935.

Mr. Editor:

We should be glad of your assistance in making more widely known the cause and the work of the Russian Theological Academy in Paris. The Presiding Bishop, from personal knowledge of the Academy, its staff and its accomplishment, says that "the importance of this work cannot be exaggerated." Dr. John R. Mott classes it "among the indispensable institutions of Christendom." The Archbishop of Canterbury cordially recommends it as "a Fund which deserves generous help."

Hitherto, each year, the Academy authorities have had to consider whether they could venture to open the Academy again. They have always decided affirmatively, counting on the support of Church people who understand the work. The contributions regularly received from England, from American congregations on the Continent and from the scanty means of exiled Russians have enabled the Academy to carry on for part of the year. For the rest they must have help from America.

In previous years, Committees in Boston, New York, Philadelphia and Washington, have obtained a substantial sum, but not the $10,000 which is needed from us. A sufficient number of modest contributions would put an end to this literally hand-to-mouth existence, and it is hoped that this appeal may find generous response in many quarters of interest in upholding constructive Christian service.

The Treasurer is Mr. Stephen Baker, 40 Wall Street, New York. I would gladly furnish further information.

Admiral R. R. Belknap,
Chairman of American Committee.

Dr. Zabriskie's Article.
February 16, 1935.

Mr. Editor:

May I thank you most cordially, and the Rev. Dr. Zabriskie through you, for his inspiring article in today's Southern Churchman, entitled "The Practice of the Presence of God." A brief letter from me cannot near do it justice, but the busiest pastor or layman will save time by reading it.

Incidentally, I also thank you for publishing my letter, "Usury," in the same issue.

James L. Smiley.

Annapolis, Md.

Prayer for Those at Sea.
February 16, 1935.

Mr. Editor:

About a month ago the Southern Churchman had an article remarking that the Prayer Book was retaining clauses that related to bygone conditions. Doubtless. But it is not eighteen years since, at our church here, they prayed for my son "at sea." And my "amen" was most fervent. The sea was infested by enemy submarines. The prayer was correct and to the point. May be needed again!

Have been reading the Southern Churchman more than fifty years. Lately my "thinking" has been wandering, for lack of the "Thoughts." Now, I have found them again, at the back of the paper. And on the front I see Bishop Cook's portrait. His predecessor, Bishop Lee, preached an epochal sermon at the Convention of 1868 in New York. A sermon from which you could very profitably make quotations. Was there and heard it. The Convention objected to publishing it.

Frank L. Moore.

Chatham, N. J.

World Day of Prayer for Missions.

The first Friday in Lent, March 8, will be observed by women throughout the world as a day of prayer for missions, following an annual custom that dates from 1920.

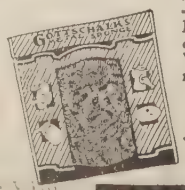
"Bear ye one another's burdens" is the theme for meditation and prayer. Baroness van Boetzelaer van Dubbeldam, Holland, developed the program, which is being translated into many languages.

The Day begins in New Zealand and the Fiji Islands, and as the Day progresses, new groups in city, town, countryside and hamlet, join in praise and prayer until in the course of some forty hours the Day ends in Hawaii with evening services for young people; all these groups praying that we may be one in our service for Jesus Christ—that barriers of race and class may be broken down—that we may truly learn to follow Him whose way is the way of life for all men—that we may be faithful witnesses of His life and His life-giving power—and that men may find the way by which individuals and nations can live together in peace and understanding.

CONTENTS

Letters to the Editor	2
Editorials	3
Church and World Problems As Others See Them	4
The Thousandfold Page—F. W. Neve	5
Church News of Virginia in the Eighteenth Century—Mary F. Goodwin	6
Changing Scenes—Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman, D. D.	7
Theophilus Attacks Metassen—Rev. Louis Tucker, D. D.	7
Friends of the Cathedral of St. John the Divine—Address by Bishop Manning	8
Anthem, "The Pilgrim Pavement"—By Mrs. William Ordway Partridge	9
Woman's Auxiliary	10
Book Reviews	11
Young People's Service League—Rev. R. F. Blackford	12
Church Intelligence	13
Family Department	18
Children's Department	20
Personals	22
Thoughts for the Thoughtful	24

Help Wanted in Institutions and Hospitals.



Male and Female. Inexperienced and Experienced. All kinds of positions practically everywhere. Write now, enclosing stamp.

Scharf Bureau, Dept. 2-15-88, 145 W. 45th Street, New York.

EASY TO RAISE MONEY for your Favorite Organization

40,000 organizations have raised much needed funds through the sale of Gottschalk's Metal Sponge. Our liberal co-operative plan will make it easy to obtain the money necessary to carry on your work.

Gottschalk's Metal Sponge is known to the housewife from coast to coast. It cleans and scours pots and pans twice as fast with half the effort. Keeps the hands dainty and white. This year, two new items will add materially to your profits —Kitchen Jewel and Hand-L-Mop. They sell on sight and repeat. Write for our liberal money-making plan.

METAL SPONGE SALES CORP.
John W. Gottschalk, Pres.
2726 N. Mascher St.,
Philadelphia, Pa.

The Little Fellow that does the BIG Job
GOTTSCHALK'S
THE ORIGINAL-SANITARY METAL SPONGE

Southern Churchman

SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN COMPANY,
Mayo Memorial Church House,
110 West Franklin Street,
Richmond, Va.

Officers.

President, RT. REV. H. ST. GEORGE TUCKER, D. D.
Vice-President, E. OTTO N. WILLIAMS.
Secretary-Treasurer, MR. JOHN H. COOKE.

Board of Directors.

RT. REV. H. ST. GEORGE TUCKER, D. D.
REV. CHURCHILL J. GIBSON, D. D.
REV. GEORGE P. MAYO, D. D.
REV. CHARLES W. SHEERIN.
MR. CARL H. NOLTING.
MR. ALEXANDER W. WEDDELL.
MR. E. RANDOLPH WILLIAMS.
MR. LANGBOURNE M. WILLIAMS, JR.
MISS SUSANNE C. WILLIAMS.

Voting Trustees.

RT. REV. ROBERT CARTER JETT, D. D.
RT. REV. H. ST. GEORGE TUCKER, D. D.
MR. JAMES M. BALL, JR.
MR. ROBERT B. TUNSTALL.
MR. LANGBOURNE M. WILLIAMS, JR.

Editors.

REV. CHARLES W. SHEERIN.....Editor
REV. F. W. NEVE, D. D.,
Associate Editor
MRS. CONRAD H. GOODWIN,
Associate Editor
REV. SAMUEL B. CHILTON,
Associate Editor
MRS. R. TATE IRVINE.....News Editor
JOHN H. COOKE..Secretary and Manager

Entered at the Post Office in Richmond, Va., as second-class mail matter.

SUBSCRIPTION PRICE.

$3.00 a year in advance. To the Clergy, $2.00. Six months, $1.50. Total subscriptions, three months, 50 cents; 10 cents a copy. Foreign postage, $1.00 additional.

For the convenience of subscribers subscriptions are continued at expiration unless otherwise ordered. Notice of renewal, discontinuance or change of address should be sent two weeks before the date they go into effect.

RECEIPT OF PAYMENT is shown in about two weeks by change of date on address label. If date is not properly extended after each payment, notify us promptly. No receipt for payment will be sent.

Notice post office address. The exact post office address to which we are directing the paper at the time of writing MUST ALWAYS BE GIVEN. Our mailing list is arranged by post office and not alphabetically.

Make all checks and money orders payable to the Southern Churchman, and not to an individual.

ADVERTISEMENTS.—Rates quoted on request. For classified see head of that department.

Representatives wanted in each Parish; liberal commissions.

News concerning the Church at large always welcome.

MURPHY'S HOTEL
RICHMOND VIRGINIA

An old Richmond landmark that has kept the pace. In the heart of that portion of the city most interesting to the traveler.

Write

A. GERALD BUSH, Manager.

SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN

Catholic for every truth of God; Protestant against every error of man.

EDITORIALS

Vol. 100. RICHMOND, VA., MARCH 2, 1935. No. 9.

Lent 1935.

The Church should be stirred this Lent with the realization that a worthwhile national movement is under way, and that as part of every parish and mission Lenten program comes the chance to share in the Forward Movement of the Church.

There is always a danger that people will become confused, and there is the danger of our people feeling that the Forward Movement is necessarily a movement to obtain more money. While unquestionably more money will result as an indirect result of the Forward Movement, it would be a mistake to allow our people to think this the chief aim. We know only too well that less money has been obtained because people have not had deep religious convictions or faith, but it is more important that such convictions be re-established than it is even for a budget to be balanced.

We hope that two dangers are being avoided in our plans for Lent. One danger is too great a multiplicity of services. The Lent that tries to have every day in an ordinary parish taken up with some novelty in the way of worship is apt to lose its value, because people become confused.

On the other hand, too great an indifference is equally a danger. There has been a tendency of late to suggest that Lent is, after all, just certain days in the early Spring, and no effort has been made to deepen or quicken the spiritual life of the people.

The Forward Movement, with its fine Lenten material, provides many thoughts for expressing novelty without making people feel that Lent is merely the religious bazaar. It calls us to a newer discipleship, and it gives a program for practical spiritual living. If we can only show people that the religious life is the practical life, we will have won half of our battle.

To those clergy who are to be visiting Lenten preachers, can we give a word of advice? We hope you won't make your sermon merely one that proved popular last Epiphany, for instance. You have the opportunity to bring a fresh voice and thought to a congregation that maybe thinks its own rector alone in an effort to deepen discipleship. You have an opportunity to show what Lent really can mean to others in another place and in another environment. Your visit is not to exploit you, but to add the authoritative voice needed to help the local parson in his work.

The Balanced Budget.

The announcement of the Presiding Bishop that the budget for 1935 was assured, came as a happy conclusion to the meeting of the National Council. It is well for us to remember two things in regard to this announcement.

First, we must remember that the budget is underwritten—not necessarily all subscribed for. Friends have been generous, but there is an eternal weakness inherited from the past by Episcopalians, that if we let things well enough alone, some wealthy men will come to the rescue and supply the money. This attitude is bad in two ways, for in the first place, if it is true, it is very bad for our own responsibility and growth, and, secondly, at the present time there are few men in any church rich enough to supply the demands of our work.

Lest we think that the present underwriting lets us out of any responsibility, we will do well to remind ourselves that the budget is only guaranteed in accordance with the pledges assumed by the various delegations at Atlantic City plus the additional guarantees just announced. So the Presiding Bishop's announcement should call for renewed efforts rather than relaxed.

The second thing which we should remind ourselves about in connection with this announcement is that, at best, this means the "emergency schedule" and not the budget. There will still be the suffering of reduced staffs in the mission fields at home and abroad and there still will be an opportunity for every diocese to respond to "The Challenge" issued by the General Convention at Atlantic City.

Whether we have actually learned the lesson of real partnership or not is a great question. There is too much of a tendency to look at someone else and compare our efforts with another's. Dioceses look at other dioceses and feel that they are doing well when viewed in comparison. Parishes do the same thing and individuals also. There is only one basis of real knowledge as to how well we are doing and that is whether in comparison to what we are doing for ourselves is our missionary giving something to be proud of or vice versa?

So while it is a happy thing that we can say that at least a good part of our work is assured for the coming year, we will do well to redouble our efforts in missionary education.

Church and World Problems as Others See Them

Italy Mobilizes for War With Abyssinia.

The Christian Century, February 20, 1935.

The trouble with dictators is this—they cost too much. They come to power usually because the form of government which they displace is held to be wasteful of the public energy and resources. But in the long run a dictatorship is likely to prove the most expensive kind of government on the market. The reason is obvious. A dictator must maintain a sense of national crisis in order to justify his dictatorship. Only the illusion of extraordinary necessity will keep the public in a state of mind content to see such vast power in the hands of one man or a little group of men. And crisis finally produces conflict—an expensive business. All of which is a somewhat abstract and roundabout way of approaching the discovery that Italy is in process of shipping huge reinforcements to Africa, where it is announced that she means to put an end to the troubles encountered by her outposts in dealing with Abyssinian attacks. Every line of the official announcement made in Rome on February 11, however, betrays the cynical nature of the imperialist adventure on which Mussolini has embarked. To call the mobilization of 250,000 troops "a purely defensive measure, intended only to strengthen our position along the border," is ridiculous. To say that this offensive is undertaken because of a skirmish in which five soldiers are alleged to have been killed, but which had been kept from all public knowledge for twelve days, until the first troopships were at sea, is to reveal the flimsy nature of the pretext. And to admit that the alleged clash took place "south" of Ualual—a spot on all maps, except those put out by Italy since December, a hundred miles inside the Abyssinian border—is as much as to admit that the Italian policy is simply that of picking a fight, to be followed by an easy conquest of a rich territory. What it all amounts to is Mussolini's need for a smashing victory somewhere to justify his regime. Since the price for such a victory in Europe is too high, he now seeks it at the expense of Ethiopia. But Italy, and perhaps all Europe, may find that the price even in Ethiopia is higher than is now foreseen.

Settling the Religious Problem for Children.

By Mary C. White.

The Churchman, February 15, 1935.

Thirty-six states in the Union require daily Bible reading in their public schools. How are the passages read and chosen? Is there an attempt to pick passages appropriate to the children's problems or to the national seasons or holidays about which the children are thinking? If passages are not chosen with thoughtful purposes what habits of thought will the children eventually develop toward the Bible?

To the Jewish child of the first century the Bible was his first text book. He knew it thoroughly, in spite of the fact that no part of it was written for children in the sense that books are written and published for them today. Nevertheless, he found in it something that caught his imagination and so have other children through the centuries.

I shall never forget the apathetic attitude of my young son sitting next to me in church one day, change into excitement when tthe minister said, "I am going to read to you about a beautiful friendship between David and Saul." Immediately the boy was alert and, fearing that I was as nearly asleep as he had been, he poked me and said, "You want to hear this. It's going to be good; it's about a friend of mine." And last year on Good Friday another son hurried me from home to get to the church service on time so that he would not miss hearing read the story of Abraham and Isaac. I must confess that I had never realized that it was read every Good Friday, but he had and did not propose to miss it.

A second approach in this search for religious conviction and culture that I would name, belongs to the field of worship materials, the hymns, the prayers, the rituals, the chorals; all those great mediums that have expressed through the ages the reachings out of man toward God. I should like my children to know many of these by heart as well as the stories of how they came to be written.

Recently I asked a girl of thirteen in my church school class to memorize Kipling's hymn, "Father in heaven who lovest all." I noticed she had a rather incredulous look on her face when I told her that she could find it in the hymnal. On questioning her, I found that she thought that I was joking. Kipling, the father of the Rickitickitavi story and originator of Mowgli and the elephants, writing for our hymnal! Impossible! On further questioning I found she thought that the hymnal had been written by a single person, sort of a "stodgy dried up man," she described him, who had sat down and had written the entire volume through from the first hymn to the last. We had failed that child, we her church school teachers. She had missed out on a great opportunity for fellowship, that feeling of marching along a part of an endless band of crusaders. Doctors, lawyers, soldiers, statesmen, members of the House of Parliament, authors, ministers, church school teachers, prisoners, these are the types of people that she would have met had she become acquainted with the our hymn writers.

Jesus must have known by heart much of the worship material of His day. Again and again passages were on His lips guiding Him at the crossroads. Even on that last day as He hung on the cross tortured in body and spirit, was it not the words of a hymn writer that those who were near Him heard Him repeating to Himself?

The Hauptmann Trial.

The Living Church, February 16, 1935.

What are we to think of an entire nation that centers its primary attention for over a month in a courtroom where a man, guilty or innocent, is fighting for his life, almost single-handed, against not only a prosecutor but a press and public determined to trap him at any cost? What are we to think of society women who go to this modern inquisition as to a social function, and wear at their necks reproductions of the kidnap ladder that has been the chief bit of material evidence? What are we to think of the Rotary Club of Flemington that conceives of its civic service in terms of supplying ushers for the crowds attending the trial? What are we to make of a sensation-hungry public, that demands every gruesome detail, immediately and fully, so that the courthouse must be converted into a maze of telephone and telegraph wires, in order to carry the picture of the trial to the farthest corners of the country as rapidly as possible? What of the newspapers that pander to this perverted taste, and fill their columns with yards and yards of drivel and worse, by highly paid sports writers, novelists, criminologists, astrologers and sob sisters of both sexe? What of the movies, taken and distributed in defiance of court order and common decency?

Can it be that the public interest is truly aroused by

(Continued on page 9.)

THE THOUSANDFOLD PAGE

ARCHDEACON FREDERICK W. NEVE, D D

Some Greater Aspects of Christanity

Part Three.

The search for Reality has been going on almost, if not quite, since the beginning of history. The philosophers have sought for it with the clear recognition of the facts that there must be something underlying the mere outward appearance of things, but they have never been able to reach it. In modern times, Natural Science has taken up the quest and has sought diligently to explore the universe on the one hand, and the atom on the other, hoping to understand them and their relation to man and human life. It would seem that the final result of this investigation is that, after all, Reality cannot be reached by the methods which natural science has devised to enable it to probe to the innermost secrets of Nature.

A Remarkable Testimony.

Professor Eddington, a leading authority in these matters, has this to say on this vitally important subject:—"Briefly the position is this: We have learnt that the exploration of the external world by the methods of physical science, leads not to a concrete reality, but to a shadow world of symbols, beneath which those methods are unadaptable for penetrating." Is there, then, no possibility of reaching that Reality for which this age-long search has been made, first by philosophy and in more modern times by Natural Science? Can we be content with mere symbols which simply bear witness to a hidden mystery which the ordinary means of knowledge are incapable of penetrating? Professor Eddington goes on to say this, however:—"Feeling that there must be more behind, we return to our starting point in human consciousness—the one center where more might become known." ("Science and the Unseen World," page 73.)

The Spiritual World the Real World.

We must turn, therefore, from the external world to the world within ourselves to find in human personality the true medium through which we can come into contact and communion with Reality. This is doubtless because human personality has a spiritual basis, and is related more nearly and more permanently to the spiritual world within, rather than to the physical world without. To the latter it belongs only temporarily, as a passing guest, whereas its real home and its abiding place for all eternity, is the spiritual world. If this be so, as we Christians believe, then the spiritual world is the only real world, as distinguished from the world of shadows, which Professor Eddington declares that Natural Science has discovered the physical world to be. It is because we belong more especially to the spiritual world that we share in its reality and we believe that, although that which is physical in our nature will pass away, our spiritual nature will persist and pass beyond death into a higher state of existence. We believe, too, as Christians, that we have the power and capacity to hold communion with The Supreme Reality, God Himself, and that He holds communion with us through the presence of His Spirit within our souls.

Our Responsibility as Witnesses to the Truth.

This belief and assurance on our part should lay upon us the obligation of proclaiming to the world the true and only pathway to Reality, through the Way appointed by God Himself, even through His Son, Jesus Christ, who Himself said:—"I am the way . . . no man cometh unto the Father but by me." There is another obligation which our position, as witnesses to this Truth lays upon us, that is, to take advantage of our privilege of access to God as our heavenly Father to seek for blessings for the enrichment of the world in which we live. The spiritual world must contain far greater and more wonderful treasures and of a far higher order than anything which nature can bestow upon us. St. Paul speaks of "the unsearchable riches of Christ," as being accessible to the Christians of his own day and, therefore, to ourselves. He also says in the eighth chapter of his Epistle to the Romans:—"He that spared not His own Son but delivered Him up for us all, how shall He not with Him also freely give us all things?"

Our Relation to the Divine Resources.

When St. Paul says that God having given His Son for our redemption will withhold nothing back from us which is really for our good, we have, as it were, the Divine resources placed at our disposal for the bringing in of the Kingdom of God on earth. We, as Christians, owe it to humanity to make the fullest use of this great and glorious opportunity. What Natural Science has done for the world through the development of the resources of nature, is as nothing compared to what Christianity can do for the world by developing to the fullest extent the resources of the spiritual world. There are certainly plenty of almost urgent invitations given by Christ Himself to make full use of all the resources which His coming into the world and His death upon the Cross have made accessible to us. For example, what could be more full of assurance than this:—"Verily, verily, I say unto you, whatsoever ye shall ask the Father in my Name, He will give it you. Hitherto have ye asked nothing in my Name, Ask and ye shall receive, that your joy may be full."

Faith in Nature Versus Faith in Christ.

The mighty works which are being done in the world today are being done not by Christian believers, but by the men of science, and it is because they have more faith in Nature than we Christians have in Christ and His Words of power. If Christianity is to be raised from its present prostrate position to the leadership of the world, it can only be brought about by its manifesting that it is in a position to bring forth from the spiritual world more power to bless mankind than can be brought to pass by any other agency.

Church News of Virginia in the Eighteenth Century

Mary F. Goodwin.

We would feel quite dismayed if the historian of the future judged the Church and its works today from our daily newspapers. But in lieu of other sources, we may get something of a picture of the Church life in colonial times from the Virginia Gazettes of the eighteenth century, when restraint, rather than sensation, was the mark of a well-conducted paper.

The Life of the Church in Virginia during the colonial period, which is often represented as barren, was filled with activities comparable in a small way to those which occupy us today. It is a mistake to think the Church then had no live interest for her people. It had an intimate place in their lives. The great patriotic festivals were celebrated here. How astonished we would be if the walls of our quiet country colonial churches could echo again the services which have taken place in them in the past—the Commination ritual, thundering out curses against the enemies of the State. We study about the "Thirty Years War," "The War of Austrian Succession," and so on, in school, but we forget that these were our wars, as they were Englands, and in our own churches prayers were offered for the success of the royal arms, and the confusion of the enemy. For many years the memorial service on the anniversary of the Martyrdom of King Charles was held; prayers of thanks for the restoration of the royal family were offered, and then the petitioners to the Throne of Grace busied themselves to limit the power of the throne of the Stuarts. The death of a sovereign in the far-off motherland called for a service of mourning and sorrow. Its gloom was dispersed, often on the same day, by the gorgeous pageantry of the celebration of accession of another ruler. Later, as the clouds of war gathered, the statesmen were called together for services of "Prayer and Fasting." Such services were frequently held in Bruton Church during the troubled days preceding the Revolution.

But it is of less stately things we would write; the more intimate happenings which we find chronicled in the Gazettes.

Three times churches were advertised as having been robbed.

"June, 1746. Stolen out of the Angelica Chappel, Nottoway Parish, Isle of Wight County, the Communion and Pulpit Cloths. They were made plain, of very fine purple in Grain Broad Cloth."

"May, 1752. Stolen out of Ware Church, Gloucester Co., last week, the Communion Table and Pulpit Cloths of Crimson velvet double laced with gold; also the surplice and Gown."

The church in York County suffered a similar disaster in 1770.

"The church in Charles Parish, York Co., was broken into and robbed of a damask Communion table cloth and napkin, a surplice and silver cup marked C+P holding about three pints."

The obituaries of ministers range from a most fulsome eulogy to a bare notice of his passing, which leaves one wondering as to his popularity. In 1738, the Rev. John Skaife died. "He was a gentleman of affable and courteous Behavior, and was well beloved by his parishioners, among whom he exercised his sacred functions nearly 30 years with general approbation."

The Rev. William Robinson, Rector of Stratton-Major Parish, was "a gentleman much esteemed by all who knew him."

In 1754, there was established, at the instance of the Rev. Thomas Dawson, Commissary of the Colony, the Widows and Orphans Fund, the only organization which survived the adjustment period after the revolutionary war, and which functioned in Virginia until it was absorbed in the work of the Pension System in 1917. In making an appeal for this cause, at the opening of the Annual Convention, Mr. Dawson said, "Give me leave to recall to your most serious consideration the cause, the mournful cause, of the Widows and children of our deceased Brethren. Consider, I beseech you, the lamentations and bitter woe of a widow and numerous offspring weeping over the remains of an indulgent Husband and tender parent, destitute of that maintenance which was acquired by the sweat of his studies, or accrued to them by the rights of his profession." The results of this appeal was an annual sermon preached in the church at Williamsburg, at which time a collection was taken. The contributions were acknowledged yearly, and amounted to a tidy little sum.

Ministers were wont to take advantage of special occasions to preach on "timely" subjects. In 1771, "on the occasion of Mr. Thomas Nelson and his bride first attending service at the Church at Stratton-Major after their wedding, the Rev. Mr. Dunlap preached on Jacob and Rachel in his usual animated manner, and the subject was handled in a new and striking manner." In 1772, "The Rev. Mr. Oglivie preached the funeral sermon on the occasion of the drowning of a boy, from the text, 'It is the Lord,' a discourse very well adapted to the melancholy occasion, and much approved by the hearers."

Stratton-Major fell on evil times, and had to sell her organ. "For sale: A church organ, which for elegance and sweetness of tone is inferior to none on the Continent. Cased in Mahogany, pipes gilt and the Imagery which adorns it striking and as large as life."

Perhaps it was the success of the Widows and Orphans Fund which turned the eyes of "appealers" to Virginia, and the precedent has never been broken. In 1766, and again in 1768, the Governor asked the Church people for funds for the sufferers in Montreal where disastrous fires had twice almost wiped out that little city. The response was liberal, and the governor later thanked the donors for their generosity. Dr. Witherspoon, the president of Princeton, then Nassau College, visited Williamsburg in 1769, and spoke in behalf of "the College of Nassau at Princeton" in the Capitol yard, there being no house in town large enough to accommodate the crowd. "Upwards of sixty pounds was raised for such a benevolent purpose."

Whitfield, the friend of Wesley, preached twice in Bruton Church, and other visiting divines were heard there. But later, when the feeling between the Established Church and others became more acute, these itinerants preached out of doors. In Norfolk, in 1772, "All the ladies and nearly every order of people here are become proselytes to Methodism:—I dare say there were nearly 3,000 people to hear Mr. Pilmore on Sunday in the fields. They flock to him from every quarter and invite him to preach in every neighborhood."

And so we see from the daily press of the eighteenth century, that the Church played an important part in the life of the people. While much of it seems crude to us today, it is the same Church.

It came to us, and goes to future generations, through its personal appeal to individuals.

Changing Scenes

Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman, D. D., LL. D., D. C. L., Bishop of Washington.

Life is kaleidoscopic, it is ever changing. We are so constituted that we normally seek for variety. Without it life grows stale and uninteresting. From youth to age Micawber-like we are seeking for new things to turn up. In its truer sense life itself is an adventure. It is a perpetual becoming. The constantly recurring changes leave their marks upon us and our lives eventually become records of the transitions and crises through which we have passed.

In reading the story of the lives of the good and the great we can readily mark the outstanding events that have molded and shaped their characters and given them their peculiar distinction. The brief annal that contains the story of the life of Jesus discloses the readiness with which He accepted the changing experiences in His brief life. He might have lived in the quiet of the hill-town of Nazareth and from it made those great statements that have given Him the foremost place among the world's great teachers. There was no evidence of restlessness in His career, but a marked desire to spread His message in the cities, towns and villages which He visited from time to time.

On one occasion, at the conclusion of a memorable utterance, where He was left alone with His disciples, as the evening approached, "He saith unto them, let us pass over unto the other side." Taking a small boat He ventured forth upon a quiet lake, but suddenly, "There arose a great storm, and the wind and the waves beat into the ship." Confused and frightened, the disciples found Him "in the hinder part of the ship asleep on the pillow." Amazed at His unconcern, they awoke Him, saying unto Him: "Master, carest Thou not that we perish?" Unperturbed, we read that, "He arose, and rebuked the wind and said unto the sea, Peace be still, and the wind ceased and there was a great calm.

It is clearly evident from the record that the purpose in taking these disciples out upon the lake to cross over unto the other side was designed to give them a fresh demonstration, not only of His power, but of their security while in His company. It was doubtless one of the great experiences of their lives, and served to give them a finer demonstration of His prevailing power and care for them. It was an evidence of His deep and affectionate concern for the well-being of those who appealed to His consistent care and protection.

As we enter a year with its unknown and untried pathways, as we face what may be fulfilled hopes or bitter disappointments, it is a source of sustaining comfort to feel that we may venture forth in the assurance that His companionship and friendship will not fail us in the crises of life; that, come what may, we have His Promise that He will never leave us nor forsake us. Our expressed beliefs may be crude and simple, but it is characteristic of most of us to hold that we are kept by the power of God.

It is with this belief that we venture forth upon the new experiences that lie ahead, trusting and hoping that, come what may, we shall be sustained and strengthened for every test that may be laid upon us. Such a belief will enable us to meet trials and bitter disappointments, and to face them with stout hearts and obedient wills.

Thus we venture forth to the other side, with hopeful expectations and supreme confidence in His keeping power. Greater than self-reliance is God-reliance. There is something fine and reassuring in that ancient promise: "I, the Lord thy God, will hold thy right hand, saying unto thee, 'fear not, I will help thee'."

"Theophilus Attacks Matassen"

By the Rev. Louis Tucker, D. D.

The title is from a rather dull Church History and it is quoted here because neither you nor I know who Theophilus was, nor who nor where was Metassen. Yet Theophilus, in his own day, was much more important than we are now for he got himself mentioned in history, which neither you nor I are likely to achieve; and his will and his passions were probably stronger than ours, for we have no uncontrollable wish to attack anybody. Even Metassen was probably more alive than we are now, if fright or fury make for intensity of living. The whole thing was once utterly, tensely, glowingly important; and now we know nothing at all about it except the names. We could, of course, find out more, for libraries abound and books of reference are large and many; but the interesting thing in the incident is that it is not now important enough for us to look it up. It shook the world once, at least enough to shake its way into a history; and now it is forgotten. Metassen was a person or a place; but Theophilus was certainly a person of like passions with ourselves, and abler. Now, stripped to the bare bones of utter ignorance, the one important question about him is, Did he act honestly, kindly and bravely? You and I do not care which won, Metassen or Theophilus. We do not care what was the cause of the attack, except that, from our knowledge of mankind, we judge that, whatever it was, it was probably inadequate. The only shadow of interest in the whole matter, for us, is the manner of it. Was Theophilus wise, just and kindly, or was he cruel, fault-finding and self-satisfied? Impartial Death measures with equal tread the graves of simple peasants and great kings and gives to each six feet of good, green earth and all eternity; and all of interest, now, even to themselves, about their lives here is, were they kind and penitent or hard and cruel?

Stripped to the bare bones of a perfect knowledge, is not that all that God cares about any of us? If the immense blue dome of Earth's vast sky turned to a funeral bell and tolled for anyone of us, what more could it toll now than, "Cruel, Impenitent," or "Merciful, Repentant?" It is not necessary we succeed in what we undertake. You and I do not care whether Theophilus succeeded. It is not necessary we be wise. You and I think it rather probable Theophilus was foolish. Most attacks are. If he were kind and humble in his heart or if he were harsh, stubborn, proud, impenitent—concerning that we care and nothing else. What more, among the monumental years that from the drifting dust of centuries rear their forgotten glories, could catch, or needs to catch, our glance than that?

So, too, concerning us and this keen life which races in our veins and flashes round us and seems to us so utterly important—the matter of it is of small concern, the manner is the only thing that matters. This is good news; for we cannot control the matter of our lives; at least, not fully. Riches and poverty, sickness and health, even happiness and unhappiness, are largely

(Continued on page 9.)

The Friends of the Cathedral of St. John the Divine

Address of Bishop Manning at Inaugurating Services

This service, in which we are taking part, is one of great importance in the history and progress of the Cathedral, for we are inaugurating a Society to be known as "The Friends of the Cathedral of St. John the Divine," and we are gathered here to ask God's blessing upon this undertaking.

This Society, which we are now forming, and in which many of you have already enrolled yourselves, has three principal purposes.

First, its purpose is to enlist and enroll a great company of men, women and children who see the splendid vision of this Cathedral and realize what its erection means to the cause of Religion in our city and country, and who will thus feel that they are in personal relation with the Cathedral and have a direct share in its influence and work.

The Sanctuary.

Every one who is on the roll of this Society will have the right to feel this no matter where he may live, no matter what may be his other religious interests, and though, perhaps, he may only occasionally be able to come here.

Second. The influence of this Cathedral as a Witness for Religion is already felt throughout our country and in other lands and the purpose of this Society is to make known still more widely and generally all that this great Cathedral represents, its aims and ideals, its missionary power as a witness for Christ and His Gospel, its spiritual influence on the multitudes who visit it from far and near, its appeal to people of all kinds and of all religious views as shown by the records week by week in its Visitors' Book, and the influence of its magnificent architecture from the standpoint of culture, of art and education, as well as of religion.

You, who are enrolled in this Society, are asked to bear your part in making known the message and the mighty influence of this Cathedral and in showing the vision of it to others. And to stimulate and keep strong your own interest you will receive its literature and its reports of progress, and you will be invited each year on an appointed day to join in a special pilgrimage to the Cathedral to see and hear what has been accomplished, and to join in prayer for God's blessing upon our further efforts.

Third, the formation of this Society will give opportunity to all by an annual gift of any amount, large or small, to have a personal share in all that the Cathedral stands for, and the funds thus received will, we hope, be a great help in the carrying on of the work. The use of the funds thus received is not restricted, but they are needed at this time for the maintenance of the work of the Cathedral and of the dignity and beauty of its worship.

As you know, there is no debt on this great building, for which we are deeply thankful, but our endowment funds, which we were most careful to provide for maintenance, have suffered, as all endowment funds have in this financial depression. The money that we spent we have in these granite walls which will stand forever, the money that we saved we have lost in part, through depreciation of the investments, which is a striking reminder of the uncertainty of all treasure laid up on earth. And so we need funds for maintenance.

Our great Nave, one of the noblest in any Cathedral in the world, stands now complete, but it cannot be opened for use until our funds for maintenance are considerably increased. The gifts received from this Society will be applied towards this. Membership in "The Friends of the Cathedral" does not depend upon the amount contributed. The smallest annual gift entitles one to membership in the Society, but at the same time we must hope for large and generous gifts from those able to make such gifts, if our funds are to be sufficiently increased to enable us to open our glorious Nave, which now stands ready and waiting to be brought into use.

You, who are enrolled as Friends, will, I know, feel it a privilege to stand in this relation to the Cathedral, for it is an undertaking in which we may all feel a deep satisfaction and a just pride. You and I did not inaugurate this vast enterprise. More than sixty years ago this Cathedral project was initiated.

We are carrying out the vision of those who went before us. It is our privilege to build on their foundations and to have part in the erection of the greatest House of Prayer and Worship in our land, and the greatest of all the Gothic Cathedrals in the world.

This is the undertaking of which you are the enrolled and enlisted Friends. I ask you to give it your strong support and to invite others, all with whom you have influence, to join with us and so make this Society of the Friends of the Cathedral a great power in the maintenance and carrying forward of this noble undertaking in the name of God and of Religion.

The Nave.

Anthem, "The Pilgrim Pavement."

Can you hear adown the future,
Echoes of a moving throng
Treading down the Pilgrim Pavement
In procession, millions strong?
Can you see their rapt expression,
Do you hear the choral beat
Of their pilgrim song and psalter,
Can you mark their sandalled feet
Slow advancing to the altar,
Toward the candles tall and white;
Toward the focal point of worship,
Where the Pavement leads to Light.
Restless feet, returning weary
From dim avenues of care,
From a vast dissatisfaction,
To the vaster aisles of prayer.
Entering with steps that falter
Or that forward surge apace,
Seeking, finding, strength and solace
Where the Pavement leads to Grace.

Pilgrim Pavement, you are winding
Through the dusty hills of Time,
With the flow of a great river
Curving in majestic rhyme,
In a long continuation
Of a pathway lone and far,
Ages since, gold-paved and fashioned
By the bright Judaean star.
Through dark ages unbelieving,
Through embattled years of war,
You have borne your pilgrims onward
Where the holy Mysteries are.
Here have men beheld the vision,
Touched the seamless robe of Him,
Heard, with ears unsealed, the singing
Of the plumed seraphim.

On your stones have saints and sinners,
Kings and paupers travelling met,
Only here may men as brothers,
Rank and age and race forget.
Kneeling in united worship,
Here, at last, the great assent,
Here the full, the one solution,
Of the world's entanglement.
Pilgrim Pavement, you are stretching
Not across these stones alone,
But where'er there stands an altar
Where Christ waiteth for His own.

O presence ever waiting!
O Rose of Sharon there!
Shedding your balm forever
On human grief and care.
O mystical renewal
Of forces lost and spent,
O touch of Love supernal,
All-healing Sacrament.
O changing wheaten wafer
That veils the changeless One!
O chalice of the Living Grape
Still lay Thy Grace upon
The lips that here will see Thee
Through ages yet to be
The Pilgrims who since Bethlehem
In faith have searched for Thee.

This hymn, "The Pilgrim Pavement," was specially written by Mrs. William Ordway Partridge for the dedication of the Pavement in the Nave of the Cathedral on Sunday, March 11, 1934. It has been set to music by Dr. R. Vaughn Williams and appropriately is sung for the first time in this Cathedral to which it is dedicated.

* * *

THEOPHILUS ATTACKS METASSEN.

(Continued from page 7.)

beyond our own power. We plan one thing and we achieve another. But the whole manner of our earthly lives is all our own to do with as we will. We can be penitent, kind, admit mistakes, and try to do things better; or we can be proud, hard, self-confident and reckless of most others. We think mistakenly the second brings success in worldly things; but even if it did it would be worthless, for success does not matter. When the Recording Angel writes our deeds, summarized to a sentence, he will say, in a language harsh as our own, "He was unkind and died impenitent," or else, in some celestial dialect past our deciphering, "Merciful always and, for his mistakes, humbly repentant!"

* * *

CHURCH AND WORLD PROBLEMS.

(Continued from page 4.)

a desire to see justice done? If so, 'twere laudable indeed. But the evidence does not support that finding. The public is interested in the Hauptmann trial, not because of a desire that justice be done, but because it is a spectacle that appeals to the innate morbidity of all of us. The appeal is of the same calibre as that which, until a hundred years ago, made the public execution a gala event. Nowadays, we have grown softer and more squeamish. We don't like the sight of blood, so our spectacle is the trial and not the execution, though the yellow press follows the convicted criminal to his death agonies and reports them in detail whenever it can.

THE WOMAN'S AUXILIARY

More or Less Permanent Preparation for National Defense?

The answer lies within the enlisted personnel. Suppose we were preparing for war, do you think that we would consider a few weeks sufficient time in which to recruit and supply for service the fairly well-disciplined reserves of the Army and Navy and Marine Corps? Yet, that is just what we try to do as Christian people in our war against the world, the flesh and the devil.

This is the pre-Lenten Season—only a few days left for preparation before the great siege is on. Who will be the victor and why?

At this time of the year, when we have somewhat recovered from the January bills and the orgy we have made of Christmas, we have usually planned to attend the Conference on National Defense. This Conference is called anually by patriotic societies and held in the Nation's Capital, for the particular purpose of spreading information in regard to the status of our National Defense, or lack of the same! We go home filled with statistics, which generally get so mixed up en route that the prominent speakers would hardly recognize their brain children, and we wonder what can be done about it all. It seems so necessary and yet so hopeless to keep on in the same old way—taxing, building, destroying—for years on end! Is it any wonder that the Communist says to us, "You have had 1900 years to establish a Christian Civilization—what have you done about it?"

It occurs to me at the moment, out of the clear blue sky of hope and trust, that we Christian people can do something about everything, if we so prepare ourselves that we are fit for the fray, and our ears attuned to the Bugler's call.

Let us use this next week in prayerful preparation for Lent, so that, during that quiet penitential season, our natural resources may so develop through constant service under our spiritual Christian leaders that we may be found acceptable recruits for the Army of God. Our training camp may best be held right in our own hearts and homes, the regulation equipment is ours for the asking.

We are great people for saying what we would do if we had the chance. Remember this, in this pre-Lenten season—we have the big chance that so many millions have not had and what will we do with it this eventful year?

Let us give our leaders and our loyalties a "new deal" and use this sacred season to put to rout the pitiful passions that destroy us, and resolve to spend the forty days of Lent in building up our defenses in the image of God, that they may be found to be permanent in structure and international in scope. These are gilt-edge securities that do not tarnish by daily use, and the value of which does not diminish in times of depression.

Japan is our subject for study during Lent—so is it the subject for Press War scares. Each of us has a responsibility on this subject. If you cannot attend an interesting study class, take the initiative and form a reading circle and meet once a week and discuss and exchange your books over a cup of tea, and be prepared to accept your own responsibility regarding Japan and Orientals in America! Shall it be War or Peace? The answer lies with you.

The Garden Club of America goes to Japan this summer. What a wonderful message of understanding they could take, if those delegates who are Episcopalians, would use their opportunity to study Japan from a Christian standpoint during this Lenten season! Do we not owe Japan something permanently good in exchange for the pleasure they will so gladly give us? If we could put into their hearts a recognition of the desire we women feel for Peace and Good-will among men, we would have fertilized the soil for a larger and deeper planting and an abundant harvest of those perennials worthy of permanent cultivation.

If we would have a triumphant Easter, let us sincerely endeavor to become prepared to promote those things that may be of permanent value to our nation and to the world.

The Church is calling on her reserves—the zero hour is now. No one else can answer to our name when the roll call is sounded. Therefore, let us be ready to sing out with gusto a cheery, "Here am I, Lord; use me!"

E. F. B. B.

Detroit, Michigan.: Parish Educational Secretaries of the Diocesan Woman's Auxiliary in the Metropolitan Detroit area met with Mrs. Wm. L. Torrance, newly-elected Educational Secretary of the Auxiliary, in St. Paul's Cathedral, February 26, for an Educational Institute.

The Institute opened at 11 A. M., with an address on "Ways and Methods of Conducting Study Groups," by Mrs. Torrance. A discussion followed the address. Luncheon was served, following which the Ven. Leonard P. Hagger, Archdeacon of the Diocese, talked on "Impressions of Modern Japan."

From two until three, there followed a presentation of the study books, "Japan" and "Orientals in America," by Mrs. F. W. Baeslack, and various phases of the Bible by Mrs. Otey R. Berkeley. At three a dramatization, "Japan," was presented under the direction of Mrs. Armond Cassil.

Harrisburg, Pa.: The Devotional Committee of the Woman's Auxiliary of the Diocese of Harrisburg, Mrs. Wyatt Brown, chairman, is undertaking a pre-Lenten campaign to arouse renewed interest and stimulate church attendance throughout the diocese. One feature of the campaign involves cooperation with the Forward Movement, especially the distribution of the Lenten pamphlet, "Discipleship."

A Junior Branch of the Woman's Auxiliary has been organized in the Diocese of Harrisburg. Eighty representatives from parishes in the diocese attended a meeting of St. Stephen's Cathedral, Harrisburg. Mrs. Harry Fitch, Milheim, Pa., a communicant of St. John's, Bellefonte, was elected chairman of the Junior Branch. Miss Sallie Dean, provincial director of Junior Women's Work, and provincial representative on the National Executive Board; Mrs. Wyatt Brown; Mrs. William Rote, Lancaster, Diocesan Director of the Church Periodical Club; Mrs. James Spotts, Lancaster; and Mrs. Lesley McCreath, President of the Cathedral Chapter of the Woman's Auxiliary, addressed the meeting.

Records.

Province of Washington: One diocese in the Province reports that there is a branch of the Woman's Auxiliary in every parish. Are there others with this record?

How many parish branches in your diocese report a blue box in the hands of every woman?

How many parish branches in your diocese report every woman an active member of the Woman's Auxiliary?

Can some one report a parish where each family reads a Church paper?

BOOK REVIEWS

REV. STAMO S. SPATHEY, Editor.

THE HARMONY OF THE EONS: By Eugene Charles Callaway. Cloth. Pp. 370. Published by the author, Box 1875, Atlanta, Georgia. Price, $1.

Thoughtful people, Christian and otherwise, are beginning to realize that the Christianizing of the world is beyond the power of the Christian Church. The greatest missionary century closed in 1900, with four hundred millions more heathen than at its beginning, to say nothing of the pagans in so-called Christian lands.

Has not the Church erred in its calculations? Does the Word of God assure us of the result thus sought? Let us be teachable and reasonable as to this question. Mr. Callaway designs to illumine our minds. He shows just what our Lord and the Apostles regarded as the meaning of this "age" (dispensation). The divine filing cabinet (so to speak) needs looking over and our author seeks to assist us to this end.

Why did our Lord Jesus in the synagogue in Nazareth close His reading of Isaiah 61:1-3, with the words, "To preach the acceptable year of the Lord," and add, "This day is this Scripture fulfilled in your ears?" Because He was dwelling upon the dispensation He was then to inaugurate. "The day of vengeance of our God", which follows in the prophecy, had not, and has not, yet arrived.

He dared to predict fearful times ere the close, not of the world, but of the eon in which we live. "Men's hearts failing them for fear and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth" (Luke 21:25-29, 34-36). Was a converted world in His vision as He pathetically questioned, "When the Son of Man cometh, shall He find the Faith" (Luke 18:8)? The Apostolic testimony agrees with this perspective. See 1 Tim. 4:1; 2 Tim. 3:1-5; 2 Peter 3:3-9. The entire book of the Revelation accords with this outlook. This is not because our Lord is not able. But because He had not intended the Church should accomplish what the Church has thought was to be its work. The universal reign of righteousness is not within the province of the Church to bring to pass, save as it reaches and brings to its Lord the souls it has the authority to enlighten. It should and must stand for righteous living and Christ-like character, of course.

A confirmatory and satisfactory Scriptural revelation as to Mr. Callaway's contention lies in the decision of James, the brother of our Lord, who presided at the Council of Jerusalem. In the light of concurrent predictions, the plan of God during the present age is to take out of the Gentiles a people for His name; and then to rebuild "the tabernacle of David, which is fallen down" (Acts 15:12-18). Observe that the Nunc Dimittis of Simeon (Luke 2:32) declares our Lord to be "a light to lighten the Gentiles and to be glory of Thy people Israel." Our Lord mentions the times of the Gentiles as having a close (Luke 21:24). St. Paul writes of the completion of the era of the Gentiles (Romans 11:25). Let every devout and contemplative student of God's Word read with sympathy the entire eleventh of Romans and discern the perspective of what, when the "fullness of the Gentiles be come in," God intends to do. There is coming, must come, a dispensation when His own race will see Him and acknowledge His sovereignty. Compare Matt. 23:37-39 with Zech. 12:10 and then pass on to the exultant paen of Isaiah 25:9.

We have before our eyes the portraiture of this very dispensation which will follow that in which we are living. What is the meaning of the Russian and German persecution which has driven thousands of Jews to the land of Abraham? Consider that until 1835, but three hundred Jews were permitted to live within the confines of Jerusalem. Now in the holy city and its environs close to one hundred thousand dwell. Was it a mere fickle wind of the goddess Chance that England, always friendly to the ancient race, should have been chosen by the League of Nations to hold the mandate of Palestine? How comes it that the soil, but recently pronounced arid and waste, sterile and impossible, is now producing citrous fruits of superlative grade; and grapes as well, luscious and abounding? Even the Dead Sea promises to be a health resort; while its bosom is said to embrace fabulous wealth. Why should Palestine be the only land where there is no unemployment? If we have no answer, God has.

Because the Church, in the fourth century departed from the dictum of the Fathers, "Distinguish the periods and the Scriptures will harmonize," confusion has resulted; and we have become accustomed to receiving what God did not deliver. We use the term "General resurrection" in a jumbled sense. There is a general resurrection mentioned in Revelation 20:11-13, where "the rest of the dead" who had no part in the first resurrection stand before God for judgment. And they are judged according to their works. This is not a place for exegesis of this passage. Its mention suggests, however, the recognition of other clearly stated premises of that first resurrection, to which a select class, according to our Lord, are able to attain (Luke 14: 14; 20:35). Tregelles, the acknowledge authority in the last century, speaks of Daniel 12:2, as "It is clearly not a general resurrection. It is 'many from among'." This accords with St. Paul's soulful striving for a part in the "out-resurrection from among the dead" (Greek of Phil. 3:10, 11). Our Lord certainly meant this in John 5:25-29. The hour that then was, witnessed the raisings of the three, but they were not resurrections. Lazarus, the maid, and the son of the widow, were again subject to death. If in verse 27, He could claim that the Father gave Him authority to execute judgment, then undoubtedly, He is the One who sits upon the great white throne of Revelation 20:11. This judgment speaks not of grace; it is according to human works. Hence, they that have done good, or they that done evil are embraced. And also, the presence of the Book of Life, indicates that there may be those who shall stand the keen scrutiny of that assize.

So that, as there are two stated resurrections, there is not one general judgment. The saints who have stood the fire of purification in the refinement of their life here, will be manifested at the bema of Jesus Christ, after the translation of the saints recorded in 1 Thess. 4:13-18. See 2 Cor. 5:1-10, also. This tribunal, if not for sin; but rewards for service.

There is a judgment of the living nations and on the earth when our Lord comes in His glory to sit upon His throne. Any Greek scholar will attest to the use of the word ethnos in Matt. 25:31. And there is, as we have already noted, the judgment of the great white throne. So that, the inquiring student will find three judgments indicated in the Word of God.

I have gone to this length, transgressing the limits of my review space, to whet your appetite for Mr. Callaway's masterly presentation of this challenging truth. There may be those who are indolent; or indifferent in this pursuit; but great is the pity that any should shrink from acquiring the secret of God (Ps. 25:14).

Here is a book, packed with substantial textual material, drawn with skill for us from the Word of God, correlating the different dispensations in a harmonized whole of purpose, and with a winsome appeal. Every page gleams with light and inspiration. It is a library of choice information, for the unbelievable price of one dollar (370 pages), because the author is sacrificing his own financial interests in his zeal to put over to you what he believes to be "the truth as the truth is in Jesus." Though you will not agree, possibly, with all of his conclusions, you will be the richer in spiritual wealth for following him. And you will thank him.

Kenneth Mackenzie.

GIFT AND REWARD BIBLES, Containing Forty-seven Exquisite Pictures: By E. S. Hardy. Published by Collins' Clear-Type Press, 15 East Twenty-sixth St., New York.

Helps to Bible Study: The helps, covering the general needs of the student, add much to the value of this Bible. Maps are in color and all numerals are in plain Arabic. Names of Books and chapter numbers are printed in bold type at outside page corners, thus making the findings of any passage quick and easy.

S1991 HC. Genuine leather, flexible overlapping covers, red under gold edges, gold titles, headbands and ribbon marker. $2.75. S1989HC. Soft fine grain Persianette, overlapping covers, red under gold edges, gold titles, headbands and ribbon marker. $2. S1901HC. Soft fine grain Persianette, limp covers, not overlapping, round corners, gold edges, gold titles, headbands and ribbon marker. $1.75. S1900½HC. Blue cloth, blue edges, gold titles, pictorial jacket, headbands and marker, containing only 16 illustrations, $1.25. Size, seven and one-quarter by four and one-half by one and one-eighth inches.

Most convenient size to carry to your Bible Class. Also not too large to include in your travelling case. General appearance pleasing.

R. N. I.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S FELLOWSHIP SERVICE LEAGUE

The Reverend Randolph F. Blackford

WHY THE CHURCH KEEPS LENT.
A Y. P. S. L. Program.

Leader: Members of other Churches often wonder why we keep Lent. They also wonder why we do not have "Revivals" as they do, or at least as often as they. The answer to both questions is the same. It is that each year we have a season of spiritual awakening at a set time. This season we call "Lent." It is the forty days before Easter. In our program this evening we have four short scenes. For the first of these we are to picture ourselves in Ephesus in the year 93, or sixty years after the Crucifixion. There are three characters as follows:

1. St. John the Apostle; 2. Bishop Polycarp of Ephesus, of him tradition says that he was the child whom Jesus set in the midst of the Apostles. 3. Irenaeus, a small boy of whom many things are told in later life. All are seated in the home of St. John. They have been talking when Irenaeus interrupts.

Scene I, in Ephesus. Time, 93 A. D.

St. John: So Jesus on the seashore Himself cooked us fish so that when we came in from our fishing we could eat and be filled.

Irenaeus: That is a wonderful story, Apostle John. It reminds me that next Saturday a group of us boys of the Church wish to have a picnic on the seashore. They have asked me to ask if it may be possible for you, Apostle John, and you, Bishop Polycarp, to come out and tell us of Jesus on the seashore.

Bishop Polycarp: But Irenaeus, you can not have a picnic on the Saturday before Easter.

Irenaeus: Why can't we have a picnic then? Surely Easter is a feast day.

Polycarp: Perhaps you will remember it better if the Apostle John himself tells you what happened then to the dear Christ, the feel of whose hands on my head, and of whose arms about my body, I sometimes fancy I still feel, though it was more than sixty years since I felt them.

St. John: It was just sixty years ago next Thursday that Jesus celebrated the Passover with us, His Twelve Disciples. After supper He took bread and brake it, and said: "Take eat, This is my body which is broken for you." We wondered what He meant by it. But that night we began to understand, when He was arrested and taken before the High Priest. There we saw them scourge Him until the cruel thongs bit deep into His flesh, until it was broken and the blood flowed out. Later they took Him before Pilate and Pilate caused Him to be scourged again. Then the crown of thorns broke the flesh of His forehead, and the nails pierced his hands and feet. Then the spear broke His side. At three o'clock in the afternoon He died upon the cross. So every year on the day after the Passover, we, who followed the Master, have grieved and fasted for the forty hours when Jesus was dead, until He rose again on Easter morning. So I beg that you and your comrades will not make a feast of the time our Saviour lay in the tomb, but will put off your party until after Easter, when we celebrate His Resurrection.

Irenaeus: Surely, Apostle, we will put it off. We just had not thought what a day it was.

Exeunt.

Leader: A few years after this, Polycarp sent Pothinus to France to become the first Bishop in that country. When he died Irenaeus became Bishop in his place. In our next scene we see Bishop Irenaeus as a very old man, the chief Bishop of the French. He is visiting in Alexandria in Egypt. His hosts are the family of a boy named Origen. Origen's father had recently become a martyr. Origen himself was later to become a great Church leader.

The Mother of the boy makes the third person in this scene.

Exeunt.

Scene II, in Alexandria. Time 195 A. D.

Mother: Origen, you have often been told the story of how Jesus set a little child in the midst of the Disciples and said: "Except ye become as a little child ye shall not enter the Kingdom of Heaven." Bishop Irenaeus was just telling me that when he was a little boy he knew that same child. For he grew up to be Bishop Polycarp of Smyrna. He also knew and talked with the Apostle St. John.

Origen: That was wonderful. Bishop Irenaeus, I wonder if you could tell me something about St. John and Bishop Polycarp

Irenaeus: Certainly, when I was a little boy, I once wanted to go on a picnic on Saturday of Holy Week. But St. John told Bishop Polycarp and me how in Ephesus we always kept the forty hours from 3 P. M. to 7 A. M., that Jesus lay in the tomb, as a fast in memory of Him who was dead for us in those hours. I will never forget his telling of how Jesus suffered for us.

Origen: But, Mother, we keep from Monday after Palm Sunday until Easter as a fast. Why do we do this, if St. John only kept forty hours?

Mother: I think I will let Bishop Irenaeus tell us. Will you explain this, Bishop?

Irenaeus: Of course. As both of you know, the government has often persecuted us Christians. Thus fifteen years ago in my own city of Lyons, they killed many, putting them in red-hot iron chairs, exposing them to wild beasts and burning many at the stake.

Origen: Yes, they killed my father, you know. They were all very brave.

Irenaeus: Yes, they were, for Christ gave them strength. But what I started to say was that, because of the persecutions, people could not travel much between the churches, so that different customs grew up in France from what they had in Asia Minor, and different in Egypt, from either of them. For each Bishop makes rules for his own diocese.

Origen: I understand that. But why do we keep all of Holy Week?

Irenaeus: That is your custom in Egypt. It began with the idea that the last week of Jesus' life was so hard with the Scribes and Pharisees doing all they could to hurt Him and trip Him in His speech that your Church decided to fast from the Sunday before Easter to Easter, to show their sympathy with Jesus in that last week.

Origen: I understand. I am so glad you told me. Many of my boy and girl friends have asked me and now I can tell them.

Exeunt.

Leader: As we have said before, Origen grew up to be a great scholar. He had a school to which many people came. The next scene is in Caesarea in the Holy Land, where Origen had his school. The year is 254. To his school has come a Roman centurion, himself a Christian, bringing his little son to be taught about Christ.

Scene III, in Caesarea. Time 245 A. D.

Centurion: Master Origen, as you know, we of the Army, never know where we will be ordered. My little son can not go about with me, so I want to train him, that he may be a priest of Christ and go as a Christian minister, if God wills, to my own people in Britain, where I was made a Christian myself.

Origen: Truly, Centurion, I will do my best, but I am, as you see, an old man and if I should live out my allotted time, I can hardly hope to live long. But those who would kill all Christians have of late made many threats against my life, so I fear that within a short time I shall be sacrificed as a martyr of Christ. But you are in haste, I see, Centurion. Perhaps your son would ask some questions of you before you leave him.

Boy: Yes, Master Origen, I would ask my Father a question. It is this: I notice many customs here in the Holy Land different from what we had in Britain. Which should I follow?

Father: The faith is one. To what customs do you refer?

Boy: Here I see they fast only for forty hours, but in Britain we fast forty days before Lent. Which is right?

Father: Yes, I have noticed that, but I can not tell you. Perhaps Master Origen can.

Origen: I can, indeed. The reason is that in different countries we have different customs. Each Bishop is his own master in such things. We teach the same things, but our ways of teaching are different. So, when in Britain, follow their customs, but when here in the Holy Land follow ours.

Boy: But why do they in Britain keep forty days?

Origen: The reason is that men liked to have a longer fast than the forty hours, so in Egypt they lengthened it to a week. Then in other places some fasted two weeks, others three, etc. In England they decided to fast forty days, as Jesus fasted forty days in the Wilderness, and so do many other countries now.

Boy: Thank you, Master Origen. I will do as you say and try to follow the custom of the country where I am, instead of engaging in disputes.

Exeunt.

Leader: In these scenes we do not know that they happened in this way. Nor do we know exactly which countries had which customs. But in his writings, Origen tells us that in different countries there were different customs and in each case the lives of the men mentioned overlapped so that the scenes may have taken place as we say. (The concluding scene of this play will be published next week, along with the Program on "Primitive Religion.")

CHURCH INTELLIGENCE

NATIONAL COUNCIL REPORT.

Advance Projects.

Regarding Advance Work projects, the Council authorized its officers "to approve from time to time during the triennium 1935 to 1937 items for equipment in the missionary field at home and abroad, which can be presented to the people of the Church as they may desire to work for them, report to be made to the National Council of all action taken."

To Continue Conference of Rural Workers.

Continuation of the National Conference of Episcopal Rural Workers in connection with the summer session of the University of Wisconsin, was recommended by the Social Service Department and approved by the National Council. The Council also voted that in spite of the loss of the secretary for rural work from the department staff, the division of rural work should be maintained in the structure of the department.

Expenses.

The expenses of National Council at General Convention in 1934 totalled $7,902.11. In 1931 this item was $28,576.10.

Legacies.

Legacies received by the Domestic and Foreign Missionary Society (of which the National Council is the board of directors) were reported by the treasurer. Varying in amount from $4.94 to $204,649.21, these legacies totalled $302,134.51, divided among designated sums, $573.84; undesignated, $90,236.92, and sums for investment, $211,843.75.

Salary Reduced by His Request.

The following item is added to the report of the National Council meeting:

The budget item of $7,500 for salary of the President of the Council was reduced by his request to $2,400 to cover expenses. Bishop Cook divides the week between the Council and his Diocese of Delaware.

For Church-Wide Thanksgiving.

Attention was called in the report of the Executive Secretary of the Department of Publicity, Dr. Hobbs, to the extraordinary number of notable missionary anniversaries which occur in 1935; whereupon the National Council unanimously adopted the following resolution, calling upon the unification of these anniversaries in a Church-wide Te Deum of thanksgiving to be arranged by the Presiding Bishop for some appropriate time and place:

Whereas, The year 1935 brings memorable missionary anniversaries including:

The re-organization of the Domestic and Foreign Missionary Society and the formation of the Board of Missions, superseded in 1919 by the present National Council;

The departure of our first missionaries for China:

The appointment of our first missionaries to Liberia;

The inauguration of The Spirit of Missions;

The consecration of Bishop Kemper on September 25, 1835; and,

Whereas, The year 1935 brings the centenary of the Diocese of Chicago, and the one hundred and fiftieth anniversaries of the Dioceses of New Jersey, New York, South Carolina, and Virginia; and,

Whereas, The year 1935 also brings the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the first General Convention, held at Philadelphia, September 27 to October 7, 1735; therefore,

Be it Resolved, That the National Council in its capacity as Board of Directors of the Domestic and Foreign Missionary Society respectfully suggests that the Presiding Bishop arrange a Te Deum of Thanksgiving in such place and at such time as he shall choose in commemoration of these historical events with special stress upon those which are concerned with the national life of the Church.

* * *

STATEMENT OF THE NATIONAL COUNCIL CONCERNING MEXICO.

Declining to make protests against activities on the part of the Republic of Mexico "which have been declared by various groups in this country to be definitely anti-religious," the Council unanimously adopted the following statement:

Certain questions have been asked the National Council by the Dioceses of West Texas and Milwaukee concerning the work of this Church in Mexico. Before answering these questions, the National Council desires to record its conviction in two particulars:

1. The National Council is strong in its conviction that true religion alone can promote and support those moral standards, both individual and social, upon which an enduring nation is built.

2. It is also convinced that true liberty and enlightenment must ever include freedom of conscience in the worship of God.

It is perfectly natural that in view of an aroused interest in Mexico, there should be a desire to know how our Church is faring at the present time, when there seems to be a disposition on the part of the Mexican Government to enforce the provisions of the Constitution of Mexico with extreme vigor.

From authoritative reports which are available to us, we may say to the Church that no property of the Episcopal Church has been confiscated during the Episcopate of Bishop Creighton or that of Bishop Salinas y Velasco.

Our Church building and rectories, i. e., buildings for worship and the teaching of Christian principles, as maintained by our Church, have been "manifested" to the civil authorities to comply with the law. This law goes back to the Constitution of 1857. All religious bodies which erected church buildings, parish houses, rectories, theological schools, or other buildings for worship and the teaching of religious doctrines after that date had full knowledge of the law and its implications. Church property is considered as belonging to the Nation, but the religious corporation which built it is entitled to use it for the purpose intended.

Under the personal restrictions imposed by the Constitution, our Bishop and his clergy are performing their pastoral duties and proclaiming the Gospel of Jesus Christ. They are registered for the localities in which they are officiating and are complying with the regulations which require all acts of public worship to be performed inside the church buildings.

Schools in Mexico are regarded as centers for secular education only. Religious education must be confined to teaching in the family and in the church building. As long as we do not perform religious ceremonies within the school buildings, we are permitted to carry on secular educational work.

In the case of Hooker School, Casa Hooker, a home for girls, where they are kept under Christian influence and from which they are taken to Church school and to services in one of our duly registered churches, is separated from the school proper by a wall. This home is supported by the Church. The conduct of the school has been placed in the hands of a group of Hooker School graduates, who are also graduates of Government normal schools, and so fulfill Government requirements. They are all members of our Church, experienced teachers, who have worked for many years in Government schools. This arrangement has proven entirely satisfactory and meets the moral, practical, administrative, and legal problems raised by the new regulations on educational matters. The School is entirely self-supporting. The salaries of the teachers and all other expenses come from the fees paid by the pupils. Casa Hooker is, however, supported by an appropriation from the National Council.

We have not joined in any protests. We deem it wise to study the situation more thoroughly, being not yet convinced that there is an actual persecution by the Government on religious grounds. We deplore, however, the action of certain local authorities, for instance in the State of Tabasco, which seems to us to be violative of the principle of religious freedom and of the individual rights secured to the citizens of Mexico by their Constitution.

Article 130 of the Constitution as generally interpreted, gives each state the right to designate the number of clergymen to officiate within its borders. This has been used by certain local governors as an excuse for making the free exercise of religion almost prohibitory in their states. Yet, the fact remains that there is no record of an appeal to a federal court having been made by those affected.

In the face of a trying situation, Bishop Salinas y Velasco has given wise and courageous leadership to the members of our Church in Mexico. Our work has not stood still, but has gone steadily forward. With full confidence in him and his ability to handle the affairs of our Church, we ask the prayers of our people in the United States for him and his clergy, for our Mexican Church members, and for all the people of Mexico.

* * *

TRUST FUNDS.

The Committee on Trust Funds of the National Council of the Episcopal Church holds funds having a total book value as of December 31, 1934, of $11,574,468.21. These funds are held by the National Council as the Board of Directors of "The Domestic and Foreign Missionary Society of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States of America," the corporation through which the National Council operates. The income is used in part to help in meeting the cost of carrying on the work of the Church as contained in the annual budget and in part for special purposes, as provided in the legacies or deeds of gift through which the funds came to the Society.

At the end of the year 1934, sixty per cent of the total fund was invested in railroad and public utility bonds, for the most part issues legal for investment by Savings Bank and Trustees in the State of New York. The other forty per cent was invested in real estate and real estate mortgages.

Most of the investments are included in the "Consolidated Trust Fund." For the year 1934 the income on this Fund, collected in cash, was at the rate of 4.39 plus per cent, as compared with a rate of 4.54 plus per cent in 1933.

The book value of the investments in corporate securities, as determined by the purchase price or by appraisal of securities when received, as of the end of 1934, was $6,935,450.39. An independent appraisal gives the market value as $7,028,115.26, an appreciation over the book value of $92,664.87.

Other investments are made up as follows:

First Mortgages on real estate	$3,520,014.00
Real Estate Mortgage Certificates	79,250.49
Real Estate owned	1,026,831.88
Cash	12,921.12
Total	$4,639,017.49

Out of 201 real estate mortgages, 109 representing slightly less than one-half of the total amount of money, show no arrears as to the payment of interest or taxes.

It is not possible to make any accurate appraisal of the value of these real estate investments, but satisfactory progress is being made in clearing up arrears and putting the properties and the mortgages in good condition.

The Committee on Trust Funds has in its "Investment Profit and Loss Account" a credit balance of $272,985.33.

Lewis B. Franklin,
Treasurer.

* * *

"CHURCH OF THE AIR" ANNOUNCEMENTS.

Next in the Episcopal "Church of the Air" broadcasts is Dr. John W. Wood, Secretary of the National Council's Foreign Missions Department, speaking over WABC, New York, at 10 A. M. Eastern Time, on Sunday, March 17. Dr. Wood's subject will be "Forward in Missions," which is in the spirit of the preceding broadcast by Bishop Hobson on a Forward Movement. The Rev. Dr. G. Warfield Hobbs, editor of The Spirit of Missions, and head of the National Council's Publicity Department, conducts the service for Dr. Wood's broadcast.

Next and final in the present Episcopal Church series will be the address on May 3 (omitting April) by Captain Sir Edward Colpoys Midwinter, English Churchman and statesman, who is to visit the United States this spring.

* * *

EIGHTY-THREE BUFFALO CLERGY RENOUNCE WAR.

From the destructive desolation of the World War one single, salient benefit may be said to have emerged. From that mad catapult which lavishly sacrificed human life on the altar of greed, one idea had birth on the battlefields, in the years following has lived precariously on in the words of its few champions, and today begins to mature in its adoption by greater numbers. The idea has grown into full flower as the great truth of all creeds and of civilization—that war is basically and essentially counter-religious. A man or a nation cannot believe in God who says thou shalt not kill and sanction the mass murder called war. This is the truth which holds in many of the religious faiths regardless of race, color, or creed, and has presented to the church a common front on which many meet—and thus the various denominations find themselves increasingly a united church, agreed on the great single principle that the church, if it represent high religion, must outlaw war.

A Personal Peace Pact has been signed by eighty-three of the Buffalo clergy, including the Rev. Samuel V. V. Holmes, D. D., Rev. Archibald G. Adams, Rev. Earl Frederick Adams, Rev. Albert G. Butzer, D. D., Rev. Hugo L. Dressler, Rev. B. S. Ferrall, Rabbi Joseph L. Fink, D. D., Rev. John G. Fleck, D. D., Rev. Leo A. Gates, Rev. Herman J. Hahn, Very Rev. Whitney Hale, Rev. W. Thomas Heath, Rev. Ralph B. Hindman, Rev. Frank Hollinshead, Rev. Walter R. Lord, Rev. Elmore M. McKee, Rev. J. Edward Nash, D. D., Rev. Harry W. Richmond, Rev. P. E. Salterelli, Rev. Harvey Swanson, Rev. Benton S. Swartz, and the Rev. Bruce Swift. The Pact is as follows:

"In loyalty to God I believe that the way of Christ cannot be reconciled with the way of war. In loyalty to my country, I support its adoption of the Kellogg-Briand Pact, which renounces war. In the spirit of true patriotism and with deep personal conviction, I, therefore, renounce war and never again will I support another."

Taking as their common text, "Why I Renounce War," seven of the clergy spoke briefly at a symposium held on Sunday afternoon, February 10, at the five o'clock vesper service of the First Presbyterian Church. We quote from each:

Rev. Earl F. Adams. Delaware Avenue Baptist Church: "I refer to the very obvious conflict between intelligence and stupidity. Briefly, but emphatically, I would point out the sheer stupidity of war. As a human race we spasmodically engage in using the best of our science, the best of our skill, and the best of our products—to kill off the best of our citizens."

Rabbi Joseph L. Fink, D. D., Temple Beth Zion: "I cannot preach a God of Israel and join in war. I cannot find any reason, sanity or logic in war."

Rev. Harvey Swanson, First Unitarian Church: "We know today that most of our troubles are directly traceable to war. Eliminate war and at one stroke you have eliminated the main curse of mankind. We have the clear choice between the law of God and the law of Mars."

Rev. John G. Fleck, D. D., Parkside Lutheran Church: "There is no sovereign ruler but God, and no nation but humanity. That is why I renounce war."

Rev. Hugo L. Dressler, Lutheran Church of the Atonement: "War is utterly un-Christian, inhumane, stupid and futile. War has retarded, almost irretrievably, the onward much of civilization."

Rev. Elmore M. McKee, Trinity Episcopal Church: "Today, as we push on toward the year 2000, the Church is going to lead its members back to its original position. The Church is going to catch up with the Quakers. You cannot reconcile mass killing with Bethlehem, the Sermon on the Mount, Gethsemane and Calvary."

Rev. Ralph Blake Hindman, First Presbyterian Church: "I am willing to lay down my life for the cause of peace. I am not willing to die for war. We are trying to be realistic about this war business. In the calmness of a period of peace we want to think this thing through, for we know that when war is upon us people are so influenced by propaganda and mass emotions that it is difficult, then, to think clearly."

Bishop Cameron J. Davis of the Episcopal Diocese of Western New York presided at the meeting and in opening said, "It is one of the most hopeful signs of our times that the Church generally is awakening to her responsibility to lead men. Brotherhood, love, reasonableness, and peace are the ideals of religion. We are stirred to the necessity of doing something to end war."

MEMORIAL TO BISHOP BURLESON.

At a noon service during the meeting of National Council, the Presiding Bishop, with a simple, yet impressive, ceremony, dedicated a Memorial Tablet to the late Bishop Burleson, who throughout his long ministry and episcopate, was almost constantly in touch with the official life at Church Missions House. Bishop Burleson had been a member of various departments, editor of the Spirit of Missions, assessor to the Presiding Bishop, first vice-president of the National Council. This long service was summarized in an affecting tribute by Bishop Perry. The Memorial is a tablet of burnished pewter, its sunk lettering brightened by varicolored enamel. It is inscribed with the name and the dates, 1865-1933, together with this inscription:

Bishop Among the Dakotas
* * * * *
Pioneer, Author and Leader
In the Cause of Christian Missions
* * * * *
Valiant Soldier
And Servant of Christ
* * * * *
In piam Memoriam
* * * * *

The tablet was erected by the members of the National Council and the staff of Church Missions House. It is the work of Mr. Hollingsworth Pearce of Philadelphia.

* * *

AN OPEN LETTER.

Bishop's Office.
Lexington, Ky.
February 16, 1935.

Mr. John J. Saunders,
Louisville, Ky.

Dear Mr. Saunders:

As the initiator of the movement looking towards possible consolidation of the Diocese of Kentucky and Lexington, and before the inaugural meeting of the two committees appointed to consider the matter, it seems altogether becoming that I should state my conception of the reasons for the problematical amalgamation of the two dioceses; especially as my reasons are far from being the reasons suggested by you in your article in the Southern Churchman of today's issue.

I cannot speak for the Diocese of Kentucky; but I have some right to speak for the Diocese of Lexington.

I take issue with your statement that "the apparent reason for agitating the consolidation, at the bottom, is lack of money." Such is not true of the attitude of the Diocese of Lexington. In the past five years, Lexington has reduced its indebtednesses from $74,800 to $5,170, and this in a time of untoward depression. The number of active clergy has been increased from fourteen to nineteen. No clergyman has been turned away from his position through lack of funds, and new stations have been opened, rather than existing stations closed. This is a matter of fact and of record. The diocesan Maintenance Fund, with all bills paid, closed the year 1934 with a balance, and the pledge to New York on the Church's Program was met in full. In 1935, the twenty per cent cut on clerical salaries from the National Council Grant is being made up in full from diocesan funds, so that no missionary in the diocese may suffer reduced income. This does not look like penury, nor does it suggest that the apparent reason for agitating the consolidation, so far as Lexington is concerned, is, at bottom, lack of funds.

I initiated this movement, not as a matter of dire necessity; but as a gallant gesture looking towards the greater glory of God in the State of Kentucky.

I take issue with your statement further on in your article, namely: "The mountains of Eastern Kentucky are in the Lexington Diocese, and the greater part of the work is missionary and, under present depressed conditions, most discouraging." I am not discouraged, as bishop, regarding such work, and, so far as I am able to ascertain, all the clergy involved are in good heart concerning such work. In the past four years, four new churches have been erected and dedicated in this region, and in 1933-34 there were over eighty confirmations in the Big Sandy Valley alone. The work is progressing as never before in the history of the Diocese of Lexington, and more has been done for our Highlanders during this period of depression than in any like period of time of the existence of the diocese.

As a matter of fact, the chances are that the consolidation of the two dioceses will not appreciably reduce expenses, and that the cost of administration of one diocese will at least approximate the cost of administration of two dioceses as at present constituted. I feel sure that the General Convention would not give sanction to the consolidation unless the new diocese was to be a self-supporting diocese. This means that the Annual Grant to the Diocese of Lexington as an Aided-diocese would immediately be withdrawn. This would involve, as of the year 1935, a decrease in income of $5,152. This sum would approximate the salary of the bishop. Moreover, with some sixty-seven parishes and missions to administer, rather than thirty-two parishes and missions in Kentucky at the present time, and thirty-five parishes and missions in Lexington at the present time, it would probably be necessary to employ the services of an Executve Secretary, an additional expense. I cannot see, therefore, that "the apparent reason for agitating the consolidation, at the bottom, is lack of money." This is not true so far as the purpose of the originator of the proposition is concerned, nor is it borne out by prospective facts.

My reasons for suggesting a possible unification of the two dioceses were and are, in brief, as follows:

Geographical: As so many other dioceses in the Church, Lexington was separated from Kentucky because of the difficulties of transportation. Forty thousand square miles of territory, when roads were bad, and in many instances, non-existent, seemed an unwieldy area to be husbanded by one bishop. Such conditions no longer exist. There are splendid roads throughout the length and breadth of Kentucky, even in the mountain portions of the state, and there are inter-lacing means of communication from east to west and from north to south. Why perpetuate a division when the primary reason for division no longer exists?

Episcopal: It is little short of a crime to permit a man to spend his life in administering a diocese of the numerical strength of either the Diocese of Kentucky or the Diocese of Lexington. It is not fair to continue to consecrate bishops for such limited administrative duties. Any bishop in reasonably good health may cover his necessary visitations in such a diocese in three months. He has to fill in the rest of his time by visiting his parishes and missions more frequently than wisdom would dictate, and in engaging in extra-diocesan preaching and activities. No bishop should have less than sixty parishes and missions to cover, unless the terrain of his jurisdiction is unusually mountainous and impossible. Many of our splendid bishops are administering dioceses of well over a hundred parishes and missions, and without the assistance of Coadjutor or Suffragan.

Unity: "In unity is strength." I feel sure that such would be the case, were the two Dioceses of Kentucky and Lexington to consolidate. Our Church, as One Body of Worshippers and Followers, would be coterminous with the State of Kentucky. Our interests would be common interests and our enthusiasms common enthusiasms. Together, and with appreciably less effort, we could keep the Flag flying, and at the top of the mast.

Example: This question of Consolidation has been before the General Church for some time past, both in relation to dioceses and missionary districts, and Kentucky and Lexington might point the way to dioceses somewhat similarly placed throughout the Church. We might inaugurate a movement looking towards fewer bishops and greater efficiency. It would be immeasurably worthwhile to "start something" of this nature.

With warmest regard, dear Mr. Saunders, and praying as you do that the two committees involved may be guided by the Holy Spirit and "a way found for the further upbuilding and growth of God's Kingdom upon earth,"

H. P. Almon Abbott,
Bishop of Lexington.

* * *

SPIRITUAL CONDITIONS IN CCC CAMPS.

Considerable discussion has prevailed among the Protestant denominations relative to the paid and volunteer service of clergymen doing religious work in the 1,600 CCC camps in the United States. There are now in active, full-time service a great number of selected, qualified clergymen appointed by the War Department to serve in the capacity of Reserve Chaplains. These, at the moment, number about one Reserve Chaplain to every eight CCC camps. There was a feeling that this number was not at all adequate for the men in the 1,600 camps of the CCC enterprise.

The Catholic Church requested that funds be made available for them to appoint their own priests to minister to their men, supplementing the work of the Reserve Chaplains.

The government, therefore, made possible what is called "contract clergy" who receive $30 a month and five cents a mile for travel, to render this service. The Catholic Church has availed itself of this arrangement to the extent of approximately 170 contract priests.

The Protestant denominations, through the General Committee on Army and Navy Chaplains of the Federal Council of Churches, unanimously and urgently disapproved of the policy of the government employing "contract clergy," because of its unwillingness to accept the relationship of Church and State.

Added to that is the fact that the Protestant Church has no machinery to select these 250 men for 1,600 camps over the whole country. Who is to appoint the "contract clergy"; how many from each denomination; under what jurisdiction shall they work; where shall the machinery he bound to select and place them? It seemed wise, therefore, to refuse any share in this offer of the government.

However, to make available more Protestant clergymen in the camps, the government consented to use the money which would be otherwise expended upon these relatively few Protestant "contract clergy" for obtaining an added number of full-time Protestant Reserve Chaplains in that service. The government was very gracious in consenting to that arrangement, and has already put it into operation.

This is now the policy as long as the Civilian Conservation Corps camps remain an emergency measure of the government. When, or if, these camps become a permanent enterprise, then there will need to be a re-thinking and restating of this whole matter of providing religious leadership on the part of the Protestant Churches. Not only so, but the government will also, undoubtedly, adopt a new policy with reference to the religious, and other, leadership in these camps.

It is, therefore, fair to conclude that the policy of the Federal Council exists as the best possible provision that could be made by the Protestant Churches while the emergency measure is in force. The government, through the Directorship of the CCC camps, has been more than gracious and desirous that adequate religious over-sight shall be given to the men in the camps. An expression of unfeigned gratitude might well go to those of the government who have the matter of the CCC camps in charge for their concern about the spiritual conditions in those camps.

* * *

ST. MARGARET'S SCHOOL, PELOTAS, SOUTHERN BRAZIL.

On January 12, the cornerstone of St. Margaret's School was laid by Bishop Thomas, before an audience composed of representatives of the clergy, the press, the government schools and other institutions of Pelotas. A splendid address was delivered by the Rev. Athalicio T. Pitham, rector of the Church of the Crucified, Bage.

The new building will be completed by the end of the year. It will contain three stories, with modern class-rooms on the first and second floors and dormitory for forty girls on the third. There will be in addition apartments for the headmistress and matron and rooms for resident teachers.

The school was opened last year in rented quarters and had a total enrollment of sixty-five. It reopens in March with prospects of a still larger number of pupils.

The appeal already made by St. Margaret's School is evidenced by the presence at the ceremony of the laying of the cornerstone of representatives of the governor of the state, of the mayor of Pelotas, Judge Soares, Major Messias, Captain Cordeiro, representing the chief of police, professors from the Pelotas High School, by the director of municipal instruction and representatives of the Commercial Associations, the Commercial Club, the local Masonic Lodge, the Municipal Hospital, and many others. There were representatives of the daily press, all of which printed detailed news of the ceremony.

Wm. M. M. Thomas.

* * *

AMERICAN CHURCH IN BERLIN CLOSES, FACING LACK OF FUNDS.

(From the Herald Tribune Bureau.)

Berlin, February 21. — Blaming American diplomats and American residents for lack of support, the governing committee of the American Church here at a meeting last night decided to abandon the desperate struggle of the last few years to keep afloat their institution, which was founded under the leadership of former Secretary of State Elihu Root in 1867.

The keys to the Gothic edifice on Motzstrasse, which has been the meeting place of the American colony and tourists for many decades, were handed over to Douglas Jenkins, American Consul General, this morning. Next Sunday, for the first time since the World War, no American Church service will be held in Berlin.

The American Church, which is the property of the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America, is officially endowed with funds to pay for the upkeep, but no funds to pay a clergyman or other expenses.

The governing committee, the chairman of which was James W. Lee, II,, son of the late Ivy Lee, of New York, adopted a resolution expressing "deepest regret that, due to the limited assistance and support which the American colony was able to give, the church found it necessary to close."

The resolution added: "The committee firmly believes that with the support of the American Embassy, Consulate and colony the church would be able to continue work. The committee, some of whom have served it for more than ten years, resigns in a body. At present the American Church is entirely out of debt."

The last full-time minister of the church was the Rev. Dr. Ewart Edmund Turner, who resigned under pressure a year ago. Since last summer, services have been conducted by the Rev. E. Hutchinson, a Canadian.

The Confessional Synod, the organization of German Protestant pastors opposed to the autocratic regime of Bishop Ludwig Mueller, the Nazi Primate, will suffer by the closing of the American Church. One of the readers, Pastor Dehm, who was driven from his own church by the Nazis, has been holding services for his followers in the American Church on Sunday mornings with the permission of the governing committee. With the closing he will again be homeless.

It now lies with the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America to determine whether the Confessional Synod may continue to use the church in future.

VIRGINIA.

Rt. Rev. H. St. G. Tucker, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. Frederick Goodwin, D. D., Coadjutor.

Dr. S. Parkes Cadman was the guest at a luncheon given by the Ministerial Union of Richmond, February 18. He spoke to the members of the Union present of World Conditions, and America's part in averting a catastrophic war. "Should there be another war in Europe in the near future," Dr. Cadman said, "European and American civilization would descend to a far lower stage than at present." The treatment which the Jews have received in Germany, he characterized as "abominable, outrageous and without justification."

Dr. Cadman is thoroughly informed as to the European situation as he visits the continent each year for important conferences with church officials of various nations.

The people of Richmond had an opportunity to hear Dr. Cadman also, as he spoke twice during his visit to the city, his topics being, "The World at the Crossroads," and "America's Opportunity in a Changing World."

NEW YORK.

Rt. Rev. Wm. T. Manning, D. D., Bishop
Rt. Rev. A. S. Lloyd, D. D., Suffragan
Rt. Rev. Chas. K. Gilbert, D. D., Suffragan

The West Point Choir.

The Choir from the Chapel at West Point sang at St. Thomas' Church on Sunday, February 24. This choir comes to St. Thomas' each year, and is always well received.

The students of General Theological Seminary presented "Outward Bound" in Seabury Hall, February 22 and 23. The play was given for the benefit of the mission station in the missionary district of Salina, that is supported by the students at the Seminary.

The Annual Quiet Day for Women in Westchester County was held at Christ Church, Bronxville, February 27. The day began with Holy Communion at nine, followed by breakfast. There were two meditations in the morning, with luncheon at 12:30, and two meditations in the afternoon, followed by Evensong at four o'clock. The Rev. William P. McCune was the conductor.

St. Peter's Church, Chelsea, New York City, of which the Rev. Richard A. D. Beaty is rector, is planning a series of special four o'clock services on the Sunday afternoon during Lent. Choirs from other churches in the diocese are being invited to these services, together with the rectors who will preach. The choirs invited are from St. Ann's Church, Morrisania, New York City; St. Peter's Church, Westchester; Grace Chapel, New York City; Church of the Good Shepherd, New York City, and the choir from the Berkley Divinity School in New Haven.

Trinity Parish is planning a day of retreat for women to be held on Saturday, March 9, at the Mission House, Fulton Street. The day will begin with Communion at eight o'clock and end with a meditation at three-thirty o'clock. The conductor will be the Rev. Roirden K. Yerkes of the Philadelphia Divinity School.

Brotherhood Day.

Brotherhood Day, which was instituted a year ago by the National Council of Jews and Christians was observed again this year in many of the churches in New York City. No civilized nation can allow animosities to develop among religious and racial groups. With the rising tide of nationalism and national consciousness growing throughout our country, we must do all we possibly can to maintain the ideals of our country and proclaim our fundamental religious doctrine, the Fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man. The National Conference of Jews and Christians is doing much throughout the country to stimulate efforts along these lines and to so educate people of different religious groups that they may cooperate and work together.

E. F. K.

PENNSYLVANIA

Rt. Rev. Francis M. Taitt, S. T. D., Bishop.

Dr. Shyock Elected Trustee.

Word was received here yesterday of the election of the Rev. Dr. John K. Shryock, rector of Grace Episcopal Church, West Philadelphia, as a member of the Board of Trustees of the New Central China College, Wuchang. The election was made by the National Council of the Episcopal Church at its meeting in New York. The College is a union of four other colleges, including the famous Boone University.

Dr. Francis C. Wei, the international known Chinese educator and scholar, who was in Philadelphia the early part of the present month as the guest speaker of the Woman's Auxiliary of Pennsylvania, is the President of Central China College. Dr. Shryock's selection as a Trustee, it was said, was based on his wide knowledge of China. Dr. Shryock served more than ten years as a Missionary in China during part of which time he was Headmaster of St. Paul's School in Anking.

Mission.

The Rt. Rev. Robert E. L. Strider, Bishop Coadiutor of West Virginia, will hold a week's Preaching Mission in St. Paul's Church, Chestnut Hill. Bishop Strider will preach on both Sundays and will hold a meeting each evening of the week. He will also be available at other times for conferences with individuals.

S. H. Warnock.

LONG ISLAND.

Rt. Rev. E. M. Stires, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. J. I. B. Larned, Suffragan.
Rt. Rev. F. W. Creighton, S. T. D., Suffragan.

Miss Bytel Resigns Principalship of St. Mary's School.

The Cathedral Chapter has reluctantly accepted the resignation of Miss Miriam A. Bytel, who for twenty-six years has been principal of the Cathedral School of St. Mary, Garden City. Bishop Stires and the Chapter sent Miss Bytel assurance of their long continued gratitude for the sympathetic investment of her life in the great company of young girls who are now extending her influence by their teaching and example. Miss Bytel insists that she thinks twenty-six years is long enough for any one to carry such responsibility. Her resignation becomes effective July 15 next. Miss Marion B. Reid, at present assistant principal of Kingswood School, near Detroit, will succeed her. She was formerly a member of the faculty of Miss Hall's School, Pittsfield, Mass.

C. H. Webb.

LEXINGTON

Rt. Rev. H. P. A. Abbott, D. D., Bishop.

Real Lay Evangelism.

At the recent convention of the Diocese of Lexington, Archdeacon Catlin, in charge of Mountain Missions, told this story: Every year many persons are confirmed in the missions of the Big Sandy Valley, but a large proportion of them move about, often settling in towns where our Church has no work. A few months ago he received a letter from a woman communicant who had moved to Betsey Layne. She was distressed that there was no Episcopal Church there, and had gathered her acquaintances to prepare them to desire the Church. When she wrote there were thirteen who wished to be baptized and confirmed. The result is that there is now a Sunday school of the Church in Betsey Layne.

RHODE ISLAND

Rt. Rev. J. DeWolf Perry, D. D., Bishop

Visiting Clergy Preach.

The Rt. Rev. William Blair Roberts, D. D., Bishop of the Missionary District of South Dakota, preached last Sunday at St. Martin's Church, Providence, at the eleven o'clock service, and in the evening at Grace Church.

Rev. C. Rankin Barnes, Executive Secretary of the National Department of Social Service of the Episcopal Church with headquarters in New York, preached last Sunday morning at the Church of the Redeemer, and in the afternoon he addressed a large group of clergy and laity at the parish house of the Cathedral of St. John. His subject was, "Social Security and the Church." Tea was served. The Rev. Anthony R. Parshley, rector of St. Michael's Church, Bristol, the Chairman of the Department, presided.

Cordial Relations.

The cordial relations between the Presiding Bishop's diocese and the Eastern Churches was again illustrated on the evening of February 17, when Bishop Perry, in the Cathedral of St. John, Providence, welcomed the Rt. Rev. Mampre Kalfayan, D. D., acting primate of the Armenian Church of America, and a congregation of 1,200

Armenians. The church was then turned over to these guests of the diocese. Bishop Kalfayan celebrated mass for the late patriarch of America, Bishop Tourian, who was assassinated in New York City.

Episcopalians Heartened.

The news from the National Council of the Episcopal Church that the Emergency Budget from missionary work has been met and that for the first time in several years there will be no further cuts, has heartened Episcopalians all over the country and especially in Rhode Island, the personal jurisdiction of the Presiding Bishop. Rhode Island had a share in the new order, because it exceeded its expectations, sixty per cent of which are earmarked for the work of the General Church.

F. W. Jones.

TENNESSEE.

Rt. Rev. Thos. E. Gallor, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. J M. Maxon. D. D., Coadjutor

Bringing Facts Before the People.

The Diocese of Tennessee, faced by a large deficit in both its Diocesan Missionary Budget and its quota for the general Church, has been trying to bring the facts before the people and to suggest to them ways to meet the situation. Several regional conferences have been held in Memphis, Jackson, Nashville, Sewanee, Chattanooga, Knoxville, and Johnson City, and most of the parishes and missions have been represented in one or another of these conferences. Some have adopted the Bishop's Pence Plan, others have taken up the Belmont Covenant Tithing Plan, so successfully used by the Southern Presbyterians. The full result remains to be seen. The diocese works on the partnership principle, using for its own work sixty per cent of whatever is received and forwarding forty per cent to the National Council.

A successful Training School for Church Workers was brought to a close in Nashville, February 27. Courses have been given in Church Teachings, The Prayer Book, The Life of St. Paul, Junior Methods and The Church's Program. About sixty have been in attendance.

President Roosevelt Invited to Sewanee.

The Bishop and the Vice-Chancellor of the University of the South, have invited President Roosevelt to visit Sewanee and he has tentatively accepted the invitation. Tennesseeans are looking forward eagerly to his visit.

E. P. Dandridge.

CHICAGO.

Rt. Rev. George Craig Stewart, D. D., Bishop.

Washington, a Devout Worshipper.

Five hundred men and boys of the Diocese of Chicago assembled at St. James' Church on Washington's Birthday for the annual Corporate Communion of the dioceses and following heard Bishop Stewart defend George Washington as a Christian.

The Bishop's talk was in reply to an anonymous letter which he received a day or two previous. The letter berated the idea of a Corporate Communion in honor of Washington, saying he was not a Christian much less a Churchman, and that he attended the Epscopal Church purely for social purposes. The Bishop pointed to Washington's baptism and confirmation, his regular attendance at church services and vestry meetings, his demands for chaplains in the army, his contributions to church projects and his own personal testimony in refutation of the charge.

"Church and State demand our personal loyalty," said the Bishop. "The Flag of the Church is the only flag that shall hang above the flag of State; for the reason that God is universal. There is one loyalty which the State cannot command; that is conscience."

Bishop Stewart referred to Washington as a "devout worshipper of God," and urged boys and young men to make him an example in their daily lives.

Flossmoor Gets New Church.

From vacant store to dignified church is the transformation which occurred in Flossmoor, suburb on Chicago's south side, recently. The result is new and attractive quarters for St. John's Mission there. Archdeacon F. G. Deis dedicated the new quarters.

The church now occupies a place of vantage in the center of town where it is easily accessible. An altar was provided for the church by the Church of Good Shepherd, Momence, while St. Paul's, Kankakee, and Christ Church, Joliet, gave the pews. The Rev. Rex Clift Simms is priest-in-charge.

New Deanery in Chicago.

A new deanery has been established in the Diocese of Chicago, to include Lake, Kane and DuPage Counties, and comprising portions of the Northern Deanery and Chicago Deanery West. The action is under authority of the recent diocesan convention.

The Bishop has designated the Rev. Gowman C. Williams, rector of St. Mark's Church, Glen Ellyn, to be the dean of the new deanery. The deanery includes some fifteen parishes and missions.

HARRISBURG.

Rt. Rev. Wyatt Brown. D D., Bishop

Bequest.

Christ Church, Danville, Pa., will receive $1,000, free of tax, under the will of the late Harry E. Farnsworth, a member of Mahoning Presbyterian Church, who was killed in an automobile accident, February 3. He left $2,000 to his own church and large contributions to every other church and fire company in Danville.

An eight-day mission (March 3 to 10) will be conducted at St. John's Church, Carlisle, by Fr. Joseph, O. S. F., superior of the American Greyfriars, Little Portion Monastery, Mt. Sina, Long Island, N. Y.

The Very Rev. J. Thomas Heistand, dean of St. Stephen's Cathedral, Harrisburg, conducted a pre-Lenten mission at the Cathedral recently. Two services were held each week day, except Saturday, Holy Communion and an evening service. French.

MISSIONARY DISTRICT OF ARIZONA

Rt. Rev. Walter Mitchell, D. D., Bishop.

Address Went to Heart of Vital Problems.

Asserting that the textbooks of the public schools at the present day are "Godless," the Rt. Rev. Walter Mitchell opened the annual convocation of the district with an address that went straight to the heart of several vital problems. The Bishop quoted Bishop Page as having said that "when he was a boy everybody used the McGuffey readers and that they were replete with passages from the Bible, the Psalms and great hymns." Now, "there was not a single selection from the Bible in the books used or any reference whatever to God." "I think we should do something about that," said Bishop Mitchell.

With regard to the Report of the Joint Commission on Budget and Program being termed "statesmanlike," the Bishop said, "If he is a statesman who is able to mediate between the 'standpat,' fear-ridden, on the one side, who were demanding an even greater retreat all along the line, and those who still had faith in God and in themselves, so that neither got what they wanted to a very great extent; if he is a statesman who can do that sort of thing, then this was a statesmanlike report."

The convocation met at Trinity Cathedral, Phoenix, on February 13 and 14, with an excellent attendance. The Woman's Auxiliary met at the same time. Since this was an adjourned convocation from last fall no elections were held.

It was announced that at the meeting of the Executive Council the allocations of the fifteen per cent cut were finally made.

A Board of Managers was appointed for the Arizona Church Centre at Prescott and the Bishop announced that six denominations besides our own will use the property this summer.

The convocation upheld the action of the Bishop and delegates at the General Convention in setting the quota at $5,000, and the Bishop was authorized to wire the National Council, then in session, that Arizona accepted that amount.

Following the suggestion made by the Bishop in his address a committee was appointed to study the program and methods of the China Inland Mission, as to ways of carrying on work and on relying on God for money, and to report to the next convocation.

After a joint session with the Woman's Auxiliary on the second day, at which time addresses were given on different aspects of the work in the district, the convocation adjourned to meet in Douglas, Arizona, in February, 1936.

E. S. Lane.

NEBRASKA.

Rt. Rev. E. V. Shayler, D. D., Bishop.

Faith Justified.

A project of the National Council has justified its inception when the Bishop of the diocese, the Rt. Rev. E. V. Shayler, conducted a service, which was designed to honor St. Matthew's Church, Lincoln, on its reaching the status of a self-supporting parish. The Rev. Garth Sibbald is the present rector, and the parish was received into its full standing at the last diocesan council. Started as a mission in a growing suburban district eight years ago, the communicant list has increased from forty to three hundred. Excellent buildings, including a parish house, provide facilities for the work.

Conference.

Dr. Karl Block of St. Louis led the clergy in a conference on Tuesday last at University Church, Lincoln, when the Forward Movement was discussed. About twenty clergy attended a Communion service, at which the Bishop was the celebrant, and took part in a Litany of Remembrance. A morning and afternoon session was held and the leaflets provided by the National Council were distributed.

Bishop Shayler addressed 425 men in the State Penitentiary on Sunday afternoon at a service arranged by the prison officials.

St. Thomas' Church, Falls City, has completely rennovated the interior of the church, and installed a dossal behind the altar.

Wm. J. H. Petter.

FAMILY DEPARTMENT

MARCH.

3. Quinquagesima.
6. Ash Wednesday.
10. First Sunday in Lent.
13. Ember Day. (Wednesday.)
15. Ember Day. (Friday.)
16. Ember Day. (Saturday.)
17. Second Sunday in Lent.
24. Third Sunday in Lent.
25. Monday. The Annunciation.
31. Fourth Sunday in Lent.

* * *

COLLECT FOR QUINQUAGESIMA. SUNDAY.

O Lord, Who hast taught us that all our doings without charity are nothing worth; send Thy Holy Ghost, and pour into our hearts that most excellent gift of all virtues, without which whatsoever liveth is counted dead before Thee. Grant this for Thine own Son Jesus Christ's sake. Amen.

* * *

COLLECT FOR ASH-WEDNESDAY. (MARCH 6.)

Almighty and everlasting God, Who hatest nothing that Thou hast made, and dost forgive the sins of all those who are penitent; create and make in us new and contrite hearts, that we, worthily lamenting our sins and acknowledging our wretchedness, may obtain of Thee the God of all mercy, perfect remission and forgiveness; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

* * *

For the Southern Churchman.

A LENTEN PRAYER.

Doris Hamaker.

O God, we pray for simple things;
Help us to have a full understanding of the peace and joy which simplicity brings

Grant that in thought, word and deed,
We may put away selfishness, and all vice which causes greed.

Let us during this refreshing season of Lent,
Learn to number our days, that they may be wisely spent.

We petition this through the name of our Blessed
Lord and Saviour, Jesus Christ. Amen.

* * *

The "Imps" of the Tongue.

All newspapermen are familiar with the "Imps of the Types" but the Methodist Recorder, London, tells how the "Imps" of the tongue get our English cousins twisted in their speech. The Record says:

"We are familiar with the tale of the preacher who, after his tongue had referred to one 'tot or jittle', blushed and at once corrected himself to 'one tit or jottle'; and also with that of the other clergyman at Oxford who announced that they would sing the hymn, "Kinquering Congs'; but not so familiar with the tale of another victim of a transposing tongue who, in place of saying, 'Behold the fig tree, how it withereth away,' amused his audience by asking them to 'behold the wig tree. how it withereth away.' A much worse case who were addressed by the chairman. 'My friends, he said, 'the schoolwark is the bulhouse of civilization. I mean—er—the bulhouse is the schoolwark of civilization.' A smile began to dawn on the faces of his hearers, and anxious that they should hear aright the profound truth he was trying to express, he began again. 'What I mean to say, my friends, is that the warkhouse is the bulschool of—' He paused, and again began. 'What I really mean to say,' he said, 'is that the school bul is the housewark—' The smile on his hearers' faces now gave place to an audible snigger, but the chairman was determined to get it right. 'The scowschool,' he began, and realizing himself wrong again, began to lose what equanimity he posessed. His hearers had nearly lost theirs. He mopped his brow, gritted his teeth, and made a fresh effort. 'As I was saying,' he began anew, 'the schoolhouse, my friends—' A sigh of relief went up from the audience, and the chairman felt easy again. He gazed round him with suavity, and upon his brow there appeared the light of triumphant self-confidently. 'Yes, my friends,' he repeated, 'the schoolhouse is the civilizer of the bul—' And that was all."—Watchman-Examiner.

* * *

Teach Children to Love the Beautiful.

All children should be taught the love of good music, good literature and flowers. Be the home "ever so humble," there is no excuse for not making it attractive with growing plants, books and magazines, and music in some form.

There is little that is more enjoyable and beneficial in the home than music. A busy mother will not always have time to play for her children on a musical instrument and the radio program, even if available, will often be inappropriate, but most mothers can sing with the littles ones and teach them songs that they will love. Even very young children quickly learn to distinguish one song from another and show their preference and appreciation. If a mother forms the habit of singing as she works, she will find that her many tasks will be performed more easily and quickly. She will be more relaxed and will not tire so soon and, oh, how the children love a singing, smiling mother!

Books and magazines should very early be placed in the wee ones' hands, but under kindly watchfulness at first. Children must be taught how to use books and shown that they give the most pleasure when treated with gentle consideration.

Growing plants do much to make the home attractive. Allow the little ones to have some of their very own both indoors and out, if possible, and watch their pride and pleasure in caring for them. Small cans may be used for their indoor plants so that the busy little hands may carry them from one sunny spot to another. Even if a plant should in the end come to grief, reverence as well as a love for the beautiful is being learned and will not be destroyed. Talk to the boys and girls about the various flowers and plants —their habits and needs—speaking their names both common and botanical. Take the children for walks whenever possible and teach them to observe beautiful cloud formations, sunshine, birds, trees, mosses, flowing waters and all other of God's wondrous works. Encouraging them to comment on objects of loveliness leads them to adventure father and father into the elusive realm of the beautiful.

One way to help little children to become alert in observing the beautiful is to keep a small book dedicated to this purpose. At the bedtime hour you can say to Joan, "What did you see today that was beautiful?" and the response may be, "A little blue-bird, Mother." "Where was it and what was it doing?" "First it was on the ground and had a string in its mouth. Then it flew to a tree. Why did it want the string, Mother?" To the children, the knowledge that their discoveries are worthy of being recorded, an added spur to them to be observing and to give expression to their thoughts. And boys and girls who learn to love and to have reverence for all that is beautiful and good will seldom deliberately go far wrong.—L. M. Saunders, in National Kindergarten Association Release.

* * *

For the Southern Churchman.

MASTER, WHERE DO YOU LIVE"

Alice Maude Spokes.

Master, dear Master, where do You live?
Your face is so holy, since love You give;
'Tis said relief from pain there'll be,
The lame will walk, the blind will see;
My heart is laden, my mind won't heed,
I've lost my hold; O Shepherd, lead!
Within Your fold a shelter give!
Master, O Master, where do You live?

Where do You live, devoid of strife"
Where joy is service and love is life"
Do You reach and comfort souls in distress
And make them whole with Your redress?
The road seems dark, so lonely and drear,
No helping hand to comfort me here;
My tasks are done! My eyes tear-blind!
Where do You live, O Master kind?

"Brother, dear brother, where do I live?
Where needed most when comfort I give!
I was with thee in thy lone despair—
My kindness and mercy plentiful, there.
Thy way was rough and steep thy road;
So weary and foot-sore; so heavy thy load;
You left not My path—you paid each toll;
Brother, dear brother, I've lived in your soul!"

* * *

These Three.

The Epistle for Quinquagesima recalls us, on the threshold of the penitential season of Lent, to the fundamental and abiding things.

There was trouble in the Church in Corinth over spiritual gifts, and St. Paul writes to tell them that there was more than one way in which the Holy Spirit of God could manifest Himself in the Christian life. In their rivalry, the believers had been inclined to magnify one gift against another, and to regard the more unusual and mysterious as of greater value, if not as evidencing a higher claim to divine origin. So much so, that there was some danger of their under-valuing the more prosaic natural gifts (so-called) or heart and brain, if not of their losing sight of the importance of the moral witness of the spirit's indwelling. St. Paul, therefore, makes it his business, first of all, to help them to see that in the divine economy there is no place for the proud and "superior" spirit. As in the body, the foot, the hand, the eye, and the ear, have an equally necessary and important part to play, so, in the Church of Christ, every single member has his work to do as God has given him ability and opportunity; and "it is the same God which worketh all in all."

But there was more than that to be said in this matter of spiritual gifts. It was a good thing to be eager to possess the higher endowments; but there was a better thing still to possess, and, lacking it, no other quality was of any account. "More excellent" than the ability to speak in "tongues", than the oratory of the preacher, than the wisdom of the learned, than an indomitable faith, than a philanthropic spirit, than a readiness for martyrdom—better far than all these, was that which would abide when they should all have failed and vanished away—and that was love.

"I am nothing," writes St. Paul, "whatever other power or virtue I may possess, if I have not love." That was the supreme possession that gave everything else its meaning and its value. All else was partial, incomplete, doomed to come to an end or to be outgrown. No endowment could give us in this life what was not to be had in this life. Life was still an enigma, however hard we tried to understand it; and for all our knowledge, there was much that remained and would remain unknown. We had to fall back on faith and hope at last. These, indeed, were left to us —these and love; and love was greatest, even of these.

And so, according to St. Paul, these are the final things in life—our ultimate equipment for life: faith, hope, and love, "these three." Let us consider each of them in turn.

Life is so perplexing, at times, to some of us, that it is as much as we can do to hold on from day to day and withstand the temptation to give up the effort to find a meaning in it. But it is just because life is like this, that, if we are ever going to make anything of it at all, we must take up an attitude towards it that we call "faith." If knowledge and understanding never failed us; if we could see clearly through everything, faith would never need to be exercised—the word faith never have come into existence. And here, to learn what faith does, let us return to St. Paul, and his looking-glass figure of life. "Now we see as in a mirror, obscurely; but then we shall see face to face." When St. Paul wrote the second half of that sentence he was exercising faith. He had looked at that puzzling image in the glass and said." I cannot believe that what appears there is the truth of things. The lines must be clearer in reality than I see them at this moment; and I shall one day see them as they actually are." To take that attitude was to exercise faith; and we shall realize at once how potent a thing faith can be in the experiences of life. It stands up to pain and perplexity, struggle, and sorrow, and says: "There will be an issue to all this in God's good time, and I am going to face the present in the light of the end that is now beyond my sight.'"

And Hope. According to an ancient Greek legend, hope came into the world in the wake of suffering. When Pandora opened the box which the angered gods had sent to Epimetheus, out flew all the diseases that afflict mankind; but when it was opened again, there emerged the spirit of hope, and away it went to follow in the trail of evil the others had already wrought.

But, of course, St. Paul is here speaking of hope in a special sense. He is writing as a Christian to Christians, and the hope he is thinking of, is the hope of eternal life that is theirs in Jesus Christ. That is why he can say so confidently, "but then, face to face"; and "but then shall I know even as also I am known." Faith and hope blend together here, and stretch out common hands towards the same thing, even as they spring from the same ground. And that hope is ours, too. We are not condemned to hope blindly, with nothing to build our hope upon. Whatever else fails us, a living hope is still ours, because of Jesus Christ. We can hold on to that through all things,

With faith and hope—Love. This, also, is one of the ultimate things. But why does St. Paul say that love is greater than faith and hope? Because.

Faith will vanish into sight,
Hope be emptied in delight,
Love itself will shine more bright.

Look at St. Paul's words in praise of love a little earleir in the poem:

> Love . . . beareth all things, believeth all things, hopeth all things, endureth all things.

Love expresses itself in faith and hope, as it manifests itself in patience and endurance. Love can never be without hope, nor can it exist without faith. Where love is, every other noble quality and aspiration of the spirit be.

That is clearly why St. Paul here lays such great stress upon it as the most desirable and necessary Christian endowment. Other gifts were partial, and were no guarantee of the Christian temper. But love was all-embracing, and its nature was to express itself after the mind of Christ. St. Paul does not actually say that; but it is difficult to read this beautiful chapter without feeling that he sees the face and figure of Our Lord before him as he writes. It is love as it has been seen incarnate in Jesus Christ that he is describing. And who can reflect on that without realizing the surpassing greatness and desirability of a love like that "which was in Christ Jesus?" Well might we pray earnestly the exquisite prayer the Church puts on our lips at this time, and keep it before us all through Lent:

O Lord, who hast taught us that all our doings without charity are nothing worth; send Thy Holy Ghost, and pour into our hearts that most excellent gift of charity, the very bond of peace and of all virtues, without which whosoever liveth is counted dead before Thee. Grant this for Thine only Son Jesus Christ's sake. Amen.

—From an article by Rev. F. S. Moore, in Canadian Churchman.

* * *

The Child Next Door.

Charlotte's social group in Hogansville agreed on essential points in child development. When little Lottie spent an hour with small friends, Charlotte felt perfectly sure she would not be offered anything to eat and only water to drink. She knew, too, the general trend of what the child was likely to see and hear while at any one of her friends' homes.

Then Sam, her husband, was transferred to Springfield. The day they moved, little Lottie quickly found her way to the fence, peeked through and was soon playing with the child in the next yard. At noon when her father called her into the house for lunch she said she was not hungry, that she had eaten candy, cake and a ham sandwich.

"Where did you get those things?" her mother asked.

"Sara got them out of her mother's refrigerator and handed them through the fence. Her mother was on the porch and said she might."

Charlotte disapproved of this demonstration of neighborliness and began considering what would be the best way of taking the matter up with Sara's mother, later on.

"There's a rag man comes down the alley," Lottie broke in upon her mother's thoughts. "He catches little children and makes them into soap."

"We are under a new regime," Sam observed.

Before either parent could think of a suitable reply Lottie continued, "I have a new hat and a new coat and new shoes and a new dress and new socks an—"

"Where are they?" Charlotte interrupted.

Lottie paused to consider. "I have them," she affirmed.

"Where?" her mother repeated.

"I—I," Lottie stammered. Then she saw a child in the yard across the street and pointing toward her, changed the subject. "That is Ruth Gray. Sara says she is poison."

Charlotte and Sam looked from Daughter to each other with chagrin. Something must be done to prevent any more such experiences.

High hooks were adjusted on gates and doors; Lottie's baby brother, in his crawling expeditions required these precautions which served equally as well to keep outsiders out. Next, Sam made a poultry yard to run the full length of Sara's fence, and Lottie was not allowed in the poultry yard alone. Swings and a sand pile in the back yard kept the children from wanting to play on the front lawn where there was no fence. These arrangements conspired to separate the children of the two families in ways that seemed natural.

To have attempted entire separation would have caused unpleasantness, and Charlotte did not feel equal to reeducating Sara's mother, with whose circle of friends she soon found she had little in common. However, taking advantage of an opportunity to return Sara's sweater, found on the lawn one morning, she greeted her neighbor pleasantly, sniffed appreciatively of her cooking and then, very tactfully, mentioned that Lottie was not allowed to eat between meals and asked quite frankly for cooperation. It was promised good-naturedly.

From time to time Lottie met Sara on the front lawn. On such occasions Charlotte supervised their play, keeping them interested in something constructive. Little girls like Lottie and Sara usually do meet sometimes or other, and the attitude of each toward the new experience is of course the important issue. Charlotte found that it was less difficult than she had anticipated to bring about an attitude of tolerance rather than imitation, on Lottie's part, with regard to Sara's crudities, and to center her admiration on the little neighbor's constant good humor and ready generosity. Both children were, without doubt, really benefitted by the acquaintance.—M. Hunter in National Kindergarten Association Release.

* * *

REVIVAL.

A robin in the arbor,
A breath of springtime air,
A white sail in the harbor
The speckled flood to dare,
The early bees are roaming,
Though scanty be the share,
And hungry rooks ahoming
For yet the fields are bare.

And aye there is tomorrow,
And here and there a flower,
For evermore earth's sorrow
Hath Eden for a dower.
And aye there is a coming,
A flash of angel wing,
A million ages humming
The heraldry of spring.

And evermore a longing
Of life beyond today,
Where fadeless fields are thronging
With an immortal May.
And Spring's eternal morning
Is just beyond the hill,
Fair Paradise adorning
The great Creator's will.

—Robert MacGowan.

FOR THE CHILDREN

For the Southern Churchman.

TURN ASIDE FROM STRIFE.

Gertrude Lieb.

Let nations turn aside from strife,
And claim no more their selfish rights
With joy the spiritual realms explore
Then follow all their beacon lights.
If all the world will choose the Christ
And enters truth's wide open door,
Sickness and sin will disappear
And death will be no more!

* * *

Robert's Garden.

Robert loved flowers of all kinds. In the springtime, he was delighted with the gold of the dandelions, the purple of the violets and every other blossoming plant as its season came.

Sometimes, however, his mother thought he was just a little selfish, for he did not like to give any of his flowers away, until they began to fade or the petals to drop, and then they were scarcely worth giving.

Perhaps this was because he had no brothers or sisters with whom to share his treasures, but his mother did not like to see him want to keep everything for himself.

"If we are really going to enjoy things," she would sometimes tell him, "we must share them with others, for then their pleasure as well as the beauty of the flowers, will delight us, and we shall have a double portion of joy."

But Robert didn't quite understand that, although it was explained to him in different words several times.

But one day, when his Auntie Clara came to stay with them for a few months, she took her small nephew by the hand and said:

"Let's make a nice flower garden, Robert. We'll have sweet peas and pansies, and some day you will have plenty of lovely blossoms for your mother and your friends."

So they worked in the soft brown earth, and planted the sweet pea seed just beside the high fence of chicken wire, and made a bed of the pansies at the end of the porch.

And sure enough, after the weather had grown warm and sunny, the little seeds began to grow! Then the gentle rains came and watered the small plants, and they thrived and became strong and soon began to bear buds upon their branches.

Robert and his Auntie Clara watched them, and he was overjoyed when the quaint little faces of the pansies began to smile up at him. He loved to touch them with his fingers, and to enjoy the variety of colors and the velvety surfaces. It was not long before the sweet peas were in blossom, too, and such beauties, pink and lavender and white and softly blended tints.

"I'll tell you what we'll do," Auntie Clara smiled. "We'll divide the sweet pea bed into two parts. See, I'll drive a stake right down here. All of them below this stake and on the side toward the garage, will be yours alone. You can look at them, and pick some when you feel like it. Those on the other side of the stake and toward the house, will be the part you will have to pick bouquets from for your mother and your friends, and it will be a rule that you must pick a bouquet every day for somebody. We'll divide the pansy bed in the same way. The half next the porch will be yours for yourself alone, and the rest of them to enjoy with others every single day."

Robert thought this was a funny plan, but he wanted to please his Auntie Clara, so he agreed to it.

It was not long before he noticed that the blossoms were much more numerous and more beautiful on the parts of the two beds which he was to divide with others, and that the blossoms he was to keep for himself grew fewer and fewer, and smaller and smaller, as he only picked a few now and again.

Robert couldn't quite understand it, and more than once he stood and examined thoughtfully the pansy bed and the sweet peas which were now climbing up the fence. It seemed strange to him that there should be so many more blossoms on the parts of the beds where he was constantly picking flowers and giving them to others.

As he stood like this one morning, his Auntie Clara came along.

"A penny for your thoughts, Robert!" she cried gaily. "What are you thinking about?"

"I was just wondering, Auntie Clara," said Robert, "why there are more flowers on one side than on the ther."

"Come over here and I'll tell you, dear," his Auntie Clara replied quietly. "We'll sit under the grape arbor and I'll tell you all about it."

"Sweet peas and pansies must be picked very often or new blossoms do not grow, and the plants go all to green leaves instead of yielding lovely flowers. The more you pick and give, the more you have for others and for yourself.

"It is the same way with ourselves. When we are selfish and do not share our blessings with those about us, they grow fewer and fewer, and when we are ready to make others happy we have our own pleasures and happiness increased until we are often surprised. If we keep back or give sparingly, we become poorer and have less. If we give and serve gladly, we have much."

Robert sat quietly thinking for a few minutes.

"Isn't it too bad," he said at last, "that I have spoiled half of the pansy bed and half of the sweet pea vines, and they'll not be pretty any more!"

Auntie Clara's arm slipped around the little lad.

"Yes, it is too bad," she replied gently, "but even at that it isn't quite as sad as to spoil a life by selfishness. We can plant more sweet peas and pansies next spring, and see to it that the blossoms are kept picked as they ought to be. But if a whole life is made ugly and flowerless—what then? We are never going to live today or tomorrow over again, you know. It's gone forever, once it has passed."

Robert sat very still for several moments. Then he looked up and his face was shining.

Auntie Clara," he said, "I'm going to divide the best I have with others every day now, for then they will be happy and I shall be happy, too—and I know it'll be lots nicer!"

"That's splendid," said Auntie Clara. "When we are young as you are, it is the springtime of life, and it's wonderful to make it beautiful, for then one's whole life will be sure to be bright and fruitful and fine."

Robert jumped down from his seet in the grape arbor.

"I'm going to take my new game over to Sally Dart to play with awhile. She's sick, you know," he explained, and away ran Robert as fast as he could go.—Emma Gary Wallace, in The Presbyterian.

For the Southern Churchman.

DAFFODILS AND PUSSY WILLOWS.

Maude Forrest Mumma.

Daffodillies, Daffodillies, sleeping 'neath the snow,
Tell me, will you, tell me, won't you, when you'll wake and grow?

Daffodillies, Daffodillies, in the ground so deep,
Tell me, will you, tell me, won't you, when you'll wake from sleep?

Pussy Willow, Pussy Willow, in your furry cap,
Tell me, will you, tell me, won't you, when you've had your nap?

Pussy Willow, Pussy Willow, tell me how you grow,
Tell me, will you, tell me, won't you, for I love you so!

Answer.

We will wake up in the spring time, when the blue-birds call
And perhaps we'll see a snow-flake gently on us fall!

* * *

A Soldier's Dog.

This little story is dedicated to all lovers of dogs, especially to those who have known the joy of their faithful companionship and who understand and appreciate their loyalty and splendid intelligence.

Just an ugly mongrel, this dog of my story. No member of Dogdom's Four Hundred was he; and I doubt that the family tree of his parents was ever important enough to cast the tiniest of shadows.

The story was told me as we were seated on the ferry that plies daily between Burlington, Vt., and Port Douglas, N. Y. crossing beautiful Lake Champlain.

With the usual idle curiosity of the summer vacationist, I allowed my gaze to wander among the happy, bustling crowd. Pert, gaily dressed flappers were there, chattering away like magpies; fond parents with their tiny kiddies clinging to their hands; sedate matrons; men both young and old; in fact all the hundred and one kinds of humanity that is so typical of this great country of ours.

Finally, my attention was drawn to my nearest traveling companions. A dignified elderly couple were they, most carefully and expensively groomed; obviously, people of wealth and refinement. At the gentleman's feet crouched the hero of my story, "Rags," his heavy jaws resting upon his forepaws, so evidently a mongrel and such a decided contrast to that very prosperous couple did he seem, that I must have stared impolitely.

The old gentleman returned my glance and as his eyes met mine, I knew that my face had betrayed my thoughts. "I beg your pardon," he ventured. "I'm afraid that my dog hasn't made the best of impressions, has he?"

Naturally embarrassed at having my thoughts read so easily, I stammered a bit incoherently, that "it was hardly the dog that I should have associated with people of their type."

"Rags is old and homely, I admit," the man continued, "but to us he is beyond price."

His wife smiled and nodded her head in agreement, as she leaned forward and fondled the dog's ugly head with her soft, white hand.

Immediately, I sensed a story and with a little encouragement my traveling companions rewarded me with a tale that I have never been able to forget, though this happened some years ago.

"Rags is a soldier's dog," the man began. "You see, our son, Jim, went 'over there' with those countless other American lads to do his share in that horrible maelstrom of death and destruction that we knew as the World War. While billeted in a small town, just behind the lines, Jim came upon Rags, then a tiny puppy, trying in vain to find warmth and food by the dead body of his mother. They adopted each other immediately and were constant companions during the two years of terror and bloodshed. Jim told us later that the feel of that shaggy little body and the rough caress were the only bit of happiness that he knew during that terrible siege.

"Later, Jim was invalided home, suffering from shell shock and minor wounds and even with him came Rags. The dog remained with him at the Army and Navy Hospital, and had much to do, in our opinion, with the lad's return to health and strength.

"I did have to pull a few wires before they would allow the dog to remain," he chuckled, reminiscently, "but remain he did. So, you see, when Jim was released, finally, and did come home we were so overjoyed at his return that we accepted Rags as sort of a necessary evil.

"I confess that my wife did have to stand a bit of good natured raillery about her 'thoroughbred' from our friends, and many a greasy bone left its tell-tale mark on the rug before the library fire, while the prints of his muddy paws upon the stairs and in the hallways were a source of great annoyance to the housekeeper."

"Are you bored?" he questioned at this juncture.

I assured him that I was much interested, and begged him to continue; and so he went on.

"Although our boy was physically well again, shell shock had left him in such a way that any loud report or sudden noise would leave him speechless, paralyzed, in fact, for a few seconds at a time.

"Rags with some super instinct, sensed these attacks, and at these times he would tug sharply at Jim's coat sleeve or trouser leg and never failed to bring him back to earth again, and as the attack passed, a pat of the boy's hand on the shaggy head seemed to say that all was well, and the two would go on as though nothing had happened. One day, as Jim was crossing the square with Rags at his heels the shriek of the siren and clatter of fire trucks turned the boy to stone, directly in front of the oncoming wheels. I have the story of an eye witness of what then happened," continued the narrator. "Rags, with more than human intelligence, ran between Jim's legs, upsetting him neatly. With his then powerful paws, he grabbed his shoulder and pulled him to safety, in less time than it takes me to tell you."

The eyes of the soldier boy's mother became a bit misty at this point, and in my heart, I knew that, being a mother, this episode was ever fresh in her memory.

But to continue. "The boy was stunned and bruised, but his life was saved, but Rags here still carries the scars of his bravery." As he spoke he lifted the dog's front leg, and running across the ribs from front to back leg, was revealed a hideous scar that the shaggy coat refused to hide.

"Rags almost paid with his life, but we nursed him back to life and have made pretty much of a fool of him ever since."

Just then a tall, serious-faced young man made his way toward us, and I knew by the dog's evident delight that it must be the Jim of the story.

Rags rose to greet his master, and the look that passed between them I can find no words fittingly to describe.

As we were nearing our destination, I thanked the kindly story teller, and joined the rest of the party at the rail. A few moments later I felt a touch on my arm and Jim's mother addressed me apologetically. "If father hasn't bored you too much, I'd like to have you see for yourself how Rags guards his master. The landing whistle will get Jim," she declared, "it always does; so if you are really interested, just keep your eyes on them."

And, sure enough, the whistle blew long and loud, and the young man became rigid, utterly unconscious of the bustle and movement about him. But Rags, ever loyal and watchful, had not forgotten. A few sharp tugs at his master's sleeve, and the tense muscles and nerves relaxed, the rigid hand became normal and found its way to the faithful creature's head.

Again that look from those brown dog eyes straight into the kind blue ones of his master. Somehow I was not a bit ashamed of the tears that seemed to find their way into my own eyes, or of the lump that rose in my throat. I doubt if any other person than myself had seen this drama, but I have never been able to forget.

Is there a Dog Heaven? There must be, for such animals as this, and I pray that it is not too far from Rags' beloved master's. I'd like to think that when Judgment Day rolls around, Rags' kindly tug at his master's sleeve will receive the returning pat of Jim's hand and knowing that "alls well," they will go on through eternity side by side.—Our Dumb Animals.

* * *

Mr. Lobster's New Green Suit.

Poor Mr. Lobster was very uncomfortable. His old green suit was much too tight, and you know how it is to have your clothes so snug that you can't bend over or run about. There were no tucks or hems to let out for more room, so the only thing to do was to get an entirely new rig.

Now no store that I know of sells lobster suits, so what do you think Mr. Lobster and his friends do when they have outgrown their clothes? They grow new ones! How would you like that? So Mr. Lobster found a nice quiet cave in the rocks, under the water, where he could hide. First, he must get rid of the old tight suit. He stopped eating, and became thinner and thinner until his clothes didn't touch him anywhere. Then suddenly, he puffed himself up as big as he could and squirmed and wriggled with all his might, and—pop! His suit split right up the middle of the back and he crawled out of it!

Poor thing! He was almost as uncomfortable without any suit as with one that pinched! He didn't dare leave his hiding place because something would be likely to eat him when he was in such a helpless state. So he hid for nearly a month, while his new costume was growing.

What do you suppose Mr. Lobster used to make his new suit? Cotton or wool, like yours? Mercy, no! His enemies in the deep sea would gobble him up, clothes and all! His suit is a shell, which must be hard and strong for protection, lime is what he uses, and he gets it from his food. This lime and a sort of glue, which comes from his skin, soon begin to harden all over him in rings. These rings are jointed on the tail and legs, like a knight's armor, and solid on the back, like a shield. Mr. Lobster is much too clever to get another tight suit of clothes, so he fills himself full of water while they are growing, so that there will be plenty of room.

When full clad in his new green armor, he sallies forth. He is a terror, too, I can tell you. There are three pairs of legs near his mouth. The first pair is armed with very ugly looking nippers, which have toothed edges and are strong and cruel. He has five more sets of legs, under the chest, which are used only when Mr. Lobster wishes to crawl about on the floor or the sea to call on his friends. Under the tail are some false legs with which the gentleman paddles himself about in the water. Strange to say, with all these legs, Mr. Lobster is a great hand to stay near home, and seldom goes far away.

I don't know what Mr. Lobster would do without that tail of his. It's extremely useful, you see. He can, with its help, propel himself through the water at a great speed. By curling it up under him suddenly, he can spring backward into some cave or hiding place as quick as lightning. Also Mrs. Lobster carries her eggs under her long, jointed tail.

I am afraid that Mr. Lobster is a fighter, and, when angry, is not at all a pleasant person to meet. Sometimes in his quarrels he loses some of his numerous legs. Do you think he bothers about a little thing like that? Not a bit of it! He just grows another one in its place! However, the new one is never so big or useful as the first one, and as he cannot patch his suit of armor, the new leg must go unprotected until Mr. Lobster needs another new suit. You would certainly think that, since it takes him so long to grow a new covering for his body, he would be more careful of his many legs. But, no! Why, he even breaks them off himself, occasionally, before a battle, to get them out of the way, just as you would take off your coat to play ball. Mr. Lobster is a very curious and interesting person to hear about, sure enough, but he's nobody to fool with, I can tell you!—Esther Doolittle, in S. S. Times.

* * *

LIKE WASHINGTON.

We cannot all be Washingtons,
And have our birthdays celebrated;
But we can love the things he loved,
And we can hate the things he hated.

He loved the truth, he hated lies,
He minded when his mother taught him,
And every day he tried to do
The simple duties that it brought him.

Perhaps the reason little folks
Are sometimes great when they grow taller,
Is just because, like Washington,
They do their best when they are smaller.

—Unknown.

* * *

For the Southern Churchman.

SAND PILE SONG.

William Allen Ward.

Freckle and Dimple and Tiny and Tot
Are racing to play on the vacant lot . . .
Under the willow on Sand Pile hill
The little tin soldiers are going to drill!
And pirates will fight on a tropic isle
For a paper doll maiden's beautiful smile . . .
But beside the hill Father Time looks on
Till the children to men and women have gone.
But others shall come and dance in their place,
Beneath the old willow with childlike grace.

Classified Advertisments and Notices

All notices and advertisements, excepting positions wanted, will be inserted in this department at a rate of 20 cents per agate line each insertion. Special raes to contracts of any length. A rate of 15 cents per line is made to persons seeking positions. No advertisement accepted for less than 50 cents.

Copy for this department must be received not later than Tuesday of the week in which it is intended that the first insertion shall appear.

SPECIAL NOTICES.

CHURCH VESTMENTS.
Cathedral Studio, Church embroideries, Altar and Pulpit Hangings. Stoles from $6.50. Burse and veil from $10. Surplice from $8. Send for complete line of pure Irish linens by the yard. Silks, fringes and gold thread. Embroidered emblems ready to appy. Altar Guild Handbook, 50c.

L. V. MACKRILLE
11 W. Kirke St., Chevy Chase,
Washington, D. C.
Telephone Wisconsin 2752.

CHURCH LINEN.
FINE IRISH LINEN specially selected for Church use. 36 inches to 54 inches wide, cut any length. Sample of 12 qualities on request. Mary Fawcett Company, 812 Berkeley Avenue, Trenton, N. J.

RAZOR SHARPENER.
SHARPENS ANY STRAIGHT RAZOR, or safety razor. Guaranteed by manufacturers, and I guarantee it to please you. 50 cents per cake, or 3 cakes for $1.00. I take subscriptions for all magazines published at publishers' rates, or less. Sold by a wheel chair invalid. Edward P. Broxton, R. F. D., Blythe, Ga.

FOUNTAIN PENS.
A FOUNTAIN PEN AT A 1933 VALUE, with the Spencerian quality and smooth writing ease famous for seventy-five years. Guaranteed. Points fine and medium. Colors, gloss black, green and gold, Burgundy, blue and black, grey pearl. Price $2.00. Sold by a shut-in wheel chair invalid. Edward P. Broxton, R. F. D., Blythe, Ga.

HOUSE OF THE NAZARENE; SAINT AUGUSTINE, FLORIDA; offers rest and quiet in comfortable and pleasant surroundings. Invalids requiring nursing cannot be received, nor those with mental difficulties. Apply to Sister-in-Charge.

NOTICE.
"The Virginia History Committee" is offering to the readers of The Southern Churchman. mimeographed copies of a valuable article on Lee, originally published in the "Southern Churchman", under the caption, "Putting First Things First", which, among other things, contains remarkable tributes to the Statesmanship of Lee, by three well-known New Englanders: Gamaliel Bradford, General Morr's Schaff and Dr. A. W. Littlefield. Four cents will secure one copy of this article, and ten cents will secure three copies of it. Address Mary D. Carter, Virginia History Committee, Upperville, Virginia.

MONEY IN OLD LETTERS.—Search your old trunks and send all old envelopes used before 1880. Highest prices paid. George Hakes, Belvidere, Illinois.

MY SISTER IS A "SHUT-IN" AND would greatly appreciate orders for counterpanes and table mats, both of which she crochets beautifully and quickly and very reasonably.
MRS. FENTON NOLAND,
Beaver Dam, Va.

SITUATION WANTED.

EDUCATED WOMAN DESIRES POSITION as secretary or domestic manager, etc. Box AG, care Southern Churchman.

DEATHS

MRS. SALLIE FEILD MANN PEEBLES.

It has never been my privilege to know a more devoted wife and mother, a more loyal Christian, a more willing worker than MRS. SALLIE FEILD MANN PEEBLES, who departed this life on January 8, 1935. In her love for her family she was forever sacrificing herself for what she felt was the best interest of her husband and children. In her loyalty to her church she was always found willing to do more than her share with no thought of the inconvenience to herself. When the war period called for help she never wavered, either in subjecting herself to required restrictions, or doing her part cheerfully in the work women were privileged to do.

In her outlook on life she naturally connected the family with the church. It was not sufficient for her to give her time and strength to the physical and mental development of her children, but also to their spiritual welfare, which she properly interpreted as instilling in them loyalty to the church as the normal witness to Christ. Her religion was so real and her faith so natural that she could not conceive of a mother's duty fully done without the proper emphasis on the Soul's connection with the Christ.

Sallie Feild Mann Peebles was born in Petersburg, Virginia, November 19, 1867, of a distinguished family, being the daughter of John and Catharine Bernard Mann. She received her education at St. Paul's Female School and was married on January 10, 1894, to John Kevan Peebles, moving to Norfolk, where Mr. Peebles steadily rose in his profession until he became one of the best known architects in the South. Their early association was with St. Luke's Episcopal Church, moving their membership to St. Andrew's Church, when it was begun, in which they labored untiringly for the church's development and upbuilding. Mrs. Peebles was actively affiliated with the Woman's Auxiliary, The Guild, the Working Circle and The Women's Bible Class. During the war she added to these outside interests activity in the Red Cross and French Surgical Dressings Committee.

I shall always think of her as a friend loyal and true, living with a desire to be of service to mankind and to fulfill the purpose in life for which God created her. I would say of her, "You have been found faithful. Enter into the joy of your Lord."

MYRON B. MARSHALL.

Personal Notes

The Rev. Canon H. Adye Prichard, D. D., rector of St. Mark's Church, Mount Kisco, N. Y., is in England on a visit to his mother. While there he preached in Westminster Abbey on January 20.

The address of Bishop McKim of North Tokyo is American Church Mission, Ikebukuro, Tokyo, Japan, after March 1.

The Rev. Edward Guerry, who has recently taken charge of St. John's Church, Tappahannock, was married February 20, to Miss Hoffman in St. Paul's Church, Charleston, S. C. Mr. Guerry, with his bride will return to Tappahannock shortly.

The Rev. Charles A. Brown, after a rectorship of twenty-four years, has resigned his post at All Saints' Church, Bayside, L. I. He has been on leave of absence for some weeks, after a serious illness. It is his purpose, after further time for recuperation, to seek less arduous duties than those which he has been obliged to relinquish.

Clerical Changes.

The Rev. Richard W. Trapnell, D. D., lately of the Field Department of the National Council, has been elected to the rectorship of All Saints, Bayside, and has accepted. He will undertake his new duties at once.

The Rev. Frederick Gowenlock, rector of Grace Church, Whitestone, L. I., since 1927, has resigned and will go to New Zealand. The Rev. Ernest Sinfield, of the Diocese of Ontario, now assistant at St. George's, Flushing, has been elected to the rectorship of the Whitestone Parish, and has accepted. He has already taken charge of the parish.

Ordinations.
Priest.

The Rev. Frank Frantz Snyder was ordained to the priesthood, in the Keferstein Chapel of the Holy Spirit, Bishopscourt, Harrisburg, Pa., February 12, by Bishop Wyatt Brown. The Rev. Mr. Snyder was presented by the Ven. Harry H. Gillies, Archdeacon of Wellsboro, an dthe sermon was preached by Canon Clifford W. French. The Litany was read by the Rev. Earl M. Honaman. Dean J. Thomas Heistand and Canon Paul St. Atkins assisted the Bishop in the Holy Communion.

Deaths.
Canon Hardy.

The Rev. Francis Whittle Hardy, fifty-seven years old, Senior Canon of Christ Church Cathedral, Louisville, Ky., died at the John N. Norton Memorial Infirmary February 22, of a kidney ailment after two blood transfusions had been performed in an effort to save his life.

Stricken with intestinal influenza about two weeks ago, Canon Hardy was moved to the hospital February 17, after complications developed.

A native of Louisville he was a son of James Edward and Lucy Gilmer Davis Hardy. He received his early education in the Louisville public schools and the Gambier Military Academy, Gambier, Ohio, later attending the Virginia Theological Seminary at Alexandria. His active ministry began in 1904 when, at the age of twenty-six, he was ordained a deacon by the Rt. Rev. Lewis W. Burton and became assistant minister of St. Andrew's Episcopal Church, in which he had been brought up.

The year following the Rev. Mr. Hardy was ordained to the priesthood by Bishop Charles E. Woodcock and in 1911 left St. Andrew's to become rector of St. Stephen's Episcopal Church.

In 1917 he was named canon of the Cathedral, assuming his new duties on October 1. On the same day the Very Rev. Richard L. McCready, who had served as rector of St. Mark's Episcopal Church, was installed as dean. Both members of active Church families and friends for many years, the two men were closely associated during the years that followed as they served together the church in which their grandfathers had held offices simultaneously nearly a century earlier.

At the Cathedral the Rev. Mr. Hardy was in charge of the Church School and directed activities of various young people's organizations, including the Young People's Service League. In 1925, he founded "Camp Woodcock," an annual camp for boys at the Covered Bridge Reservation of the Boy Scouts.

During his ministry many honors were conferred upon the Rev. Mr. Hardy. He served as chairman of the Diocesan Board of Religious Education and for a number of years was secretary of the Diocesan Board of Missions. He was dean of the convocation of Louisville and chaplain of the Northton Infirmary. In 1932, he was awarded the Cross of Honor of the Or-

When answering advertisements mention this paper. Thus you will aid us in securing more advertising patronage.

A HANDBOOK

for the use of the members and friends of the Protestant Episcopal Church—

By the late Bishop Peterkin

Now in its 50th thousand.

Requests still come for this pamphlet, which is used as a Confirmation help. It can be obtained from Miss Fannie P. Brady, University, Virginia. Price, 12 for $1.00, postpaid; 100, for $5.00, express collect; single copies, 10 cents.

der of Sangrael, presented by the Episcopal Church to one person each year for "distinguished service to God and humanity."

The Rev. Mr. Hardy is survived by a brother, Lewis R. Hardy; three sisters, Mrs. Joseph M. Califf and Mrs. Walter D. Lewis, Louisville, and Mrs. Tarleton C. Hobbs, Anchorage, and fifteen nephews and nieces.

The Rev. Ernesto Arnaldo Bohrer.

Died on January 21, the Rev. Ernesto Arnaldo Bohrer, after a two months' illness, at his home in Porto Alegre, Southern Brazil.

Mr. Bohrer was connected during most of his ministry with the Southern Cross School. From 1913 until 1924, he was house master and assistant headmaster under the Rev. William M. M. Thomas. He was for two years rector of the Church of the Redeemer at Rio de Janeiro, and returned to the school as headmaster in 1927, succeeding Bishop Thomas.

Under his oversight the new Kinsolving Hall was erected, official recognition for the school obtained with government inspection, and the attendance nearly doubled. In 1933 and 1934 there were graduated classes of thirty-four and thirty, respectively.

He leaves a widow, Edith Marsh Bohrer, and two daughters, Mary and Noemy, both graduates of the Southern Cross School.

At the time of his death Mr. Bohrer was President of the Council of Advice of the District.

Wm. M. M. Thomas.

R. GEISSLER, INC.
450 SIXTH AVE. NEAR 10th ST. NEW YORK
Church Furnishings
IN CARVED WOOD AND MARBLE · BRASS · SILVER FABRICS + WINDOWS

CHOIR VESTMENTS

Cassocks, Cottas and Caps. Special low prices. Samples and prices on request. Poplin Canterbury Caps, $1.00 each. Paper Patterns for Choir and Church. Vestments for sale.

HENRY HAYTER, 8205 Riverside Drive, Box 618, Rte. 1, St. Petersburg, Fla.

Surplices, Cassocks
ETC.
FOR THE CLERGY AND CHOIR
Altar Linens, Embroideries.
Materials by the Yard, Tailoring.
J. M. HALL, INC.
174 Madison ve (Suite 702-3-4)
Bet. 33d and 34th
New York

COLDS
Creomulsion

Your own druggist is authorized to cheerfully refund your money on the spot if you are not relieved by Creomulsion.

PARKER'S HAIR BALSAM
Removes Dandruff-Stops Hair Falling
Imparts Color and Beauty to Gray and Faded Hair
60c. and $1.00 at Druggists.
Hiscox Chemical Works Patchogue, N. Y.

SONGS OF THE SPIRIT

By
MRS. GENEVIEVE SCOTT WRIGHT.

A book of inspirational verse that will make a welcome present to relative or friend.

Order through Southern Churchman.
Price, $1.00.

CONFIRMATION PAPERS

By
CANON F. E. HOWITT

1. Confirmation and Baptism.
2. Baptism and the Christian Covenant.
3. The Baptismal Covenant—Repentance.
4. The Baptismal Covenant—Faith and the Faith.
5. The Baptismal Covenant—The Faith.
6. The Baptismal Covenant—Obedience.
7. The Lord's Supper.
8. The Means of Grace.

A series of informing pamphlets compiled by Canon F. E. Howitt. They have an inestimable value in instructing those who contemplate membership in the Church, and for impressing the already confirmed with the sacredness and meaning of this holy ritual.

Price, single pamphlet, each..... 5 cents
Complete set of eight.....25 cents

Order from

SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN COMPANY
Richmond, Va.

Here's Planned Defense
AGAINST COLDS

When Colds THREATEN ...VICKS VA-TRO-NOL

At the first warning sneeze, stuffiness or nasal irritation, quick!... apply Vicks Va-tro-nol—just a few drops up each nostril. Its timely use helps to prevent many colds, and to throw off colds in their early stages.

If a Cold STRIKES ...VICKS VAPORUB

Don't experiment or take half-way measures. Rub on Vicks VapoRub—standby of two generations for relieving colds. Its direct double action—by stimulation and inhalation—helps to end a cold.

BUILD RESISTANCE TO COLDS—by following the simple health rules that are also a part of Vicks Plan for Better Control of Colds. (Full details of this clinically tested Plan are in each Vicks package.)

VICKS PLAN FOR BETTER CONTROL OF COLDS

RICHMOND'S OLDEST AND VIRGINIA'S LARGEST BANK
Established 1865.

FIRST AND MERCHANTS
National Bank of Richmond

JOHN M. MILLER, JR., President.

Capital and Surplus Five Million Dollars

Complete
Trust
Facilities

Educational

The General Theological Seminary

CHELSEA SQUARE, NEW YORK

The next Academic year begins on the last Wednesday in September

Special students admitted and Graduate Courses for graduates of other Theological Seminaries.

The requirements for admission and other particulars can be had from THE DEAN, 1 Chelsea Square, New York, N. Y.

SHENANDOAH VALLEY ACADEMY

Certificates accepted by universities, colleges, West Point, Annapolis. The Academy's experienced teachers, cultural atmosphere, limited numbers, military discipline enable it to prepare boys to succeed in college. For catalogue write: Col. B. M. Roszel, Supt., Winchester, Va.

ST. MARGARET'S SCHOOL

TAPPAHANNOCK, VIRGINIA.

A Church School for girls. Boarding Department limited to 70. College Preparatory Course and Intermediate Grades. Athletics. Very moderate cost.

Country life and simplicity without isolation. Beautiful grounds on Rappahannock River. Three dormitories for different stages.

EDITH LATANE, Headmistress.

ST. CHRISTOPHER'S

A Church Boarding and Day School
Healthful, beautiful and historic surroundings. Boarding Department limited to 50 boys. Rate, $650. Reduction to sons of clergymen and missionaries. Illustrated catalogue on request.

REV. C. G. CHAMBERLAYNE, Ph. D., LL. D., Headmaster, Richmond, Virginia.

The Virginia Theological Seminary

ALEXANDRIA, VIRGINIA

For catalogue and other information, Address THE DEAN

The Beckford School

WOODSTOCK, VIRGINIA.

A school for younger boys. Second grade through Junior High School. On modern farm in Shenandoah Valley. Summer camp. Limited enrollment. Fifty dollars monthly.

EDMUND BURKE WHELAN, Headmaster.

The Bishop Payne Divinity School

The accredited Seminary of the Church for training colored men for the ministry. The curriculum covers the full course for Deacons and Priest's Orders. The degree of D. D. awarded.

For catalogue and information, apply to Rev. F. G. Ribble, M. A., D. D., Dean Petersburg, Va.

The Episcopal Theological School

Cambridge, Massachusetts.

Affiliated with Harvard University.
Dean H. B. Washburn, 3 Mason Street.

THOUGHTS for the THOUGHTFUL

The death of self involves a burial —and a resurrection.—Raven.

"Our freedom is bought at the price of mistakes.'"

Eternal life viewed from its human side is usually summed up in the word, "prayer."—Selected.

A Mohammedan in speaking of the Gospels, said that he liked the historical parts, but that the words of Jesus made him tremble.—Mott.

Captain, what are these thorns,
What is this cross you bear?
This is my Standard, brother,
And this the crown I wear.
We storm the heights of Calvary. . . .
Will you be with us there?"

It is when we see religion no longer as consolation for our weakness, but as a task for our strength that it begins really to turn interesting—no longer an indulgence for our spare hours, but a thing worth the gift of a life.—Dr. W. C. Bell.

To endure—through weariness, misunderstanding, hindrance and failure; to endure—through loss and doubt and shock and monotony; to endure—with cheerfulness when the heart is heavy, with trust when the light fails, with dogged determination when there seems no way to go on—there is to conquer.

I have never seen a savage whom civilization without Christianity had succeeded in civilizing.—James Chalmers of New Guinea.

Sweet Spirit, entering where no eye can see,
Reach this poor heart in all its waiting need,
And like the thorn and vine my life shall be,
When Thou its roots shall feed.

Art Thou, my Saviour, really here?
Yes, I believe;
Wide is my soul with trust sincere
Gifts to receive.
Never a dream at midnight hour
Fills heart more full with bliss divine;
Gratitude and peace and power,
With hope are mine:
Lord, I believe.

—Anne R. Nesom.

Human society means Smith and me —and God; just that and nothing more; human progress means making better the relations betwen Smith and me—and God; and human good means the happiness which Smith and I may perhaps be able to find together, with the help of God.—Urwick.

Protestant Episcopal Divinity School of Philadelphia

Christ Church School

MIDDLESEX COUNTY, VA.

A country school for boys; well located. College preparatory, moderate cost. Personal attention; scholarships. Apply to Wm. D. Smith, Jr., Headmaster(for information, Christchurch, Va.

The Ewart's Cafeteria

EXCELLENT FOOD
REASONABLE PRICES

Richmond, Va.
112-114 N. 5th St.
Norfolk, Va.
112-114 Market St.
Washington, D. C.
522 13th, N. W.

FLOWERS BY WIRE EVERYWHERE

Mosmiller Florist

115 E Main St.
424 E. Grace St
RICHMOND, VA.

Royal Laundry

and
BAND BOX DRY CLEANERS
UNEXCELLED LAUNDRY
and Cleaning Service
Richmond, Virginia.

L. T. CHRISTIAN

FUNERAL DIRECTOR

Boulevard-Park and Patterson Avenue
Richmond, Va.
Office Never Closed
Prices to meet depressed conditions

Edwin S. Gorham, Inc.

Publishers and Booksellers.
Established 1900.

Church Literature and Art, Bibles, Prayer Books and Hymnals, Devotional Books, Parish Requisites.

Catalogues and Information on request.

18 West 45th Street, New York.

Some Important Facts in English Church History

EXAMINED AND REVIEWED

By

REV. W. P. WITSELL, D. D.

This is an illuminating and instructive review of the history of the Episcopal Church in England from the earliest records, with commentaries on the book with the above title compiled by the Rev. C. L. Wells, D. D., of Sewanee, Tenn.

As a digest of the records of the establishment and growth of the Church; its maintenance and continuity of existence as an independent religious body amid the vicissitudes of early English politics, and efforts of outside interference, this review affords a valuable fund of information to churchmen.

In pamphlet form,
Price, 25 cents
For sale by
SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN CO.
Richmond, Va.

DESIGNED FOR THE PROMOTION OF PRACTICAL PIETY, THE DIFFUSION OF RELIGIOUS AND GENERAL INTELLIGENCE, AND THE MAINTENANCE OF THE PRINCIPLES OF THE PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL CHURCH

Southern Churchman

DOMINUS ✱ FRUSTRA ✱ NISI 1835

Vol. 100. RICHMOND, VA., MARCH 9, 1935. No. 10.

LENT

Lord! Who throughout these forty days
For us didst fast and pray,
Teach us with Thee to mourn our sins,
And close by Thee to stay.

As Thou with Satan didst contend,
And didst the victory win,
Oh, give us strength in Thee to fight,
In Thee to conquer sin.

As Thou didst hunger bear and thirst,
So teach us, gracious Lord,
To die to self, and chiefly live
By Thy most holy Word.

And through these days of penitence,
And through Thy Passion-tide,
Yea, evermore, in life and death,
Jesus, with us abide!

Abide with us, that so this life
Of suffering overpast,
An Easter of unending joy
We may attain at last!

—Mrs. C. F. Hernaman, 1873.

Personal Notes

Mr. J. Churchill Cooke celebrated his ninety-sixth birthday, February 20, 1935. Mr. Cooke is in good health and an active worker in Church affairs, having represented his Church in King William County, Virginia, in the Council of the Diocese for over a decade. Mr. Cooke has been a loyal friend and subscriber for many years to the Southern Churchman, and we extend him our hearty congratulations.

Mr. John H. Cooke, Treasurer and Business Manager of the Southern Churchman, who has been confined to his home for several weeks past, is now improving, and well on the road to recovery.

Miss Olive Meacham, who has recently returned from the Julia Emery School, Bromley, Liberia, has been engaged to make thirty-five addresses in the Diocese of Rhode Island during Lent.

Calls Accepted.

The Rev. Charles H. Collett, a General Secretary of the Field Department of the National Council, has accepted a call to the rectorship of Christ and St. Michael's Church, Philadelphia, and will take charge on the first Sunday in April.

Mr. Collett's acceptance of the call will fill a vacancy, which has existed since last July, following the death of the Rev. Dr. Gilbert E. Pember. The announcement was made to the congregation by Dr. Walter R. Andrus, Chairman of the Vestry. Christ Church and St. Michael's represents a merger of two of the older churches of Germantown, which was effected in June of 1932, following the retirement of the Rev. Dr. Charles H. Arndt as rector of Christ Church and the election of Dr. Pember, who had been rector of St. Michael's.

Mr. Collett, in accepting the Germantown rectorship returns to the Diocese of Pennsylvania after an absence of about twelve years, having formerly served on the staff of the Bucks County Missions under the present Bishop of Vermont, the Rt. Rev. Samuel B. Booth, the latter having been called to the Episcopate while in charge of the rural work in Bucks County.

Mr. Collett is a native of Canada, and a graduate of Trinity College, Hartford, Conn., and the Berkeley Divinity School, New Haven, Conn. Following his ordination in 1916, he became a Master in the famous St. Paul's School, Concord, N. H., where he taught Greek and American History for three years, and also served as a coach in athletics. From St. Paul's School he went to St. Stephen's Church, Boston, as Vicar. This was the church in which the late Bishop Brent, one-time Bishop of the Philippine Islands and later Chief Chaplain on the staff of General Pershing in the World War began his ministry. After three years in this work, Mr. Collett came to the Bucks County Missions. In 1924, he volunteered for missionary service and was sent to North Dakota where he took charge of St. Paul's Church, Grank Forks, and, in addition, worked among the students at the University of North Dakota.

From North Dakota, after six years of service, he was called by the National Council to serve as a General Secretary in the Field Department.

The Rev. W. Leigh Ribble, rector of Gibson Parish, Standardsville, Virginia, and Editor of the Virginia Churchman, has accepted a call to Falls Church, Falls Church, Va., as effective March 1.

The Rev. Goodrich R. Fenner, acting Dean of St. Matthew's Cathedral, Laramie, Wyoming, has accepted his election to the rectorship of St. Andrew's Church, Kansas City, Missouri. He will begin his new work the first Sunday after Easter.

The appointment of the Rev. William Tullberg, formerly pastor of St. Ansgarius' Church, Chicago, to be assistant pastor of Emmanuel Church, Rockford, Ill., is announced. He will minister particularly to the Swedish people of Rockford.

ORDINATIONS.

Priest.

The Rev. Eugene L. Avery, in charge of St. Stephen's Church, Morganton, and other colored missions, was advanced to the priesthood by the Rt. Rev. Robert E. Gribbin, D. D., Bishop of Western North Carolina, at St. Mattias' Church, Asheville, on Sexagesima Sunday, February 24. The candidate was presented by the Ven. James T.

(Continued on page 23.)

CONTENTS

Personal Notes	2
Editorials	3
Church and World Problems As Others See Them	4
The Thousandfold Page—Archdeacon Neve	5
Preparation for Prayer—Rev. Henry E. Batcheller	6
The History and Meaning of Lent—Rev. Edward Rochie Hardy, Jr.	7
A Chaplain's Views—Rt. Rev. Jas. E. Freeman, D. D.	8
Child Labor and the Churches—Miriam Keeler	9
A New New Testament—George William Brown	11
Book Reviews	12
Y. P. S. L.—Rev. R. F. Blackford	13
Church Intelligence	14
Family Department	18
Children's Department	20
Thoughts for the Thoughtful	24

Southern Churchman

SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN COMPANY,
Mayo Memorial Church House,
110 West Franklin Street,
Richmond, Va.

Officers.

President, RT. REV. H. ST. GEORGE TUCKER, D. D.
Vice-President, E. OTTO N. WILLIAMS.
Secretary-Treasurer, MR. JOHN H. COOKE.

Board of Directors.

RT. REV. H. ST. GEORGE TUCKER, D. D.
REV. CHURCHILL J. GIBSON, D. D.
REV. GEORGE P. MAYO, D. D.
REV. CHARLES W. SHEERIN.
MR. CARL H. NOLTING.
MR. ALEXANDER W. WEDDELL.
MR. E. RANDOLPH WILLIAMS.
MR. LANGBOURNE M. WILLIAMS, JR.
MISS SUSANNE C. WILLIAMS.

Voting Trustees.

RT. REV. ROBERT CARTER JETT, D. D.
RT. REV. H. ST. GEORGE TUCKER, D. D.
MR. JAMES M. BALL, JR.
MR. ROBERT B. TUNSTALL.
MR. LANGBOURNE M. WILLIAMS, JR.

Editors.

REV. CHARLES W. SHEERIN.....Editor
REV. F. W. NEVE, D. D., Associate Editor
MRS. CONRAD H. GOODWIN, Associate Editor
REV. SAMUEL B. CHILTON, Associate Editor
MRS. R. TATE IRVINE.....News Editor
JOHN H. COOKE..Secretary and Manager

Entered at the Post Office in Richmond, Va., as second-class mail matter.

SUBSCRIPTION PRICE.

$3.00 a year in advance. To the Clergy, $2.00. Six months, $1.50. Total subscriptions, three months, 50 cents; 10 cents a copy. Foreign postage, $1.00 additional.

For the convenience of subscribers subscriptions are continued at expiration unless otherwise ordered. Notice of renewal, discontinuance or change of address should be sent two weeks before the date they go into effect.

RECEIPT OF PAYMENT is shown in about two weeks by change of date on address label. If date is not properly extended after each payment, notify us promptly. No receipt for payment will be sent.

Notice post office address. The exact post office address to which we are directing the paper at the time of writing MUST ALWAYS BE GIVEN. Our mailing list is arranged by post office and not alphabetically.

Make all checks and money orders payable to the Southern Churchman, and not to an individual.

ADVERTISEMENTS.—Rates quoted on request. For classified see head of that department.

Representatives wanted in each Parish; liberal commissions.

News concerning the Church at large always welcome.

CONFIRMATION PAPERS

By
CANON F. E. HOWITT

1. Confirmation and Baptism.
2. Baptism and the Christian Covenant.
3. The Baptismal Covenant—Repentance.
4. The Baptismal Covenant—Faith and the Faith.
5. The Baptismal Covenant—The Faith.
6. The Baptismal Covenant—Obedience.
7. The Lord's Supper.
8. The Means of Grace.

A series of informing pamphlets compiled by Canon F. E. Howitt. They have an inestimable value in instructing those who contemplate membership in the Church, and for impressing the already confirmed with the sacredness and meaning of this holy ritual.

Price, single pamphlet, each..... 5 cents
Complete set of eight.....25 cents

Order from

SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN COMPANY
Richmond, Va.

MURPHY'S HOTEL
RICHMOND VIRGINIA

An old Richmond landmark that has kept the pace. In the heart of that portion of the city most interesting to the traveler.

Write

A. GERALD BUSH, Manager.

SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN

Catholic for every truth of God; Protestant against every error of man.

EDITORIALS

Vol. 100. RICHMOND, VA., MARCH 9, 1935. No. 10.

Dogfish and Cod.

A favorite illustration of the late Dr. Cosby Bell, was a description of the New England fisherman, who went to sea to bring back fresh cod. Their habit was to place a few dogfish in the catch to chase the cod about and thus keep them more lively until the harbor was reached. The brilliant professor was wont to tell the tale and then say, "Gentlemen, dogfish are needed, but don't be a dogfish."

We have a full quota of dogfish in the ranks of the Church. Our only trouble might be that in their zeal for chasing after those who otherwise might be stale in message, we might mistake their intepretations as real evidences of leadership. It would be much better to keep them in the clever roles in which they now act.

Fathers Colony and Bell would seem to be the most prominent in this faternity at present, and we think they both have done a great deal of good. For one thing they have called to the attention of the more ordinary clergy the fact that in the present day there is no room for laziness in the ministry. They have had a few remarks to make about vestrymen in general, that might bring thoughts to their otherwise self-satisfied heads, and in a number of ways have made certain people think that otherwise might not think.

Of course the great strength which the dogfish uses is the old argument of half truth which has long been characterized as the greatest falsehood. Father Colony for instance adds up the "communion alms"—a small item in any church as a rule—and gives that as the sum total which a great diocese gave towards social service in general. Others have picked on a few old city churches with endowments that long ago passed usefulness as active parish churches, and use them and their clergy as the argument for proving laziness rampant on luxurious stipends. But all have made us think.

The ideal which these catholic churchmen are looking towards does not always seem clear. "281" has often come under their observation as containing all that is wrong in attitude, but again they probably keep "281" on its toes and that is a good result.

But the object of these remarks is to plead for the average codfish in the ministry. He is not lazy, he is not over-fed and he does not merely lick the boots of the rich vestrymen. Perhaps he would if the dogfish were eliminated.

Post-graduate Work for Clergy.

The medical profession is away ahead of the other two "learned professions" in providing post-graduate work for its members. It would be well for us in the Church to consider better ways and means to provide such training for the men who have the care of the churches. Only too many of our clergy are struggling against the problems of a very different world with the methods learned at a Seminary twenty or more years ago.

This is not because attempts have not been made to bring the clergy to Summer schools and institutes of one kind or another. The College of Preachers with its generous endowments has made a noble effort to fit into this need of the Church some sort of remedy. But for the most part such schools have been guided by good idealists, often men long since retired and not acquainted with the problems of actual parish work in a very modern and even depressed world. Theological interpretations with an occasional course given by some Seminary professor on homiletics have been the rule. Modern parish organization has been completely neglected in the average curriculum of the clergy school and while courses on prayer and meditation have at times been given by men generally far removed from active work in the world, little has been done to give the parochial clergy an inkling of how to teach their people these vital subjects.

We understand that The Forward Movement is having carefully prepared outlines for such courses studied by groups of men and women who know the subjects. These outlines should be ready for the various Summer Schools and to those who are in charge of such programs we suggest that this work of The Forward Movement be given careful consideration. There is only too little real post-graduate work being done by our clergy.

* * *

Ten Years of The Cathedral Age.

Sometimes we have arguments with our friends of "The Churchman" as to who is the older. But we know we are old, and so through our eyeglasses and over our long beard we can offer congratulations to "The Cathedral Age" which in Eastertide will be ten years old.

"The Cathedral Age" has helped us all by giving us

(Continued on page 11.)

Church and World Problems as Others See Them

Adequate Measures Must Be Devised.

The Living Church, March 2, 1935.

The final blow to the prestige of the League and the World Court has been given by the vote of the United States Senate which again has refused American membership despite the recommendation of every President since Woodrow Wilson and the widespread feeling in this country that the United States can only do her part in the preservation of world peace by actively participating in the agencies designed to provide a substitute for war. The Senate vote is a definite indication of the influence of such short-sighted patriotteers as William Randolph Hearst, Huey Long, and Fr. Coughlin. Their power does not augur well for the future of America.

In the face of the rejection of the World Court, the League of Nations Association announces the following threefold program of action:

(1) To support more vigorously the cooperation which our government can give the League by executive order; and to support such suggestions as our government makes to the League in the way of control of the private manufacture of arms.

(2) To urge a policy in the Pacific that will avoid conflict with Japan; to urge continuation of the munitions investigation, and to cooperate with all peace organizations for the universal reduction of military expenditures.

(3) To carry on the campaign of political education by continuing the movement to state the terms on which the United States would join the League. It anticipates those terms to be an understanding that our obligations under the covenant are consistent with our obligations under the Kellogg Pact, and that the United States assumes no obligation to use force or apply sanctions without its own consent expressed through its regular channel.

As a practical matter of fact, American cooperation with the League of Nations has been increasingly close during recent years. During the Harding administration this country did not even answer official notes from the League Secretariat. During the Coolidge administration such notes were acknowledged but not answered. During the Hoover administration they were answered and some measure of "unofficial" cooperation was given in certain non-controversial fields. During the Roosevelt administration there has been increasingly close official cooperation between the United States and the League of Nations in an increasingly large number of fields. Such successes as the League of Nations has been able to achieve—and they have been greater than the public is generally aware—have been accomplished through the moral support and a measure of cooperation on the part of the United States. It is likely that such cooperation will continue in spite of the Senate vote on the World Court.

But if the peace of the world is to be maintained and the warlike spirit of Europe and the Far East checked, more adequate measures must be devised and put into effect very promptly. Without the immediate accomplishment of some adequate and effective substitute for war, a new world conflict cannot long be avoided.

Souls or Money?

The Record, February 1, 1935.

A group of Liverpool Evangelical clergy and laity has had a most vital topic for discussion before them this last week. It can be summed up in the form of a question, "Has the Church to concentrate on preaching the Gospel and the saving of souls, or has it to spend increasing time and energy in coaxing its members to give more and still more money?" Which has it to be? The local representatives of the Church Missionary Society met together to be urged to increase the contributions of Liverpool Diocese to C.M.S.; these persons turned away from their conclave, several of them to meet again in the same building, as contributors to the Church Pastoral-Aid Society, to consider how Liverpool can best help in celebrating the centenary of C.P.A., and especially to ask themselves how South-West Lancashire can recover its former glory as a splendid giver, in terms of money, to the Church's greatest home mission society. Again, some of these same individuals, as members of the Church of England Temperance Society and of the Diocesan Board of Finance, were summoned to meet in the same octave of days to listen to appeals for increased support of the Church's temperance work and to plot and plan ways and means of finding at least £150,000 for building or renovating church day schools in the Liverpool diocese. What has to be done? It is money, and again money!

There are Souls to Save; There is Money!

There is a strong and growing feeling that the Church needs a determined, clarion call, first, for the reconsecration of its communicant members, and, secondly, to advance into the open among the tens of thousands of souls, not atheistic, but simply indifferent believers in God who do not realize their responsibility to God and to their neighbors. Despite trade depression, there is plenty of money in and about Liverpool. The annual report of the Penny Savings Bank (just to hand) shows this, and so do the revelations of the money handled by the local "football poolers," by the brewers, by the ever-increasing cinema owners, and by the "bookies" on the dog tracks!

The Challenge to Evangelicals!

Evangelicals, as such, are still the dominant party in Liverpool diocese—at any rate, so far as numbers are concerned! There is no reason why they should not be in influence and activity. Why not? The "signs of the times" are that the moment has come when the "foolish differences among Evangelicals" should cease; that they should come together; formulate a common "forward" policy of evangelism; and then out into the open to make the "welkin ring with the joyful news of sins forgiven, of hell subdued, and peace with heaven!" If this were done, the problems about money would not exist. Can no one take a lead in the Liverpool which once was the pride of Evangelicals? Nay, at heart England is Evangelical—who will lead England?

The German Foreign Missions.

The Record, February 1, 1935.

We have now learned that the British missionary societies have agreed to appeal for a loan to help the German Foreign Missions in the paralyzing condition to which their own government has reduced them. As we stated last week, German foreign missions ordinarily send abroad about £300,000 a year, but for some months now they have been refused leave to send any money out of the country, because the Government's financial transactions have resulted in a shortage of foreign currency. The German societies ask for loans to enable them to carry on. They

(Continued on page 11.)

THE THOUSANDFOLD PAGE

ARCHDEACON FREDERICK W. NEVE, D. D.

Some Greater Aspects of Christanity

Part Four.

We have two separate outlooks possible to us. There is the outlook upon the world around us with the vast universe which modern Astronomy has made known to us. There is also the outlook within upon a still vaster and more wonderful universe than the other—the Spiritual world. This, as we have seen in a former article, is the only real world, that is, the only permanent unchangeable one. The physical universe, although open and visible to our sense of sight, is entirely out of our reach and, therefore, whatever it may contain, so far as natural resources are concerned, is too distant from us for such resources to be available.

The Acessibility of the Spiritual World.

This is not the case, however, with the spiritual world, since we are really nearer to that than we are to the other, and have the means given us to enter into the closest kind of communion with the reality it reveals to us. We can, whenever we will, draw near to God, our Heavenly Father, through His Son, Jesus Christ, and gain from Him not only untold blessings for ourselves, but also for the world around us. Thus we are told, "If any man lack wisdom let him ask of God that giveth to all men liberally and upbraideth not: and it shall be given him." St. James 1:5. This would seem to imply that all the wisdom needed to understand and make use of the life with which God has endowed us, is at our disposal, if we will but ask for it. There can be no other source from which this higher wisdom may be obtained than the all-wise God Himself, who is, we are assured, willing to share His wisdom with us. Perhaps there is nothing more needed by men of the present day than true wisdom, that is, the wisdom which is from above, and yet how few are really seeking for it earnestly at its truest and highest source.

The Gift of Spiritual Power.

Then, too, it is the same with power, not mere physical energy but spiritual, the highest and most effective kind of power which God has made known to us. It is said: "Christ the power of God and the wisdom of God." This shows that Christ is the medium or channel through which these two transcendent gifts are made available to us. Christ Himself said to His disciples before His departure from this world:—"All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth. . . . And lo, I am with you alway even unto the end of the world." This means that Christ's presence with us is assured, and also that His power is something which we can share if we are seeking to do His Will.

The Church's Equipment for Service.

It would seem, therefore, that Church has an equipment which should enable her to be a greater blessing to the world than any other agency, not excepting Natural Science itself. If the Church would but rely upon the spiritual resources made accessible to her in the spiritual world, she would be the principal instrument in the furtherance of human progress, and nothing could prevent her from advancing and gaining victories all the time. The very prevalent idea that we must give our chief attention to the reconciliation of religion with Natural Science is an unfortunate mistake, since Natural Science never stands still, but is always moving on to new ground. Even if it were possible to bring about a reconciliation between the two at the present time, which is extremely doubtful, in ten or twenty years such reconciliation would be out of date. The Christian Church would be in a far better position to meet and deal with Natural Science if she would but work on parallel lines with her rival and seek diligently to develop her own special resources. For they are based upon that eternal reality which both philosophy and Natural Science have hitherto sought after, but in vain.

Christianity as a Guide to Reality.

Reality is what the world most needs but cannot find in its physical environment. Christianity, however, claims to have access to it and to be able to produce evidence to substantiate this claim. This, then, is its true business and to allow itself to be drawn off to follow some other quest is really betraying its trust. Christianity can prove that it is in constant communication with Reality, and as we have already seen, the divine wisdom and power are not only accessible but available for use in bestowing blessings upon mankind, which cannot be obtained in any other way. This is the work which we Christians should set our hand to without delay. "Seek and ye shall find," are the words of Christ, and we have His additional assurance, "For every one that seeketh findeth."

Research Work in the Spiritual World.

There are thousands upon thousands of our fellowmen and women who are doing research work in order to wrest from Nature her hidden treasures for the benefit of mankind. It would be interesting on the other hand to know how many are carrying on research work in the spiritual world by drawing from it the treasures it contains, and which would, if brought to light, so immensely benefit humanity. We have yet to see how Nature herself can be raised to a higher level by directing her laws and forces towards spiritual ends, and how the world could be transformed by bringing the minds of men generally to realize and understand that Christ's law of service points out the King's Highway to the universal good of mankind.

Henry Ford, in the American Magazine, as quoted in the Reader's Digest for March, said:—"There will be more scientific progress in the next twenty-five years than there has been in the last thousand years." The present writer some years ago wrote as follows:—"The Church stands now pretty much where the world stood before the great sources of physical energy were developed. She has scarcely touched as yet the illimitable stores of spiritual energy which God has placed at her disposal." If the Christian Church would really wake up and seek diligently to develop the resources of the Spiritual world with the same faith and courage as exhibited by Henry Ford, Christianity would leap forward and do more for humanity in a single generation than Natural Science has done or is ever likely to do.

Preparation for Prayer

By the Rev. Henry E. Batcheller.

When the demand came to me that I write a short article on the subject of "Preparation for Prayer," my first reaction was one of elation, for this is a subject dear to my heart, because I have discovered that the great defect in my own spiritual life of former days was that I had been rushing into my periods of devotion, precipitatedly, without making due preparation before beginning to pray. Like many other people, I had just knelt down and launched forth into words unweighed. The result had been a stunted prayer life, and a flaccid piety which failed me, sadly, in periods of crisis. I know that my experience is not an isolated one.

I shall not mention my other reactions. Just believe, please, that I undertake this task of writing, not as an expert, but as one who desires to become as "a little child," willing to do my little bit, prayerfully hoping it will help someone, somewhat.

Often I have chosen for my daily meditation these words: "Lord, teach us how to pray." More and more do I become convinced, when listening to many who undertake to lead in corporate devotions, that we still need, after nineteen hundred years of life under the influence of Christianity, to get down on our knees and humbly ask the same favor of our Blessed Master: "Lord, teach us how to pray," because many Christians have not yet learned! And, for this reason, I know that many people have been disappointed in God and have turned away from Him.

How many of the prayers we hear, either extempore or liturgical, bear much resemblance to the Lord's Prayer, either in their spiritual conception or in their linguistic character? Some of our prayers sound like spiritual shopping lists. Others sound as though they were just sermonettes for a human audience, and not for God. The note of worshipful adoration, the evidence of a surrender to the gracious will and direction of our Heavenly Father, and the marks of an unselfish concern for all of God's people are almost wholly lacking, usually. Is this not because we have not thought through the subject of Prayer, and have failed to discover that, before we begin to pray, we must get into the right spirit of prayer, through making a properly adequate preparation for our prayer?

Making a proper preparation before praying is no simple task, especially for the novice. Certain mental muscles must be strengthened; certain spiritual habits must be formed and developed, I find.

First, it seems to me, I must know myself better, as an individual apart; then, I must understand myself as a citizen of this world—as a social being; and finally, I must have a right conception of myself as one of the children in the whole family of God. It is only in this way, I find, that I can understand my part in God's scheme for the establishment and maintenance of His Kingdom on earth. Such knowledge and understanding can come only through a sane and a thorough self-examination. I must not compare myself with other men, as did the Pharisee, because that method brings spiritual disaster. I must strip my mind of all self-deception by comparing myself, as I am, with that Noble Life, Jesus the Christ. Here is the gateway of approach.

The second step in preparation for prayer may well be a short but conscientious meditation. A meditation may be built up on some text out of our daily Bible reading, such as "What-so-ever He sayeth unto thee, do it"; "For God so loved the world . . ."; "Ye are My friends"; "I am the Vine and ye are the branches," etc.; or, some subject may be taken, such as "The Power of Love"; "The Grace of Our Lord Jesus (the) Christ"; "Why Did God Make Me?" "The Covenant of Baptism"; "The Spiritual Food of the Most Precious Body and Blood of Our Lord, Jesus (the) Christ," etc. The three objectives are: (1) What do I think of it in relation to Christ; (2) How do I feel about it, in relation to Christ, and (3) What shall I do about it, for Christ's sake? Nothing, I find, so clears my mind and exalts my soul before I begin to pray as does Meditation. In fact, a proper meditation is, actually, prayer. I can no longer conceive of prayer without meditation. We may call it the path of approach. The Church of today is awakening to a fuller consciousness of the value of meditation.

The third important step in preparation, after getting into a devotional physical posture for prayer, is to realize the actual Presence of God. And, God must be real to us! I am not going to pray to a "Divine Providence," to a "Controlling Force," to a "Supreme Mind of the Universe," or to any of those queer things which word-loving people like to play with. I am going to pray to a real God—Our Heavenly Father! He is not my Father because He made me, merely; He is my Heavenly Father because I belong to Him, and because He cares enough about me to be aware of me far more than I am aware of the child I have helped to bring into the world. Through my imperfect paternity I get some understanding of that wonderful Divine Paternity of God. I have need of the Heavenly Father, and I am convinced that He needs me—even me. We will draw together, then, and converse in prayer. I shall speak to Him, and try to hear His voice as He speaks to me. "Lord, speak for Thy servant heareth."

> "God is everywhere;
> But, unless I seek Him somewhere,
> I shall find Him nowhere."

So, He is to be found here, through the medium of prayer.

It is not that I am going to ask Him for a lot of things I think I need for myself and for my small circle of friends and relatives. I am going to do my part, through prayer, in bringing myself—my whole being—into as complete a union with the mind, the heart, and the purpose of God as I possibly can. I will seek to ascend as far as I can to where God may be found (outside the realm of the things earth-earthy), knowing that He will condescend and meet me on that level beyond which I can not ascend because of my finite limitations and imperfections. Then, I shall know how to cooperate, and I shall desire to cooperate in God's plan for mankind, according to His Will, for His Will will have become my will.

So, having given myself a thorough self-examination, and having risen above the mire of the world through meditation upon holy concerns, and having realized the glorious Presence of the Heavenly Father, I feel that I am now ready to pray to a Personal God, in faith, in hope, and in love; and in no uncertainty when the dark hours of crisis come, which I can not understand, and which I cannot combat in my own strength alone, but which I can bear with a larger measure of cheerful acceptance.

The History and Meaning of Lent

By The Reverend Edward Rochie Hardy, Jr.

The oldest element in the Church year is the Easter festival. Combining the traditions of the Hebrew Passover with the commemoration of the Resurrection, it has been observed certainly "from the apostles' times" as the greatest day in the Christian calendar. Since Good Friday came before Easter, it early seemed natural to prepare for the festival by a period of fasting. By the second century it became generally customary to observe the "days when the bridegroom was taken away" as strict fasts. St. Irenaeus tells us that several customs existed—some fasted for one day, some for two, some for more, some for a period of forty hours. (Eusebius, Church History, v. 24). By a natural consideration of appropriateness Easter came to be the usual time for baptisms—the time for new Christians to be buried with Christ to arise with him to newness of life. Since most candidates for baptism were adults a period of some weeks before Easter was set apart for their special preparation. Traces of this system still remain in our Prayer Book—in the collect of the Third Sunday after Easter (for those admitted "into the fellowship of Christ's religion") and in the gospel for the Third Sunday in Lent (on the casting out of devils, a suitable lesson for those about to be redeemed from paganism).

So, by the third century, the period before Easter, as yet unnamed, had two special observances—fasting and instruction. In some places the strict fast of a few days had been replaced by a period of abstinence over one or two weeks, or by scattered days of fasting over a similar period. In the fourth century this pre-Easter period came to be known as the "forty days" (in Greek "tessaracost," in Latin "Quadragesima"). The Church historian Socrates (v. 22) mentions that the name was used everywhere, while both the intensity and the length of the period of fasting differed. The name was probably suggested partly by the forty-day periods mentioned in the Bible (Moses on Mount Sinai, Elijah on the way to Horeb, our Lord in the wilderness). The term "pentecost" was at this time commonly given to the whole festal period of fifty days from Easter to Whitsunday, which made a somewhat shorter preparatory fast seem appropriate. In many places, especially in the west, those who were subjected to public penance engaged in devotional exercises during Lent, and were received back into the Church on Maundy Thursday with appropriate ceremonies. Preachers from about the fifth century begin to suggest to all Christians at this time the need of repentance. This is the third source of the institution of Lent.

From St. Augustine and his successors, the English Church received the calendar which was used in the Diocese of Rome. At this time (i. e., about 600 A. D.) Lent consisted of six weeks. The thirty-six days of fasting (excluding Sundays) were regarded by some as thus being a tithe of the whole year devoted to repentance. Before long, however, four days more were added, to make up the exact number of forty days of the fast. On the day which thus became the "head of the fast" (caput ieiunii) the public penitents were formally excluded from the church, in sackcloth and ashes. Hence the name Ash Wednesday. Owing to the dangers of the barbarian invasions, special services were appointed for the three Sundays before Lent, which became part of the permanent liturgy. Hence we still pray in the collects for Septuagesima and Sexagesima for deliverance from our enemies. The thought of the spiritual warfare has by a natural process replaced the original occasion of these days. In the Greek Church a strict fast was observed for the six weeks of Lent, including Sundays. The fast excluded not only meat, but also meat products (butter, cheese, eggs, etc.). Later a lesser fast, from meat only, was instituted for the preceding week. From these customs our Quinquagesima is called in Greek "off-meat Sunday," and the First Sunday in Lent "cheese Sunday." For Septuagesima and Sexagesima pre-Lenten gospels were selected, from which they derive their Greek names of "Pharisee and Publican Sunday" and "Prodigal Son Sunday." The origin of the Latin names we use is obscure. Quinuagesima (from 50) is fifty days before Easter; Septuagesima (from 70) seems to have been suggested by some thought of the Babylonian captivity as a parallel to our penitential period.

During the Middle Ages many customs grew up around the Lenten season, both liturgical and popular. After vespers of the Saturday before Septuagesima the word Alleluia was left out of the service. At that vesper service a "farewell to Alleluia" was taken—sometimes by repeating the word many times, sometimes by a special hymn for the occasion. Our hymn, "Alleluia, song of gladness," was one of those written for this purpose. With the growth of private confession the stress of Ash Wednesday and Lenten penance generally was shifted from those subject to public penance to all Christians. From the making of confessions the day before Ash Wednesday received its English name of Shrove Tuesday. The forty days were generally observed as days of abstinence from meat. Human nature produced the carnival—special festivities just before Lent began. But at least the mediaeval merry-makers were prepared to fast as well as to feast, which few of those who keep carnival today ever do. In the Latin languages the word for Lent is derived from Quadragesima; in German it is Fastenzeit, from fasting. Our English word comes from an Anglo-Saxon word for spring. With the old "clean Lent" Lenten services began in mediaeval English churches. Statues and pictures were veiled, Te Deum and Gloria in Excelsis left out of the services, dull-colored vestments worn. And so the Church swept on to the majestic rites of Holy Week and Easter.

At the Reformation the liturgical churches (Anglican and Lutheran) retained Lent in their calendars. In England the strict observance of the forty days of abstinence continued for some time. In Shakespeare's day, for instance, meat could be bought during Lent only from a bootleg butcher. The English Prayer Book expresses a desire that the ancient discipline of public penance during Lent might be restored. Pending this, it appoints for Ash Wednesday, in place of the ceremony of imposition of ashes, "A Commination, or Denouncing of God's Anger and Judgments against Sinners." We have omitted the denunciations of this service, while retaining the beautiful prayers which it contains in our Penitential Office for Ash Wednesday. By the eighteenth century little survived of Lenten observance except a general feeling that Lent was a period of gloom. The revival of life in our Church through the Evangelical and Tractarian Movements made people take Lent seriously once more, and led to the Lenten services, meetings, reading lists, and so forth, which we are familiar with. In the last few years the non-liturgical churches have come increasingly to see the value of such a period of devotion and to make use of it.

It is not the purpose of this article to defend the institution of Lent. Its value is sufficiently attested by its retention in the Church over so long a period. But the history of Lent, as we have just surveyed it,

(Continued on page 8.)

A Chaplain's Views

By the Right Reverend James E. Freeman, D. D., LL. D., D. C. L., Bishop of Washington.

Bishop Freeman.

A chaplain dealing with young men in one of the Civilian Conservation Corps Camps gives us his opinions concerning these lads, their tastes and aptitudes. His comments are worthy of large consideration. He says: "The C. C. C. is, whether intended so or not, a colossal effort to attack the problems of the post-adolescent boy, and there is much that the Church in general can learn from the religious activities of these camps." Studying these boys he goes on to say: "It may be true enough that males are gregarious at all ages, but the gang instinct shows itself most between seventeen and twenty-one. That explains the tendency of boys in the camps to pull for their own crowd. They gang together and go to chapel when a few of them start the way. They do not care about denominational lines." He then speaks of the influence the gang spirit exercises in their games and pastimes and the utter freedom from class consciousness and distinctions, of those things that tend to create divisions and classifications. It is this observation that leads him to believe that, "in dealing with boys too much emphasis upon denominational differences must be avoided."

This chaplain has a fine conception of his duties and with excellent judgment he is bringing his ministry to the lads in a way that is acceptable to them and designed to strengthen in them those moral and spiritual qualities that are indispensable to character development. I do not assume that in pursuing his course he is unmindful of his own household of faith, he appraises his work in its larger and more appealing aspects and he has the right method of approach to the receptive minds of his hearers. As he sees it, one of the largest obligations upon us as a people is the adequate moral training of our youth. He believes that our technique needs reconstruction, based upon a finer understanding of what the youth needs and the right method of approach to his receptive mind.

Confirmation of this has been repeatedly brought home to me by the deans of our great colleges and universities. We had our attention called to an example of the folly of the wrong method by one who spoke of an instance where a preacher of distinction took for his theme before a large group of college lads the "Spiritual Values of the Seven Lamps in the Book of Revelation," his discourse lasting an hour and fifteen minutes. Obviously, he created a situation that made chapel attendance unpopular for months following. What our chaplain friend wrote us concerning his experience in the camps brought forcibly to mind the weighty obligation that rests upon clergy and laity alike, an obligation never greater than now, to conduct ourselves, yes, so to exemplify the great principles given us by Christ that, in our contacts with the young we shall at all times and under all conditions give convincing demonstration of the inestimable value of that way of life that He demonstrated as the only way. Our social and economic ills are so pressing that they crowd out the consideration of these weighty matters. We employ our manifold agencies, we invoke our legislative powers, we set up a variety of engaging mechanisms to restore our stability and our prosperity, all this we do with ardor and high expectancy that they will prove infallible remedies, but that which lies nearest our cherished institutions, that which above all else is indispensable to our continuing peace and happiness is treated with scant consideration or wilfully neglected.

I wrote recently on "Recapturing the Youth," and before the ink was dry a high-minded chaplain who is dealing with a fundamental question gives me his observations and clearly indicates both the perils and the opportunities of the present situation as it concerns the youth. That we are at the cross-roads of a new era is clearly evident. Two ways open before us, the way of care-free indifference, of neglect, that is concerned alone about material advantage; the way of Christian living in all its implications that leads ultimately to the strengthening and enrichment of character, the building up, especially in those who are to make or mar our future as a people, of those vital things that we believe are indispensable to our security and permanence. The home, the Church and the school are our greatest assets where they conserve these things. Let them be neglected and we are on the way to looseness of living, moral degeneration and the decay of those basic virtues upon which this nation has been laboriously builded. The Christian manhood and womanhood of America is challenged today as it has rarely been. Will it in this day of its testing have the wisdom and the vision to follow the open, if unfamiliar way, that alone leads to immortality?

* * *

THE HISTORY AND MEANING OF LENT.

(Continued from page 7.)

may offer us some suggestions for the better use of Lent. There is a story of a child who wrote in a Sunday-school composition: "In Lent we ought to be very good. In fact, we always ought." Lent is not a period for being better or more devout, than at other times. It is a period for training, that we may be better Christians all the time. This is the purpose of the "extraordinary acts and exercises of devotion" the Prayer Book assumes we will be undertaking. The three sources of Lent correspond very well to needs of the human soul in spiritual education. Lent is a period of penitence. We do not have the compulsory confession before Easter, which the Roman Catholic Church requires. But we do assume that the sacred season of Lent will remind us earnestly of the demands which Christ makes on us, and our need for penitence and reform. It is useless to decorate our churches for Easter, if we have not purified our hearts and minds. Lent is a season of instruction. The courses and special services which our rectors have arranged for us are not intended merely as aimless devout acts. They are intended to give us that opportunity to learn about our religion which we need, no less than the catechumens of the early Church. Religious books and other means of instruction are also open to us. Finally, Lent is a period of fasting, of self-denial. Some measure of abstinence at this time is one of the few things our Church requires, although it leaves the details to us. It is suitable, and in accordance with ancient custom, if our self-denial can be made useful to others, as by saving money for missionary mite-boxes.

The Church's Forward Movement has very appropriately connected its appeal for repentance and renewal with Lent. For in this sacred season we find for the Christian life treasures which are old, yet ever new.

Child Labor and the Churches

By Miriam Keeler,
National Child Labor Committee.

The Southern Churchman, in publishing this article, is not necessarily advocating the views set forth therein, or advocating that the Church enter politics to uphold its ideals, but furnishing information we feel is of interest in regard to the welfare of youth.—The Editor.

THE Christian Churches have always deplored the exploitation of childhood for commercial profit. Nevertheless, in view of certain statements in regard to the proposed Child Labor Amendment which have gained wide currency, many Christian people have found themselves honestly perplexed as to whether they should give their support to this measure.

The first thing to be understood is that the Amendment is not a law, but merely gives to Congress the power to enact a law—exactly such power as Congress constantly exercises in other fields as a matter of course, and as the states have long exercised in the field of child labor. It consists of two brief sections:

> Section 1. The Congress shall have power to limit, regulate and prohibit the labor of persons under eighteen years of age.
>
> Section 2. The power of the several states is unimpaired by this article except that the operation of state laws shall be suspended to the extent necessary to give effect to legislation enacted by the Congress.

When the Amendment first came before the states for ratification, ten years ago, a tremendous campaign of misrepresentation was launched by manufacturers' associations jealous of any threat to their supply of cheap child labor. For instance, extensive advertisements utterly misrepresenting the Amendment were inserted in newspapers, particularly small-town and rural papers, by the "Farmers' State Rights League." This league proved to be, not a farmers' organization at all, but a tool of the certain textile interests, and was exposed in Congress by the Honorable I. M. Foster of Ohio (Congressional Record, February 17, 1925). The president of the league was cashier of a cotton mill store; its chief agent was an employee of the Clark Publishing Company, owned by David Clark, editor of the Southern Textile Bulletin. And Mr. Clark, according to editorials in his own paper, takes full credit to himself for "the successful campaigns against the two Federal Child Labor Laws and the proposed Child Labor Amendment" in 1924-25.

The long depression with its sordid accompaniments of sweatshop competition, child employment and ever-sinking wages, emphasized the hopelessness of relying on state control alone, and the need for the federal government to step in, and led to revival of interest in the Amendment. During 1933, it was ratified by fourteen more states, before its progress was again checked by organized agitation against it. The same old process of raising a smoke screen of "farm" opposition in order to conceal very different motives was used, as is disclosed by a letter sent to members of the Tennessee Manufacturers' Association by its Secretary, C. C. Gilbert, a few weeks ago:

> "Through the splendid cooperation and quick action on your part, the Child Labor Amendment to the Federal Constitution has been defeated in the Tennessee House of Representatives by a vote of seventy-two to twenty-four. This shows conclusively what can be done when men do right thinking and work together on a given matter. I knew how practically every man in both branches of the Legislature would vote on this amendment through information which the members of this association furnished me. I want to take this opportunity of thanking the members for their splendid help and cooperation."

This letter came into the hands of the editor of the Memphis Press-Scimitar, one of the newspapers which has supported the Amendment most staunchly, who published it with the following comment:

> "What pretense to say that the opposition to the Child Labor Amendment came from those who feared that Congress might forbid children to assist their parents on farms and homes.
>
> "The opposition came from manufacturers, who do not want to be prevented from hiring cheap child labor in preference to more expensive adult labor."

Farm parents are asked, "Do you want your husky sons of seventeen to be forbidden to milk a cow and their sisters prevented from washing dishes? Do you want to see 45,000,000 children nationalized and federal snoopers descending on every home and farm like a horde of locusts?" The natural reaction is to turn against the Amendment like birds fleeing from a scarecrow set up in a field, without stopping to find out whether the menace it appears to offer is real. As a matter of fact the Amendment is no more dangerous than the figures of straw and rag with which farmers protect their corn.

IN THE first place, there is not the slightest reason to fear that farm children, whether seventeen or younger, would be interfered with in milking cows, washing dishes, or performing the myriad other ordinary chores of home and farm. "Labor" has repeatedly been interpreted by the courts as "labor for hire," and never as the tasks engaged in by children for their parents at home and on the farm. And even in regard to bona fide labor for hire, no one proposes to prohibit it for all boys and girls up to eighteen years of age under the Amendment, except in occupations which are hazardous or injurious to minors, such as mining, operating dangerous machinery or working with poisonous materials. If Federal jurisdiction were limited to younger children by the terms of the Amendment, as has been suggested, this much needed protection of employed boys and girls from hazardous work could not be encompassed.

In the second place, 45,000,000 children represent the total population under eighteen years of age. To say that the Amendment would give Congress power over all these is to assume—since the Amendment concerns labor alone—that every child in the country labors, from the toothless infant up. Thus stated, the proposition is its own refutation. Over children whose labor is not exploited—the vast majority in this country, it can be thankfully stated—the Amendment would give Congress no jurisdiction. And over those who are employed, federal jurisdiction would extend only in matters relating to their employment—not home life or education.

By "nationalization" must be meant federal regulation of employment, since this is what the Amendment deals with. As the states have always had this power, it follows that we have already what may be termed "state-ization" of employed children. The Amendment would mean merely that in the last resort the protector of childhood and youth against industrial exploitation would be the federal rather than the state government.

Lastly, what about the "horde of federal inspectors?" This can be answered by reference to actual experience. For Congress has already enacted a federal child labor law, not once, but twice—in 1916 and again in 1919. The earlier of these was in operation for nine months and the second for three years, before being declared unconstitutional by the Supreme Court. Both served well their purpose of regulating child labor while they remained in force. This was accomplished through a policy of cooperation with state authorities, by a staff numbering fifty-one persons for the entire country!

APPLYING equally to the various objections, is a safeguard inherent in our form of federal government. Our Congressmen are not Bolsheviks sent from Moscow to impose an alien tyranny on us. They are American Citizens, whom we ourselves elect for the express purpose of representing us and carrying out the ideas of the majority. They bring up their own children in the good old tradition of the American family. Moreover, even if the Amendment gave them the power to impose harassing restrictions on the home and parental authority—which it does not—and they wished to exercise it, they would not be so foolish as to enact a measure which would bring down on them the wrath of their constituents and ruin their political careers.

The practical advantages of a national minimum standard for child employment, on the other hand, we are experiencing today under the industrial codes, which set sixteen years as the minimum age for employment in more than five hundred industries, while allowing younger children to do light work outside of school hours in certain non-manufacturing occupations. For hazardous work the majority of codes set the minimum age at eighteen years. It is precisely to prevent the loss of these advances when the codes expire that early ratifications of the Amendment is essential.

President Roosevelt has repeatedly urged ratification of the Child Labor Amendment as the appropriate vehicle for making permanent the ban on child labor in industry set up by the codes. "In the child labor field," he wrote recently, "the obvious method of maintaining the present gains is through ratification of the Child Labor Amendment. I hope this may be achieved."

OBJECTIONS to the Amendment, spacious and misleading as they are, however, spread rapidly over the country, through the animosity of a large number of newspapers to ratification. These, having hailed the action of the NRA codes in barring children from industry as the greatest achievement of the Administration, suddenly changed their tune after a code with child labor restrictions (although less rigorous ones than those accepted by other industries) was proposed for the newspaper publishing industry. In spite of many honorable exceptions, including the Scripps-Howard papers, the New York Post and News, and, in the South such influential papers as the Raleigh (N. C.) News and Observer, Lexington (Ky.) Herald, and the Capper papers in Kansas, which have continued to work for ratification, the press was flooded with attacks on the Amendment. Meanwhile the newspapers themselves are operating under a code which allows children of any age to sell or deliver papers during the day except during school hours, and to deliver papers at night and during the early morning hours. Every suggestion of a minimum age requirement, even so moderate as fourteen years for selling and twelve years for delivering papers has been stubbornly resisted.

The trade journal of the newspapers, Editor and Publisher, which favors ratification, has rebuked selfish newspaper opposition to the Amendment editorially, as follows:

> "We have believed that organized campaigning against a proposed constitutional Child Labor Amendment, on the ground that it would embarrass Circulation Departments, was a mistake. We have deplored organized propaganda which seemed to rest upon a misconception of the facts as well as the purpose of the proposed Amendment. . . . It is not to be rationally believed that Congress could ever make an eighteen-year rule apply to news-carriers. The fight on the Amendment by organized journalism has mystified us and has seemed to be a misdirected organization of effort."

IN ADDITION to the opposition from the press and from manufacturers, the Amendment has had to contend with the influence of the powerful Roman Catholic Church, many members of which fear that in some way the Amendment may be stretched to allow federal interference with parochial schools. As has been explained, the Amendment grants Congress power over the labor of minors only, and not over education. Nevertheless, this misunderstanding has added greatly to the difficulties facing the Amendment in certain sections of the country.

The Protestant Churches, on the contrary, have, with a few exceptions, shown a very clear understanding of the nature of the Amendment and the need for it. The Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America at its biennial convention in Dayton, Ohio, last fall, speaking for twenty-eight denominations, reaffirmed its support of the Amendment in a resolution which points out that "Christianity has always surrounded the child with special tenderness and solicitude" and calls for "the speedy ratification of the national Child Labor Amendment by the States."

As this resolution points out, the principle inspiring the Child Labor Amendment is thoroughly in harmony with the ideals of the Christian Churches. Far from oppressing or harassing anyone, whether farmer, parent, or youth, it will benefit all—all, at least who do not seek to wring a profit from the labor of children.

The Child Labor Amendment had been ratified by twenty states up to the first of this year. During January and February it was ratified by Wyoming, Utah, Idaho, and Indiana, bringing the total to twenty-four, and was introduced for consideration in the legislatures of a number of Southern States. Twelve more states must ratify before the Amendment can become a part of the Federal Constitution and a national child labor law be enacted under it.

* * *

O wonderful! O wonderful!
To share the power divine,
And use it for the sons of men
In glowing deeds that shine
Like stars that glorify the night
As messengers from realms of light!

—Frederick W. Neve.

A New, New Testament

By George William Brown,

General Secretary of The American Bible Society.

A Swiss heritage, a gift for linguistics, a missionary passion, a devotion to the Bible, and a love for the American Indian were elements combining in a single individual which, when aided by the normal processes of The American Bible Society, resulted in the appearance recently of the first complete New Testament in the language spoken by the Cheyenne Indians of Montana and Oklahoma.

In his more than four decades of ministry to the Cheyenne Indians, the Rev. Rodolphe Petter, D. D., a man of scholarly attainments, has become a master of the language of the people of his choice. Beginning with a language as yet unwritten, Dr. Petter produced first an English-Cheyenne dictionary, then a grammar, then portions from both the Old and the New Testaments, presently Pilgrim's Progress, and now, finally, a complete New Testament.

No hasty, indifferent work is this! Nor is this new New Testament merely a translation from English. The Greek texts of Westcott and Hort, and Tischendorf were its base, while the Vulgate and several of the main English, French, and German versions, as well as the Hebrew version of the New Testament, were compared. A number of the great commentaries and three Greek dictionaries were consulted. The first complete Cheyenne New Testament, therefore, worthily takes its place in the noble succession of painstakingly careful translations.

Just as Luther went into the shops and homes of the common people of Germany to get correct and understandable terms for use in his great German translation, so Dr. Petter studied intimately and at first-hand the practices and customs of the Cheyenne, frequently consulting his Indian parishioners in a search for exact and intelligible phrases. He gave, for instance, a demonstration of grafting and pruning in order to secure from them correctness of expression in translating those parts of the eleventh of Romans where St. Paul in illustrating a certain principle employs the process of olive-grafting.

When the translation was completed, the finished manuscript was re-read carefully by Dr. Petter himself, then by four different Indians separately. During the typing further corrections were made, and the final typed copy was read to an Indian woman to test the average understanding of the Cheyenne text. Finally, the translator's wife read the copy in a last review before it was released to the printer. It will be noted with interest that among others of the Cheyenne who gave noteworthy help in this carefuly supervised work the names of Chief Standingelk and Susie Wounded-eyes appear.

In the translator's preface there is this concluding paragraph: "And now the message of God and His Christ is 'in the Cheyenne mouth' for a witness to be accepted or rejected. As God in the long ago spoke to the tribes of Israel through Moses, He tells to the Cheyenne tribe, 'It is not hard for thee, neither is it far off. It tis not in heaven, that thou shouldest say, Who shall go up for us, and make us hear it, that we may do it? Neither is it beyond the sea, that thou shouldest say, Who shall go over the sea for us, and bring it to us, and make us hear it, that we may do it? But the word is nigh unto thee, in thy mouth, and in thy heart, that thou mayest do it'." (Deuteronomy 30: 11-14.)

Strikingly appropriate was the occasion of the first public presentation of copies of this volume, for at the end of the recent Christmas Eve program in the Mission at Lame Deer, Montana, just before pronouncing the benediction, Dr. Petter spoke briefly of the new New Testament and with great satisfaction presented gift copies to his Indian associates and fellow workers in the Mission. Testaments are often given for Christmas gifts—but I wonder where on last Christmas any copies were given or received with as much genuine rejoicing and profound appreciation as were experienced by this scholarly translator-donor and the beloved Indian recipients. And—here was another wise man presenting his gift, a gift more precious than gold or frankincense or myrrh, to another group of children of the first Christ-child.

The publication of the Cheyenne New Testament by the American Bible Society brings the total number of languages in which the entire New Testament has appeared up to three hundred and seventy-four, while the grand total of languages in which Scripture translation has occurred is now nine hundred and fifty-four. Through the efforts of the Bible societies and the missionary forces, Scripture translation is so continuously going on that a new language is added on an average of once every five weeks.

Na zenohonoa-onetto eseva Hoveoeome-mohestova (Pentecost) emanoehon tsa mhaon. 2 Na sehovetto Heama enxhessemaso-nistonevoneneo, hevovetasonea zehessevonez, exhesho-mxastov-haavevonenco hotoma zexhoevoss. 3 Na eme-henevhostato-henovhonoz vitanovotoz zehoestavenonocttoz zenesevhoznomohevoss estotaxeoesctoenovhon hemekonewo. 4 Na nistxevoss emhanesemxastovhesetova-ohaevohon Maheonematasoomaho na easeveseeszehon onitavenszistova zisto-heenszheshaevoss Matasoomaho.

(Acts 2:1-14 in Cheyenne.)

—American Bible Society.

* * *

EDITORIALS.

(Continued from page 3.)

an artistic and beautiful magazine dedicated to a beautiful subject. In America we did not have much precedence for cathedrals or cathedral building, and this fine publication has been educational. We hope that it will continue for many years to stand for that which is finest in our Anglican tradition, and that it can serve as an inspiration for many to discover new and growing usages for beautiful cathedrals in a modern world.

* * *

CHURCH AND WORLD PROBLEMS AS OTHERS SEE THEM.

(Continued from page 4.)

will deposit in a German bank marks equivalent to the amount of the loans, so as to repay them as soon as the present restriction is removed. The money thus lent will, of course, be distributed to the various mission fields as the German societies direct. The British societies are themselves hard put to it, as our readers know, but will receive and forward contributions towards this loan, which should be distinctly marked accordingly. It is thought that in all £30,000 may be raised: but what is that compared with an annual need of £300,000? It is saddening to think of native Christian communities lapsing into heathendom because their missionaries and teachers have to be withdrawn.

BOOK REVIEWS

REV. STAMO S. SPATHEY, Editor.

FOR LENTEN MEDITATION.

THE REVEALING CHRIST: By The Presiding Bishop of The Church. Pp. 165. Published by Harper Brothers. Price, $1.50.

This is a very well compiled book of Lenten devotions prepared by the Presiding Bishop of the Episcopal Church for the use of both clergy and laymen during the Lenten season.

With the Presiding Bishop, certain outstanding preachers make contributions in the book, such as Drs. Bernard Iddings Bell, Frederic Sydney Fleming, Karl Morgan Block, Howard C. Robbins, Joseph Fort Newton, and Dean Sturges. Also the following bishops, the Rt. Rev. George Craig Stewart, Bishop Rhinelander and Bishop Strider.

It begins with Ash Wednesday, "The Lenten Call," by Bishop Perry. He says: ". . . His is the first quest, mine the response. The marks of His approach are found where least expected in most familiar and often homely ways. In a stable in Bethlehem, and at last to the contemplation of the Cross." It ends with two beautiful prayers.

There is a devotion for every day after Ash Wednesday, ending with the Seventh Word from the Cross, revealing the "Triumph of the Revealing Christ." This is a source of real inspiration for the clergy and laity of the Church during Lent, also for study classes and Young People's Leagues. The discussions are brief but inspiring and suggestive for spiritual strength and comfort. A fine series of sermons for Lent—of course they must be enlarged.

Spathey.

THE RICHES OF CHRIST: By Father Bede Frost. Pp. 203. Price, $1.75. Published by The Macmillan Company, 60 Fifth Avenue, New York City.

This is another book of Lenten meditations, written by one of the priests of the High Church of England. It contains copious quotations from the Bible generally and from the New Testament in particular; also from the Fathers of the Church, the Nicene Creed, St. Augustine and St. Thomas Aquinas, and others. The meditations are arranged in sermon style, very brief with a text well chosen for each one. There is a sermon for each day in Lent from Ash Wednesday to Good Friday.

The language is that of the theologian of the Medieval thought of the Church. Old doctrinal teachings restated. It also reflects an Anglo-Catholic background and extremely conservative attitude towards new interpretation of Christian doctrinal teaching. It can be used by both the clergy and laity of the Church profitably. Many interesting subjects are briefly treated with profound spiritual insight into the life and teaching of Jesus Christ. It is an excellent contribution to the literature of devotion. We recommend this book primarily to our conservative readers. They will find in it something they like and some things they will not care for.

Spathey.

TESTAMENT OF LOVE: By Hubert L. Simpson. Pp. 125. Price, $1. Published by The Abingdon Press, 150 Fifth Avenue, New York City.

A book of sermons by one of Scotland's brilliant preachers now living in London, as the minister of Westminster Church in that great city. The sermons are specially prepared for use during Lent. One forms the introduction on the unique way Jesus spoke with the text, "Never man spake like this man," John 7:46, in which Dr. Simpson makes a strong appeal to tune our ears to hear Jesus' unparalleled speech during the Lenten season of the Church. He makes the following striking confession: "Soon we shall be entering an early Lent, and the older I grow the more do I feel the need for us all to realize the unity of the Holy Catholic Apostolic Church, coupled with preservation of the priceless and dear-bought and never-to-be-highly-prized right of private judgment." This is an indication of the trend of events in our Christianity.

The rest of the sermons are expositions on the Seven Words from the Cross with illuminating modern illustrations that give them a peculiar freshness. The style is poetical and gripping. They suggest great themes for preaching. The author traces in the Seven Last Words, "Our Lord's progressive stages of love."

Spathey.

FOR LENTEN DEVOTION.

THE MAN OF SORROWS: By Henry Beets. Pp. 131. Price, $1. Published by William B. Eerdmans Publishing Company, Grand Rapids, Michigan.

A series of sermons specially adopted for Lent. Three of them are preparatory and descriptive of our Lord's going to the Cross. The first is on "The Man of Sorrows Weeping Over Jerusalem." The preacher says that Abraham Lincoln was the only President of the United States whose life was a tragic experience and, therefore, must be called the American man of sorrows. Jesus' sorrows were far greater and profound.

The next is, "The Man of Sorrows Cleansing the Temple." It begins with a brief but illuminating sketch of the life of Savonarola and his influence in cleansing the city of Florence with his fiery preaching, but discovering how fickle was popular favor which he compares with our Lord's experience on Palm Sunday, which led Him to the Cross. "On His Way to Calvary" is a picture of Jesus being led to be crucified. The rest of the book is taken with a sermon on each Word from the Cross. This is really the most inspiring book for the Lenten season we have read this year. The sermons are in full, with illuminating illustrations that make them edifying and refreshing. They are expository in style.

Spathey.

CHRIST SPEAKS FROM CALVARY: By Edward Jeffries Rees. Pp. 172. Published by The Cokesbury Press, Nashville, Tenn. Price, $1.

This is one more valuable interpretation of the Cross in the light of the Seven Words from the Cross. It is rather a new approach presented dramatically and profoundly spiritual. It makes the Cross a necessity or rather a passage to the "Immortal Christ" at Easter. The studies are of the Evangelical type ably presented. A source of helpful suggestions for Lenten sermons and personal reading.

Spathey.

VICTORIES OF THE CROSS: By Walter Albert Stanbury. Pp. 192. Published by The Cokesbury Press, Nashville, Tenn. Price, $1.

Ten sermons on the significance of the Cross in human experience are written by Dr. Stanbury of Greensboro, North Carolina, and offered to the public in a book form to be used specially for the Lenten season of the Church. The Cross is made an important part of the religious life, not its rival. It is a necessity to the development of the life of the spirit. A real contribution to our Lenten devotional literature.

Spathey.

* * *

AMBITION'S PRAYER.

Help me to live an honest life, wide open as the day;
Help me to strew a lot of smiles and jests along the way;
Grant that the smiles may leave no ache or mantling blush of shame;
Grant that the jests be snowy white, nor smirch a human name.

(How sweet unto me . .
Would this verdict be
When they call the final roll:
"My son, you have not
Put a single blot
On a single human soul!")

Give me a faith that knows no creed but that of boundless love—
The creed that, aye, must rise and stand all other creeds above;
Teach me to live the best of things I feel and think and know;
Teach me to keep my hand in Thine, wherever I may go.

(How blessed to me
Would this verdict be
When they call the last long roll:
"My son, you have kept
The black spots swept
From many a human soul!")

(Found pasted in an old Bible, clipped from the Los Angeles Herald. Author and date unknown.)

YOUNG PEOPLE'S FELLOWSHIP SERVICE LEAGUE

The Reverend Randolph F. Blackford

COMPARATIVE RELIGIONS.
1. Animism.

(This series will be published every other month, i. e., in March, May, July, September, November and January. They are given at the joint suggestion of a number of young people and of leaders who have sensed the interest in this subject. Interest may be quickened when these programs are presented by showing curios, illustrating these religions, or pictures from the Spirit of Missions of idols, places of worship, etc.)

Some years ago people considered the religious situation of the world could be best described by a large house with brick partitions between the rooms. In one room there were great windows so that it was filled with the full light and air of day. That was Christianity. In another room there were windows, but the shutters were closed and the shades pulled down so that there was but little light or air. This was Judaism. The other rooms had the windows all bricked up, so that everyone in them was in complete darkness and perishing for lack of light and air, unless they were brought into the room of Christianity. Thus missionaries were noble spirited men who used picks and broke into the rooms of darkness and suffocation to save the perishing.

But today the idea has changed to something entirely different, because we believe so fully in the Love of God. Today we consider the key to the situation is given by the old adage, "The City of Happiness is in the State of Mind." For all want happiness and are trying to reach it. But conditions are such that for some the path leads through swamps and marshes, or over mountains or thickets, while others have a graded road and others a perfect road of concrete. The Missionaries, according to this idea, are the engineers who go out into the swamps and morasses and all sorts of difficulties and build modern roads so as to help the people, even though some, through ignorance, may not realize that it is better to travel on concrete than through thickets, swamps, and other obstacles.

In this course of study we will, therefore, take up six religions which we consider will to a certain extent give the birde's-eye view of the religions of the world. We will take them up in the following order, coming from the lowest to the highest of not Jewish, non-Christian religions. First, we shall take up Animism, or the most primitive; next, the Norse Religion; third, we shall take up Buddhism, or the Light of Asia, as it is called; fourth, Islam, or as we call it, Mohammedanism; fifth, Bushido, or the Moral System of Japan, and last, The Religion of the Reds, or the substitute for religion now practiced in Russia.

Our method of study will be to state first where the religion has followers and something of its history. Next we will tell of its good points, and finally of why it fails as compared with Christianity. The reason for the discussion of this topic of Comparative Religions is that at the Young People's Conference at Sewanee the request has several times been made for a series of programs on this subject.

Special Introduction to Animism:

To begin with, the name Animism seems a strange one to us. But it will ot seem so if we remember what it comes from. For it is just taken from the word, Animalism, which means behavior like an animal. So Animism is the religion that man has that seems closest to animals, or the lowest of man. In various countries we call it by different names. In Africa we call it African heathenism. In Europe we call it witchcraft. In America we call it Voodooism. Among the Esquimaux we call it their heathenism.

In each of these there are slight differences of practice in the way that animism is practiced. But in all of them there is a great similarity. But there is no conscious connection between them, as those who practice them are usually the most ignorant of peoples, and they leave it as soon as they hear of something better.

Description of Animism.

Great scholars tell us that they have never met or heard of a people who were absolutely without religion, or some sense of Higher Power than man, and of the mystery in and behind Nature. In primitive tribes this shows itself in fear. For big things are to be feared. And it shows itself in two ways. Religion with them is a weapon of defense for themselves, and of offense against their enemies.

The Defense idea first: They consider that the dead have become allied with the gods, so they must be pleased. They thus build small houses for them and put food and drink for the dead. The witch doctors, who are usually all in one family, eat this food, and are priests of animism. If a person falls sick, they consider the gods are angry and have sent a devil to torment, so the witch doctor must scare the devil, and find who has angered the gods or sent the devil, and punish him. So, too, they wear special charms to please the gods and warn off devils. Our own lucky horse-shoes are a relic of the time our ancestors were animists. Negroes' fear of ghosts, belief in "sign," and love of charms and other superstitions are indications of their animism, only a few years back. In the South Sea Islands the system of Taboo is a sign of this animism, and the penalties of destruction by fire from the volcano typical. So also in China, the idea that graves are sacred and that if they are moved a great dragon would destroy by an earthquake is a sign of animism. Another name for this defensive religion is White Magic.

Black Magic, or offensive religion, was the way of making the gods angry with your enemies, and so harming them. This was done in two ways: cursing them, which was a prayer to harm, like the "Irishman's curse" of "May your soul rot in Hell for ten thousand years," which is simply another way of saying the word "damn"; and a material bewitching, which was done by taking something associated with your enemy and doing something to it. Thus, hair from the head, or finger nail parings, were burnt to make a man have a fever. His clothes or his pictures were stabbed to make him have an inward pain, or else a bag of charms were buried where he would walk over them and so make the gods angry.

As has been said, when people whose religion is animism have a better religion presented to them they take it. Yet, animism is far better than atheism, where a person is not restrained by anything. An example of this is the custom of animism of marriage, of buying a wife, if a man were to be respectable. White people in a certain place said that this was slavery, so they abolished it. The result was that the people said: "Our gods told us to buy our wives. White man says our gods are wrong. Must not be any gods. Wife not worth any money, when get tired of her, kill her, no god to care, or better still, work her to death."

Comparison With Christianity.

After the story of buying a wife that was so disastrously stopped, one might say, "Why not leave animists in their religion? They are happy in it." The answer is that they are not happy, as is shown by their anxiety to get out of it. Though relics of it will remain for a long time, at no time has animism kept its hold on the people when a better religion has been shown. Buddhism. swept over India. Why? Because it was a better religion than animism. Islam swept over Northern Africa. It was better than animism. Shintoism swept Japan for the same reason, and Confucianism over China. So today it has been claimed that one in every nine Negroes in South Africa is an Episcopalian, because its main opponent was animism, and animists all over the world are begging us to send missionaries to them to help them out of their swamp by giving them a good road to the City of Happiness. For Christianity teaches the good news, the Gospel, which in a few words is that God loves us all and wants us to be happy and to make other people happy. Or to put it in the words of Scripture:

"God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son that all that believed in him might not perish, but have eternal life."

* * *

A TRUE FAST.

Is this a Faste—to keep
The Larder leane
And cleane
From fat of veales and sheepe?

Is it to quit the dish
Of flesh, yet still
To fill
The platter high with fish?

Is it to faste an houre,
Or rag'd to go,
Or show
A downcast look and sowre?

No; 'tis a Faste to dole
Thy sheaf of wheat,
And meat,
Unto the hungry soule.

It is to faste from strife,
From old debate,
And hate;
To circumscribe thy life.

To show a heart grief-rent
To starve thy sin,
Not bin;
And that's to keep thy Lent.

—Robert Herrick.

CHURCH INTELLIGENCE

PRESIDING BISHOP VISITING EIGHTH PROVINCE.

The Presiding Bishop left on March 6 for a meeting of the Bishops of the Eighth Province in Portland, Oregon, on March 13. One of the chief matters of importance to be discussed will be arrangements for the Missionary District of Idaho in view of Bishop Barnwell's resignation. Bishop Perry told the National Council at its February meeting that in connection with any provincial matters he proposed always to confer with the bishops of the province concerned. Provision for Idaho will be discussed in the light of findings presented to last General Convention by a committee on merging missionary districts and adjacent dioceses.* Decision rests with the House of Bishops meeting next November. The provincial meeting is advisory.

Bishop Perry preaches in Boise, Idaho, on March 10 and in Seattle, Washington, March 17, and will also visit Pendleton, Oregon. He returns to Rhode Island before the end of March.

*Page 505—Convention Journal.

* * *

FURTHER PLANS OF FORWARD MOVEMENT COMMISSION.

Enthusiastic and widespread response to the Lenten program of the Forward Movement was reported at a meeting of the Joint Commission of the Forward Movement held in Christ Church, Cincinnati, February 27 and 28. Since its last meeting, members of the commission have visited almost every diocese and missionary district in Continental United States, and have brought back reports on the basis of which further plans for the movement were laid.

It was reported that already 625,000 copies of the leaflet, "Discipleship" had been requisitioned for use throughout the Church.

In response to a general demand for conserving the values of the Lenten leaflet on Discipleship, the Commission determined to issue a second leaflet for distribution at Easter carrying the program on during Easter-tide and culminating in another Church-wide Corporate Communion on Whitsunday. The commission also asked that the ten days between Ascension and Whitsunday be made a special period in the Church for the holding of Quiet Days, Retreats and Conferences.

The commission's principle not to impose a program, but to encourage local spontaneous action was gratefully accepted in all quarters, as was the assurance that the Forward Movement had no veiled intentions of campaigning for funds.

The commission also laid tentative plans for carrying the Forward Movement into summer conferences and asked its literature committee to prepare outline courses for these and also for use in other clergy and leadership conferences.

The commission received with sympathetic interest a communication from the Church League for Industrial Democracy, urging that the social note be stressed in all literature and addresses under the auspices of the commission. The chairman, Bishop Hobson, was directed to reply favorably to this request and to incorporate in his answer the following declaration of principle:

Declaration of Principle.

"Since the program of the Commission is primarily a call to the members of the Church to accept the full demands of discipleship, it must face with courage those conditions and situations in modern life which are contrary to the Gospel as taught and revealed by Christ. We recognize that remedial social service is not enough to discharge our obligation as disciples, and that justice and fulness of life for all is the will of God, and must be included in any program which seeks to unite the members of the Church in a Forward Movement toward the Kingdom. . . .

"The Commission does not expect to present detailed programs in the fields of social, economic, industrial, racial, or international life, for which united Church effort is asked, or expected. But it does plan to set forth definite standards of Christian attitude, and concrete suggestions to be used in determining the position of a true disciple confronted by the problems of our times. The disciples' vocation in social matters must not be left vague, nor should the way of discipleship lead along the middle of the road where the traveler is seeking safety first and trying to please everyone. Whether the individual disciple is a conservative, liberal or radical in social thinking, he must first of all be in deadly earnest about being a Christian who accepts the second great commandment as his obligation and is ready to sacrifice time, money and personal advantage in keeping it. . . ."

In spite of a crowded schedule, the commission gave over one entire session to such important topics as the enlistment of laymen, the development of the Negro work, the application of Christian principles in a time of social change and the building of parish programs. Bishop Demby, Suffragan Bishop of Arkansas, was made an associate member, and appointed on the committee on Negro work, together with Bishop Quin, chairman, and Mr. Clifford P. Morehouse.

Among the committee appointed were the following:

Executive Committee—Bishop Hobson, Bishop Maxon, Rev. Dr. Karl M. Block, Mr. Morehouse.

On Literature — Dr. Kinsolving, Bishop Quin, Canon Symons, Mr. Seaman.

On Negro Work—Bishop Quin, Bishop Demby, Mr. Morehouse.

On Lay Work—Messrs. Seaman, Hartman and Williams.

After favorable comment on the result of Bishop Hobson's radio broadcast and consideration of a request from the Diocese of Colorado, the executive committee was directed to investigate the possibility of further use of the radio in the promotion of the Forward Movement.

The next meeting of the commission is to be held June 12, 13 and 14.

* * *

NATIONAL YOUNGER MEN'S MISSIONARY CONGRESS—THEME, JESUS CHRIST AND THE WORLD TODAY.

Chicago will be the scene of another great conference on Christian missions in May.

This time younger men of the Protestant churches of the United States will gather at the Stevens Hotel, Thursday, May 2, through Sunday, May 5, for the National Younger Men's Missionary Congress under the auspices of the Laymen's Missionary Movement.

The younger men are at the helm—both ministers and laymen. Professor Arthur H. Compton of the University of Chicago, winner of the Nobel prize in physics, is chairman of the Congress Committee. Joel I. Connolly, sanitary engineer for the City of Chicago, is both Recording Secretary of the Laymen's Missionary Movement and a member of the Congress Committee. Bishop Ernest Lynn Waldorf, Methodist Bishop in Chicago, is heading the co-operating committee of pastors.

"Jesus Christ and the World Today" will be the theme of the Congress. It will proceed by the newer methods of convention and conference, including a number of speeches and particularly a series of twenty simultaneous group meetings around important themes on Friday and Saturday. The groups will be under the direction of Dr. Cleland B. McAfee, General Secretary of the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions, New York, N. Y., and Rev. C. O. Hawley of the United Christian Missionary Society, Indianapolis, Ind., with the assistance of some of North America's best missionary leaders, laymen, and ministers.

Among the speakers who have already been booked to appear during the Congress are: Charles A. Wells of Wichita, Kansas; J. Warren Hastings of Seattle, Wash.; President Ralph C. Hutchison, Washington and Jefferson College, of Washington, Penn.; Bishop George Craig Stewart and A. M. McDonald of Chicago, Ill.; Robert E. Speer, Joseph C. Robbins, W. R. King, Ralph E. Diffendorfer, F. M. Potter and Cleland B. McAfee of New York, N. Y.; Paul W. Koller and M. Edwin Thomas of Baltimore, Md.; Livingston P. Moore of Madison, N. J.; Mills J. Taylor and A. V. Casselman of Philadelphia, Penn.; Stephen J. Corey and Alexander Paul of Indianapolis, Ind.; Frank H. Caldwell of Louisville, Ky.; C. Darby Fulton of Nashville, Tenn.; J. J. Braun of St. Louis, Mo.; Leonard M. Outerbridge of Boston, Mass., and Roy A. Burkhart of Columbus, Ohio.

A score of younger men and outstanding missionary and national representatives from the United States and other lands are to be added to this list of speakers.

The Congress will take place on the twenty-fifth anniversary of the first great congress under the Laymen's Missionary Movement, which was held in Chicago in May, 1910, and was a forerunner of the great missionary advances during the decade which ended in 1920.

"The problems attending the present chaotic condition of the world," says the call to the Congress "are not merely economic and physical and not merely national and local, but spiritual and universal. They can, therefore, only be solved in a spiritual and universal way. Because we believe that the life and teachings of Jesus Christ show us such a way, in fact the only way, we invite you and men throughout the nation to a great National Younger Men's Missionary Congress, to be held in Chicago, May 2-5, 1935, to consider the subject, Jesus Christ and the World Today.

"Four major topics will be discussed in platform meetings, conferences, group meetings and personal interviews:

"(1) The world's need and the forces bidding for world power.

"(2) Our heritage as sons of great missionary forefathers.

"(3) Our resources as Christian communions and agencies.

"(4) The power of Christ.

"Every man is asked to join this Congress who is interested in such questions. Their consideration cannot be postponed. Now is the time to think on them and to prepare for action."

John C. Acheson, president of Macalester College, St. Paul, Minn., is president of the Laymen's Missionary Movement.

The Younger Men's Congress was launched officially at a luncheon recently held in the Union League Club, Chicago. Dr. John R. Mott was guest of honor and made the address of the afternoon, stopping in Chicago on his way to the Orient.

Dr. John R. Mott writes:

"The timeliness and utmost importance of the proposed Younger Men's Congress, to be held under the auspices of the Laymen's Missionary Movement next spring, continues to grow upon me. In my judgment it is highly desirable that each of the Christian communions of our country shall put forth, if need be, extraordinary efforts to be represented on that occasion by some of the very flower of their younger lay forces.

"It will do more to help solve the many problems that press upon our churches than any single measure which I could today emphasize."

* * *

CHURCH LEAGUE FOR INDUSTRIAL DEMOCRACY PLANS.

Plans to send preaching teams to parishes throughout the country were presented and approved at the annual meeting of the Church League for Industrial Democracy, meeting in New York on Washington's Birthday and attended by about 150 Episcopalians. Under the plan, teams of three or four will be routed into certain areas, holding services and meetings at which the social message of Christianity will be presented. The teams will also do street speaking, will meet with luncheon clubs, hold conferences with parish organizations and contact labor and progressive groups in each community. The Rev. Bradford Young, associate minister at Holy Trinity Church, Brooklyn, N. Y., is the chairman of the committee in charge of arrangements. A number of those present at the meetings agreed to serve on the teams.

The meeting also approved plans for the issuing of literature that will present the social implications of religion, not only for the adult members of the Church, but also for use in Church Schools. The Rev. Joseph Fletcher, Chaplain of St. Mary's School, Raleigh, N. C., was elected chairman of this committee, and associated with him is Miss Vida D. Scudder, professor at Wellesley; Miss Adelaide Case, professor at Teachers' College, Columbia University, and Miss Hilda Shaul, director of religious education at St. Paul's Church, Chestnut Hill, Penn.

A number of League members also signed up for emergency action under the direction of the executive secretary of the League, the Rev. William B. Spofford. Under the plan, they will be subject to call for picket duty in strikes and for test cases where civil liberties are imperiled.

The speaker at the luncheon meeting was Mr. Charles Webber, professor at Union Seminary, who gave a graphic account of the trends toward Fascism, and particularly the trend of the New Deal in that direction. The evening speaker was Mr. Louis Budenz, leader of the Toledo strike, who gave the "inside" of strike activities. The chairman of the luncheon was Bishop Gilbert of New York, and at the dinner Bishop Robert L. Paddock, retired bishop.

VIRGINIA.

Rt. Rev. H. St. G. Tucker, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. Frederick D. Goodwin, D. D., Coadjutor.

Lenten Speakers in Richmond.

Many of Richmond's favorites appear on the list of Lenten preachers for the midday services of St. Paul's this year. There will be only one who is new to the congregation, this being the Rev. Vincent C. Franks, D. D., rector of old St. Paul's, Norfolk.

The full list and dates are as follows:

Monday, March 11, to Friday, March 15: The Rev. Paul Scherer, D. D., pastor of the Lutheran Church of the Holy Trinity, New York City, N. Y.

Monday, March 18: The Rev. Vincent C. Franks, D. D., rector of Old St. Paul's Church, Norfolk, Va.

Tuesday, March 19, to Friday March 22: The Rev. Arthur Lee Kinsolving, D. D., rector of Trinity Church, Boston, Mass.

Monday, March 25, to Friday, March 29: The Rev. W. Russell Bowie, D. D., rector of Grace Church, New York City, N. Y.

Monday, April 1, to Friday, April 5, The Rt. Rev. Warren L. Rogers, D. D., Bishop of Ohio.

Monday April 8, to Friday, April 12: The Rev. Hugh Black, D. D., Union Theological Seminary, New York City N. Y.

Drawing-Room Meeting in Washington.

Archdeacon Neve, the Ven. W. Roy Mason, Associate Archdeacon, and Miss Winegar of the Archdeaconry of the Blue Ridge, held an annual Drawing-Room Meeting last week in the home of Dr. William C. Rives in Washington, on behalf of the mountain work. The moving picture series, illustrating the work, was shown and well received.

The Challenge for 1935—St. Paul's School, Lawrenceville.

The last week in March, 24-31, to be exact, has been chosen as the time for the campaign to raise $6,500 toward meeting the deficit in the budget of St. Paul's Normal and Industrial School for Negroes at Lawrenceville, Va. The Rev. Lewis Carter Harrison, rector of Emmanuel Church, Richmond, diosesan chairman, states that the slogan is to be "The Challenge for 1935—St. Paul's School," and he is planning mass meetings with outstanding speakers for every city and large town in the diocese.

The Rev. Robert W. Patton, director of the American Church Institute for Negroes, of which the Lawrenceville school is a unit, will be in Virginia practically the entire month to assist in arranging the campaign. This enterprise represents Virginia's part in the great Challenge of the Church, which originated last autumn at the General Convention in Atlantic City.

At that time it was found that the General Church faced a deficit of $400,000, after all cuts had been made. The only way to offset this shortage was for the various dioceses to obligate themselves for as much as they were willing to assume. Otherwise, projects long established would have to be neglected and, in certain cases, actually abandoned. Virginia accepted the responsibility of raising $6,500 for St. Paul's School, which, it is thought, should be a peculiarly Southern project in that the vast majority of the students remain in the South after leaving the school.

A. H. Turner, business manager of the institution, states that there are 1,200 boys and girls enrolled this year and that the school, now in its forty-second year, has graduated more than 1,000 students. He adds, too, that if a child remained in the school four years without opening a book, it would still, to a degree, be educated. That child would be taught a trade, and what is more, it would be taught character, manhood and the proper attitude toward its neighbors of both races. That is what is being done at Lawrenceville, in a county where there are 8,000 whites, 12,000 Negroes and 20,000 friends of the school.

In 1930, St. Paul's had an income of about $105,000 from gifts, endowments and student fees, but if $70,000 is forthcoming this year the manager will be surprised. Drastic economies have been made necessary, especially by means of salary cuts, which have amounted to a total of $20,000, while every extra has been abolished. It is as much as the management can do to keep up its equipment and give the students nourishing food. A failure to raise the $6,500 would mean certain indebtedness for the school, which has no other means of getting that amount of money. Both Bishop Tucker and Bishop Goodwin, Dr. Patton and Mr. Harrison are depending on the generosity of the Church people of Virginia to make the campaign a success.

Vera Palmer, Publicity.

SOUTHWESTERN VIRGINIA

Rt. Rev. Robert C. Jett, D. D., Bishop

Executive Board Supports Pension Fund.

At its meeting February 28, the Executive Board addressed a letter to certain Senators and members of the House of Representatives, urging that the Episcopal Church be exempted as an employer from the provisions of the Economic Security Act in the form at present proposed. The statement called attention to the fact that the Church Pension Fund has been in existence for eighteen years, makes better provision for the clergy, their widows and orphans than would be the case under the Economic Security Act, and provides a retirement fund for the clergy, which is not contemplated in the Act. Further, the statement showed that if the Economic Security Act were adopted in its present form and the Episcopal Church were included as an employer, it would in all probability be impossible for the Pension Fund to continue in successful operation, since the dioceses, parishes, missions and other ecclesiastical organizations would scarcely be financially able to pay the present assessment to the Pension Fund of seven and one-half per cent on a clergyman's stipend, if, in addition, they are required to pay assessments or taxes as contemplated in the Economic Security Act. Copies of this statement were forwarded to the Senators from Virginia, Congressman Woodrum of Roanoke, the Hon. Pat Harrison, Chairman of the Finance Committee of the Senate, and the Hon. Robert A. Doughton, Chairman of the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives.

Two Churchmen Pass Away.

Two laymen, long prominent in the Church in this section of Virginia, passed to their eternal reward on Saturday, February 16: Mr. Edmund Pendleton of Wytheville and Judge Peter H. Dillard of Rocky Mount. Each of these gentlemen had served for many years on the vestry and as senior warden in his parish, and both have been prominent in the affairs of the Church in the Diocese of Southwestern Virginia, and, before its organization, the Diocese of Southern Virginia.

On Monday, February 18, Bishop Jett conducted both funerals. In the service for Mr. Pendleton at eleven o'clock in the morning, the Bishop was assisted by the Rev. Dr. Devall L. Gwathmey, rector of St. John's Church. In the service for Judge Dillard at Rocky Mount at 3 P. M., he was assisted by the Rev. Allen Person, rector of Trinity Church.

T. A. S.

PENNSYLVANIA

Rt. Rev. Francis M. Taitt, S. T. D., Bishop.

For All People.

The Rt. Rev. Francis M. Taitt, Bishop of Pennsylvania, will officiate and preach at the opening of this year's series of Preaching Missions for All People on Thursday Nights in Lent, which have become another of the outstanding special religious events in the public observance of the Lenten season in this city for the past eight years, and in each succeeding year some of the foremost preachers in the United States.

The services are held under the auspices of the Diocesan Commission on Evangelism of the Protestant Episcopal Church. During the years in which the Preaching Missions have been conducted, they have met with a steadily increasing response on the part of the public generally and have contributed to an expression of public interest in religion and in the public observance of Lent. Thursday nights were fixed for the Preaching Missions so they would not interfere with regular schedules of Lenten services in individual churches.

As in the two previous years the Missions this year, beginning with Thursday night of this week up to and including Thursday night, April 11, will be held in the Church of the Holy Trinity. The music will be under the direction of Ralph Kinder, Organist and Choirmaster of Holy Trinity, assisted by members of the Choir of the Church. The services will begin at 8 P. M. each night.

In addition to Bishop Taitt, the distinguished preachers who will conduct the succeeding Thursday Night Missions in the order named, are the following:

The Rev. Dr. Arthur Lee Kinsolving, rector of the famous Trinity Church, Boston, Mass. Mr. Kinsolving comes of a family which has given many clergy to the American Church.

The Very Rev. Kirk B. O'Ferrell, Dean of St. Paul's Cathedral, Detroit, Mich., and one of the foremost preachers in the Middle West.

The Rev. Dr. Oliver J. Hart, rector of St. John's Church, Washington, D. C., a parish whose communicants include many of the leading men in the official life of the national capital.

The Rt. Rev. Granville G. Bennett, formerly Bishop of Duluth and now assistant to the Bishop of Rhode Island. Bishop Bennett is a product of the old West and is recognized as a preacher of force and insight.

The Rev. Dr. Karl Reiland, rector of the famous St. George's Church in downtown New York and known for the fearlessness of his preaching. Dr. Reiland is also recognized as one of the leading Liberals in the American Church.

Program of Lenten Services Announced.

With the opening of the Lenten season on Wednesday a survey of the various communions represented in upwards of eight hundred churches of Philadelphia and vicinity discloses a crowded schedule of services and special religious activities in keeping with the spirit of the penitential season of forty days and in preparation for the Feast of Easter, which falls on April 21 this year.

Programs have been announced for the ever-popular Noonday Lenten Services in the central city sections, which for many years have been a distinguishing feature of the religious life of Philadelphia, eagerly looked forward to and attended by many thousands of people. Those who will conduct this year's services of the several communions include a notable list of visiting and local preachers.

The Rt. Rev. Francis M. Taitt, Bishop of Pennsylvania, preached at the opening service in the Garrick Theatre, on Ash Wednesday, under the auspices of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew. The Rev. Dr. Louis C. Washburn, rector of historic Old Christ Church, was the Ash Wednesday preacher at this ancient shrine, and the Rev. Dr. Carl E. Grammer, rector of old St. Stephen's Church, opened the service in that church.

Among the visiting preachers who will conduct the services in these three centers during the Lenten season are the Rt. Rev. Frank C. Creighton, Suffragan Bishop of Long Island; the Rt. Rev. Frank W. Sterrett, Bishop of Bethlehem; the Rt. Rev. William H. Moreland, retired Bishop of Sacramento; the Rt. Rev. George W. Davenport, Bishop of Easton, and the Rt. Rev. Granville G. Bennett, former Bishop of Duluth, and at present assistant to the Bishop of Rhode Island.

Other visiting clergy who will preach at the three centers include the Rev. Alan P. Shatford, rector of St. James' Church, Montreal; the Rev. J. Howard Melish, rector of Holy Trinity, Brooklyn, N. Y.; the Rev. Elmore McN. McKee, rector of Trinity Church, Buffalo, N. Y.; the Rev. Noble C. Powell, rector of Emmanuel Church, Baltimore; the Rev. William C. Dudley, pastor of that Flatbush Congregational Church, New York; the Very Rev. Kirk B. O'Ferrall, Dean of St. Paul's Cathedral, Detroit; the Rev. Ernest W. Mandeville, rector of Christ Church, Middletown, N. J.; and the Rev. Karl Reiland, rector of St. George's Church, New York City.

NEW YORK.

Rt. Rev. Wm. T. Manning, D. D., Bishop
Rt. Rev. A. S. Lloyd, D. D., Suffragan
Rt. Rev. Chas. K. Gilbert, D. D., Suffragan

Fourteen Great Windows Now Under Construction for Cathedral Nave.

In spite of the present difficult times, work goes on continuously so far as funds permit towards the completion of the Cathedral of St. John the Divine, giving employment to men who are greatly in need of it.

As a further step in this, Bishop Manning has recently signed contracts for the construction of fourteen of the Great Windows for the aisles and clerestory of the Nave of the Cathedral. These windows are given as memorials and the funds for their construction came from gifts made during the past seven or eight years for this explicit purpose. The contracts recently awarded are of great help to the five firms receiving them and to the artists, draftsmen and others in their employ. The firms are Charles J. Connick, Inc., Reynolds, Francis & Rohnstock; Wilbur Herbert Burnham, of Boston, Mass.; D'Ascenzo Studios, Philadelphia; and Ernest W. Lakeman, New York.

It is of interest to state that as an expression of their appreciation of this work at a time when work is so much needed the five firms above mentioned together with the architects, Messrs. Cram and Ferguson, have voluntarily offered to make jointly and to present to the Cathedral without cost another of the Great Windows in the Nave.

At the regular meeting of the Trustees of the Cathedral of St. John the Divine, at Synod Hall, Dr. Alexander Hamilton Rice and Courtlandt Nicoll were elected Trustees of the Cathedral. They will fill the vacancies caused by the death of William H. Burr and the resignation of Leroy King, who is now living in Rhode Island.

RHODE ISLAND

Rt. Rev. J. DeWolf Perry, D. D., Bishop

Lenten Preparations: The School of Christian Life.

Lent in the Presiding Bishop's diocese has always been a period of intensive preparation for Easter on many fronts. It is especially so now that Bishop Grenville Gaylord Bennett and Canon Bernard Iddings Bell are accepting invitations to lecture, teach and preach almost every day.

The School of Christian Life, sponsored by the diocesan department of Religious Education, concluded last Monday night a two months' session held in St. Martin's Parish House, Providence. Bishop Bennett's lecture, "Immortality—Illusion or Climax?" was an eloquent and convincing plea to get rid of the idea of death as tragedy.

Canon Bell's subject was "Sex." In his opinion birth control makes work for the psychiatrist. But if, for the sake of lessening the suffering and deprivation of children, it is to be considered at all, he advised the parties concerned to consult their priest. The priest should then insist that he and the family physician hold a conference and that no contraceptives be used, unless the two advisers sanction it.

Adult School of Education.

Grace Church's Adult School of Education opened a five-week session on Sunday afternoon, March 3. The faculty is composed of Bishop Bennett, Canon Bell, Dr. W. Appleton Lawrence (the rector), the Rev. Russell S. Hubbard, rector of St. Martin's Church; the Rev. Richard Mortimer-Maddox, rector of St. John's Church, Barrington; Miss Vida D. Scudder, Ph. D., professor emeritus, Wellesley College, and three lecturers from the Episcopal Theological Seminary, Cambridge; the Rev. James Thayer Addison, D. D., the Rev. Angus Dun, and the Rev. Charles L. Taylor.

Bishop Bennett's course deals with "New Testament Studies"; Dr. Lawrence's with "Studies in Prayer; and Dr. Addison's with "The World Message of Christianity." The fourth course, "The Church and the Kingdom," will be conducted each Sunday by a different lecturer taken from the faculty.

Many Distinguished Speakers for Lenten Services.

To the usual Noonday Services, which Grace Church, Providence, has offered the community for many years, special Litanies and addresses are added this year from 1:10 to 1:30 P. M. Among the preachers are Bishops Perry and Bennett; Dr. Arthur Lee Kinsolving, D. D., rector of Trinity Church, Boston; Dr. Oliver J. Hart, St. John's Church, Washington; the Rev. Richard G. Preston, All Saints' Church, Worcester, Mass.; Dean Philemon F. Sturges of the Cathedral Church of St. Paul, Boston; Dr. Lawrence and Dr. Boynton Merrill, the Second Church in Newton, West Newton, Mass.; Dr. Richard C. Raines, Hennepin Avenue M. E. Church, Minneapolis, Miss.; Dr. Alexander Mac

Coll, the Second Presbyterian Church, Philadelphia, and Dr. George A. Clarke, Emmanuel Baptist Church, Brooklyn.

The Department of Christian Social Service is holding its annual Lenten lectures in the Guild House of St. Stephen's Church. On March 11, the Rev. Floyd Van Keuren, Executive Secretary of the Diocese of New York, will speak on "Family Problems in the Home and Community; March 18, Dr. O. J. Hart, St. John's Church, Washington, on "The Parish at Work Meeting Community Problems"; March 25, Ralph Barrow, Director of the Church Home Society, Boston, "The Church and Wayward Youth of Today"; April 1, the Rev. Norman Nash, Cambridge Theological School, "The Church's Responsibility in Carrying Out Special Resolutions Passed by General Convention"; April 8, the Rev. John M. Groton, rector of Grace Church, New Bedford, "Spiritual Motive in Social Work."

F. W. Jones.

NEBRASKA.

Rt. Rev. E. V. Shayler, D. D., Bishop.

Meetings: Fraternal: Woman's Auxiliary; Y. P.

While one of the worst snowstorms of the season was raging outside, Trinity Cathedral Young People, entertained the groups from the other Omaha Parishes Sunday evening. The storm was a weather freak, including hail, thunder and lightning, and a bitterly cold wind which drifted roads and by late night made travel impossible. Dr. Lyman Harris of Omaha Municipal University, was the guest speaker.

Alpha Kappa Delta Sociological Fraternity of Brownell Hall, Omaha, held a meeting Friday evening, conducting semi-annual initiation ceremonies. Miss Edith Hall was the hostess and musical and dramatic numbers were given by members of the Fine Arts Department of Municipal University. Brownell Hall is the Episcopal Girls' Boarding School of the city.

The Executive Committee of the Diocesan Woman's Auxiliary met at Fremont on Thursday, February 28, in connection with a local celebration of the thirtieth anniversary of the founding of the Auxiliary, combining two functions happily.

The Rev. H. E. Asboe celebrated suitably the third anniversary of his rectorship at Beatrice last week.

A unique method of stimulating interest in the regular study of Japan at Trinity Cathedral Woman's Auxiliary is the coming of Mr. Hiram Kano, a Japanese, who is in charge of the work among his own people at Hebron, Nebraska. He tells of the Japanese outlook from a national point of view.

Wm. J. H. Petter.

WASHINGTON.

Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman D. D. Bishop.

Fellowship Dinner.

The Bishop of Washington, the Rt. Rev. Jas. E. Freeman, D. D., was honored on March 4, when a Fellowship Dinner was held at the Carlton Hotel, attended by scores of laymen and a number of the diocesan clergy. This dinner in honor of Bishop Freeman has become an annual event and indicates the high esteem in which he is held in the diocese.

Committee on Religious Life Meets.

The first public meeting of the Committee on Religious Life in the Nation's Capital was held recently in the U. S. Chamber of Commerce Building. A letter was read from President Roosevelt, bearing on the significance of the work of this committee. Bishop Freeman, chairman, made the opening address and presided. Rabbi Simon spoke for the Jewish congregations; Dr. Rasmussen for the Washington Federation of Churches, and Dr. Cartwright of the Catholic Church of the Immaculate Conception, for the Catholics. Many local and visiting pastors were in attendance.

In preparation for Lenten activities in the diocese a conference lasting all day Monday, March 4, was held at the College of Preachers, the Rt. Rev. P. M. Rhinelander, D. D., warden. This conference was called by Bishop Freeman and was attended by most of the city and many of the rural clergy. It was featured by a luncheon tendered in the refectory of the college.

The Rev. Wm. R. Moody, rector of St. Mark's Church, Washington, has prepared a book of Lenten meditations and a Three Hour Good Friday Service, which has attracted considerable attention and which will be used extensively throughout the Church during the Lenten season.

Diocesan Quiet Day for the Woman's Auxiliary was observed at St. Thomas' Church, Dr. C. E. Smith, rector, on March 5, with an address by the Rev. Thomas A. Conover, of Bernardsville, N. J.

Among the noon-day Lenten service speakers at the Church of the Epiphany are Bishops Freeman, Rogers, Budlong and Strider, and the Rev. Messrs. O. J. Hart, Fred Fleming, H. A. Wolfall.

T. F. O.

CHICAGO.

Rt. Rev. George Craig Stewart, D. D., Bishop.

Chicago's Forward Movement.

Chicago's Forward Movement campaigns, through which it is hoped to raise a million dollars for the Church in the Diocese, was put in motion this week with the selection of Mr. John D. Allen, President of the Church Club, as chairman of the Centennial Fund, and Mr. Wirt Wright as Executive Vice President.

The Centennial Fund organization will be formally incorporated within a few days, when some one hundred laymen of the diocese meet with Bishop Stewart at the Union League Club.

On the first day of the campaign, St. Matthias' Day, the thirty-fifth anniversary of the late Bishop Anderson's consecration, Bishop Stewart was informed by the rector and vestry of St. Chrisostom's Church that this parish would seek at least $30,000 for the Centennial Fund. Thus came the first definite report from one of the stronger parishes of the city of its goal for the campaign.

The campaign organization is now being perfected and within the next two weeks it is expected that committees and groups, including some two hundred laity and clergy will be organized in readiness for the intensive drive. Arrangements whereby parish campaign for funds may be prosecuted at campaign, also are being worked out.

The whole program received the unanimous approval of the recent diocesan convention and is being undertaken by authority of that convention. It is Chicago's answer to the "Forward Movement," which is headed by Bishop Hobson of Southern Ohio.

Pence Plan Permanent.

The Bishop's Pence Plan is taking on a permanent aspect with the announcement that the "Order of Episcopal Pencemen of the Diocese of Chicago" will be effected at a meeting of the group on March 9. For some time an order embracing parochial representatives of the Pence Plan has been under consideration. It is expected that the charter members of the diocese will number nearly 500.

The Pence Plan in the Diocese of Chicago has now brought in a total of approximately $37,000, covering operations of about eighteen months.

Missions Payments Near 100 Per Cent.

Payments on pledges of parishes and missions in the Diocese of Chicago for 1934, reached virtually the 100 per cent mark with the final reports of the treasurer's office. Payments for the year amount to $98,688.97, while the total pledges for the year were $98,-965. This is the first time in history of the diocese that payments have reached this point.

ATLANTA.

Rt. Rev. H. J. Mikell, D. D., Bishop.

Regional Conference.

A two day Regional Conference of Bishops, Laymen and Presidents of the Woman's Auxiliary was held in Atlanta, February 26 and 27, Bishop Philip Rhinelander having called the meeting.

The groups met at All Saints' Church and at the Biltmore Hotel.

Bishop H. J. Mikell attended both meetings.

Board of Managers of University of the South Meet.

The Board of Managers of the University of the South at Sewanee, Tenn., met Friday morning, February 22, at the Pro-Cathedral of St. Philip in Atlanta.

Bishop H. J. Mikell, president of the Board; Dr. B. F. Finney, vice-chancellor of the University; Dr. Gardiner L. Tucker, and the Rev. Moultrie Guerry attended.

This was followed by a meeting of the Provincial Department of Religious Education, attended by Bishop H. J. Mikell, President of the Province; the Rev. Messrs. John L. Jackson, of North Carolina; Gardiner L. Tucker, D.D., of Houma, La.; and W. H. K. Pendleton of Spartanburg, S. C.; Mr. W. W. Davison, of Atlanta, and Miss Annie Morton Stout, of the Field Department.

Plans for Religious Education throughout the Province, for the Summer Schools at Sewanee, Tenn., and the Clergy Conference were discussed. Plans were also discussed for Kanuaga, in North Carolina. Permission was given by the Board for Miss Annie Morton Stout to attend Camp Mikell in the Diocese of Atlanta in June of this year.

Board of Regents Meet.

The mid-winter meeting of the Board of Regents of the University of the South, Sewanee, Tenn., was held in Atlanta, Georgia, February 27.

Those attending were: Bishop Thos. F. Gailor, Chancellor of the University; Bishop H. J. Mikell, Atlanta; Bishop Theodore D. Bratton, of Mississippi; Dr. B. F. Finney, Vice-Chancellor of the University, Sewanee; Bishop F. A. Juhan of Florida; Dr. Edward Quintard of New York City; the Rev. Chas. Clingman and Dr. Bland Mitchell of Birmingham, Ala.; the Rev. Malcolm Lockhart of New Orleans, La.; Charles Edward Thomas of Indianapolis, Secretary of the Board. Leading lay figures

(Continued on page 22.)

FAMILY DEPARTMENT

MARCH.

3. Quinquagesima.
6. Ash Wednesday.
10. First Sunday in Lent.
13. Ember Day. (Wednesday.)
15. Ember Day. (Friday.)
16. Ember Day. (Saturday.)
17. Second Sunday in Lent.
24. Third Sunday in Lent.
25. Monday. The Annunciation.
31. Fourth Sunday in Lent.

* * *

THE FIRST SUNDAY IN LENT.

O Lord, who for our sakes didst fast forty days and forty nights; Give us grace to use such abstinence, that, our flesh being subdued to the Spirit, we may ever obey Thy Godly motions in righteousness, and true holiness, to Thy honour and glory, who livest and reignest with the Father and the Holy Ghost, one God, world without end. Amen.

* * *

For the Southern Churchman.

THE BURDEN BEARER.

Charles Ballard.

His flesh seemed warm against my own,
And His blood felt warm on my hands,
As I drew the nails, and loosened His bands,
And lowered Him to my shoulder.
Then, as the wind began to moan,
The air grew cruel, and colder.
Oh, that must have been an awesome sight,
As we made our way down into the night—
Night, and the bitter weather!

My body staggered beneath the weight—
Then suddenly, as we passed the gate,
A sharp, sweet glory filled the night,
And my burden all at once grew light.
Peace came upon me—I seemed to borrow
Strength from some glad tomorrow.
Summer was ours, and a strange new day;
Joy circled us round as we went our way—
The Master and I together!

* * *

The Family Department will publish during Lent a series of short sketches under the general title, "Armageddons." In his coming letter the author, the Rev. Upton H. Gibbs, states: I have tried to treat an old subject in a different manner. My purpose is to show the human factor in Our Lord's work of salvation for the human race. For this He was made Man that He might save His brethren in and through their common humanity. So it is true that "by man came also the resurrection of the dead."

ARMAGEDDONS.

I.

Humanity's Champion.

The Son of God as Man, went forth to war, for us men and our salvation. The whole of His earthly life was a campaign against the spiritual foes of the human race. It is divided into two periods, the first passive and preparatory; the second, active and agressive. The latter begins at His Baptism, when He received His credentials and commission.

In His active campaign, attention is centred on two great decisive battles, which may be called:

1. The battle in the wilderness;
2. The battle on the hill.

The former comprised His forty days' fast and temptation. The accounts of it in the Gospels are vivid and most striking. At the outset a dramatic contrast is afforded, by the transition from the baptism in the Jordan with gazing throngs on its banks, to the barrenness and solitude of the wilderness, where the only companionship was that of wild beasts.

It was here that was fought a conflict of momentous consequences to the human race. Its appeal will ever remain unabated, for humanity instinctively senses its tremendous import. What then transpired was humanity's battle for humanity's freedom. From first to last, it was humanity's cause that is at stake. The story involves around humanity's champion, humanity's foe, and humanity's repulse of attacks.

Keeping this in mind, the accounts as we read them, become vivid in the imagination. The mind's eye beholds the wilderness where the stage is set, and is focussed on the figure of a man whose visage shows the effects of a profound spiritual emotion, and seems to be emerging from a state of intense spiritual exaltation. About Him hovers a sinister form, at first dimly perceived, but gradually becoming more and more distinct. A duel between two personalities is about to take place.

* * *

An Ordination Charge.

Our Lord is drawing His great discourse to a conclusion. He has described the character of the citizens of Heaven, the high standard of righteousness to which they are called, the spirituality of their religious life and exercises, their confidence in their Father's protecting care. What remains, then, to be said? What last word or words to act as "goads, or nails well fastened by masters of assemblies?" The ends of a discourse may either dissipate or clinch all that has gone before it. It is disappointing, therefore, to be told, as many commentators tell us, that the seventh chapter of St. Matthew consists of disconnected extracts from the "Logia" (collection of our Lord's sayings), loosely strung together, and having no vital connection with one another. Even the rank and file of preachers are better masters than that of the office laid upon them. Who can imagine either that our Lord was less careful than they, or that Matthew, composing a patch-work report of the Sermon on the Mount, was guilty of such indifferent workmanship? At all events, if careful examination can show a thread of consecutive thought, without fancifulness, or reading into the text what it does not really suggest, time spent in tracing this thread will not be spent amiss. May God enable us, comparing spiritual things with spiritual, to have a right judgment of this portion of His holy word.

For a sound interpretation we must first ask this question. To whom was the seventh chapter of St. Matthew primarily addressed—was it to the multitude or to the disciples? One verse appears to give a decisive answer: "Give not that which is holy to the dogs, nor cast ye your pearls before the swine." Addressed to the multitude these words would have no meaning. That vast concourse, attracted by curiosity, and learning the very rudiments of the Kingdom of Heaven, did indeed draw out the Saviour's compassion. His love discerned in many, who were yet hardly aware of it, a susceptibility for discipleship. Many He saw not far from the Kingdom of God. But they had not yet found the Pearl of great price, the consciousness of the Father's deep personal love. On the way home they were still far from home. They could not give what they had not yet received. It is manifest that, if there is any coherence of thought in a passage containing these words, we must in studying them put in the forefront of our minds that little inner circle which had begun to gather round our Lord—the men who had found in Him, the Lamb of God, the Messiah, the King of Israel. The seventh chapter of St. Matthew may be regarded as a kind of Ordination Charge addressed to the disciples in the presence of the multitude. From this point of view let us attempt a paraphrase of the first twelve verses of this seventh chapter.

Children of God, Who have been embraced in the Arms of everlasting Love, and have learnt to trust it, beware that it does not tempt you into an attitude of fault-finding self-righteousness towards others. When you are tempted to criticise the careless or ungodly remember that the faults which you see in them are nothing in comparison with what you would find in yourselves, if you saw yourselves as your Father in Heaven sees you. Busy yourselves with discovering and putting away your own sins, rather than with congratulating yourselves that you are not sinners like other men. Nothing so dishonors the cause of God as this spirit of self-righteousness. It degrades the Name of your Father in the eyes of the world, and causes His righteousness, your pearl of great price, to be trampled underfoot. It infuriates the world against Him and against you. Then set your hearts on the Kingdom of God and His righteousness. Make it the subject of your earnest, ceaseless, importunate prayers. Ask and it shall be given you: seek and you shall find: knock and it shall be opened unto you. Even sinners give way to importunate prayers, and do not give a stone when they are asked for bread, or a serpent when asked for a fish. If sinners listen to entreaties and give way to importunity—what? will not your Father in Heaven, the All-loving, the All-righteous, give you the choicest of His gifts? And what is the choicest of His gifts? Is it not Love? Love which is not puffed up, love which thinketh no evil, love which tries to see what is best in others, and not to pick out their faults with self-righteous criticism—love which does to others as we wish that they should do to us, and thinks of others as we wish that they should think of us, which is to our virtues over-kind, and to our faults a little blind.

There seems to be in this interpretation no false emphasis, no intrusion of irrelevant ideas. But if it is correct what a flood of light it throws on the real dangers of spiritual life, concentrating our attention on perils to which we give little heed, bringing us out under those searching eyes that are like a flame of fire, warning us that in the idle gossip, critical of our neighbors, delighting in half-malicious stories at their expense, feeding us with good opinion of ourselves, because we do not share their faults—there—there where we so little suspect it, lies one of our greatest spiritual dangers. For such talks as this is food for self-righteousness, and where self-righteousness is the righteousness of God and His kingdom cannot be.—Record (English).

* * *

Lent.

Who would be at pains to free his lawn of weeds if he did not believe that grass would take their place? Or who would trouble to clean a water-channel if he was sure that there would never be any more rain? Now is not this the real value of Lent, that it provides an opportunity in our busy lives, when the things of the world tend to crowd out the things of God, to go to the source of enrichment and renewal of our spiritual supplies? We stand in perpetual need of God's creative touch upon our souls, that in a life of habit and routine we may be quickened into fresh vitality, and may know the truth of the Psalmist's words, "all fresh springs are in Thee." Lent is just one of those "seasons of refreshment from the presence of the Lord" which, if it is rightly used, may make the whole difference to the quality of our living.—Selected.

* * *

For the Southern Churchman.

(Reader's Digest, September, 1934.)

Ragged Texas.

Grace French Smith.

"There were eight of us kids, and one was lame,
And I couldn't get a job
When the big trouble—the depression —came,
So I ran along with the mob.
I didn't want to pick the bread
Off the plates of the kids, so I come,
And I just been a trav'lin' instead,
We beg, and steal and bum."

Jennie.

"And my old man had a crippled side,
My mother worked at night,
She couldn't stand it and so she died,
And dad was in such a fright;
But, cripes! his side was very bad,
And nobody hired me.
A 'home' took the kids, my sister took dad,
And then I scrammed, you see."

Praying Mary.

From the water and blackness emerges a girl—
In an empty box car she stands;
The rain is pounding, she tucks back a curl,
Her childish voice demands,
"And where to, boes? Up Iowa way?"
And without another word,
She settles herself in a corner to pray—
With the rain her voice is heard,

"Thy will be done on earth as it
Is done in heaven above,"
Again and again she prays, for grit,
For a little heavenly love
On the earth where she finds her lot is cast.
O God, we are to blame
For the innocent child, that is lost in the blast
Of a world of greed and shame.

* * *

Of Which Class Are We?

A merry little brook about three or four feet wide ran quietly through a ravine. Standing only a few feet from this brook it was possible to watch the birds come and bathe in the shallower parts of the stream. In the space of about twenty minutes, I saw several kinds of birds perform their ablutions. I found that not all birds bathe alike.

A gold-finch alighted on a small branch about three feet above the water. He dipped quickly into the water and then flew back to the limb to shake himself. Having taken several quick dips, he perched upon a wire within four feet of me and proceeded to shake and dry himself in the sun.

A cat bird, uttering that sort of guttural growl that these birds made, was very nervous and excitable when he came to bathe. Time after time he almost went in, only to fly back to a small bush. Finally, after a number of false starts, he nervously, but very thoroughly, took a good bath by squatting in the water and sending it in all directions. Then he flew upon a layer of dead leaves that were baking in the sun, spread his wings, and settled for a drying process. One could hardly tell his gray-black from the leaves where he was spread.

Finally, a robin came along for his afternoon dip. There was no fear, nor nervousness as far as he was concerned and he wasted no time about it. He hopped right in, settled himself and proceeded to take a good bath and get all wet. Then, up on a branch in the sun and the usual shaking and preening followed. The water glistened on his feathers.

And the brook became the Church, and the water, the Living Stream, and the birds became members, and I saw the gold-finch members taking infrequent, quick dips, afraid they might get wet; and I saw the cat bird members worried, nervous, afraid to make up their minds, eventually getting wet but growling all of the time while they are doing it; and I saw the robin members coming quietly and determinedly, with their minds made up, sure of their purposes and themselves, walk straight in, unafraid, and get thoroughly saturated with water. And I wished all young people would go into their christian quest of life like of the robin, unafraid, and willing to get completely saturated with Christ's Living Stream. —W. S. Wise.

* * *

For the Southern Churchman.

WIGGLY TOES.

Magda Brandon.

Our baby Wiggly Toes now is some man;
Creeping to everything that he can;
Creeping to everything that he sees,
Finding it out for himself, if you please!

Wiggly Toes walks upon wiggly feet;
Surely learns quickly—and that can't be beat;
Soon he'll be walking alone—won't you see—
He's a bright person for someone so wee.

Wiggly Toes' birthday—today he is four;
Eats wth a fork—he is small now no more.
We must be watchful or we will find out
We have a man and no boy about

* * *

War a Sign of Weakness.

War is a failure, not a triumph, of government. It is a waste of national wealth; so far from securing peace it defeats every influence that makes for the world settlement and world agreement.

The Western Hemisphere may imagine that it can keep out of a European war, but when the war is over, with all its destruction of life and civilization, then there will be smokeless factories in the Western Hemisphere; there will be grain rotting in its fields because the people who were to command labor and use the labor of America will be lying rotting corpses under the ruins of the destroyed buildings of the cities of the East.

War benefits nobody, therefore the British Government and every enlightened government in the world have declared that they will do their best to make war unthinkable and an impossibility.

But I must say this by way of warning—no one country can secure peace. Peace is an international venture. Great Britain cannot disarm whilst other countries are arming. Great Britain cannot trust to security of peace and cooperation and goodwill whilst other countries are pursuing an opposite policy in an opposite spirit. Therefore the question of Geneva is this, do we trust each other enough? Are we going to pursue our problems in the spirit of goodwill and with the determination to cooperate in order to secure peace rather than to arm against each other? —Ramsay MacDonald, British Prime Minister.

* * *

For the Southern Churchman.

GOD'S WAY.

Monica Williams.

There's a wind that blows through the forest
And hurls down the sturdiest oak,
But it leaves as I tramp in the wake of the storm
The sapling with twigs unbroke.

There's a breeze that sweeps down the valley
And bends down the golden grain,
But the thistle and clover beneath it
Look up at the sun again.

There's a quiver of air from the mountain,
A breeze that comes from the lake,
But I know it is there and wonder—
What, too—it will leave or will take.

For the wind that blows through the forest,
Or the breeze that wafts o'er the lake,
Is the wind just the same forever,
No matter what form it takes.

It silently moves through the meadow,
Or whistles down hill and in dale,
But how it shall come or from whither,
Only God in His wisdom can tell.

And the voice of God that has called me,
I know not how it has come
In the wake of the storm or in sunshine,
Through play or in work well done.

For the voice of God is softer
Than even the tiniest breeze,
Thou cans't not tell whence it cometh
Or goeth—what taketh—or leaves.
And so, dear friends, may we always
Each live our own true life,
For in living God speaks to others,
When least we think that He mignt.

Just call on Him in the silence
And God will come through thee today,
But not when thou thinketh or chooseth,
For God alone knoweth His Way.

* * *

A JEW PRAISES MISSIONS.

Not long ago, says Christian Worker, in a public address a man spoke slurringly of Foreign Missions, whereupon a Jew arose and said: "Some years ago my bank sent me to look at some land in Porto Rico. The village I visited was the nastiest, vilest little hell I ever saw. Two years ago I was sent to the same town. It was a beautiful little place, with neat houses and yards, clean streets, a pretty school for children, no vice or drunkenness in evidence, good gardens, and a church. What did it? A missionary had come there from the United States. I sought him out and gave him my check because I had never seen so much civilization accomplished in so short a time. And now when I hear such speeches as these, I say, 'How ignorant and provincial such men are!' "—The Sunday School Times.

* * *

Make a habit of "paying as you go." It is one sure way of never having to face the burden of debt.

FOR THE CHILDREN

OUR LORD, HE WAS A CARPENTER.

Our Lord, He was a carpenter,
Who wrought with saw and plane,
And did in Nazareth, thirty years
A working-man remain.
But while He wrought His heart and thought
Were ever with the Lord,
That He might best construct His Church
And preach the glorious Word.

St. Paul, he was a tent-maker
And working at his trade
With them that were of self-same craft,
For Christ he converts made.
"These hands," he said, "have ministered
To my necessity,"
And herein gathered his reward,
He made the Gospel free.

The good physician, Luke, whose praise
Through all the Churches rolls,
Like his great Master, toiled to save
Men's bodies and men's souls.
From him we learn these songs divine,
Which men and angels, too,
Sing day by day. Oh, what weak man
With zeal for God may do!

God's saints, in every age and clime
All in their several ways
With heart and hand, in life or death
Have labored for His praise;
And we, too, brothers, wheresoe'er
Our humble lot may lie
Can work for Him who was content
For us to work—and die!

* * *

Phyllis' "Clearing Away" Plan.

Linda stacked her books on the table of the little study, which she shared with her sister, and gave a sigh of relief. "Friday afternoon!" she said, with satisfaction, "and as there is to be a teachers' institute on Monday, we won't have school until Tuesday. I'm glad I have a good, long week-end, because there's quite a bit of studying to be done—lots of extra work. There's a history outline that I'm just dreading, because I don't quite know how to go at it. And we have a lot of hard problems in algebra. And for French, we're starting to read fables. That's something new, and I'm worried about them because I've been trying to improve my work in French, and just as I was getting along pretty well, we switch to a new kind of reading matter." Linda frowned down at her books anxiously.

"I'll tell you what I'd do, Linda," said Phyllis, looking up from the books spread out before her at the end of the table, "I'd just do some clearing-away work right now before supper-time. If you figure out how you're going to do that history outline, and get it started, you can finish it easily enough tomorrow or Monday. And if you'd do one of the algebra problems, so that you'd be sure you understand how they are done, you wouldn't worry about the rest of them. And if you read a paragraph or two of the fables, so that you get used to the style, you'll stop dreading them."

Phyllis was a senior and an excellent student; and Linda, who was a sophomore, had often found her sister's advice worth following. But today she shook her head.

"No, I'm not going to let these disagreeable assignments spoil my Friday afternoon,'" she said. "Plenty of time to think of them tomorrow. I'm going over to play table croquet at Anne's. She just got a set for a present, and you ought to see the cunning mallets and wickets. We want to get it all set up and play a game or two, so that tonight, when the bunch gets there, we'll know how it goes."

"You're willing to take the time to do some 'clearing away' to get ready for table croquet, but not for your lessons, is that it?" asked Phyllis quizzically.

"Oh, it's one thing to go at something you like, and quite another to go at some you dread," replied Linda. "I refuse to let those lessons spoil my good time."

But somehow "those lessons" did interfere with Linda's fun all that afternoon and evening, for even in the midst of the fascinating new game, her thoughts would fly unwillingly to the dreaded history outline, the algebra problems, and the French Fables. "I wonder if I'll e able to do them," she thought. "I'll have a try at them first thing tomorrow morning."

But the next morning Linda was in no mood to study. It was a fine fall day, and she was more than ready to go for a picnic with the girls. When she came back she was, so she told Phyllis, too sleepy to study.

It was late Monday afternoon before she sat down at the study table. She sighed deeply as she opened the history book. "But I've just got to settle down to it now," she said to herself. "Can't put it off another minute." When Phyllis came into the room, Linda was deep in her studying.

At last she looked up with a queer little smile. "Phyllis," she said, "you're going to laugh at me, I'm afraid; but, just the same, I'm going to tell you that this history outline I've been dreading all this time wasn't a bit hard to do, once I got at it. It's all finished now, and I have a good start at the algebra problems. They're not easy, but I understand how to do them, so I needn't have worried at all. And I can manage the French fables all right, too. I've spoiled my week-end worrying all for nothing, because these things I've been dreading weren't hard at all, once I got at them."

"I found that out myself, once upon a time," smiled Phyllis. "That's why I do this 'clearing away' I spoke of. If I get things well in hand, I don't dread them at all. And I've often found that I put off things I dreaded, only to find I did them without trouble once I got at them."

"No more putting off and dreading for me," said Linda emphatically. "In future I'll try your 'clearing away' plan."—Girls' World.

* * *

How Tiny Was Lost.

"I don't see where Tiny can be," said Dick Sherman one morning at the breakfast table. "I've hunted the pasture all over and she's gone out. The gate was fastened close and the barn door shut. There's no possible way for her to get out except through the gate or the barn."

"Well, I'll see about it after breakfast," answered Papa Sherman; "maybe she was lying down for a rest and the grass hid her."

"The grass isn't high enough for that," said Dick; besides, I've looked all over the pasture."

Papa did not seem much worried, and Dick forgot his care about his pet until breakfast was over. Now, Tiny was a dear little Shetland pony; so gentle and quiet even five-year-old Marjorie could ride her alone around the block, only she wouldn't go anywhere else except around that particular square. Once when Mamma said Marjorie might ride downtown and bring back a loaf of bread for supper, Marjorie came back crying, "Tiny wouldn't go downtown, but was bound to turn the corner by the Smeeds' and come back the same old way."

"Aw, you don't know how to make her mind," cried Dick. "I can make her go anywhere I want her to; but she is lazy, unless you know how to get the kink out of her."

But a quiet, almost lazy pony like her wouldn't be one of the kind to be tearing about and getting out of the pasture. After breakfast Papa Sherman examined the pasture, which was only the back end of their deep village lot. No, there wasn't a break nor hole in the fence.

"Tiny couldn't have gotten out without help," said Papa Sherman, "but where did the help come from? Just keep an eye out today and see if some of your playmates haven't taken her to ride."

"They'd better not without asking," retorted Dick, angrily.

At noon Dick's anxiety had increased. He had made inquiries among his playmates, and had gone all over the little pasture again carefully, and no word nor trace of Tiny anywhere.

"She must have been stolen," said Dick, fighting back the tears.

"Then some other little girl will ride her round the square," added Marjorie, catching Dick's tears in her voice.

"Some Gypsies went through the town a few days ago," said Mamma Sherman, "do you suppose—"

"I'll bet they spotted her when they went through and came back for her in the night," and Dick struck the table with his fist in his excitement.

"I don't see how anyone could get her out of the yard without our knowing it," said Papa. "The gate is near the house, and the drive goes close by the window. Even in the night I am sure it would have wakened some of us if she had been led out."

"Then where is she?" demanded Dick.

"The sheriff is in town, I might speak to him about it; only I should feel foolish to raise a cry of stolen pony and afterwards find her nearby somewhere."

"She must have been stolen," repeated Dick. "She isn't here and she couldn't get out alone!"

The second day with no clue to Tiny's whereabouts the whole neighborhood was alarmed. Papa did speak to the sheriff about it, and he agreed to be on the watch for a pony, but what else could he do? There was no one under suspicion. The thought of the Gypsies seemed so vague, it was several days before that they were in town, and no one knew which way they went. This was before the days of automobiles, and it would mean considerable trouble and expense to start a search for them. Marjorie cried whenever Tiny's name was mentioned. A spirit of sadness filled the whole house, and was even felt by the children of the neighborhood, for all their playmates had shared in the fun of riding and driving a real pony.

"I had rather think she was dead than that she should be ill-used by anyone," wailed Dick.

It was Friday morning when Tiny was first missed. Sunday morning, as the family sat at a late breakfast, there was a knock at the door. It proved to be a neighbor boy, who blurted out excitedly:

"I was looking under the barn for eggs and found a pony!"

"Tiny?" shouted the children at once.

"How could she possibly get there?" answered Papa. "The barn can't be more than two feet from the ground."

"And Tiny is forty-two inches high at the shoulders," added Dick, who prided himself on special knowledge of his pet.

They all rushed out to the barn and looked under. There lay poor Tiny very straight and quiet, but still breathing, Papa said. He got a rope and tied it about her legs and pulled her out, while all the rest stood breathless. Papa lifted her up but she could not stand at first.

"Bring her some water," said Papa. Dick brought a pail of water quickly and she drank eagerly. "Give her water often, a little at a time," cautioned Papa, "and after a bit we must feed her the same way."

"However did she get under there?" queried Dick, "forty-two inches high and in a space scarcely more than twenty-four inches. And so far back, too; it must have been six or seven feet."

"She must have lain down to roll near the barn," answered Papa, and got caught under the edge; then, the more she struggled the farther she worked herself under, until she was too weak to struggle longer. Fortunately her legs were this way or it would not have been so easy to pull her out."

"Maybe she was trying to play hide and seek and was too smart for us," and Marjorie gave her darling another love tap on the nose.

"In that case she came near being too smart for herself, like the girl in the ballad who hid in a chest and was not found until she was a skeleton," added Mamma. "I have often been annoyed with the Baxter hens running over our yard, but if Clyde hadn't come looking for possible nests under the barn, we probably would not have found Tiny before it would have been too late to save her."

"Then thank your neighbor's hens for your pony," concluded Papa. "Clyde found a valuable nest that time."

Tiny was like one returned from the dead. They all nursed her carefully and in a few days she was strong again. The children loved her more than ever. She lived until after Marjorie was too old to ride her, and, if she had had a language with which to speak, Tiny could have told her children, her grandchildren, and perhaps her great-grandchildren, her strange adventure of two days and more lying in close quarters under a barn.—Ada Simpson Sherwood, in The Congregationalist.

* * *

For the Southern Churchman.

THOSE RECTORY CHILDREN.

Chapter X.

Soda Crackers.

M. L. G.

How strange the house seemed next day! Mother, Father, Claire were gone. The excitement of their leaving was over, the last choked good-by said, and Uncle Danger had driven them away to the station, Claire so wrapped that one had to look closely to see her among the blankets.

"Don't forget about the tree-horses and the loft and the swing!" she had whispered to Winnie. And Winnie, with something clutching again at her heart, had answered:

"Let's have it for a secret!"

But now they were gone. Mrs. Innis was getting herself settled in Winnie's room, David had started for school and Philip and Kent seemed, from the sounds that reached Winnie's ears, to be having one of their rare disputes. Winnie was not to go to school today, and after seeing that Mrs. Innis was comfortable, she wandered disconsolately into Mother's room hoping that the little boys' voices would not be heard by the guest. She picked up Claire's wrapper and slippers and a few hot tears fell on them as she put them away and leaned for a moment against the closet door.

"Oh, how can things be so horrid!" she thought, rubbing her eyes to ease their smart. "It's not long after Christmas, when we had such a good time—and the nice day with the Trent ladies—how can things change so in such a few days!"

A cold nose touched her hand; Noel was moving uneasily about. He missed Claire, too. He finally settled himself on her sofa, but did not sleep, his deep brown eyes following Winnie about as she straightened the room.

"Well, Noel, Mother said to make the best of it—she said pleasant things would come in spite of their being away. But it doesn't seem like the world, without Mother!"

"Miss Winnie," came Cindy's voice up the stairway, "Please'm come down yere and see 'bout dese twinses. Dey got de red paint out'n de barn—"

Winnie ran downstairs and out on the back porch. Kent and Philip had made up their quarrel and were standing on the bottom step, Philip adorning Kent's face with liberal splashes of red paint from the pail he had dragged from the barn. A red trail marked his progress, and the steps were well sprinkled with thick red drops.

"O Philip!" cried Winnie in desapir, "look what you've done! Red paint everywhere—don't put any more on Kent's face, it'll never come off!"

"It isn't for comin' off, Winnie," said Philip, lifting a face of innocence to her, "it's for a circus clown. Roy's goin' to be the elephun, we can make a front tail for him outer a rope. An' Noel can be the camel, we can tie on a cushion for a hump—O Winnie, it'll be fun!"

"Dey done got de paint all fix on him, Miss Winnie," said Cindy. "Mebbe better let um play de circus fer awhile, den I'll work on Kent's face."

Winnie considered. "Well, Aunt Cindy, it would keep them quiet—but will you get the extra paint off now?"

"I will sho'ly, Miss Winnie, honey, an' den tek de turpentime bottle to dese steps. Unc' Danger soon comes back, he look out for dem clownses."

"Winifred!" called Mrs. Innis. Winnie ran hastily upstairs.

"Winifred, I find I'll need a large box or basket for my crocheting—I never kept my trunk in my room. There are two bedspreads and several sets of mats. And a small tea-kettle, my child, for I use a hot water bottle constantly. And tell Cindy to bring me a glass of hot milk and two soda crackers precisely at twelve o'clock."

Winnie, a little bewildered, answered, "Yes'm," and fled, before the list of requests could be added to. She unpacked a pretty wicker box in which Claire's little pillows and coverlets were kept, and dragged it to Mrs. Innis' door. Then to the kitchen for the tea-kettle.

"Aunt Cindy, Mrs. Innis wants a tea-kettle, please, and two soda-crackers and a glass of hot milk at twelve o'clock."

"I clar to gracious!" said Cindy in a lower voice than usual, "De kittle—she kin hab de little yaller one; and de hot milk, I kin manage dat. But we hain't got a sody cracker in de house. She'll hab to do wid beat biscuit dis day. Sody crackers!" Cindy made a sound very like a snort.

"Well, I'll take her the biscuit, its nearly twelve already. Maybe she'll like them as well. Just heat the milk, will you, Aunt Cindy?" Winnie sat on the kitchen table, and suddenly put her head down on her arm and her shoulders shook with sobs.

"Dar now, chile, don' you worrity ya' min' long o' dat Mis' Innis," Cindy stopped to pat the brown curls. "No, nor a dozen des like huh. Sho' you got Cindy right heah, an' Unc' Danger he be back toreckly an' Marse David, too. I gwine mek a gingerbread fo dinnah, an' I lay hit gwine be extry fine."

"I don't reckon Mrs. Innis could eat that," Winnie said. But she smiled at Cindy, through her tears. "She told Mother she had a delicate digestion. Maybe we'd better send Uncle Danger to the store to get her some soda crackers."

"Yassuh, we will dat," Cindy answered, in an indignant tone. "Couldn't eat gingerbread what I makes myself? Yessuh, we git huh a whole bar'l sody crackers, an' dry I hopes dey be. Here's de hot milk an' beat biscuit, honey. Tek 'em long to dat Mis' Innis, and min' what Cindy tell you—don' you worrify yo' min, honey."

* * *

The Sinfulness of Sin.

Sin—that word ought to be written in a paragraph, a page, a book by itself and written in blood. What sin is I know not; I only know that when God would mark the heinousness of sin, no adjective could be found sufficiently energetic but one borrowed from sin itself; and He describes it as "exceeding sinful." I only know that over the whole earth, and in all the depths of Hell, sin is the only thing which God abhors; the only object which the absolute, essential, quintessential Love hates with absolute, essential, quintessential hatred; exclaiming in tones of imploring deprecation, "Oh, do not this abominable thing that I hate." I only know that if God has a government, sin is treason against that government; if God is holy, just, and true, sin defies and outrages these perfections. As the tenderest of fathers, God yearns in ineffable compassion over His children; but sin arms those children and arrays them in horrible revolt against this adorable Being—causing Him to use the language of a parent who, finding all entreaties vain, turns from his unnatural offspring, and seeking some lonely spot, pours out his grief there, making rocks and vales vocal with his complaints, as in anguish he cries, "Hear, O heavens, and give ear, O earth; for the Lord hath spoken, I have nourished and brought up children, and they have rebelled against me."—Richard Fuller.

* * *

For the Southern Churchman.

THE TEMPTING.

Martha Young.

The first man's great temptation came
Within a garden fair;
Amid flowers, fruits, beauty he
He fell and became aware:

The God-Man's great temptation came
In a bleak wilderness—
If we can conquer with Him there,
Soul-glory will us bless.

* * *

For the Southern Churchman.

JOHNNIE FOUND A DIME.

William Allen Ward.

Johnnie found a shiny dime
And went to buy a skyrocket,
Planning to have a big time—
Johnnie found a shiny dime,
But what a terrible crime!
It burned a hole in his pocket . . .
Then Johnnie didn't have a dime
When he went to buy the rocket.

* * *

"A forgiving God cannot dwell in a heart made foul by grudges."

Classified Advertisments and Notices

All notices and advertisements, excepting positions wanted, will be inserted in this department at a rate of 20 cents per agate line each insertion. Special raes to contracts of any length. A rate of 15 cents per line is made to persons seeking positions. No advertisement accepted for less than 50 cents.

Copy for this department must be received not later than Tuesday of the week in which it is intended that the first insertion shall appear.

SPECIAL NOTICES.

CHURCH VESTMENTS.
Cathedral Studio, Church embroideries, Altar and Pulpit Hangings. Stoles from $6.50. Burse and veil from $10. Surplice from $8. Send for complete line of pure Irish linens by the yard. Silks, fringes and gold thread. Embroidered emblems ready to appy. Altar Guild Handbook, 50c.
L, V. MACKRILLE
11 W. Kirke St., Chevy Chase, Washington, D. C.
Telephone Wisconsin 2752.

RAZOR SHARPENER.
SHARPENS ANY STRAIGHT RAZOR, or safety razor. Guaranteed by manufacturers, and I guarantee it to please you. 50 cents per cake, or 3 cakes for $1.00. I take subscriptions for all magazines published at publishers' rates, or less. Sold by a wheel chair invalid. Edward P. Broxton, R. F. D., Blythe, Ga.

FOUNTAIN PENS.
A FOUNTAIN PEN AT A 1933 VALUE, with the Spencerian quality and smooth writing ease famous for seventy-five years. Guaranteed. Points fine and medium. Colors, gloss black, green and gold, Burgundy, blue and black, grey pearl. Price $2.00. Sold by a shut-in wheel chair invalid. Edward P. Broxton, R. F. D., Blythe, Ga.

HOUSE OF THE NAZARENE; SAINT AUGUSTINE, FLORIDA; offers rest and quiet in comfortable and pleasant surroundings. Invalids requiring nursing cannot be received, nor those with mental difficulties. Apply to Sister-in-Charge.

MONEY IN OLD LETTERS.—Search your old trunks and send all old envelopes used before 1880. Highest prices paid. George Hakes, Belvidere, Illinois.

MY SISTER IS A "SHUT-IN" AND would greatly appreciate orders for counterpanes and table mats, both of which she crochets beautifully and quickly and very reasonably.
MRS. FENTON NOLAND,
Beaver Dam, Va.

THERE'S MONEY IN YOUR ATTIC.
I buy Confederate Stamps, Old U. S. Stamps, and Envelopes mailed before 1880. Send or write to J. R. Morton, 1509 Irving St., N. W., Washington, D. C.

SITUATION WANTED.

EDUCATED WOMAN DESIRES POSITION as secretary or domestic manager, etc. Box AG, care Southern Churchman.

NURSE, GRADUATE, MIDDLE AGED, EPISCOPALIAN, wishes position in school. Home for aged. Mission hospital, or other Episcopal institution. Moderate salary. Address M. Rudkin, 51 W. High St., Gettysburg, Pa.

DEATHS

McQueen: MRS. VIRGINIA DUNBAR McQUEEN, widow of Rev. Stewart McQueen, D. D., at her home in Montgomery, Ala., on February 24, 1935.

SARAH VIRGINIA BELT,

Daughter of the late John Lloyd Belt and Sarah Eleanor (McGill) Belt, entered into eternal rest, after a lingering illness, October 13, 1934. She was a devoted member of the Episcopal Church and was President of the Church Guild at the time of her death. She was also a member of the Woman's Auxiliary, a Daughter of the Confederacy and a Daughter of the American Revolution. Her favorite hymn, "O Lamb of God Still Keep Me," was sung at her funeral, which was conducted by Rev. Guy H. Crook.

FREDERICK BAYTOP JONES.

On the morning of January 30, 1935, at his home in Gloucester, Va., FREDERICK BAYTOP JONES quietly passed into the "more abundant life" on which he had laid hold so strongly while here. Born at "Sunnyside" in Gloucester county on May 19, 1856, he was the son of Dr. Walker Frederick Jones and Martha Baytop Jones. He is survived by his wife, Mary Lee Fitzhugh, formerly of Greene county; two daughters, Hettie Carter Jones, of Gloucester, and Mary Lee Fitzhugh Farner, of Long Island; one son, Fitzhugh Baytop, of New York; two sisters, Mrs. Charles Jones and Mrs. Jefferson Sinclair, and one brother, J. B. Jones, all of Gloucester county. Another son, Frederick Walker, died in 1930 at the age of twenty-nine.

The burial was in Ware Church Cemetery in the afternoon of January 31.

Mr. Jones bore in his thinking and acting the marks of his Master. A member and regular attendant of Ware Church, church membership meant just one thing to him, and that was loyal discipleship. Devotion to the memory of loved ones gone before and advancing years served to make more real to him the larger life beyond, and in his last days he put his hope into a little verse which was read at his burial.

"My eyes grow dim; less and less I see.
Now my Saviour's promises are all in all to me.
I know that when from earthly ills set free,
In a Heavenly Home mother and dear ones wait to welcome me;
Then, through Christ, with seeing eyes, not blind,
We will watch for dear ones left behind."

H. S. O.

CHURCH INTELLIGENCE.

(Continued from page 21.)

of the Church participated in the business meeting.

Semi-Annual Meeting of Provincial Officers, Y. P. S. L.

The Provincial officers of the Young People's Service League held their semi-annual meeting in Atlanta, at the Pro-Cathedral of St. Philip Saturday, February 23.

Attending were: Joseph Faulk, President, of Columbia, S. C.; Lucien Malone, First Vice-President, Grendale, Miss.; Marshall Seifert, Second Vice-President, of Mobile, Ala.; Catherine Robert, Secretary, of Knoxville, Tenn.; Gordon Tucker, Treasurer, of Miami, Fla.; Florence Lerch Thank Offering Secretary, of Charlotte, N. C.; Billy Daniels, Personal Evangelism Chairman, of Wilmington, N. C.; Stratton Lawrence, Supply Department Secretary, of Sewanee, Tenn.; James Duncan, Past President, of Atlanta, Ga.; Miss Annie Morton Stout, of Memphis, Tenn.; the Rev. John Pinckney, of Allendale, S. C., and the Rev. Mortimer Glover, of Macon, Ga., Counsellors, and Dr. Gardiner L. Tucker of Louisiana, and Bishop H. J. Mikell, President of the Province.

Mrs. James W. Griffith, of Savannah, reported on the work being done by the Young People's Division of Georgia.

Plans were discussed for the Young People's Conference and the Convention to be held in Sewanee August 13-27, 1935.

The young people were entertained at a banquet and dance given at All Saints' Church by the City Union Y. P. S. L., of which Russell K. Smith, Junior, is President.

Robert M. Brandy, Diocesan President, acted as host to the Provincial Officers, through his diocesan organization.

The Conference closed with a Corporate Communion at eight o'clock at the Pro-Cathedral of St. Philip, at which Dean Raimundo de Ovies was the celebrant.

A. B. Gray.

LEXINGTON

Rt. Rev. H. P. A. Abbott, D. D., Bishop.

Furthering the Work of Margaret Hall. Hall.

"The Guild of St. Anne," composed of women who are interested in furthering the work of Margaret Hall and the Order of St. Anne, met at the school, February 28; Mrs. John Marshall, of Anchorage, presiding. Every parish in Louisville, and in several nearby towns, is represented. The meeting was held in Versailles in an effort to interest

Helping millions to END COLDS SOONER VICKS VAPORUB

DURING LENT
Prepare the Altar Linens and Vestments
FOR EASTER
From our pure Irish Linen. Samples on request.
Mary Fawcett Co.,
812 Berkeley Ave., Trenton, N. J.

Prostate Gland Sufferers
Free information regarding treatment from which I myself have been cured; no obligation is hereby attached; no C. O. D. collections; nothing to sell.
A. N. BEADLE,
1649 W. Minnehara,
St. Paul, Minn. Apt. S. C.

LEG SUFFERERS
Why continue to suffer? Do something to secure quick relief. Write today for New Booklet—"THE LIEPE METHOD OF HOME TREATMENT." It tells about Varicose Veins, Varicose Ulcers, Open Leg Sores, Milk or Fever Leg, Eczema. Liepe Method works while you walk. More than 40 years of success. Praised and endorsed by thousands.
LIEPE METHODS, 3284 N. Green Bay Ave., Dept. C-39 Milwaukee, Wis. FREE BOOKLET

CAUTHORNE PAPER COMPANY
The South's Most Progressive Paper House
ALL GRADES OF PRINTING AND WRAPPING PAPERS
Richmond, Va.
This paper is printed on paper supplied by the Cauthorne Paper Company.

VESTMENTS
Cassocks, Surplices, Stoles, Silks, Embroideries, Cloths, Fringes
CLERICAL SUITS
Priest Cloaks, Rabats, Collars
Church Vestment Specialists for over half a century
COX SONS & VINING · INC.
133 EAST 23RD STREET · NEW YORK · N.Y.

R. GEISSLER, INC.
450 SIXTH AVE. NEAR 10th ST. NEW YORK
Church Furnishings
IN CARVED WOOD AND MARBLE · BRASS · SILVER FABRICS + WINDOWS
EST. 1877

CHOIR VESTMENTS
Cassocks, Cottas and Caps. Special low prices. Samples and prices on request. Poplin Canterbury Caps, $1.00 each. Paper Patterns for Choir and Church. Vestments for sale.
HENRY HAYTER, 8205 Riverside Drive, Box 618, Rte. 1, St. Petersburg, Fla.

A HANDBOOK

for the use of the members and friends of the Protestant Episcopal Church—

By the late Bishop Peterkin

Now in its 50th thousand.

Requests still come for this pamphlet, which is used as a Confirmation help. It can be obtained from Miss Fannie P. Brady, University, Virginia. Price, 12 for $1.00, postpaid; 100, for $5.00, express collect; single copies, 10 cents.

women of the Blue Grass area in the organization, and a representative group of women from Lexington and other towns attended. Bishop Abbott, in whose diocese the school is located, commended the work of the new group. A "country fair" for the benefit of the school and of participating parishes is planned for June.

The Rev. George Ralph Madson, Chaplain of the school, has become business manager of the corporation.

PERSONALS.

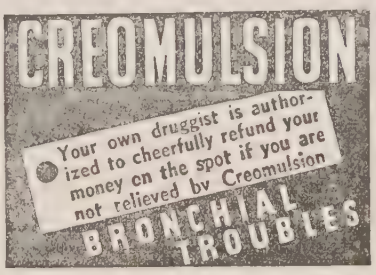
(Continued from page 2.)

Kennedy, Archdeacon of the Colored Convocation; the sermon was preached by the Rev. John R. Logan, D. D., vicar of the Chapel of St. Simon the Cyrenian, Philadelphia, and the Epistle was read by the Rev. John H. Griffith.

DEATHS.

Mrs. Michael J. Kippenbrock.

Mrs. Michael J. Kippenbrock, wife of the missionary in charge of St. Matthew's Church, Fairbanks, Alaska, died in Fairbanks on February 3, aged thirty. In 1928, Mr. and Mrs. Kippenbrock began their service in Alaska, at Cordova, remaining there for three years. In 1931, Bishop Rowe transferred Mr. Kippenbrock to Fairbanks. A Requiem Eucharist was celebrated at St. Matthew's Church on February 5, by the Rev. Warren R. Fenn of All Saints, Anchorage. Mr. Kippenbrock and his young son, David, accompanied Mrs. Kippenbrock's body to her home in Alexandria, Virginia. The burial service in Christ Church was conducted by the Rev. Lewis Carter Harrison, of Brook Hill, Virginia, assisted by the rector of the parish, the Rev. William J. Morton, D. D. Interment was in Ivy Hill Cemetery, Alexandria. Mrs. Kippenbrock is survived by her husband; a son, David, aged three, and infant daughter, Anne, as well as by her parents, Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Coffman, of Alexandria; a sister, Mrs. G. G. Sheetz, of Alexandria, and a brother, Henry C. Coffman, of Washington, D. C. During her residence in Cordova and Fairbanks, Mrs. Kippenbrock has aided greatly in her husband's work as a missionary of the Church.



DO YOU NEED EXTRA MONEY?

If you are interested we shall be glad to have you make application. Ask our Mr. C. B. Fleet, assistant cashier, to give you details.

State-Planters Bank and Trust Company

RICHMOND, VIRGINIA.

Established 1865. Member Federal Reserve System.

Easter Services

Every parish should now be taking stock of its supply of

HYMNALS AND PRAYER BOOKS

including as many musical editions as possible, so that everyone may join in congregational singing.

Orders should be placed early to insure delivery before Easter.

As publishers of the authorized and approved Hymnal of the Church, as well as the Prayer Book, in behalf of the Church Pension Fund, we solicit your order.

HYMNALS

Standard Musical Edition at $1.20 a copy (or $1.00 a copy in lots of 100 or more).

Special Choir Edition, heavily reinforced, at $1.50 a copy (or $1.30 in lots of 100 or more). Word Edition at 40 cents a copy.

PRAYER BOOKS

Pew Edition, 3½x5½, in various bindings, at 35 cents a copy.

Chancel Edition, 5x7½, in various bindings and with larger type, at 60 cents a copy.

Circulars sent on request. Order direct from

THE CHURCH HYMNAL CORPORATION

A subsidiary of the Church Pension Fund

20 Exchange Place, New York

Educational

The General Theological Seminary

CHELSEA SQUARE, NEW YORK

The next Academic year begins on the last Wednesday in September.

Special students admitted and Graduate Courses for graduates of other Theological Seminaries.

The requirements for admission and other particulars can be had from THE DEAN, 1 Chelsea Square, New York, N. Y.

SHENANDOAH VALLEY ACADEMY

Certificates accepted by universities, colleges, West Point, Annapolis. The Academy's experienced teachers, cultural atmosphere, limited numbers, military discipline enable it to prepare boys to succeed in college. For catalogue write: Col. B. M. Roszel, Supt., Winchester, Va.

ST. MARGARET'S SCHOOL

TAPPAHANNOCK, VIRGINIA.

A Church School for girls. Boarding Department limited to 70. College Preparatory Course and Intermediate Grades. Athletics. Very moderate cost.

Country life and simplicity without isolation. Beautiful grounds on Rappahannock River. Three dormitories for different stages.

EDITH LATANE, Headmistress.

ST. CHRISTOPHER'S

A Church Boarding and Day School Healthful, beautiful and historic surroundings. Boarding Department limited to 50 boys. Rate, $650. Reduction to sons of clergymen and missionaries. Illustrated catalogue on request.

REV. C. G. CHAMBERLAYNE, Ph. D., LL. D., Headmaster, Richmond, Virginia.

The Virginia Theological Seminary

ALEXANDRIA, VIRGINIA

For catalogue and other information, Address THE DEAN

The Beckford School

WOODSTOCK, VIRGINIA.

A school for younger boys. Second grade through Junior High School. On modern farm in Shenandoah Valley. Summer camp. Limited enrollment. Fifty dollars monthly.

EDMUND BURKE WHELAN, Headmaster.

The Bishop Payne Divinity School

The accredited Seminary of the Church for training colored men for the ministry. The curriculum covers the full course for Deacons and Priest's Orders. The degree of D. D. awarded.

For catalogue and information, apply to Rev. F. G. Ribble, M. A., D. D., Dean Petersburg, Va.

The Episcopal Theological School

Cambridge, Massachusetts.

Affiliated with Harvard University. Dean H. B. Washburn, 3 Mason Street.

THOUGHTS for the THOUGHTFUL

"It is only the impossible that is worth attempting."

Power of life is power of suffering.—Hort.

Never is truth more indispensable than in the hour of prayer.—Rev. C. E. Jefferson.

"God created man to be immortal and made him an image of His own eternity."

One must add the courage that springs from a partial knowledge of the truth to the patience one gets from the understanding that as yet our knowledge of the truth is but partial.—Basil King.

"If everyone does not enjoy plenty it must be because of the bringing in of some principle of distribution which could never have been His."

Love is of such a nature that sacrifice—giving—is its final expression, and itself transmutes the anguish, whether physical or mental, undergone for the beloved, into joy.—Figgis.

Do not make your praying to Him very different from simply talking to Him.—J. W. Kimball.

What you will be when you enter Heaven will be in great part what you have been made by love.—Selected.

"Wherever He shall guide me
No want shall turn me back;
My Shepherd is beside me
And nothing can I lack."

To conceive the Christian's task as that of conserving something given once for all is to deprive it of its momentum and blot out its vision.

—George Cross.

In the sublime tragedy of the Cross men have seen the power of a self-giving for all men which is the same as the affirmation of a right and power to rule them.—Selected.

Christ of the inward grace
Both near and far Thou art.
Death is no portal of Thy hiding-place;
Oh, may our dead fare forth at quicker pace,
Thy sunrise in the heart.

—Selected.

It is not something yet to be revealed—
The Everlasting Life; 'tis here and now,
Passing unseen because our eyes are sealed
With blindness for the pride upon our brow.

—Selected.

If He, as no other, has melted the frost of the heart so that the flowers may grow once more, that is because He Himself has been out in the cold wind without shelter and without any protection except the invisible Presence of His Father.

Christ Church School

MIDDLESEX COUNTY, VA.

A country school for boys; well located. College preparatory, moderate cost. Personal attention; scholarships. Apply to Wm. D. Smith, Jr., Headmaster(for information, Christchurch, Va.

The Ewart's Cafeteria

EXCELLENT FOOD
REASONABLE PRICES

Richmond, Va.
112-114 N. 5th St.
Norfolk, Va.
112-114 Market St.
Washington, D. C.
522 13th, N. W.

FLOWERS BY WIRE EVERYWHERE

Mosmiller Florist

115 E Main St.
424 E. Grace St
RICHMOND, VA.

Royal Laundry

and
BAND BOX DRY CLEANERS
UNEXCELLED LAUNDRY
and Cleaning Service
Richmond, Virginia.

L. T. CHRISTIAN

FUNERAL DIRECTOR

Boulevard-Park and Patterson Avenue
Richmond, Va.
Office Never Closed
Prices to meet depressed conditions

Edwin S. Gorham, Inc.

Publishers and Booksellers.
Established 1900.

Church Literature and Art, Bibles, Prayer Books and Hymnals, Devotional Books, Parish Requisites.

Catalogues and Information on request.

18 West 45th Street, New York.

Some Important Facts in English Church History

EXAMINED AND REVIEWED

By

REV. W. P. WITSELL, D. D.

This is an illuminating and instructive review of the history of the Episcopal Church in England from the earliest records, with commentaries on the book with the above title compiled by the Rev. C. L. Wells, D. D., of Sewanee, Tenn.

As a digest of the records of the establishment and growth of the Church; its maintenance and continuity of existence as an independent religious body amid the vicissitudes of early English politics, and efforts of outside interference, this review affords a valuable fund of information to churchmen.

In pamphlet form,
Price, 25 cents
For sale by
SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN CO.
Richmond, Va.

DESIGNED FOR THE PROMOTION OF PRACTICAL PIETY, THE DIFFUSION OF RELIGIOUS AND GENERAL INTELLIGENCE, AND THE MAINTENANCE OF THE PRINCIPLES OF THE PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL CHURCH

Southern Churchman

DOMINUS ☧ FRUSTRA NISI 1835

Vol. 100. RICHMOND, VA., MARCH 16, 1935. No. 11.

SHOW US, O FATHER.

GRANT us, O Father,
Clear eyes of sincerity
That today we may look out fearlessly over Thy world
And through tragedy, evil and pain
See indwelling the whole
Thy Spirit:

Show us the work of that Spirit
Through all generations,
Bringing Thy nature of beauty and love to birth in Thy world,
Revealing Thyself in what Thou hast made,
In splendour of sun and of star,
In beauty of mountain and forest,
In joy of created beings,
Above all in the love which has built up our race
Through sacrifice, freely endured, of mother for child, of the strong for the weak:

Show us the Cross of Thy passion, O Christ,
The meaning of all man's past, all his future,
Bound up in that Cross:

Show us the glory, the beauty, the joy,
Of Calvary,
Teach us to bear Thy Cross forward.

By John S. Hoyland

From "The Divine Companionship," published by The Student Christian Movement, London.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Latest Archaeological Discoveries.

King David Hotel,
Jerusalem.
February 16, 1935.

Mr. Editor:

I have duly received your reply to the letter I sent you from New York on December 27, 1934, and thank you for the interest you have displayed in the most important work I have undertaken in connection with the Bible.

You will now be pleased to read that just as archaeological discovery is tending to confirm the reasonable correctness of the earlier books of the Old Testament, so a discovery which has just been made this week, is favorable to the later books, in particular to the Book of Jeremiah.

At the time of writing, I have just cabled the New York Times of the finding in the later Jewish levels of Tell Duweir (Lachish), of ten large potsherds with Hebrew inscriptions in ink upon them. The position in which these potsherds were found makes it certain that they were written before Nebuchadnezzar destroyed the city in B. C. 588. They appear to be copies of letters, the originals of which were probably written on papyri. The script resembles that used in the Samaritan Pentateuch. The inscriptions are now being studied by the leading Hebrew scholars in Jerusalem, but already there is evidence that the Divine name Jahve occurs several times, and besides that, the names of Jeremiah, Matteniah, Gemariah and Jaazaniah, all of which will be familiar to you in the Old Testament. There are besides several names familiar to readers of the Apocrypha. The use of the Divine name Jahve is remarkable. The contents of the letters appear to indicate that a state of tension existed at the time they were written, and phrases familiar to us from the Bible occur in them.

In conclusion, I may add that other discoveries of equal importance are being made, to which it is not yet expedient to give publicity.

Yours very truly,
Charles Marston.

Personal Notes

Calls Accepted.

The Rev. Capers C. Satterlee, of Clemson College, S. C., has accepted the call to St. Andrew's Church, Birmingham, Alabama, and will enter upon his new duties the middle of March. The service of institution will be held March 17, Bishop McDowell presiding.

The Rev. H. Foster Whitney, priest-in-charge of Trinity Church, Miles Center, Ill., virtually since its founding, has been appointed priest-in-charge of St. Paul's Church, Savanna, Ill., and will assume his duties April 1. He will succeed the Rev. H. B. Ziegler, resigned on account of ill health.

The Rev. Goeffrey M. Horsfield, late of St. Clement's Church, Philadelphia, assumed charge of St. Paul's Church, Savannah, Ga., on March 1. His address is care of St. Paul's Curch. The Rev. George Ferguson, who has been locum tenens for the past several months, will remain in the city through Easter.

The Rev. Percy C. Adams, vicar of the Church of the Advent, Baltimore, Md., has received and accepted a call to the rectorship of St. George's Parish, Mt. Savage, Md. Mr. Adams plans to take up his new work after Passion Sunday. He succeeds the late Rev. John W. Torkington, D. D., who died at the Church Home and Infirmary, Baltimore, last December.

The Rev. James T. Marshall, rector of the Church of the Epiphany, Govans, Md., is recovering from injuries resulting from an automobile accident on February 26. He is suffering from a fractured collar bone, but hopes to be able to resume his duties shortly.

The Very Rev. Raimundo de Ovies, Dean of the Cathedral of St. Philip, Atlanta, is a grandfather. His grandson was born to Mr. and Mrs. Julian R. de Ovies on Ash Wednesday, March 6.

The Rev. and Mrs. David Cady Wright, Jr., announce the birth of a son, David Cady Wright, III., in the early morning hours of February 25, 1935. The Rev. David Wright is the rector of Emmanuel Church at Athens, Ga.

(Continued on page 23.)

CONTENTS

Letters to the Editor 2
Personals 2
Editorials 3
Church and World Problems As Others See Them 4
The Thousandfold Page—Archdeacon Neve 5
Christ and War—Rev. Arthur L. Kinsolving, D. D. 6
Growing a Soul—Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman, D. D. 7
Second Sunday in Lent—W. E. Callender 7
Just Traveling Around—Mary F. Goodwin 8
What Price—Missionary Effort . . . 8
Woman's Auxiliary 10
Book Reviews 11
Y. P. S. L.—Rev. R. F. Blackford . . 13
Church Intelligence 13
Family Department 18
Children's Department 20
Thoughts for the Thoughtful 24

Southern Churchman

SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN COMPANY,
Mayo Memorial Church House,
110 West Franklin Street,
Richmond, Va.

Officers.

President, RT. REV. H. ST. GEORGE TUCKER, D. D.
Vice-President, E. OTTO N. WILLIAMS.
Secretary-Treasurer, MR. JOHN H. COOKE.

Board of Directors.

RT. REV. H. ST. GEORGE TUCKER, D. D.
REV. CHURCHILL J. GIBSON, D. D.
REV. GEORGE P. MAYO, D. D.
REV. CHARLES W. SHEERIN.
MR. CARL H. NOLTING.
MR. ALEXANDER W. WEDDELL.
MR. E. RANDOLPH WILLIAMS.
MR. LANGBOURNE M. WILLIAMS, JR.
MISS SUSANNE C. WILLIAMS.

Voting Trustees.

RT. REV. ROBERT CARTER JETT, D. D.
RT. REV. H. ST. GEORGE TUCKER, D. D.
MR. JAMES M. BALL, JR.
MR. ROBERT B. TUNSTALL.
MR. LANGBOURNE M. WILLIAMS, JR.

Editors.

REV. CHARLES W. SHEERIN.....Editor
REV. F. W. NEVE, D. D., Associate Editor
MRS. CONRAD H. GOODWIN, Associate Editor
REV. SAMUEL B. CHILTON, Associate Editor
MRS. R. TATE IRVINE.....News Editor
JOHN H. COOKE..Secretary and Manager

Entered at the Post Office in Richmond, Va., as second-class mail matter.

SUBSCRIPTION PRICE.

$3.00 a year in advance. To the Clergy, $2.00. Six months, $1.50. Total subscriptions, three months, 50 cents; 10 cents a copy. Foreign postage, $1.00 additional.

For the convenience of subscribers subscriptions are continued at expiration unless otherwise ordered. Notice of renewal, discontinuance or change of address should be sent two weeks before the date they go into effect.

RECEIPT OF PAYMENT is shown in about two weeks by change of date on address label. If date is not properly extended after each payment, notify us promptly. No receipt for payment will be sent.

Notice post office address. The exact post office address to which we are directing the paper at the time of writing MUST ALWAYS BE GIVEN. Our mailing list is arranged by post office and not alphabetically.

Make all checks and money orders payable to the Southern Churchman, and not to an individual.

ADVERTISEMENTS.—Rates quoted on request. For classified see head of that department.

Representatives wanted in each Parish; liberal commissions.

News concerning the Church at large always welcome.

CONFIRMATION PAPERS

By
CANON F. E. HOWITT

1. Confirmation and Baptism
2. Baptism and the Christian Covenant.
3. The Baptismal Covenant—Repentance.
4. The Baptismal Covenant—Faith and the Faith.
5. The Baptismal Covenant—The Faith.
6. The Baptismal Covenant—Obedience.
7. The Lord's Supper.
8. The Means of Grace.

A series of informing pamphlets compiled by Canon F. E. Howitt. They have an inestimable value in instructing those who contemplate membership in the Church, and for impressing the already confirmed with the sacredness and meaning of this holy ritual.

Price, single pamphlet, each..... 5 cents
Complete set of eight.....25 cents

Order from

SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN COMPANY
Richmond, Va.

MURPHY'S HOTEL
RICHMOND VIRGINIA

An old Richmond landmark that has kept the pace. In the heart of that portion of the city most interesting to the traveler.

Write

A. GERALD BUSH, Manager.

SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN

Catholic for every truth of God; Protestant against every error of man.

EDITORIALS

Vol. 100. RICHMOND, VA., MARCH 16, 1935. No. 11.

Lenten Reading.

We are all grateful for the Presiding Bishop's Lenten book. Too often in America we have heard the admonition from the pulpit or in the church bulletin, "Read a good book this lent," with little or no suggestion from the rector as to what was a good book. This has often been true, because the busy rector did not have time himself to properly select such a book. But this year he has at least one book he knows about and can recommend.

But one book is not enough, and this year we are more than fortunate, for a Publishers' Committee requested Mr. P. W. Wilson, a staff writer on The New York Times, to make up a list of books for Lenten reading, and we are glad to publish this list in our current issue. For those who do not know Mr. Wilson, we can say that he is an Englishman, long distinguished in journalism and internationally known for his views on world problems. He has long been a student of religious thought and some of the best religious book reviews have been those which he has written.

What properly is the best for Lenten reading? Of course an answer would vary according to a person's point of view. Certainly, all Christians would want devotional literature of some type, and we all realize our great lack of information in regard to prayer, meditation, and the art of public and private worship. Mr. Wilson lists several books that can be classed as devotional.

But on a Lenten list, in our opinion, should also be listed books dealing with positions in the religious world other than our own. Protestants would do well to study the various Catholic positions. Liberals, so-called, should know more about Fundamentalists. If we are members of the Oxford Group, an outside voice might prove to be really guided, while for most of us not of "The Groups" a little study of their positions would be in order. Lent should be a broadening experience and the viewpoint of The Christ from many angles would be a healthy one.

We will never grow in our religious experience if we hear only the message of one group, or one viewpoint. As Mr. Wilson points out, we must try to bring ourselves into fellowship with God above, and soul within, and the world around. His list of books brings us nearer to such a goal.

The Plight of The Negro.

The depression has been hard on every type and class and race, but we wonder whether any group has suffered as much as the Negro? In many communities North as well as South, he has filled the majority of unskilled jobs and his low wage scale has been envied by poorer white men who found themselves jobless. Pressure has often been put upon employers to replace Negroes with whites and in many cases this pernicious practice has gone on without a protest from the white Christians of the community.

There is too much loose thinking about the Negro all of the time. It is not uncommon to hear it said, "Colored people get along somehow in someway," and with changed economic conditions we forget the plight or remain ignorant of the Negro.

Whites in the South think of the Negro as they knew him twenty-five or fifty years ago. We all know there was then a rather pleasant paternalism. Most Negroes worked in olden days in close personal relationship with some white man or woman. When sick or in trouble, the white employer looked after his needs and gave him protection and advice. A few Negroes in the servant class are still employed in that way, but the vast majority of Negroes today, if employed at all, are employed in the mass and know personally no white people at all. When sickness, loss of job or other disaster overtakes such, they have nowhere to turn except to their own leaders who frequently, from lack of influence, can do nothing.

The challenge to Episcopalians, so often the powerful financial class of a community, is to investigate and try and relieve the present situation. In certain Southern communities Negro barbers are gradually being forced from their traditional trade. There is an almost constant attempt to replace Negro firemen, waiters and waitresses. Episcopal laymen could well use their influence to stop all of this.

As a Church we should be proud of our record. We have not many Negro communicants, and that is a pity, but we have very fine Negro institutions, such as The St. Paul Normal and Industrial School at Lawrenceville. But it will do little good to train Negroes for trades if concentrated efforts are to continue to ban the Negro from work he can do.

The Negro has been loyal, devoted and good-natured. He did not choose this country, he was forced into it. As Christians, we must help him.

Church and World Problems as Others See Them

Gold Clause Decision Marks a Legal Milestone.

The Pulpit, March, 1935.

Controversy will rage for a long time over the decision rendered by the Supreme Court in the gold clause cases. Among lawyers there is a widespread tendency to regard the position taken by the majority of the court as a strained interpretation of the law, out of line with those precedents which, from the time of Chief Justice Marshall, have put the weight of the court behind the protection of property rights and the upholding of the sanctity of contracts. The value of the decision from a political and economic standpoint as a means of keeping the industrial machine running without a serious dislocation of its financial gears is generally admitted. But the decision is likely to prove of most importance in the long run as evidence that the nation has reached a point where its highest court intends to treat the law as an agency of social progress, rather than to continue to insist that the law's fundamental purpose is to provide a bulwark for established rights. While the mind of the Supreme Court remains as it is revealed in this decision, the law will be considered not an absolute but a relative agency for bringing to pass the will of the community. In the past there has been more than a suspicion that big business has used legal talent to escape the absolute prohibitions against consumer exploitation which the law sought to establish. Mr. William C. Whitney once said of Elihu Root that he (Root) "alone tells me how to do what I want to do." So it is that the Supreme Court, now reversing that form of service, tells the government how to do what must needs be done.

Defensive War Also.

Canadian Churchman, February 21, 1935.

Beyond question few prayers we offer are so after the mind of Christ as prayers for peace. But we must do more than pray if we are in earnest at all. If the answer to any prayer is in our own power to any degree, the earnestness of our prayer will force us to do our utmost to bring about the answer. The petitions in the Lord's Prayer have little meaning for us unless they drive us out to fulfil them as far as in us lies. "Thy kingdom come." How will it come unless we all do something to bring it about? "Thy will be done"—how can it be done if we do not speak out and bravely when we see God's will thwarted in the lives of men. And so with the prayer for peace. We must implement that prayer. We must see that the prayer is answered in our own lives by letting the love of Christ drive from our hearts all bitterness and resentment, all hatred and fear. These are the things that make war and your first step and mine is to rid our own hearts of these things.

Then, too, we must not be afraid to speak out for peace as Christ shall lead us. Most people will renouncenounce aggressive war but the crux comes with the so-called defensive war. Slavery was abolished when slavery was renounced and slaves were taken from good masters as well as bad. The whole thing was abolished. It will be the same with war. When we get it out of all our hearts and get all nations to renounce it, it will go where slavery has gone. Christ tells us to love our enemies, not to fight them. As for me, that "strange Man upon the cross" will not let me support any war no matter how the word is softened down. Each man must settle this question for himself and in Christ's presence. As Dick Sheppard says, "You cannot consecrate a gun."

Fascism, Anti-Christian.

Bishop Parsons, in The Witness, February 28, 1935.

Now the reason I turned to this subject is not that this fascist movement is un-American. It is that Fascism is directly anti-Christian. It is anti-Christian on two counts. It exalts nationalism of the worst kind and proclaims war as essential and desirable. Hear Mussolini:

"And above all, Fascism, the more it considers and observes the future and the development of humanity quite apart from political considerations of the moment, believes neither in the possibility nor the utility of perpetual peace. It thus repudiates the doctrine of Pacifism—born of a renunciation of the struggle and an act of cowardice in the face of sacrifice. War alone brings up to its highest tension all human energy and puts the stamp of nobility upon the peoples who have the courage to meet it."

Hitler, his cheaper rival, echoes his words. The Churches which proclaim that war as a method of settling international controversy or as an instrument of national policy is incompatible with the teaching of Christ can make no compromise with this paganism. We have not it is true reached quite such brazen denial of Christ in America; but the attitude of our jingo press, of our aggressive militarists and of our nationalistic Senate minority leads inevitably in that direction. We blush for the increased odium brought upon our Senate by the recent World Court vote and the childish denunciations of foreigners which accompanied it; but, what chiefly concerns us Christians is that this attitude is pure paganism. What the Senate needs is Christianity. They need to learn that all nations belong to the family of God. To teach them that is surely the business of the Church.

But even more anti-Christian is the fundamental conception of fascism, the totalitarian state. It stifles individual freedom. It crushes the development of competent and self-reliant citizens. It turns men into puppets and machines. It establishes the status quo by force and takes from the worker all hope. It puts the Church in chains and makes a mockery of the prophetic spirit. In Germany today there is real martyrdom among the Christian people. Now the very meaning of our religion is that men are the children of God. They are not machines. They are not puppets. They are free spirits. They, not a mythical and abstract state, are the objects of God's concern. It is true that our rampant individualism has imperiled our social order. It is true that we must move towards collective and socialized ideals. That as I have so often said, is the Christian Way Out. But the purpose of such new world order must be the aggrandizement not of the state but, if I may use such a term, of the average man. It must be in those words sung so often in our Churches and so little taken to heart, "to put down the mighty from their seats and exalt the humble and meek" which, being interpreted means developing a social order in the interests of the common man and not of the privileged classes. But for such development freedom is a necessity, and I beg as you value your faith that you protect your liberties. If the pendulum has swung too far toward liberty let us see to it that on the backward swing we do not lose the freedom which our fathers won at a cost and which after all is an integral part of our religion. As in the Church, so in the State. We must keep the balance between authority and liberty.

THE THOUSANDFOLD PAGE

ARCHDEACON FREDERICK W. NEVE, D. D.

Fellow Workers With God

One of the great and wonderful things about Christianity is the opportunity which men are given to be fellow-workers with God. We know that the bringing in of the Kingdom of God is a divine enterprise, as was proved by the fact that it was necessary for the Son of God to come into the world in order to establish this Kingdom, and to give instructions as to how it was to be set forward and brought to a successful consummation. He chose men, among them even humble fishermen, to carry forward the Kingdom after He was gone, and it has been in the hands of men ever since. Nevertheless, it must never be forgotten that it is God's enterprise and not ours, though He has given us a share in it.

An Ever-Present Danger.

There has been a danger all the time lest men should come to think that the success of the work depended upon themselves, and it is because of this that they have always been busily occupied in creating and organizing human institutions which seemed to them to be best fitted to establish the Kingdom of God here on earth. And so it has come to pass that the Christian Church has placed far too much reliance on what has been called the institutional side of Christianity. As we all know, in the industrial world the machine has taken the place of human labor to such an extent as to cause widespread unemployment. And so it is that human organizations have grown to be so large a part of the work of the Church that individual Christians are relieved in a great measure from the service which they ought to be rendering to God. For is it not true that in these various organizations only a comparatively few do the work, while the majority of the members do little more than pay the dues?

The Most Serious Defect.

But the most serious defect of institutionalism as applied religion, is that it seems to obscure the very important fact that the success of the Christian enterprise depends far more upon God's part in the matter than that of man; for the Kingdom of God cannot be established upon the earth by merely human resources. All that man can do with the resources available of a material kind, is utterly inadequate to meet the needs of the situation. For the divine resources are absolutely necessary to enable the Church to move forward and gain the victories needed to accomplish the purpose for which she was created by Christ. And the only means by which the Church can gain access to the divine resources is through faith in God and in the most intimate union and fellowship with Him, through our Lord, Jesus Christ.

An Illustration.

An illustration may be used here to make this truth more clearly understood. We remember the incident in the Gospels of the Feeding of the Five Thousand. A multitude of people had followed Christ out into the wilderness and as they had been with Him some time the question arose as to how their hunger was to be satisfied. The disciples came to our Lord and suggested that He should send the people away, but He had compassion on them, and would not send them away, lest they should faint with hunger before they reached their homes. It was then that a lad appeared upon the scene, with five barley loaves and two small fishes. This was all the food that was available to feed five thousand men, besides women and children. It seemed an impossible situation. Our Lord, however, took the loaves and fishes and blessed them and made them sufficient to feed this great multitude. This was not only a great miracle but a parable as well, for it reveals to us the truth that when man works with God, God's part in the common enterprise is a far greater one than that of man, and we should always expect that God will do His part if we do ours.

God's Part Greatly Underestimated.

As we have already seen, the Church has come to ignore in a great measure the far greater importance of God's share in the Christian enterprise, as compared with that which is contributed by man. We can see that clearly in the sacrifice of Christ upon the Cross for the sins of the whole world. No man is able to save even himself, much less others, whereas Christ died to secure eternal redemption for mankind. Christ said to His disciples, on one occasion, "Have faith in God," and that is the only way out of our present difficulties, and the only way by which any real progress can be made towards the coming of the Kingdom of God. When we diligently do our part, and look to God to do His, and really expect that something wonderful and appropriate to His Greatness and Majesty will be forthcoming, then we shall see the Kingdom of God come with power. But as long as we place our main dependence upon mere human organizations and commissions and committees and campaigns, and works of a like nature, we shall continue to mark time and not even hold our own.

Serious Setbacks Which Have Befallen Christianity.

We are told that at the close of the Nineteenth Century, heathendom had increased by 400,000,000, as compared with the beginning of that century. We have also seen, during the present century, the largest Christian country in Christendom passing into the hands of men who are seeking to destroy all religion within its confines. We are also seeing somewhat the same thing happening in our near neighbor, Mexico, while even in so-called Christian countries, Christianity has not the same power and influence which it formerly had. All of which would seem to show that God, and not man, must be looked to to save us and that man is just as incapable of saving the world as the lad, with his five barley loaves and two small fishes, was incapable of feeding the hungry multitude in the wilderness. The Thousandfold Order is intended to suggest that as fellow-workers with God, we are in alliance with a power so far greater than our own, that we may well expect that if we take into account God's part as well as our own, we may expect the results to be at least a thousandfold more than what they should be if we were simply working by ourselves. A great missionary once said, "Attempt great things for God; expect great things from God."

Christ and War

By The Rev. Arthur L. Kinsolving, D. D.

TWO brief enunciations from the Sermon on the Mount: "Resist not evil—overcome evil with good."

The initial reason against reliance upon force is just that force is not strong enough. It would appear to be the very power itself, but in this strange world things are not what they seem. The obvious is frequently untrue. Man's progress has been won by his ability to penetrate behind the obvious and see the paradoxical truth. This earth at the moment would appear to be standing still, but it is not. It would seem to be flat, but that has been proved untrue. The sun obviously revolves about us, but it does not. The air looks empty, but it is not. Matter seems static and solid, but it isn't. So in the spiritual scale of a man's life, the seers are the ones who have seen through the obvious and point to our view something important and not readily visible to the ordinary human eye. Jesus discovered and Tolstoi called it the most wonderful thing in the Gospel, that there is a power greater than force—moral suasion. You might call it soul force—love.

Again it is apt to appear obvious that the best way of protecting ourselves is to turn the enemies' weapons against them—the old law of retaliation. The main thing against retaliation is that it is futile. Let us consider: This is something which is not apt to happen in a well regulated family, but perchance it might.

In the course of recess, a small boy is slapped, all of a sudden, by another. He hits back, feeling it the obvious way to counter. The girl, over on her side of the school, hears a criticism. In the course of the afternoon she finds a chance to say something mean against her critic, believing that this is the way to get back at the girl who wronged her. The mother starts downtown for the marketing, and there, across the street, sees a woman who has always been a little superior towards her. Certain muscles and certain veins begin to operate, and she is a bit aloof and austere toward the woman whom she distrusts Meantime the father, learning that some one is obviously his enemy, meditates a way to get back at him. That is the old, old way of retaliation. But it has proved increasingly unsatisfactory, because two wrongs do not appear to make one right. Instead they marry and have children.

NOW, the principle of war between nations is not an artificial and unrelated thing, but the obvious working out of the reliance upon force, coupled with the belief that retaliation is the proper way of protection. One nation attacks another, and the other adopts the same weapons for defense, even if it be poison gas. They say that they are protecting their national honor, but it is probably more true that their motive is the primal one of fear and anger and revenge.

The same principle used to hold true among gentlemen in the duel. If you had lived in a different era, at any time some one might challenge you because of some petty affront, imaginary or real. You would feel in honor bound to accept the weapon that your challenger suggested. Perhaps tomorrow, Monday morning, with several reluctant seconds, you would meet in the chilly dawn at some obscure spot outside of town. If you were both good shots, each would fire, each would hit, each would die. The duel worked the annihilation, very often, of both parties, and most happily has now become obsolete.

We are tremendously hopeful just at this time that the same thing may happen to war, because obviously the last war was in the nature of the duel which we have just mentioned. There was a momentary rejoicing on Armistice night, but on the morrow the smoke began to clear away, and we saw ten million soldiers dead, thirteen million civilians, five million women widows, seven million children made orphans, not to mention ten million of refugees who wandered over the face of the earth, homeless and forlorn, and staggering debts. It became clear that no one could win a war any longer—that it was a double suicide.

People in public affairs have been earnestly working towards peace. They established one monument, one landmark, on the twenty-seventh day of August, 1928, when fifteen countries, including all the great powers, signed the Pact of Paris, by which the high contracting parties agreed to renounce war as an instrument of international policy, to condemn war as a method of settling international disputes, and covenanted to settle any future disputes by peaceful methods, whatever their origin or nature. This, as I say, may stand out as a great landmark in history. But do you and I trust it? Do we feel that the world is fundamentally changed since August 27, 1928? The correspondence leading up to the Pact would show that still the principle of a defensive war is allowed. The armaments of the several countries are retained. The world still trusts to the old principle of fear and retaliation. As responsible men and women we must trust that which is most trustworthy. If the best way of defending our country is to become so strong that no one will dare attack us, to that we must be committed.

But is there not a better way—to become so just, so friendly and so humble that no one will wish to attack us. As American citizens we have got to see that there is some substantial basis on which peace is to be built. The hope of the Christians of the world at this time (which is really rather crucial for the future of civilization, because one more war may annihilate us) is that they may get clear in their minds the view of Jesus, and believe it, that there is something stronger than force.

FOR years there has been written on our coin, "In God We Trust." The time has come when we must believe that and trust to that. The time has come when we Christians have got to consult the Master Mind of Jesus. "He that takes the sword shall perish by the sword," so He said centuries ago. "You have heard that it hath been said—'An eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth,' but I say unto you that you resist not evil, but whosoever shall smite thee on thy right cheek, turn to him the other also. You have heard that it hath been said of old time, 'Thou shalt love thy neighbor and hate thine enemy,' but I say unto you, love your enemy. Bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you and pray for them that despitefully use you and persecute you."

Is this too dangerous a way to try for national policy? Is there any precedent that would justify our trust? When the great war was over, 900,000 East Indian soldiers were under arms. They felt that England had lied to them. Anyone who knows these Indians knows what bitter hatred can be. They were eager to fling off the forces of nationalism and to rebel against England, to settle the matter by force. There was one among them as a political leader, who was also a deep religious mystic. Not professing Christi-

(Continued on page 12.)

"Growing a Soul"

James E. Freeman, Bishop of Washington.

Bishop Freeman.

DIFFICULT as it may be to express what we mean by the soul, we have abundant evidence there is something in our nature that we cannot define as physical, that demands satisfaction. We speak of "serenity of the mind," and by it we mean that poise and quiet that is indispensable to clear thinking. Men the world over have discussed life in terms of "body, mind and spirit." We are clear as to our physical demands and we readily meet them. We are likewise clear concerning the requirements of the intellectual, the development and cultivation of the mind. To think of life only in terms of physical and mental is to leave our natures unsatisfied and impoverished.

Long ago the great philosopher, Socrates, said: "I do nothing, but go about persuading you all, old and young alike, not to take thought for your persons, or your properties, but first and chiefly to care about the greatest improvement of the soul." It is an admonition that is too lightly esteemed and practiced. The recent years have found us so much absorbed in endeavoring to recover our material well being; the pressure of life has been so persistent, that less heed has been given to the high claims of the soul than in other and more normal days.

A high-visioned Scotchman has said that, "Apart from any questions of Church dogma or of future life, no human pursuit, no hunt for wealth, fame or pleasure, is comparable in interest or in value with the growing of a soul." If the concerns of the physical and mental require a definite, prescribed and unvarying course, then with like assurance we may affirm that the spiritual in us demands like consideration.

All this is pertinent to that which the season of Lent is designed to promote. The consistent reason for such a protracted period of quiet, reflection and worship is to give us fresh opportunity for rightly appraising and answering the demands of the soul. A cheap and unprofitable way of observing Lent is to impose upon ourselves certain privations and disciplines that, in themselves, are inconsequential. Such a practice is unworthy of us. We are called upon, if we would use the season profitably, to suspend indulgences and practices that are solely designed to satisfy our physical desires. A consistently observed Lent, or indeed any other like period when we give ourselves to more reflection and contemplation of the true meaning of life, means to respond to that word spoken by one of old: "Be still, and know that I am God." It is demonstrably true that, no fine intellectual or spiritual development grows out of periods of intense physical action. The artist, the poet and the writer requires long periods of detachment. Silence and repressed physical activity do not imply indolence or lethargy. The very tenseness and exactions of our modern life make the appeal of Lent more compelling today than hitherto, and justify its observance.

In the short narrative of the life of the great Master we are told that before He entered upon His active ministry He sought through a long period the silences, and repeatedly during the days of His intense action He retired repeatedly for protracted periods of contemplation that He might the better prepare Himself for His arduous and exacting service.

While Lent has been observed through long centuries by certain Churches, its appeal has more and more been responded to by Churches of every name. This doubtless, is due to the practical value to which such a season witnesses. For the sake of physical refreshment and in the interests of repose of mind and clarity of vision, we urge the observance of this season at a time when we need the best that is in us to meet the stern problems of our modern world. We shall secure more of physical fitness and mental alertness if we give our souls a chance to grow; if we make prayer worship and quiet reflection a daily practice we shall come to the end of this season and to our Easter with the quickened sense of a nature that has been reborn and rendered capable of understanding the mighty resurrection message.

SECOND SUNDAY IN LENT.

To the original Title of the Second Sunday were added, in 1604, the words "in Lent." This collect is taken from the Sarum Missal, 1549 (Sacramentary Gregory), with certain alterations. The thought in the collect is threefold: Placing our helplessness in body and soul under the protection of Almighty God; second, of His providence against adversity; third, His grace against evil thoughts. The expression of this collect is somewhat unusual, in that it consists of an introduction. This is followed by an unusual twofold petition, "That we may be kept outwardly in our bodies and inwardly in our souls. The statement of the purpose for which we pray is that we need protection from all adversities which may happen to the body, and from all evil thoughts which may assault and hurt the soul. There is a very beautiful thought in this collect, in that we not only confess our need of help, but that our helplessness is known to God. The first thought in this prayer is the realization of our helplessness. How well is our recognition of our helplessness found in the case of a patient, who, having done all he could to get better, but without relief, calls on medical aid, and goes to the hospital; there he finds men with the requisite skill, who, by the Providence of the Great Physician, are able to restore health (it would surprise you to know how many men of the medical fraternity pray for the requisite skill to perform the operation), or otherwise to treat the case. We therefore appeal to the Great Physician to heal both soul and body. I wonder if our own helplessness is realized, when even crossing a street, we are threatened with danger? This applies to even the strongest among us. Then, again, when adversity threatens us, to whom do we look for strength to endure? Is it not to Him who hath permitted the adversity to come in order that He may perfect His strength in our weakness, bearing well in mind that "All things work together for good to those who fear Him." One other thought this collect brings before us is in regard to evil thoughts; possibly this brings us more in the Spiritual realm, for the Spiritual side of life (so-called spiritual), is no less fraught with peril than the physical. How often it hath been said and with what truth "that one wandering thought pollutes the day." Almighty God knows our frailty, and, having that knowledge, what great comfort there is that His angels (ministering Spirits) will protect and shield us from both spiritual and physical dangers.

William E. Callender.

Just Traveling Around

Mary F. Goodwin.

SOME years ago I found in an old library a small book, no larger than a man's hand bearing this title: "The History and Geography of the World From the Beginning of Time to the End of Eternity." As if the author doubted the wisdom of so ambitious a name, he began his history by quoting the first verse in Genesis, and ended with the last verse of the Revelation. But the subject matter between the verses hardly justified the title, for when he wrote, in 1805, the modes of travel, for instance, had not changed since spokes were first put into wheels, and sails were added to the man-propelled boats. Even our solar system was bounded for him by Uranus, and the land of the earth was plentifully besprinkled with "Great Deserts."

But a few years after the publication of this little book, the steam-engine was invented, changing overnight the course of human events. Its effect on everyday life, however, was a slow process. The changes in modes of travel were slow at first, but rapid during the latter part of the century. This is strikingly illustrated by the way in which four generations of ministers, all in the same family, traveled about their country parishes in Virginia.

A hundred years ago, young ministers who went from the Seminary into old isolated parishes, or new fields of work, suffered more from loneliness than we can imagine these days. They missed the companionship of other men like-minded with themselves, they were cut off from congenial company as well as the help that comes from taking counsel together. If they were able to obtain transportation to the Convention once a year, they were fortunate indeed.

The Rev. Charles Dresser, himself lately out of the Seminary, wrote in this manner to a friend who was shortly to be ordained:

"Halifax Va., 1831.

". . . . I find the declaration true in more ways than one that 'it is not good for man to be alone', and I am very anxious to have some clerical friend near me, with whom I can hold frequent, or at least, occasional intercourse. . . . My insulated situation was one of the motives which prompted me to extend my labors to an adjoining county, hoping to prepare the way for a fellow-laborer; and such a way is now, I think, opened. . . . If you come here you will have many prejudices to combat, and many discouragements to contend with, but you know who has said 'whatsoever a man soweth that shall he also reap.' Your situation for a time would be very much like that of a settler in our western forests, you would have to bestow much labor in clearing the ground and grubbing up the roots, but in due time you would reap if you fainted not." The bishop saved the situation for the young deacon, sending him to Kanawha, now Charleston, W. Va. When writing him of the trip to this place, he said: ". . . The people in Kanawha are expecting you as soon as you return to Virginia. As to your mode of conveyance to Kanawha, I think the stage would be best, as you would wish to carry more things than saddlebags could hold, and you could purchase a horse there more easily than here. You will be expected to come there as a missionary, for six months at least, and at the end of that time you can best judge what ought to be done."

The young man went to this field. For two years he rode through the Kanawha valley preaching from the few sermons he carried in his saddlebags, and visiting isolated families in the forests. He had neighboring ministers from Staunton, Wheeling and Chillicothe, Ohio, to administer the Holy Communion to his parishioners until he himself was ordained to the priesthood. In this toilsome but leisurely mode he ministered to his first parish.

FIFTY years later his son began his ministry in a parish in a "backwoods" county. Going there directly from the Seminary, he found little to work with. To be sure, there was a church at the Court House, and a chapel had lately been erected on the mountain-side a few miles away. A few families who were church people welcomed him, and gave him their loyal support. But there was much prejudice to combat among some ignorant itinerant preachers of various sects, and the animosity of political leaders in an era when unscrupulous politicians used every method available to set people against the old order of things.

In writing a description of his parish, the young minister said: "The parish covered the whole of a large county, to the west lay several counties as yet totally unexplored by any minister of our church. My nearest clerical neighbor was in Salem, twenty-eight miles on horseback across two or three ranges of mountains. Others were forty or fifty miles away. A wretched little narrow-gauge railroad, with one train a day had but lately been built to the Court House, and was still a source of wonder to the country folk."

This son, like his father, had to travel over his parish on horseback. After being there a year, he was able to purchase a horse which he used for eight years. In this county the roads were not adapted to the use of buggies, nor could he have afforded to purchase one had he been able to use it. He had nearly completed his ministry in his second parish before he owned a buggy, and then it was the gift of his parishioners. The horse, which saw duty in two parishes, was named for Bishop Whittle, and old Frank became known far and wide over the mountain-sides. "I have often begrudged," wrote Frank's owner, "the vital energy I used up on that stiff-legged, hard-trotting horse, however intelligent and faithful. Three Sundays out of four I would ride from eleven to twenty miles over the roughest mountain roads, and hold two or three services."

ON ONE of these trips the young minister had to spend the night at the home of some friends, where the two nephews of his host were also visiting. They were interested in the horse, and soon learned his name and where he came from. The next morning Mrs. S. was much startled when the little boys burst into her room exclaiming, "Oh, Aunt Betty, Bishop Whittle is in the garden just a-wallowing in your onion bed!" The Bishop was much amused when I told him the story.

Another fifty years has passed since the young deacon with his "Frank" and later his new buggy worked through country parishes; and a century has gone since his father rode through the Kanawha valley on horseback. Now his grandsons and great-grandsons, who are still at work in country parishes in the old Diocese, travel over their cures in a very different manner, and enjoy the society of neighboring parsons whenever they so desire. An automobile is an essential part of the equipment of every country minister today; it is safe to predict that within a few years planes will be in frequent use, even in country parishes. We refrain from predicting further improved means of transportation; but we feel confident that whatever methods the future may hold, they will be employed by country parsons.

What Price---Missionary Effort

The events narrated in this article are not new to many of our readers. But we are sure that they are new to a great many more.—The Editor.

To the average observer, the life of foreign missionaries appears very ordinary or even unnecessary. They may be looked upon as misfits in the affairs of life who because of this have taken upon themselves the work of instructing people not acquainted with Western civilization. It is thought sometimes that they are even lacking in ambition, and so decide to take up missonary work.

But, how far off the track are those who so judge! They forget that it was the missionaries of the Cross, followers of the Lord Jesus Christ, who brought the light of liberty that gives to each one the power to choose for himself. The missionaries were the pioneers who left home, friends, and all that was dear, facing ignorance and superstition and hardships at the peril of their own lives, to preach the Gospel of Jesus Christ.

Recently, we were amazed and saddened to learn that in this twentieth century missionaries would still be butchered by the Pagans in China. We refer to Rev. and Mrs. J. C. Stam of the China Inland Mission. The Stams were American, the children of missionaries, and were stationed at Wuhu. Mr. Stam, being anxious to push out in missionary work, was promised protection by the Chinese Magistrate at Tsingteh, sixty miles away from the home base, if he reopened the abandoned mission there.

On the morning of December 6, 1934, Mr. Stam, with his wife and three-months-old daughter, Helen Prscilla, arrived at their new home. Mr. Stam was busy about the house getting things in order, and Mrs. Stam was just about to put the baby to bed for its morning nap, when a roving band of Chinese Communist soldiers, who had suddenly descended upon the village—many of them very young men—swarmed through the gates of the Compound. They were heavily armed—not only with rifles, but with old-fashioned Chinese swords and crude weapons of every sort.

The Stams were immediately made prisoners and told to get ready to march. Mrs. Stam hurriedly gathered up a few articles of clean clothing for the baby. They were marched to the next town ten miles away. Peasants who saw them pass asked them where they were going, and Mr. Stam answered with a smile, "I don't know where they are going, but we are on our way to Heaven."

As soon as they reached the next place the looting of stores began, as the inhabitants had fled at the approach of the Communists. The Stams were taken to the Postoffice and kept under guard. Mr. Stam wrote a note and gave it to the Postmaster, asking him to see that it was mailed, as he did not have any money. It must have been while in the Postoffice that Mrs. Stam also write a note, pinning it, with a ten dollar bill, on the baby's clothing.

When the leader returned he was very angry. He ordered the Stams bound. The soldiers took ropes made from rice and tied Mrs. Stam's wrists behind her till she cried out. Mr. Stam was tied the same way. Later when the bodies were recovered the wrists were cut almost through to the bone.

The night was spent in a deserted house. Mr. Stam was tied in a standing position at the foot of the bed. Mrs. Stam and the baby being thrown upon the bed. What took place during the night cannot be related here. About nine o'clock the next morning, the leader of the band returned to the house, telling his men to call the villagers out to see the "foreign devils" die.

Mr. and Mrs. Stam were led forth in the bitter cold without clothing and with bodies bleeding from stabs. At this point a Chinese Christian fell down on his knees before the Red leader and plead with him, asking him to let the Stams go free, for they had never done any harm. Booting the Christian back, they bound him and led him away. Later his house was searched and a Bible found, and he was taken out and shot.

Mr. Stam plead for mercy for the Chinese Christian, whereupon the leader of the band took a long knife and cut the missionary's windpipe. He fell to the ground with the blood squirting from his neck. Mrs. Stam dropped to her knees across her husband's body, bending her head to speak to him. A young Communst with a double-edged sword over his shoulder, grasped the sword in both hands and swung down, severing Mrs. Stam's head from her body. A few of the band kicked the naked bodies, and then they marched off, leaving the two bodies lying in the road.

A native preacher with his family had escaped the Communists, fleeing to the hills, where they spent the cold night suffering greatly. As soon as the Communists had vacated the town, he came into the village to learn what had happened to the missionaries. At first the villagers were afraid to say anything. Later he found the bodies lying in the roadway. He procured a coffin, and wrapping the bodies in cloth, placed them in the coffin. Before doing this, however, he took a needle and thread and sewed Mr. Stam's windpipe, and also fastened Mrs. Stam's head to the body.

Then he started to look for the baby, who had not been seen by the villagers that morning. Upon entering the house where the Stams had spent the night, he found the baby lying on the bed where it had been left.

This is the price the true missionary stands ready to pay. It is not a romance with him, but a faithful carrying out of his convictions, and of the command of his Master to preach the Gospel to all nations. He is an ambassador for Christ. Had the ambassador of a nation been treated in this manner, the warships of his nation would have demanded redress in short order. But, as Christ's kingdom is not of this world, His servants do not resist evil.

These poor, ragged Communists need to be shown the love of God. Their never-dying souls will suffer the pangs of eternal death unless the blood of Jesus Christ covers their sins.

Yes, this is the price that must be paid, and no other work is so important as this. It is the only means of the heathen's salvation.

We pen these lines to show what it means to attempt the work of a missionary, and to go to places where one's life is in constant danger. It is not the place for one seeking an adventure—the hazards are too great. Neither is it a place for the mere teaching of civilization, for a missionary's responsibility to souls is tremendous. This great work should be attempted only by those who have a passion for souls and are filled with the Holy Ghost.—From The Burning Bush.

THE WOMAN'S AUXILIARY

The Beginnings of Our Auxiliary in Virginia.

In 1871 Miss Sallie Stewart was appointed by Bishop Whittle to be the first Secretary of the Woman's Auxiliary in Virginia, and she was the first elected President in the Diocese of Virginia.

At the Seventy-seventh Annual Council in 1872, Bishop Whittle said, in part (as reported by the Committee on Women's Work), "Who can refuse to acknowledge the all pervading influence of the women of our Church upon our families, society and organizations? It is impossible to calculate the indebtedness of the Church of Virginia to the blessed element of woman's fidelity and woman's work. The missionary history of the Church is illuminate with names that furnish the noblest examples of Christian heroines. We have seen them, gifted with beauty, talent, and position, which would have laid an alluring world at their feet, forego every gratification, leave all, and follow their Master's call, even though it would lead them away from every association and earthly comfort, and devote their young and perfect lives to a more precious course of living; for the elevation and conversion of their fellow creatures in heathen darkness.

"Is there a minister in this land, who could prosper humanly speaking, without the aid of the faithful women that work with him? They have set the example to form a missionary board, holding voluntary prayer meetings, teaching, leading in the Sunday-school work, holding mothers' meetings and acting as assistants to their pastors in every good work."

Miss Sallie organized seventy-five branches of the Auxiliary in the Diocese, besides Juniors, Little Helpers, and all the departments of work. She created a deeply spiritual fellowship that continues to pervade all the work of the Auxiliary. She brought to the work a very unusual personality that compelled people to follow her with the utmost confidence and to think of the work of the Auxiliary as the greatest thing in the world. She remained in office until her death in 1916.

In a memorial to her Bishop Gibson included these words: "She was a good American, a good Virginian, and a good Churchwoman. She had what the people of ancient classical days called piety. Hers was a heart full of filial affection, reverence for virtuous age and for ripened experience. She loved her home, she loved children, she bound to herself with hoops of steel those who in the Providence of God were dependent upon her. She loved to see the younger and weaker around her, expand like opening flowers, under her rare faculty for teaching. These personal traits of humanity, which, after all, is made in the image of God, she retained in full vigor even when busiest, and most engrossed in the more mechanical parts of the work of God's Church."

A Letter Concerning Some of Our Auxiliary Work Today.

Outside of the general atmosphere of friendliness, earnestness and good-will, which one expected and fully found at the meeting of the Diocesan Institute, held at St. James' Church, Richmond, recently, I think I was most impressed with the conviction that the local values of our lives had changed to international values. That the fears, needs and distrusts of other nations had as close a reaction on our national life as a similarly affected neighbor might have on our private happiness. Good Christianity seemed to go hand in hand with good sense. In an earnest effort to understand sympathetically an alien point of view I was made to feel that no agency could bring into accord such diversified economic interests, unless it was the very highest type of Christian thinking.

For Christian women of all denominations to study the background, economic necessities and religious thought of the same foreign field is an undertaking which, in God's Providence, will bear untold results in harmony and international confidence.

It will give us at home the mental equipment required to understand the problems of those we have sent abroad to teach in Christ's name, and, when the seed sown comes to fruition, it may well be resown in our own domestic field. This was the message of the Study Class Leaders, Rev. Arthur Sherman and Mrs. A. M. Chapman.

It was a vital experience also to see women—elderly, middle-aged and youthful—plowing their way through snow and sleet to learn of advanced plans and methods for Church-wide education. They were amply rewarded by the devotional leadership of their Bishop and of Mrs. Moore and the dynamic addresses of Pennsylvania's Auxiliary leader, Mrs. Hill.

Mrs. Hill urged adjustment of the program to the need of each particular diocesan situation. Prayer, meditation, the working cooperation of each member, sympathy with our co-workers, the use of our whole mental equipment and dependence on the grace of God to vitalize our efforts, were among the objects stressed.

"The task is God's and He has given you and me the chance to help in it," was the concluding note of this storm beset but most inspiring conference.

H. L. M.

Chicago: The Church was called upon to assume a larger responsibility in the training of Oriental students in this country in Christian ways, by Dr. Albert W. Palmer, Chicago Theological Seminary, addressing one hundred Churchwomen at Brent House, the Woman's Auxiliary National Conference Center, on February 21.

The Church can do much in shaping the future of the Orient by the proper handling and training of such Orientals, Dr. Palmer said.

Mrs. Albert J. Cotsworth, Jr., president of the Auxiliary, presided at the session and Mrs. George Biller was hostess.

An Auxiliary Good Will Tour.

The members of the Woman's Auxiliary are to be congratulated upon the fact that they are able to send their national educational secretary, Miss Margaret I. Marston, to the foreign fields to visit the mission stations of the Church. The money to pay for this trip will be taken from the interest on undesignated legacies now in hand. The women of the Church all over the country will be encouraged by the announcement that the Woman's Auxiliary, through its executive board, is in a position to send Miss Marston to carry the message of their good will personally to the missionaries in the foreign field.

The advantage of such a trip is twofold, as was seen when Miss Grace Lindley visited the foreign stations. The missionaries are enheartened, and the people at home receive direct reports from a trained and sympathetic visitor. It is now ten years since an executive secretary of the Auxiliary has visited any foreign field. The time is ripe for Miss Marston's journey.—The Living Church.

A List of Books for Lenten Reading

Selected and Recommended by

P. W. WILSON

P. W. Wilson, staff writer for the New York Times, has made a selection of recently published books which he recommends for Lenten reading. In making his choices for this Lenten Bookshelf for 1935, Mr. Wilson examined eighty volumes submitted by the publishers. His final list includes the twenty-five titles given below. In his introduction to the list, Mr. Wilson says:

"I have been guided by a threefold objective in selecting this Lenten List. It has been the aim to present a shelf of books which, during Lent, would bring the reader into conscious fellowship with the God above him, the Soul within him and the World around him. If these books were purchased by groups, absorbed and discussed, the result could not fail to be an enrichment of the spiritual life and a fuller happiness in duty to God and man."

C. F. ANDREWS
SADHU SUNDAR SINGH
Mr. Andrews, the Christian whose name is known throughout India as a symbol of the piety that India reveres, writes of the Indian saint whom he knew so well. 205 pages. Harper. $2.00.

KARL BARTH
COME HOLY SPIRIT
A book by the great German mystic and evangelist who has confronted Nazidom with an impregnable piety and here utters the deepest meanings of God's love for man. 287 pages. Round Table. $2.00.

MARY BORDEN
KING OF THE JEWS
A graphic but scholarly narrative of the Crucifixion and Resurrection, in which, without undue liberty with the records, the scenes are dramtized. 306 pages. Little, Brown. $2.50.

WALTER RUSSELL BOWIE
THE STORY OF THE BIBLE
For those who wish to renew or to begin an acquaintance with the Bible as a whole, this is the book. 557 pages. Abingdon. $3.00.

GEORGE A. BUTTRICK
CHRISTIAN FACT AND MODERN DOUBT
A book of quiet and sincere argument, illuminated by belief, which a person can read with ease, yet not too quickly, and so arrive at adjustment with realities. 311 pages. Scribner. $2.50.

HENRY SLOANE COFFIN
WHAT MEN ARE ASKING
The President of Union Theological Seminary offers answers, constructive and sympathetic, to questions on faith that are prevalent in many minds. 196 pages. Cokesbury. $2.00.

MONROE E. DODD
CHRIST'S MEMORIAL
A President of the Southern Baptist Convention expresses the faith and worship of his Church. 102 pages. Baptist S. S. Board. $1.25.

HARRY EMERSON FOSDICK
THE SECRET OF VICTORIOUS LIVING
A voice that persuades here speaks in print. It is by the constructive totality of influence that this book has to be judged. It is not to be labeled as modernist. It is "both human and divine." 246 pages. Harper. $1.50.

JAMES GORDON GILKEY
YOU CAN MASTER LIFE
A book—friendly and sensible—which, read quietly, contributes to courage. 186 pages. Macmillan. $1.75.

DEAN W. R. INGE
VALE
A farewell to active life by one whose personality has impressed itself on his generation. It is a brief book but every word is self-revelation. 127 pages. Longmans, Green. $1.60.

F. ERNEST JOHNSON
ECONOMICS AND THE GOOD LIFE
A lucid comment on the situations arising out of the New Deal. 186 pages. Association. $1.75.

G. RAY JORDAN
FAITH THAT PROPELS
An appeal to the individual. Simply written but in excellent style and apt in its allusions. 208 pages. Cokesbury. $1.50.

SIR CHARLES MARSTON
NEW BIBLE EVIDENCE
This volume embodies the latest results of excavation in Palestine which has been made possible by the author. It is a book written for the people and it includes many fascinating discoveries which have to be taken into consideration by the historian. 249 pages. Revell. $2.00.

BASIL MATHEWS
THE JEW AND THE WORLD FERMENT
No consideration of life is complete at this time without a reminder of what Christians have derived in spiritual and cultural benefit from the Jews. This book, by a Christian, sets forth the Jewish situation as he sees it. 186 pages. Friendship. $1.50.

D. S. MEREJKOWSKI
JESUS THE UNKNOWN
Merejkowski, the Czarist exile, is the author of the well-known biography of Leonardo da Vinci. In these pages, the mysticism of the Eastern Orthodox Church, purified of political alloy, is concentrated on the Christ. 445 pages. Scribner. $2.75.

H. V. MORTON
IN THE STEPS OF THE MASTER
A brilliantly worded description of the Holy Land as it is today by a successful author which is at once vivid with accurate observation and breathing with a deep reverence. 448 pages. Dodd, Mead. $3.00.

ALFRED NOYES
THE UNKNOWN GOD
After a long and varied career of great literary distinction, Alfred Noyes describes his pilgrim's progress along the paths of science and culture back to Christ. Here is a fine mind revealed in the noblest of all quests. 383 pages. Sheed & Ward. $2.50.

W. E. ORCHARD
THE WAY OF SIMPLICITY
The witness to Christ of one who, after many difficulties, consecrated his life and influence to the Roman Catholic Church. 321 pages. Dutton. $2.00.

PAULE REGNIER
THE ABBEY OF EVOLAYNE
This book has won the America-France Award and the prize of the French Academy for novels. In the form of fiction, it is a study of spiritual tragedy and triumph in the lives of two who deeply loved and, following the monastic ideal, were ready to lose the whole world that they might win Christ. 302 pages. Harcourt, Brace. $2.00.

JOSEPH ROTH
ANTI-CHRIST.
An indictment of Paganism in the modern manner. Of the world that is too much with us. Joseph Roth's appraisal, little as he may realize it, is a curious corroboration of the view held by many Fundamentalists. 177 pages. Viking. $2.25.

SAMUEL M. SHOEMAKER
THE GOSPEL ACCORDING TO YOU
A book that surrounds the reader with encouragement to be all that he was meant to be. Here is the genuine gospel that adds no sorrow unto it. 192 pages. Revell. $1.50.

LESLIE D. WEATHERHEAD
DISCIPLESHIP
A careful and sympathetic but independent examination of what is meant by surrender, sharing, the quiet time, guidance and other aspects of the Christian Life which are emphasized by the Oxford Group. 152 pages. Abingdon. $1.00.

FRANZ WERFEL

THE FORTY DAYS OF MUSA DAGH

This large novel is here included as a revelation of what an ancient Christian community—the Armenians—has endured through the centuries at the hand of the Turk. 824 pages. Viking. $3.00.

MICHAEL WILLIAMS

THE CATHOLIC CHURCH IN ACTION

A factual and objective description by the editor of the Commonweal, of the Roman Catholic Church, including the Papacy and the activities of this Communion throughout the world. 358 pages. Macmillan. $2.50.

A SYMPOSIUM

THE CHRISTIAN MESSAGE FOR THE WORLD TODAY

A group of leaders join in presenting an authoritative and stimulating survey of what the Christian Church means to a world where life is a problem for which a solution is imperatively needed. 203 pages. Round Table. $1.50.

* * *

CHRIST AND WAR

(Continued from page 6.)

anity, he had been deeply impressed by the spirit of Jesus, and believed His word: "Resist not evil." And during the intervening years, the tremendous soul-force of that one man has kept one of the violent chapters of history from coming to be.

There is another precedent, nearer home. The savage aborigines of this country whom our forefathers found, they assumed had to be treated by violence. Perhaps even our doughty ancestors stirred up some of that trouble by their attitude. But in one colony, Pennsylvania, the Quakers, approaching the Indians with the New Testament spirit, approaching them fairly and humbly, left the one single record without bloodshed and war.

I wish we could look to the day when America, from her position of leadership, would tell the world that she has caught the vision that Jesus saw, that there is something stronger than force. I wish we could pour oil on these troubled waters of our modern world by taking the lead in being humble and merciful and peaceable toward other people, being less careful of our rights, and more careful of the well-being of others.

One of our citizens, the late Dwight Whitney Morrow, has set us a high example in leaving private life to go down to Mexico City in the midst of a most troubled situation, there to win again good will by being kindly, considerate and humble. I hope America lays to heart that great utterance of his over the radio before he relinquished his portfolio, when he asked us to be meek among the nations and to make good will—not just to trust to power. There is nothing more timely, my friends, than for you and me to discover and to know the spirit of Jesus, to develop His method of meeting people. There is a psychological truth in what He said. To some degree we create and continue antagonisms by acting up to them, by retaliating, and by meeting force with force. I know that there are people who have angles, who are sometimes difficult to get along with, but to a greater degree the forces that trouble us are in ourselves. There are bunkers and bad lies, but what makes us go to pieces and what ruins our scores are the times when we lose control of ourselves and allow ourselves to strike in anger.

LEST some one should say that this was the weaker way, I would claim for it all the strength of Jesus of Nazareth. When His enemies took a belligerent attitude towards Him and conspired to wreak His death, there was one, at least, among His friends who took the sword, anxious to strike out in His defense. But Jesus, forgetting Himself, went and healed the hurt that the sword had made. Alone and empty-handed He climbed the stairway to stand before His accusers. When they proved themselves false, He still would not resist. There are those who thought Him weak, who said: "He saved others; Himself He cannot save." But from our point of view in history we can see that He was the very power of God unto salvation.

However else he may have impressed men, Saul of Tarsus was not a weak person. He was a hot patriot, and he disliked the Christians, so he set about exterminating them with all his power, until he was standing in the presence of the mob who were hurling stones at one Stephen—the first martyr, and when Stephen, standing there in the spirit of his Lord, said: "Lay not this sin to their charge"—something was changed in Saul which made him ready to meet Jesus on the Damascus road, and which made it possible for his point of view to change so much that once he heard the message from God:—"My strength is made perfect in weakness."

An American in Tokyo was taken by a Japanese friend to see a wrestling match. Into the ring came the two men. The first, a giant weighing about three hundred pounds. The second, a little spare man, weighing hardly one hundred pounds. The American thought how ludicrously unfair the match was. At the starting signal the great barge of a man plunged in his fury against the little one, and the lean man, not side-stepping him, seemed to yield to him, to draw back. They fell to the floor, and in an instant, by some agile movement, the little one was on top, and the great show of force of the other was turned to helplessness. The bout was over, with great cheering for the victor. The Japanese turned to the American and said: "That is what we call jiu jitsu." The American asked, "What is the literal meaning of those two words?" And the Japanese replied: "To conquer by yielding."

There is, in a figure, the picture of Jesus' way, of Love's strategy, which is humility. There is yet time for it to save us from catastrophe. May we, in our personal and national affairs, begin to create a new heaven and a new earth.

Dear Lord, Who showed us what Love is by suffering long and being kind, help us to meet others in the spirit of Jesus. Help us to penetrate all aloofness, to disarm criticism, to change bitterness by the alchemy of love, and grant that this nation in the family of peoples may lead the way by being humble and generous and merciful, and this we ask in the Name of Our Lord Jesus Christ.

* * *

FOR OTHERS' SAKE.

Lillian G. Stafford.

This morning, Heartache stood beside my path,
And said, "I've come to walk with you today".
I looked upon her form and found her real,
No shadow to be gayly laughed away;
And so I answered, "You may walk with me,
But only on my terms: We'll march along
As if to music, with our heads held high,
With smiling faces, and a bit of song;
You must not lag, nor bow your head and weep,
Lest others passing us should know 'tis you;
I would not that one life should sadder be
For having met us when you walk with me,

But GOD will know, and understand. He, too,
Will walk beside me, closer still than you."

YOUNG PEOPLE'S FELLOWSHIP SERVICE LEAGUE

The Reverend Randolph F. Blackford

THE PHARISEE AND THE PUBLICAN
A Social Service Program.

Mother Church (enters from vestry and goes to lectern and reads, Luke 18: 10-15): "Two men went up into the Temple to pray; the one a Pharisee and the other a Publican. The Pharisee stood and prayed thus with himself, God, I thank Thee that I am not as other men are, extortioners, unjust, adulterers, or even as this Publican. I fast twice in the week, I give tithes of all that I possess. And the Publican, standing afar off, would not lift up so much as his eyes unto heaven, but smote upon his breast, saying, God, be merciful to me a sinner. I tell you this man went down to his house justified rather than the other." (Mother Church stops and slowly walks to chair and takes seat.) That is a story that seems to have no meaning for me. The Publican was really an unjust tax gatherer, so he ought to have repented. But the Pharisee was really a very religious man who simply seemed to be talking of the reasons he had to be thankful. I am really much like the Pharisee. I have my services regularly. I help a great number of people that are in need, and train my children in Sunday School. Surely God is glad I do these things.

Spirit of Christ (coming from behind places hand on Mother Church's shoulder): Awake, Mother Church. I have many things for you to do.

Mother Church: Why, Spirit of Christ, I am glad to see you. Surely you approve of my work. Many people are coming to Church. Our Sunday School is full, and all our organizations are flourishing. Surely you do not think I am asleep. I am much awake.

Spirit of Christ: Yes, you are asleep, for you see not things about you. What do you see out there in the world? (Points towards the congregation.)

Mother Church: I see only pews filled with people, anxious to worship God and do His will.

Spirit of Christ: No, I mean beyond them. (Points over heads of congregation.)

Mother Church (shading her eyes): Now you speak of it, I do see a great crowd outside the Church. But they will not come in. I have tried to get them.

Spirit of Christ: I will go and bring one in. We may be able to find out from him why he stays outside. (Goes to door and brings in Victim of Mob. Victim of Mob comes in with bandage over head and arm in sling.) Here is a Victim of the Mob. (To him): I would like to hear about you.

Victim of Mob: Who are you two who wish to speak before the Mob finishes their work? They came to my house in the middle of the night and commanded me to come out. I came and they said I had committed some crime, so they beat me over the head. I tried to protect myself, and one of them shot me in the arm. Then they put this rope about my neck and said that they were going to hang me. Then this lady said for them to let me go, and she brought me here. Oh, save me, if you can. (Sits.)

Mother Church: I have not thought of the victims of Lynch Law seriously enough, or of my people who endanger their own souls by becoming a part of the mob. Surely, I must take a stronger stand for law and order.

Spirit of Christ: Here comes one following us. Let us see who it is.

Tramp: Can't one of you let me have a little food? I have not had anything to eat all day.

Spirit of Christ: Who are you, my friend? Where did you come from? You are very young to be a beggar.

Tramp: Oh, there are lots younger than I am. I am just one of the Boy Tramps. There are thousands of us on the road. Mother did not have much of a job, and Father had run away from us, so I decided I had better try to make it on my own. Sometime people give us a hand-out and sometime we go very hungry. It is a kind of a hard life. Sometimes we steal and some of us are occasionally sent to jail. I tried to go to the CCC camp, but you have to be eighteen before you can get in there, and I am only fifteen, so nothing doing. Can you give me a place to sleep, you two? (Sits down.)

Spirit of Christ: My boy, we will try to do something for you. (Turns to Mother Church.) What provision have you made to care for this wandering Lamb of the Master?

Mother Church: I have really been so busy I don't believe I have done anything. I must surely try to see that these tramps are cared for. Spirit of Christ, I am beginning to see what you mean when you say you have much work for me to do. First of all, I must teach my own children not to leave home, and then to get this boy back to his people and see that they make his home happy, so that he will want to stay there.

Labor (outside): Yes, you shall. (Labor in overalls.)

Capital (outside): No, I won't. (Capital clothed stylishly.)

(Labor and Capital enter and come up the aisle disputing.)

Labor: I will force you by a strike to give me higher wages and shorter hours.

Capital: If I do that, I will make no profit and have to go out of business.

Labor: If you do not pay more, I can't bring up my children with a decent standard of living.

Spirit of Christ: Cease, my friends, for a moment. This is Mother Church. Perhaps she can help you. (Labor and Capital take seats beside Tramp and Victim of Mob.)

Mother Church: I see that if anyone is to interpret Labor to Capital, and Capital to Labor, it must be I. I alone can go to both as their trusted friend. I wonder if it has not been largely my fault that they do not understand each other? I see now, O Spirit of Christ, that I have been the Pharisee. But I will no longer be the Pharsiee, but like the Publican, I will make my prayer. (Goes to the Litany Desk and, kneeling, prays.) Stir up, O Lord, the wills of Thy faithful people, that they, plenteously bringing forth the fruit of good works, may by Thee be plenteously rewarded. (She rises and turns to the Leaguers.) And now, members of the Young People's Service League, and my members, may we not all find the prayer on page 587 of the Prayer Book and, kneeling, pray it together. Let us pray. (She again kneels at Desk.)

All: O God, at whose Word man goeth forth to his work and to his labor until the evening: Be merciful to all whose duties are difficult or burdensome, and comfort them concerning their toil. Shield from bodily accident and harm the workmen at their work. Protect the efforts of sober and honest industry, and suffer not the hire of the laborers to be kept back by fraud. Incline the hearts of the employers and of those whom they employ to mutual forbearance, fairness and good will. Give the spirit of governance and of sound mind to all in places of authority. Bless all those who labor in works of mercy or in schools of good learning. Care for all aged people, and all little children, the sick and the afflicted, and those who travel by land or sea. Remember all who by reason of weakness are overtasked or because of poverty are forgotten. Let the sorrowful, sighing of the prisoners come before Thee; and according to the greatness of Thy Power preserve, Thou, those that are appointed to die. Give ear unto our prayer. O merciful and gracious Father, for the love of Thy dear Son, our Saviour, Jesus Christ. Amen. (All rise.)

Spirit of Christ: Mother Church, let me lead you all and let us all stand and close our program tonight by reading together, so that it sinks into our very souls. Hymn No. 492, "Rise Up, O Men of God."

(After a pause in which she finds place herself, she leads in reading this hymns.)

(The End.)

* * *

Over the Top in Every Undertaking.

The Young People of the Diocese of Virginia filled Trinity Church, Fredericksburg, on the afternoon of February 17, when a Y. P. S. L. mass meeting was held. The meeting was conducted by the President, Griffin Garnett, of Richmond. Two interesting speakers were Bishop Tucker of Virginia and Mr. Coleman Jennings of Washington, D. C. The topics were, "Our World Responsibility" and "Personal Religion."

The Treasurer, Mr. Guthrie Brown, of Richmond, gave an encouraging report as the organization has gone "over the top" in every undertaking. Each year two projects of study and money gifts are selected, so that for the last three years attention has been directed to six centers and gifts of money sent to assist in the work of the Church there. The young people have responded whole-heartedly and are interested in being able to spread the Gospel throughout the world. This year $150 is for the Bishop to use at his discretion, and $50 for Bishop Bentley in Alaska.

At the Fredericksburg meeting plans for the annual convention week-end were announced.

Tea was served by groups from the two Episcopal churches, Trinity and St. George's. A fine spirit of cooperation and fellowship was in evidence.

CHURCH INTELLIGENCE

FIFTIETH ANNIVERSARY PROGRAM

The History of the Daughters of the King.

Fifty years ago the Order of the Daughters of the King was started in New York City. At that time there was in the Church of the Holy Sepulcher (now the Church of the Resurrection) a lovely, Christian woman who taught a class of young girls. The members of this class felt that they wanted to give more definite service to Christ, in addition to studying the Bible just for themselves. In order to encourage their interest and sympathy for Christ and His Church, Mrs. M. J. Franklin, their teacher, called a special meeting on Easter Even, April 4, 1885, to plan some definite work. Having the consent of the rector, the Rev. Ralph Wood Kenyon (who passed into the higher life July 17, 1933), to form an association, they organized as a Religious Order and decided to keep the name of their Bible class and to wear habitually, as a badge, a Greek Cross fleury of silver, charged on the horizontal with the words, "Magnanimiter Crucem Sustine" ("Bear forward almost aggressively the Cross with great mind") its watchword, and at the base of the perpendicular the initials "F. H. S." ("For His Sake") its motto. The work of the Order was to bring women within hearing of the Gospel, the first effort being to bring women to the Bible class, which has always been the corner stone of all Chapters. By 1889, six Chapters had affiliated and the growth of the Order has been continuous. The Order was organized on spiritual lines; it was never intended to supersede the Woman's Auxiliary, Aid Society, or other parochial organizations.

The Order has only two rules—Prayer and Service. As Church women we all pray but it is an inspiring thought that thousands of Daughters are praying each day especially for the spread of Christ's Kingdom that the Holy Spirit may be given to all who are engaged in Christ's work in our Parish and throughout the world. The prayer for Moral Courage is especially helpful.

Then we have a special prayer for our Missionaries. The first Daughter of the King to go into the Mission field was Miss Lily Funsten Ward, who went to China. After her death, a letter was found among her papers saying, "I come most earnestly and affectionately asking for the united prayers of the Order, and beg the Convention to pass resolutions appointing some day when the rector of every parish where there is a chapter of Daughters of the King will be requested to celebrate the Holy Communion with special intention for the Church in China; I suggest the day set apart be the Feast of All Saints." At the next Convention a resolution was adopted that a Self-Denial Week be observed each year in the Epiphany season and the offering then contributed be known as the "Lily Funsten Ward Memorial Fund" to be used always for the maintenance of a Daughter of the King missionary in China. The second of February, the Feast of the Presentation of Christ in the Temple, has been chosen as the time for presenting the Self-Denial Offering. Until war conditions in China prevented, the Order maintained one definite missionary, and for many years, two misionaries, and two native Bible women catechists. At this time the Order pays the salary of one misionary and one Bible woman.

At the Triennial Convention of 1922 the Order of the Daughters of the King inaugurated a Thank Offering to be known as "The Master's Fund," voluntary thank offerings to be given by members of the Order at Whitsuntide in loving commemoration of the coming of the Holy Spirit through Whom the Daughters receive their power to cooperate in the extension of Christ's Kingdom on earth. The Fund is used for preparing Church women for the office of Deaconess or for other forms of Church work. Since its inauguration twelve years ago this fund has provided scholarships entirely or partially for thirty candidates in the four accredited Church Schools—New York, Philadelphia, Chicago and Berkeley, California. Under the careful guidance of our chairman we have sent out for Christ's work, fine capable young women.

The work of the Daughters of the King is a personal work. The Kingdom is spread in individual lives. It begins in your heart and mine; just as our Lord called first one man and then another so we must touch one heart and then another. We are to pray daily for the spread of Christ's Kingdom especially among women; for God's blessing upon the members of the Order and for the spiritual growth of the parish to which our chapter owes allegiance. There are different methods of obedience to the rule of service, but there can be no deviation from the rule of Prayer.

The Order's loyalty to the Church is attested by the Corporate Communion which is observed the third Sunday of each month. Its methods differs from that of any other woman's Church agency. Its organization is simple but perfect and capable of the widest usefulness. Its work is definite—"the nearest woman."—Helen T. Birney, in The Royal Cross.

* * *

ORDER OF SERVICE FOR BROADCAST ON SUNDAY, MARCH 17, 1935, FOR THE EPISCOPAL "CHURCH OF THE AIR."

Opening announcement.

Sentences: Let the words . . . and my Redeemer. The hour cometh . . . to worship Him.

Let us pray: Lord's Prayer, Collect for the day, Other collects.

Hymn 474, O Sion Haste, Episcopal Hymn.

Address, "Forward in Missions," by Dr. John W. Wood, Executive Secretary, Department of Foreign Missions of the National Council of the Episcopal Church.

Ascription by Dr. Hobbs.

Stainer's Seven-fold Amen.

Creed and Closing Prayers.

Hymn 486, Christ for the World We Sing. Episcopal Hymn.

Benediction.

Closing announcement.

Service conducted by the Rev. G. Warfield Hobbs, D. D., Editor of The Spirit of Missions.

* * *

NOON SERVICES AT CHURCH MISSIONS HOUSE.

The Presiding Bishop on Ash Wednesday opened a series of Wednesday noon services in the chapel at Church Missions House, New York. On the four succeeding Wednesdays Miss Grace Lindley is to lead a meditation, on the fifth Wednesday Bishop Cook will speak, and on Wednesday in Holy Week the Rev. C. Rankin Barnes.

Bishop Perry spoke of Lent as a season of stern warfare between the things of the world and the things of God, when every Christian is called to the colors to take his part in that harsh conflict. He quoted the words of the Lexington monument as applicable to the Christian's soul, "If there is to be a war, let it begin here."

* * *

OUR CHURCH'S WORK TO CONTINUE IN MUNICH AND DRESDEN—LAWS AND REGULATIONS AFFECTING THEM.

"Friends of our work in Europe and especially of our churches in Munich and Dresden," declared the Presiding Bishop in an interview at the Church Missions House, "will be happy to learn of the continued success of this work, despite technical difficulties and with this assurance that there is no thought of discontinuing or even of curtailing the wide range of activities which make our parishes in Dresden and Munich of great value to the Anglo-American residents of these cities, to other visitors, and to Germans themselves."

Bishop Perry's comment was prompted by newspaper reports from Germany intimating that in the near future our work in Germany would be discontinued for lack of support.

"It is true," said Bishop Perry, "that it became necessary at Atlantic City in the reduction of our budget to remove appropriations heretofore made by the National Council for all of our American churches in Europe. This was a contribution toward meeting the Emergency Budget under which we are now operating. I have been able to secure funds from other sources in my capacity as Bishop-in-Charge, and have been able to keep all salaries up to the full figure and to pay them promptly. There is no thought of closing our work at Munich, Dresden, or elsewhere. We all can take pride in the fact that despite depreciation of the American dollar, and unfavorable exchange, especially in Germany, salaries in sufficient amounts will be paid to our ministers with additional aid for the maintenance of the work on full schedules."

The churches particularly referred to were Ascension, Munich, the Rev. F. C. Wissenbach in charge, and St. John's, Dresden, the Rev. Edward M. Bruce in charge.

Recent correspondence, especially from Mr. Bruce at Dresden indicates that one's troubles are hardly begun with the receipt of remittances from America, however adequate or regular. Concerning some of these fiscal adventures a recent letter says:

"It may interest you to know some of the laws and regulations which have to be observed here, the breach of which is punishable by imprisonment and fine:

"Any check coming into this country cannot be sent out again; it must be sold to the Reichsbank within three days at current rate of exchange. The same refers to any foreign money; for instance, if an American visitor puts a one dollar bill in the plate on Sunday, it must be converted into German Marks on or before Wednesday; if it isn't, and it is discovered, it is confiscated and a fine is inflicted.

"I am not referring to laws affecting tourists, however, but to residents of Germany like myself.

"I can obtain permission to have holdings, or cash, or a bank account outside of Germany to the amount of $400; but I cannot draw a check against this bank account and send that check out of this country; that is, I am not permitted to draw my check on a New York bank account for two or three dollars to pay my account for some Church Almanacs. I am permitted to send four dollars a month out of the country through the German Post Office and have it reported on my passport. A friend of mine who sent a five dollar bill in a letter to a friend in need at Christmas, was called to the Police Station, but as this was a first offence and done in ignorance, he was simply cautioned not to do it again.

"I am not complaining of the laws and regulations which affect me here, but only telling them as a matter of interest to you."

* * *

DR. WEDEL VISITING MANY COLLEGES TO CONFER WITH STUDENTS AND STUDENT WORKERS.

College students and student workers in a number of places met with the National Council's Secretary for College Work, the Rev. Dr. Theodore O. Wedel, in the latter part of February and early March. Dr. Wedel, on February 15 to 17, attended the conference of the New England United Student Movement at East Northfield, Mass.; on February 17 he addressed the St. John's Club at Smith College; during that week visited various other New England colleges, and attended a conference of student workers from several churches in Boston. On Sunday morning, February 24, he preached in St. Paul's Church, Brunswick, Maine, and in the afternoon at the Bowdoin College vesper service, meeting a group of Episcopal students in the evening at the home of President Sills.

At the invitation of the Rev. Dr. Don Frank Fenn and the Very Rev. Harold N. Arrowsmith, the annual tri-diocesan student conference of Maryland, Easton, and Washington, was held at St. Michael and All Angels' Church, Baltimore, March 1 to 3, at which Dr. Wedel was the principal speaker. Student representatives were present from ten colleges and universities. Bishop Helfenstein addressed the opening meeting. On March 4, Dr. Wedel visited Hood College, Frederick, Md., and addressed a group of Episcopal students in the evening. On Ash Wednesday he conducted Quiet Day services at St. Andrew's School, Middletown, Delaware, preaching in the parish church in the evening.

* * *

PROTEST AGAINST NAVAL MANEUVERS IN THE PACIFIC.

New York, N. Y., March 10.—An appeal to President Roosevelt, signed by prominent churchmen from all parts of the United States, protesting against the holding of the naval maneuvers in the Pacific, was made public today by Dr. Walter W. Van Kirk, Secretary of the Department of International Justice and Goodwill of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America. These religious leaders in their letter to the President declared that the maneuvers, if held, "will seriously complicate the task of maintaining peace in the Pacific." The President was implored "as the commander-in-chief of the armed forces of the United States, and in the name of peace, to alter the plans for these maneuvers so that they may be held, if at all, under such circumstances as will not occasion suspicion and ill will in the Far East." Bishops, college presidents, pastors, missionary leaders, editors of the religious press, and the executive officers of many city and state councils of churches were among those signing the appeal to the President.

The full text of the letter follows:

Dear Mr. President:

We have every confidence that the maintenance of peace is one of the important objectives of your administration. We rejoice in the leadership which you have exercised in the improvement of our relations with Latin America. We desire particularly to commend you for your declaration to the effect that during the period covered by your administration the armed forces of the United States will not be sent across the boundry line of the nations of the western hemisphere. The great majority of the thoughtful religious people of the nation will support you in these and kindred efforts.

We are convinced, however, that the projected naval maneuvers tentatively scheduled to be held in the Pacific during the period from May 3 to June 10 will, if held, seriously complicate the task of maintaining peace in the Pacific. It is reported that the proposed maneuvers will encompass more than 5,000 square miles of Pacific seaways and will involve the employment of 177 surface ships and 477 airplanes of the fleet's high seas air force. The vast armada has been described in the public press as "the larges and most powerful by a wide margin ever assembled under a single command in the world's naval history." Surely, Mr. President, the launching of such a program at such a time cannot but have the effect of making even more tense and difficult our relations with Japan.

In laying this matter before you we are motivated by our desire to see your "Good Neighbor" policy extended to include our relations with Asiatic peoples. We do not believe that it is a "Good Neighbor" policy for the United States to go through with the plans for the maneuvers as recently announced by Admiral Reeves.

We beg of you, Mr. President, as the commander-in-chief of the armed forces of the United States, and in the name of peace, to alter the plans for these maneuvers so that they may be held, if at all, under such circumstances as will not occasion suspicion and ill will in the Far East.

Respectfully yours,

A complete list of signers to the letter to the President followed.

SOUTHERN VIRGINIA.

Founder's Day—Lawrenceville.

Archdeacon Russell celebrated the fifty-third year of his ordination to the sacred ministry on March 9, and on March 16, here at the school, will be observed as "Founder's Day."

It was at the end of a dreary March day when he arrived in Lawrenceville, after a drive of twenty-two miles from Emporia, at that time called Belfield Today it seems strange to think that this long cold drive was made in an old stage coach, with the wheels of the coach sinking deep into the mud and the horses trying to pick their way through dangerous places.

Fifty-three years is longer by several years than the average span among our people. In this connection the words of the Psalmist (91:14-16) come to mind: "Because he has set his love upon me, therefore will I deliver him: I will set him on high, because he hath known my name." (15) "He shall call upon me, therefore will I deliver him and honour him." (16) "With long life will I satisfy and shew him my salvation." Truly these words have been verified in the life and experience of Archdeacon Russell. He has called upon his Lord with faith; he has served Him with zeal; he has proclaimed Him in season and out of season, and now, like Simeon of old, his eyes have seen "thy salvation" in the glorious fruition of his labors here and in the diocese. May God bless and preserve him for many more years.—The Southern Missioner.

VIRGINIA.

Rt. Rev. H. St. G. Tucker, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. Frederick D. Goodwin, D. D., Coadjutor.

Regional Conference.

A Regional Conference, sponsored by The National Council, met in St. Paul's Parish House, Richmond, March 4 and 5.

Bishop Cook, President of the National Council, and Dr. Reinheimer of the Field Department, were in charge. Virginia, Southern Virginia, Southwestern Virginia, West Virginia, Western North Carolina, and Washington were represented.

The purpose was to clarify the meaning of resolutions and instructions of the General Convention to the National Council and to point out the effects of the emergency schedule.

The situation which has arisen in the Church as the result of reduced budgets and prospects, looking forward to 1936, were discussed.

Though the meeting was not a large one, a greater opportunity was given thereby for discussing more fully and deeply the problems confronting the National Church today.

Good Figures.

Some figures from one Church Army Mission Station, Blackwell Hollow, for twelve months:

Visits paid to people	279
Visits paid to sick	65
Sick people taken to hospital, clinic, or doctor	30
Visits paid by people to Mission House	547
Visits paid by sick people to Mission House	56
Visitors to the field from outside	162
Services held	139
Total attendance	6,186
Offerings (not including specials)	$83.07
Baptists	36
Confirmations	25

NEW YORK.

Rt. Rev. Wm. T. Manning, D. D., Bishop
Rt. Rev. A. S. Lloyd, D. D., Suffragan
Rt. Rev. Chas. K. Gilbert, D. D., Suffragan

Varied Lenten Services for Every Age At Grace Church.

Grace Church is conducting an unusual variety of Lenten Services for persons of every age and interest. These services are being conducted daily and are of a spiritual, educational and musical value.

Sunday mornings, Dr. W. Russell Bowie, the rector, is giving a series of Lenten sermons on "The Spirit of a Christian."

A Parents School for the study of the child and the best way to implant in him the fundamentals of faith is meeting Monday evenings at 8:30. The subjects being covered are: "The Child and His Hobbies," "The Child, the Church and the School"; "The Child and His Books," "The Child and the Church" and "The Child and Art." The speakers, all members of Grace Church, are Mrs. Henry Spencer, a director of the Christodora Music School, Miss Dorothy Mills of the Brearley School; William L. Savage, Religious Editor of Scribner's; Mrs. W. Russell Bowie and Austin Purves, Jr., director of Cooper Union Art School.

Noonday services are being conducted each week from Tuesday through Fridays, at 12:30. The subjects being discussed are problems of vital importance to the individual in relation to his every day life. Some of the speakers scheduled are Dr. Kendall Emerson, Executive Secretary of the National Tuberculosis Association; District Attorney William Copeland Dodge, of New York; the Rev. William B. Spofford, editor of "The Witness" and Executive Secretary of the Church League for Industrial Democracy; R. C. Sheldon, Executive Secretary of the Big Brother and Sister Federation; R. K. Atkinson, Director of the Boys' Clubs of America, and E. R. Cass, General Secretary of the Prison Association of New York.

Organ recitals are being given Mondays at 12:30 by Ernest Mitchell; Dr. Bowie is conducting a series of meditations on "The Practice of the Presence of God," Thursday mornings at 11, followed by a communion at 11:45. A vesper service of Prayer and Meditation, with music by the Grace choir and a brief address by one of the ministers, is held Fridays at five o'clock, in the quiet at the close of day. Dr. Ernest F. Scott of Union Theological Seminary is speaking Tuesday evenings on "What the New Testament Means to Us."

Dr. W. Russell Bowie, rector of Grace Church in New York, will deliver the Lyman Beecher Lecture at the Yale Divinity School during the week of April 24, in connection with the Yale Divinity School Convocation being held in New Haven on April 24-26. Dr. Bowie is widely known as a writer, poet and advocate of peace.

E. L. Wertheim.

Faculty of General Theological Seminary Will Fill Many Lenten Engagements.

Faculty members of the General Theological Seminary will fill many Lenten engagements, both in the greater New York area, and in neighboring eastern States.

The Rev. Dr. Burton Scott Easton, professor of New Testament, will deliver the Reinicke lectures at the Virginia Theological Seminary, Alexandria, early in April on the subject, "The Book of Acts." Dr. Easton spoke at St. Michael's Church, New York, Ash Wednesday.

Among other Lenten engagements are the following: The Rev. Dr. Frank S. B. Gavin, professor of Church History, is preaching every Sunday in Lent at the Church of St. Mary the Virgin, New York. He will be lecturing on the subject, "The Bible," every Wednesday night at St. Ignatius' Church, New York, and will continue his series of noon-day meditations on Thursdays at Trinity Church, New York. Dr. Gavin will preach the three-hour Good Friday sermon at Grace Church, Newark.

The Rev. Dr. Donald F. Forrester, assistant professor of New Testament, will preach at the House of Prayer, Newark, on Sunday, March 17; at Caroline Church, Setauket, LongIsland, Sunday, March 24; at the Church of the Holy Communion, New York, Wednesday, April 10; and at Christ Church, New Brighton, Staten Island, Sunday, April 14. He will preach the three-hour Good Friday sermon at Trinity Church, Newport, R. I.

The Rev. Frederic C. Lauderburn, Chaplain, will preach Wednesday evening, March 13, at the Chapel of the Atonement, the Bronx; on Wednesday of Holy Week at Trinity Church, Ossining, New York, and will deliver the three-hour Good Friday sermon at the Church of the Incarnation, New York.

The Rev. Dr. Edward R. Hardy, Jr., instructor and tutor, will speak Tuesday evenings at the annual series of union services for Binghamton, New York, churches at Trinity Church, that city. He will conduct a Church History course Wednesday evenings for the Church Club of New York; and will address the men's club of St. Mary's Church, Keyport, N. J., on Wednesday evenings, March 13 and April 10. He will also preach at Trinity Church, Ossining, on Wednesday evening, March 27; at All Saints' Church, Brooklyn, on Maundy Thursday, and will preach the three-hour Good Friday sermon at St. Andrew's Church, Astoria, Long Island.

The Rev. Theodore P. Ferris, tutor, will deliver a series on the subject, "Rediscovering the Riches of Christianity," on Wednesday evenings at St. Mary's Church, Castleton, Staten Island, and will preach the three-hour Good Friday sermon at the same church. Mr. Ferris will be assisted in the series by the Rev. Jonathan G. Sherman, tutor, who will give some of the addresses, Mr. Ferris will also speak Wednesday evening, March 13, at the Chapel of the Atonement, the Bronx; at Trinity Church, Ossining; and will be noon-day speaker at the Church of the Incarnation, New York, April 15-18. He will also address a union service of Westport, Conn., churches at Holy Trinity Memorial Church, that town, on Friday, March 22, and will speak at St. Peter's Church, Portchester, New York, on Wednesday, March 27.

ATLANTA.

Rt. Rev. H. J. Mikell, D. D., Bishop.

Auxiliary Holds Annual Corporate Communion.

The Woman's Auxiliary of the diocese held their annual Diocesan Corporate Communion in various centrally located cities, Friday, March 15, at 10:30 o'clock. The offering taken all over the diocese will be sent the Province to be used for the splendid work being done by the Rev. Robert Fletcher among the Deaf-Mutes.

In Atlanta the Corporate Communion was held at St. Luke's Church, Bishop H. J. Mikell celebrant. Following this the Bishop gave the first of his Bible Study classes for the women of the city. These will continue through Lent, with the exception of Good Friday morning.

Bishop H. J. Mikell conducted the Lenten Services in Jacksonville, Florida, beginning with Ash Wednesday and continuing through Friday, March 8.

The Rt. Rev. Julius T. Atwood, D. D., retired Bishop of Arizona, is the guest of his son and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. Stephen B. Ives, in Atlanta, Ga. Last Sunday Bishop Atwood preached at the Cathedral of St. Philip and he will preach this Sunday at the Church of Our Saviour, as the guest of Canon W. S. Turner.

A. B. Gray.

PENNSYLVANIA

Rt. Rev. Francis M. Taitt, S. T. D., Bishop.

The Retreat Is Stopped, The Advance Will Follow.

Clergy and communicants of this diocese have been considerably heartened by an official nation-wide announcement that threats of further cuts in the missionary work of the General Church in its various domestic and foreign fields during 1935 have been averted.

News of this more hopeful outlook is being presented this week to the 229 congregations of the Church in the diocese in a Message issued by Bishop Taitt. The Bishops Message includes a report from the Presiding Bishop of the Church, the Rt. Rev. James De Wolf Perry, and the President of the National Council, the Rt. Rev. Philip Cook, that the 1935 Budget for maintenance has been balanced on the basis of the Emergency Schedule of $2,313,115 prepared by the General Convention at its Triennial Meeting in Atlantic City last fall.

"What seemed impossible a short time ago has been accomplished," the report states. "A threatened deficit of a large amount has been turned into small balance on the right side through the loyal and generous response from friends of the missionary work of the Church. Instead of struggling with a deficit, allocating another cut, and hurriedly planning a supplementary appeal, the members of the National Council are able to give their attention to the work itself, and to enter upon the constructive task of directing the Church's activities.

"The important work of restoration still lies ahead. The Council recognized the fact that the Emergency Schedule is the least that should be done. But it marks a turning point from which the Church can go forward. The retreat is stopped and the advance will follow. It is the desire of the Council to share this encouraging news with the whole Church. The officers make this announcement with the joy of those who bring glad tidings."

At the last General Convention the National Council presented a budget for $2,700,000 for maintenance of the missionary work in 1935, but reports from various dioceses necessitated the revision of this budget, and the Emergency Budget of $2,313,115 was adopted. This meant that the National Council was compelled to make heavy cuts in many misionary fields and to reduce its staff at the national headquarters in New York. The Emergency Schedule was allowed to stand, pending final reports from the dioceses and missionary districts of pledges for 1935, and with the understanding that if this budget was not balanced, further reductions and cuts would have to be made. The report just received makes these threatened further cuts unnecessary.

Dr. Edgar A. Singer, Jr., Seibert Professor of Philosophy, at the University of Pennsylvania, addressed the Clerical Brotherhood of the diocese on March 11, in the Church House. Dr. Singer's subject was "A Possible Science of Religion."

S. H. Warnock.

LONG ISLAND.

Rt. Rev. E. M. Stires, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. J. I. B. Larned, Suffragan.
Rt. Rev. F. W. Creighton, S. T. D., Suffragan.

Seventeenth Annual St. Andrew Brotherhood Communion.

The attendance of men and boys of this diocese at the seventeenth annual Washington's Birthday Communion and Breakfast, under the auspices of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, this year surpassed even the remarkable records that have been made in the past. Careful records of attendance indicate that seventeen hundred and ten persons were present.

In Brooklyn, the Holy Communion was celebrated in the Church of the Holy Trinity and in St. Ann's, since no one church could accommodate the numbers that were expected. At Holy Trinity, Bishop Stires was celebrant; at St. Ann's the rector, the Rev. Samuel M. Dorrance. Other clergy assisting in the two churches were the Rev. Messrs. Melish, Cummings, Kings, Knebel, Pierce, Titus, Woon, C. M. Wilson, Kinsolving, Young, Bessig, Dunbar and Loope. The communicants, carefully counted, were 996 at Holy Trinity, and 440 at St. Ann's. A high degree of reverence was attained through the work of thirty-four well-trained ushers. During the actual administration several hymns were quietly sung by the congregation. The service began promptly at eight, and was ended at 9:05.

At the St. George Hotel, 1,196 were seated for breakfast in the ball room, and 243 in the balcony—1,439 in all. Arrangements were perfect, and there was no delay. Breakfast was served at 9:30, and the meeting began at 10:20. After the national hymn and "Onward Christian Soldiers," Mayor LaGuardia made a fine address on George Washington, and Bishop Stires appealed most effectively for the "Forward Movement." Honor was paid to Mr. James McCreery, of St. Philip's Parish, Dyker Heights, who has been an active member of the Brotherhood for more than fifty years; and a tribute of memory was given to Mr. Frank L. Sniffen of the Church of the Messiah and to the Hon. Charles F. G. Wahle, of St. Bartholomew's, who died during the year.

At St. Peter's, Bay Shore, 150 men and boys attended the Holy Communion, celebrated by Bishop Larned, at which the rector of the parish, the Rev. Wm. R. Watson, and the Rev. Messrs. Goodwin and Otto asisted. At the breakfast following, Mr. Frank Gulden presided, and Mr. Raymond Knoeppel of St. Edmund's in the Bronx made an address on George Washington. Bishop Larned also spoke, emphasizing the religious elements in Washington's character.

At St. John's, Southampton, Bishop Creighton celebrated, and was assisted by the rector, the Rev. Samuel C. Fish, and by the Rev. Messrs. Grainger, Holcombe, MacLean, Cumpston and Covell. Bishop Creighton was the speaker at breakfast following.

C. H. Webb.

MINNESOTA.

A Woman's Auxiliary Press Chairman Wins First Prize For a News Story.

The Minnesota diocesan publicity director, Miss Gwendolyn G. Thomas, walked away with the first prize offered by the Minneapolis Tribune for a news story on one session of a conference called by that paper for press women of the state.

Miss Thomas attended the conference as press chairman for the Woman's Auxiliary. At the last possible moment she decided it was her duty to submit a story for the contest. Some 500 stories were entered, and Miss Thomas, wise to ways of newspapers, soon concluded that she had not won, because the paper had not asked her for a picture. On the day the winner was to be announced she opened the paper to be confronted with her own name as winner "and a terrible picture they had dug out of their files."

ALABAMA.

Rt. Rev. W. G. McDowell, D. D., Bishop.

The Forward Movement: Earnestness of Speaker Contagious.

The Forward Movement, in the Diocese of Alabama, got off on the right foot, when the Rt. Rev. James M. Maxon, D. D., Bishop Coadjutor of Tennessee, gave a thorough presentation of it at a conference of clergy and laymen, held in Selma, February 19-21. Those attending the conference were guests of St. Paul's Church, of which the Rev. E. W. Gamble is rector. They were entertained with true Southern hospitality.

All were delighted with Bishop Maxon's thoughtful and attractive presentation, which was not without moments of rare humor. There was not a dull moment. The earnestness of the speaker was contagious and it is safe to predict that before the conclusion of Lent churchmen in Alabama will more perfectly understand the implications of their discipleship, and be prepared to take the next step in the Forward Movement of the Church. So forcible was the speaker that the Rev. J. J. D. Hall, affectionately known as "Daddy Hall," of Wall Stret, New York, was soon impelled to utter a fervent "Amen." To which Bishop Maxon replied, "That is fine, Brother. Whenever I hear an Amen I am encouraged to talk ten minutes longer." Still no one undertook to suppress Daddy Hall.

G. W. Ribble.

GEORGIA.

Rt. Rev. F. F. Reese, D. D., Bishop

Tablet Dedicated.

Bishop Reese held services in Faith Chapel, Jekyll Island, on Quinquagesima Sunday and dedicated a tablet in memory of Walter Jennings. Mr. Jennings, a member of the Jekyll Island Club, was always deeply interested in Faith Chapel.

The Rev. C. C. J. Carpenter, rector of St. John's Church, Savannah, held a week's mission in St. James' Church, Leesburg, Fla., beginning February 10. The Rev. Ambler Blackford is rector of St. James' Church.

The Rev. John Lantry Williams, rector of St. Andrew's Parish, Astoria, Long Island, New York, was the celebrant at the early service and preached at the 11:30 service at St. Paul's Church, Savannah, on Sexagesima Sunday. While in the city he was the guest of the Rev. George Ferguson, priest-in-charge of St. Paul's Church.

The lectures on Character Education by Dr. Adelaide T. Case of Columbia University, New York, were splendidly attended by leaders of religious, education and social service groups. Dr. Case came to Savanah under the auspices of St. John's Church School and the Diocesan Department of Religious Education.

Julia St. Clair Moore.

PITTSBURGH.

Rt. Rev. Alexander Mann, D. D., Bishop.

"Accountability."

Before a very large congregation on Sunday, March 3, the Rev. Dr. William Porkess preached a special sermon, under the title of, "Accountability," marking his sixteenth anniversary as rector of St. Stephen's Church, Wilkinsburg, Pa. He stated that in his college days the word most emphasized was ability. In his experiences, when holding a commercial position, following graduation, ability was also given prominence. And still later as a teacher in one of America's large colleges, this same word—ability—was supreme. But, finally, through the ministry, he had undergone quite an awakening. Ability had been dethroned by the prefix account, and thus the outstanding word was now accountability. Ability exalts man, but accountability enthrones God. St. Stephen's Church was organized in 1882, and has grown so rapidly as to become the second largest parish in the Diocese of Pittsburgh. The erecting of a new choir room, parish house, and rectory—all of stone, and encircling the beautiful stone church, present one of the most imposing and complete church plants to be seen anywhere. During Dr. Porkess' rectorship, five young men have gone out from the parish into the ministry. It is now regarded as one of the outstanding missionary parishes in the country, consistently giving, through a period of sixteen years, 25 per cent of its systematic pledges to the budget to missions. Another striking characteristic is the emphasis placed on religious education, the rector making it a point of being present himself in the school every Sunday. There is now also a most flourishing young people's organization, meeting each Sunday, immediately before the Service of Evening Prayer.

For Lenten Concentration: Our Parish Church's Policy.

Every Parishioner worshipping sincerely and regularly in his own church.

Every Parishioner practicing daily the art of prayer.

Every Parishioner being a missionary to the non-Church-goer, by earnestly extending the invitation to worship.

Every Parishioner reading frequently the Bible, Prayer Book, Hymnal and Church Weekly.

Every Parishioner giving systematically to the Church's budget, and according to a stand that calls for faith.

Every Parishioner subordinating social activity and indulgence in pleasure to the superior claim of spiritual expression.

Every Parishioner speechless in criticism and pessimism, and eager in voicing appreciation.

Every Parishioner enthusiastic for cooperation and decidedly disinterested in individualism.

William Porkess.

MASSACHUSETTS

Rt. Rev. Henry K. Sherrill, D. D., Bishop
Rt. Rev. S. G. Babcock, D. D., Suffragan Bishop

Bishop Hobson Addresses Clericus on the Forward Movement.

The Rt. Rev. Henry Wise Hobson, D. D., Chairman of the Forward Movement, conducted an all-day conference with the clergy of the Diocese of Massachusetts on Monday, February 25. The day began with a service of devotion, followed by lunch, and an open forum meeting conducted by Bishop Hobson in the afternoon.

He spoke of the activities of the the same time as the diocesan-wide Commission in studying and appraising the possibilities of a Forward Movement in the Episcopal Church. The task is to reinvigorate the life of the entire Church, which he felt would be a large assignment. Bishop Hobson said the Movement was born out of the agony and despair of multitudes of Church people, who are gravely concerned about the Church, and through the General Convention gave an expression to their hope that a new movement might be undertaken. Everywhere there has been a casualness about the Christian life and a noticeable lack of radiant and triumphant living, a lack of unity of vision and purpose. People want something to be done about this apathetic condition, and in response to this feeling members of the Commission felt that they could not fail to take action.

The forum period brought to the surface many suggestions, such as a more definite requirement for Church membership, a more thorough-going preparation for Confirmation, and a revival of the Church's ministry of preaching. An appeal was also made for concrete social objectives to be included in the Forward Movement program, and many felt that the root cause of our present condition could be traced to the failure of Church people to share not only their spiritual privileges, but their ma-

(Continued on page 22.)

FAMILY DEPARTMENT

MARCH.

3. Quinquagesima.
6. Ash Wednesday.
10. First Sunday in Lent.
13. Ember Day. (Wednesday.)
15. Ember Day. (Friday.)
16. Ember Day. (Saturday.)
17. Second Sunday in Lent.
24. Third Sunday in Lent.
25. Monday. The Annunciation.
31. Fourth Sunday in Lent.

* * *

COLLECT FOR THE SECOND SNDAY IN LENT.

Almighty God, who seest that we have no power of ourselves to help ourselves; keep us both outwardly in our bodies, and inwardly in our souls; that we may be defended from all adversities which may happen to the body, and from all evil thoughts which may assault and hurt the soul; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

* * *

For the Southern Churchman.

OUR MASTER.

Gertrude Hawes.

How often He was troubled, and sometimes He was tried;
And yet He never faltered, though men to harm Him vied;
He trusted so implicitly His Father as His Guide!

How ofttimes He was weary, and sometimes He was sad!
And yet He lived for others, He made so many glad;
'Twas not through wealth or riches, but through the Love He had.

And then there came Gethsemane; oh! agony! 'twas there—
One great prelude to Calvary—our sins, the Cross He bare;
Then pierced with nails, and sword, and thorns the form and brow so fair!

His soul was wrung; and tortured His body unto death;
Oh perfect Love! forgiveness came linked with His final breath!
And greater still the triumph, His victory over death!

* * *

What We Live By.

The tumult and the shouting dies, the captains and the kings depart, but still remain the staple work and duty of our human world. Church assemblies and conventions, college commencements, exciting events in the political world, cosmic eruptions of storm and flood and earthquake, all these disturb and distract our life, but these soon pass and our life relapses into the quiet, steady ongoing of our daily routine. The everyday round of work in the home and school, office and factory and field, the rearing of children, and the ever pressing problem of our daily bread, Sunday school and church, these must be attended to, for these are the vital things by which we live. Often they seem to us but dull and stupid drudgery, but yet we must keep at them or life would fall to a low level and perish. Life cannot be sustained on the heights of excitement, for this would wear out our very nerves and satiate the soul. We must learn to live on plain bread and not always crave pound cake, to find in the common work of life the means of its perpetual enrichment and unfading joy.

The secret of a happy life lies in this ability to transmute our common life into higher vision and transfigure the common road with light from beyond the immediate horizon. This radiation of our work is achieved by some souls in a high degree, but it contains possibilities for us all. We read in the Life and Letters of Tchaikowsky that "He found that inspiration for composition often failed him wholly. For weeks at a time he could force out nothing that he valued. Yet if he waited patiently or impatiently for the inspiration, it did not come, for the Kingdom of Heaven and the inspirations of genius come not with observation. He found that he must go to his desk each day and do something, the best he could do, to get out some music. Then, in time, and quite unexpectedly, rich musical ideas would come pouring into his head, faster than he could write them down. They were the unconscious radiations of his uninspired daily toil." The minister often has this experience as he tries to pound out his weekly sermon with many a discouragement, until his patience and perseverance are rewarded by an unexpected and mysterious inrush of ideas that sweeps him off on its wave to an uplifting message.

This experience is not confined to people of genius or to any one calling, but is a possibility in some degree to us all. It may grow into a habit and mood of steady irradiation that illumines all our days and work and becomes a "heavenly vision."—Presbyterian Banner.

* * *

A Dramatic Puritan Preacher.

All the stories or legends about Rowland Hill or Spurgeon are surpassed by an account, sent by our good friend the Rev. Dr. Harold Smith, of a sermon on the subject of the neglect of Bible study, by John Rogers, Lecturer at Dedham, near Colchester, who died in 1636. He quotes Stowe as follows: "Thomas Goodwin, afterwards President of Magdalen College, Oxford, used to tell that when a student at Cambridge he rode over to Dedham on the lecture day, to hear Rogers. In his sermon Rogers fell into an expostulation with the people, on their neglect of the Bible. He personated God to the people, telling them: 'Well, I have trusted you so long with my Bible. You have slighted it. It lies in such and such houses covered with dust and cobwebs. You care not to look into it. Do you use my Bible so? Well, you shall have my Bible no longer? And he took up the Bible from its cushion and seemed as if he were going away with it, and carrying it from them. But immediately he turned again and personated the people to God, fell down on his knees, cried, and prayed earnestly: 'Lord, whatsoever Thou dost to us, take not Thy Bible from us. Kill our children, burn our houses, destroy our goods, only spare us Thy Bible. Take not away Thy Bible!' And then he personated God again to the people: 'Say you so? Well, I will try you a time longer, and here is my Bible for you. I will see how you will use it, whether you will love it more, whether you will observe it more, and live more according to it.' All this overcame the congregation. The place was a very Bochim, a valley of tears, the people generally, as it were, deluged with their own tears. Goodwin himself, when he was to take horse again to be gone, was fain to hang a quarter of an hour on the neck of his horse, weeping, before he had power to mount, so strong an impression was there in him, and generally upon the people, upon their being thus expostulated with for their neglect of the Bible."

* * *

MEDITATION.

An hour with Thee, dear Lord, before the day
Hath passed forever on its pilgrim way;
An hour of meditation, calm and still
When love its covenants may yet fulfill.

Oh, happy moment spent alone with Thee,
Spirit to spirit speaking glad and free;
Where doubt may never cast his dreary pall,
Or vain confusion hush the Master's call.

A gracious hour of thankfulness for life
Safe in the tempest of remorseless strife,
For fruitful labors in the fields of pain,
When weary hearts look up and hope again.

A blessed hour, when love surrenders all,
Content to do Thy will whate'er befall,
In sweet assurance of the hope fulfilled
As Thou in heaven eternally hath willed.

—Selected.

* * *

For the Southern Churchman.

ARMAGEDDONS.

II.

The Combatants.

Upton H. Gibbs.

Of the two combatants in the battle in the wilderness, the personality of the Champion of humanity is readily discerned. He is a man like ourselves. There is no question about Him. He is a man, with all the faculties of a man.

But in respect to His opponents there is a difficulty. He is not materialized in form. There is no description of his appearance. But personality is distinct from materiality. God Who is Supreme Personality, is "without body, parts or passions," for God is spirit. In men personality is objectified in a manner clearly perceptible. It is clothed with a material body through which it acts and reveals itself. Spiritual personalities must be perceived mentally and spiritually.

The battle in the wilderness was not a material one. No material weapons were used. The nearest approach to materiality, lay in the suggestive pictures employed to deceive. But these were mentally presented. Even the suggestion to turn stones into bread, was mental in scope, though making a powerful appeal to the physical nature. The tactics employed by the tempter indicate the working of an acute and alert mind. The whole account loses force and interest and meaning if it is regarded as merly a conflict with evil tendencies of an impersonal character. It becomes untypical of human experience. For every temptation involves a conflict of wills.

Behold, then, the two combatants and watch closely the strategy displayed by each. We shall derive much to our advantage in so doing, for the accounts as preserved and transmitted, "were written for our learning."

* * *

Giving and Spiritual Growth.

Advance in spiritual life is closely associated with the Christian use of money. If your money, much or little, is allowed to stand between you and God, you cannot grow. Exhaling is as necessary for health and life as inhaling. The sacred cause of missions does great things for us when it urges us to give to the point of self-denial. A Christian who holds back and lets others support the work, not only robs God, but also his fellow-Christians—of fellowship in obeying God.

We sometimes may wish that the calls for giving were fewer. Yet we might be the poorer if we gave less.

A lawyer asked a friend: "How can I get rid of so many appeals for help?" "Simply refuse to give," was the answer. "They will then soon get fewer and will later cease altogether." "But," he mused, "what would be the effect upon me? My soul would get smaller as my bank balance got bigger—soul small, bank balance big; no, I will go on giving."

No vice is more destructive to Christian character than greed. When Christianity touches the pocket it becomes practical. The attempt to impose taxation without representation has in England and America aroused great indignation from time to time, and is in both countries unconstitutional. But it is the reverse question that needs to arouse indignation in most churches —that of representation without "taxation"—without giving of any kind—on the part of non-participants in supporting God's work.—A. S. Wilson, Aukland, N. Z., in "Faith's Fight."

* * *

HE WHOM A DREAM HATH POSSESSED.

He whom a dream hath possessed knoweth no more of doubting
For mist and the blowing of winds and the mouthing of words he scorns.
No sinuous speech and smooth he hears, but a knightly . . . shouting.
He whom a dream hath possessed treads the impalpable marches. . . .
And rides God's battlefield in a flashing and golden car.

—Sharman O'Sheal.

* * *

Through Christ Alone.

All Christians recognize and readily acknowledge that it was not through merit of their own, or by any personal effort that they were enabled to pass from death to life, from condemnation to assured salvation, but only by an act of faith that appropriated Him as their personal Saviour. So in the matter of the conquest of sin, it is not brought about by our own struggles and good resolutions, by the discontinuance of this habit or the abandonment of that, but by taking Christ as the Deliverer, the Keeper, who alone can "break the power of canceled sin, and set the prisoner free," and give victory all along the line.

Faith stands for "Forsaking All, I Take Him."—Canon F. J. Horsefield, in the Keswick Calendar.

* * *

Tough Luck.

A favorite alibi today is hard luck. There are thousands of young men who believe that the advance of others is nothing else but what they call a streak of good luck, and their own failure is due to tough luck.

Anything at all in this idea of chance or luck? It would be foolish to say that there is no such thing as luck, using the word in its common adaptation. There are incalculable things, apart from our ability and outside of the range of our will, which operate in our favor or against us.

There is nothing more easy, however, than to exaggerate the extent and importance of luck. I would asign luck about ten per cent of responsibility. The other ninety per cent belongs to the man himself. "The man who is waiting for a stroke of good luck will probably wait until he has a stroke of paralysis."

And the man who complains that he has had no opportunity would not see a chance anywhere. The men who win do not wait for chances. They make them, and often out of very ordinary material. We are the architects of our own lives. "The fault is not in our stars, but in ourselves, that we are underlings."

Christ bids us come to Him that we may be born again. That is what we need. We need a new heart and a new beginning. And when, through repentance of sin and trust in Him, we are born from above, we are given not only a new heart and a fresh start, we are given a new heredity which is more than a match for the old. God becomes our Father in a new sense. "Now are we the sons of God and it doth not yet appear what we shall be." And we have a new environment, for this is the promise that has been given. "I will never leave thee nor forsake thee," and "Lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end." And the bad luck is ruled out, for "all things work together for good to them that love God."

"Follow me," the voice of love and power is saying, "and I will make you a conqueror over life and more than a conqueror."—Christian Index.

* * *

For the Southern Churchman.

"UNLESS."

Maude Forrest Mumma.

"Unless" we get rain the crops will die,
The grain would cease to thrive,
And though the farmers work and work,
How vainly do they strive!
No matter what they plan to do,
No matter what they sow,
Unless the welcome showers come
The seeds will never grow.

The sweet green grass would soon be dead,
The cattle left to pine,
The city's milk would soon be spent
Without the Hand Divine;
The trees upon a thousand hills
Would soon no moisture hold,
And this wide earth on which we dwell
Would soon be growing old.

I never realized before
The meaning of that word
"Unless"—the destiny of a world
Lies hidden and unheard;
The touch of an Eternal Hand
Is needed here below,
If hungry mouths are to be fed
And human hearts to glow!

* * *

Submitting to the Physician.

My soul, whatever thy disease may be this great Physician can heal thee. If He be God there can be no limit to His power . . . None shall restrain the healing virtue which proceeds from Jesus our Lord. Legions of devils have been made to own the power of the beloved Physician, and never once has He been baffled. All His patients have been cured in the past, and shall be in the future, and thou shalt be one among them, my friend, if thou wilt but rest thyself in Him.—C. H. Spurgeon.

* * *

Dogs in Churches.

According to a ruling of the Chancellor of the Norwich Dioceses, dogs may go to church. This decision was made when an applicant brought a dog with him to the Consistory Court held in Norwich Cathedral.

The Chancellor, after remarking that Mr. Justice Hawkins used to take his dog into court with him, turned to the owner of the dog, which was crouching upon his knee, and said, "Do not try to hide him. There is good precedent for having a dog in court and in church."

The incident brings to mind a miscellany of references to the old custom of taking dogs to church. It seems to have been a common practice in former days, and ancient church records and accounts contain some quaint entries regarding them. Some churches, for instance, had dog-doors cut in the main doors so that dogs could pass out and in when the latter were closed during service time.

Dog-tongs were in frequent use, apparently to eject troublesome dogs, and it was one of the duties of the verger in some parishes to keep dogs out of the church. In the West Riding villages, in Yorkshire, between sixty and seventy years ago, the verger was often known as the "dogknopper," while in several old church account books the payment of money "for keeping ye dogs out of church" is recorded. The quotation is made from a seventeenth century entry in the books of Pancrasweek Church, in North Devon.

There is even a fourteenth century church where the rails separating the chancel from the nave are set so close together as to leave little space between, and this is said to have been a device of Archbishop Laud to pervent the canine part of the congregation from penetrating into the sanctuary during the sacrament.

Even today, in Scotland and the Border counties, the custom has not yet died out. There are many anecdotes told of the Highland sheep-dogs which form a regular part of the congregation in the village kirks. They are the constant companions of their masters, the shepherds, and accompany them even into the pews. The Cheviot shepherds, for instance, order their collies "to clap down" and the dogs go to sleep. "And now . . ." has an electrical effect on them—the long enforced rest is over. The minister has to devise many a means of keeping the dogs in ignorance of the approaching end of the service, in order to finish in due decorum.

Dean Ramsey, in his "Reminiscences of Scottish Life and Character," wrote of the same custom among the shepherds of Sutherland. There were, he said, as many dogs as people in the churches, and they sat out the Gaelic service with commendable patience until the last psalm, and then they began to stretch and prepare to depart. One congregation, he added, found a way to hoodwink the sagacious dogs. They sat during the blessing, and so obtained quiet and order until the end.

A story which may not be as "tall" as it sounds at first, is told by a north-countryman. On the Scottish border a number of Presbyterian shepherds had come to a Church of England service for a special sermon. At the end of the sermon the "Presbyterian" dogs got up ready to walk out; the "Church of England" dogs waited for the blessing. Dogs as intelligent as sheep-dogs might easily have adapted themselves to custom, even to the details of the church service.

The character of the sheep-dog, of course, makes him a more suitable churchgoer than most others—he is obedient, not quarrelsome, quiet and content to rest during this interlude in his hard-working week. He does not abuse his privilege, and is so integral a part of the population of the sheep country villages of the North, and so inseparable from his master, that his presence seems to be normal and right.

Yet, in former days, when the custom was perhaps universal in England also, the presence of dogs in church seems to have been more than a slight nuisance. The heterogeneous character of the dog-population of the English village must have made their church-going a lively and unruly proceeding. —The Animals Advocate.

* * *

Try to look through your sorrows and defeats rather than looking at them.

FOR THE CHILDREN

A HAPPY FAMILY.

What makes a happy family?
Listen and I will tell.
It's not your house. It's not your clothes,
Nor the car you like so well.
Not trips you take nor the radio,
Nor money you have to spend.
It's something better than all of these,
Something that will not end.
It's the love of Dad who works so hard
To get the things you need.
It's Mother, loving and helping you
By every kindly deed.
It's Brother's love and Sister's love,
And your love for each one,
That makes the joy and happiness,
When every day is done.

—Storytime.

* * *

For the Southern Churchman.

THOSE RECTORY CHILDREN.

Chapter XI.

M. L. G.

The week that followed seemed to Winnie more like a month. The nights were icy cold, and David and Uncle Danger were kept busy bringing in wood and keeping fires going. Mrs. Innis kept to her room most of the time, her stove glowing red, night and day. The little kettle was kept singing and the hot-water bottle filled. Winnie, dressed for school, knocked timidly on her door each morning, and, after a day or two, the answer was about the same.

"Open the door just a crack, my child. Slip in—don't bring the cold air. How did I sleep? Well, only tolerably, I'm sorry to say. I had to get up to put wood on the stove and refill my bottle. I am very sensitive to cold, dear child; my nature has been a delicate one from infancy."

Shall Cindy bring your breakfast, Mrs. Innis?"

"In ten minutes precisely. An orange and oatmeal first, and five minutes later the rolls and egg. I must keep up my strength; I know your dear Mother depends on me to take her place among her little brood. And tell Cindy cocoa, I feel too nervous for tea. And remind her of my milk and soda crackers precisely at twelve."

On the first Friday afternoon David and Winnie came across the fields from school. The wind whipped at their heels, and blew Winnie's curls into her eyes. They could not help but run.

"We'll have a real letter from Mother when we get home, I hope," said David.

"But, David, I hardly want to know what the doctors said. It may not be good a bit."

"I like knowing anything better than wondering. It can't make Claire worse for us to know," said matter-of-fact David.

"But I like to think it's maybe all a mistake, she only needed rest or something."

"No, Winnie, it isn't a mistake," David answered so gravely that all Winnie's fears came crowding back.

"If Mother were only here!" she sighed, brushing away curls and tears together. "David, Mrs. Innis is a real sort of a trial to me."

"She isn't cross, Win, is she?"

"No, not a bit, but she's so anxious about herself, and Aunt Cindy does get bothered at the extra things to make, and the different ways."

"Well, you know Aunt Cindy's just talking, she doesn't mean it to trouble you."

"And, David, she keeps her room so hot, and she says she 'rested poorly'—how can she rest well in a room like—like a pudding bag!'"

"Well, it won't be long, Winnie, and some day it will just seem funny and interesting to remember. She was kind when Kent cut his hand yesterday."

"Yes, I know—but her bandage wouldn't stay on; I had to do it over as soon as she went back in her room. I don't mean to be cross—" and suddenly Winnie gave a little chuckle of merriment. "I see it will seem funny some day—it did yesterday when she put on Phil's coat and buttoned it in the back; Phil was so interested he wouldn't tell her different, and then he told me he didn't know whether to go the way his coat or his feet told him."

The children finished their walk in laughter, and were met by a dirty and sticky pair of small boys waving an envelope.

"Mrs. Innis says dis fum yo' dear Mother," cried Kent happily.

"I bet she'll say she's comin' home!" Philip added.

"No, honey, we couldn't expect that. Oh, but you've gotten it sticky!"

"Kent upsettled the 'lasses jug," explained Philip, "so it was in the waiter and it was a lake. So dis felled in—so it was a boat."

"We wiped it off," Kent added hopefully.

"Well, it's a good envelope," David drew out the letter and dropped the faithful envelope into the fire. "Not much got through. Shall I read it aloud, Win?"

"Look at the end, David"—Winnie's throat was dry.

"Here's a message from Claire at the end—'Tell David please to keep Noe. happy for me, and tell Winnie to remember our secret, and tell Phil and Kent we went through a dark tunnel on the train; it was like a short night, and smoky, and when it was day again we were right in the station'."

"Well, she didn't die in the letter!" cried Winnie, laughing and crying together.

"Now here it is from the beginning. Just next to talking with Mother," and David read:

"Precious Children:

"You had my cards and the little note, I hope. We have been so comfortable here, and Claire has become quite used to her room, and the nurses. There are many corridors, and many small rooms opening on them and in every room some one ill. But Claire has an end room, so the passing of feet does not come as far, and she has two windows instead of one. Kent and Philip would enjoy the view from the windows—mostly rooftops, for we are five stories up. They have let me stay every night with her, and will so long as she needs me, and Father is in and out all day. One night she asked me to put out her light, and we sat for a while in the dark, talking of you all. There was Orion from her eastern window, and that was homelike. Shen Tai's picture is on the dresser where she can see it. Flowers have come, too, from friends and cousins here, so the little room is very gay.

"Now I must tell you how she is. They have made a thorough study of her, examinations and consultations every day—and she's so good and plucky about it! They are going to operate tomorrow—by the time you read this it should be over and my little girl back in her room. The great visiting surgeon spoke to me himself this morning. 'There's good chance of a cure, Madam,' he said, "if we find only, as I think and if the little lady will be patient and still for a long while.' That means a plaster-cast I know—but we won't mind anything that gives our Claire back to us, and maybe even well and strong.

"Here is Father almost ready to go out, he will add a note and mail this. Make things pleasant for Mrs. Innis and be—but I know you are!—my good children."

"And this is from Father:

"Hope you're all well and hearty. Listen well to the Seminary student on Sunday, David and Winnie. And, Kent and Pihilp, you must keep up your spirits and be looking for me with Uncle Danger at the station at the evening train next Tuesday. Unless it does not go well with Claire, I can make it. Kindest regards to good Mrs. Innis."

Good Mrs. Innis opened the door in time to hear this last.

"Very kind of your dear Father," she said. "I have tried to be conscientious in guarding the little home. But, David, my child"—she paused and looked mild at David through her thick spectacles, "I suspect a mouse. I put some cakes on the closet shelf just to keep up my strength between meals—and see here—a distinct nibble!"

David rose. "Yes'm, I see. I'll set a trap right away."

"Well, I don't know—after all, the little thing means no harm—"

"No'm—but Mother wouldn't want you bothered with a mouse." And David started for the kitchen. Mrs. Innis subsided into a chair, murmuring. "What a very strong character David is, Winnie, to be sure!"

* * *

WHAT IS GOOD?

"What is the real good?"
I ask in musing mood.

"Order," said the law court;
"Knowledge," said the school;
Truth," said the wise man;
Pleasure," said the fool;
"Love," said the maiden;
"Beauty," said the page;
"Freedom," said the dreamer;
"Home," said the sage;
"Fame," said the soldier;
"Equity," the seer.
Spake my heart full sadly:
"The answer is not here."

Then within my bosom
Softly this I heard:
"Each heart holds the secret:
'Kindness is the word..'"

—John Boyle O'Reilly.

* * *

Bees and Wasps.

"I do love honey," said Betty, one day at tea-time, as she helped herself to a large piece of honey-comb.

"Who does not?" said Arthur, "I am sure we all do."

"Is it not a shame to take away all the bees' honey after all their trouble to get it?" said Myra.

"It is, and it is not," said her father. "Honey is good for man, both as food and medicine, and we give them a good substitute."

"Here comes a wasp," cried Arthur, as one buzzed in through the open window, "and he likes honey, too," he continued as the wasp settled on the edge of the uncovered honey-dish.

"Of course he does," said father, "and that is why your Uncle Peter lost all his bees a few years ago."

"Lost his bees! Did Uncle Peter keep bees?" Betty asked eagerly.

"Yes. You were too young to remember them, so I will tell you from the beginning. Chase that wasp away before he eats all your honey."

"He might sting me," said Betty.

"He won't. Cover the dish, then take it to the open window, and uncover it. He will fly out.

Betty did she was told, and then all settled down to hear father's story.

"One day your Uncle Peter discovered that a swarm of bees were hanging from one of the trees in his garden."

"Did you ever see a swarm of bees, father, what is it like?" interrupted Betty.

"Don't be asking questions, Miss Inquisitive," said Arthur impatiently.

"No. Arthur! don't call her names. How would any of us learn anything if we were not informed? Yes, Betty," he continued, "I have seen a swarm, and I will tell you about that first. I was staying for a few months in a country cottage, when one day I was alarmed by a great beating of sticks on tin cans, shouting, and all sorts of commotion. I looked out of the door, and saw the air thick with beers. They—the young bees—had left the hive in the garden, with their queen, and were waiting until she rested to swarm around her. The noise was made by the owner of the bees to keep them from flying away and being lost, for a swarm of bees are valuable. When she rested they all clustered around her, until they looked like a giant bunch of grapes.

"Now I will tell you about your Uncle Peter. When he discovered the swarm, he procured a hive as quickly as possible and the bees were moved into it, they settled down, and made it their home. Strange to say, another swarm came the same year, and then he had two hives of bees, and began to look upon himself as a bee-keeper! For a number of years all went well. Your Uncle became quite skillful in the management of the hives, got the honey, and fed the bees through the winter months.

"But one year he was besieged with wasps. Kill as many as he could still they came. As you know, bees always place sentinels before the doors of the hives, for they have many foes who would enter and destroy their precious honey. But this year they were attacked by hordes of wasps. The poor bees put up a good fight and many were slain on both sides, but at last the bees were defeated, and the wasps took the hive."

"Oh! what a shame!" cried Myra, "and what about the other hive?"

"Well at first your Uncle thought the second hive would fare better, as the bees were bigger and more warlike, and they put more watchers around the door of their hive. But it was of little use for in the end they too were defeated and the wasps had both hives."

"Oh, dear," cried Arthur, "could nothing be done to drive off the wasps? smoked out or something."

"Well, your Uncle was unwilling to do so, as it meant the killing of the bees as well as the wasps, and he did not wish to do that."

"And did the wasps get all the honey?" asked Betty, breathlessly.

"No, not all, for when your Uncle saw that the bees were defeated, he smoked out the wasps, and secured the honey. But no more swarms came to his garden. Now," he continued, turning with a smile to their mother, "I'll let your mother give you the moral of the story."

"And I in my turn," she said, "will ask Arthur what he thinks about it."

"I think it is like evil overcoming good, mother. Such hordes of enemies assailing the little hive, like the hosts of evil attacking the soul."

"I believe I would have said the same thing, Arthur, but they were defeated —need we be overcome?"

"No! their guardians were weak like themselves, but we may have one within us Who is strong to deliver."

"Yes, but many think they can do well without Him. They depend on their own strength to keep the evil at bay, but when strong temptation comes, they fall, and Satan and his hordes take possession."

* * *

Timmy Tinker's Gondola.

Essa was always happy to visit her cousin Margaret. Essa lived in a little cottage on a cove on the west coast of Shetland, but Margaret lived in the capital, Lerwick, in one of those stone houses built out into the water so that the waves lap around three sides of it, and if you wish to go out any way except by the front door, you have to leave by a window and jump into a boat. Of course nobody ever did leave that way, but Margaret's mother had known storms in which the waves had broken through the dining room window and swept the dishes from the table.

But this day the sea was calm and sparkling, with a very high tide as there often is in the springtime. The air was warm and the sky a radiant blue seldom seen in those foggy islands. The little girls thought it great fun to watch the waves just a little way beneath the window ledge and they promised to be careful and not lean out while their mothers went to the stores to do some shopping.

"When you look down," said Essa, "it makes you feel as if you were in a magic house floating out to sea."

"It makes me think of Venice," said Margaret, who was a year older. "Have you studied about Venice in geography?"

Essa shook her head doubtfully.

"Then I'll tell you," continued Margaret. "It's a place where all the streets are water. They call them canals, and if you want to go to the store and get an ice cream cone you have to get into a boat to do it."

"I don't believe my father would like that," said Essa. "Wouldn't it be funny to go in a boat to tend the sheep or cut the peat?"

"It's different in Venice," explained Margaret. "They go in gondolas, and there's a gondolier who has a big oar, and they sing in the moonlight and there's a white dove flying around. See, here's a picture."

"I think sea-gulls are just as good as doves," replied Essa loyally, "and Venice can't be any prettier than Lerwick is today. Oh, Margaret, look! What is that coming toward us?"

True enough, only a few yards away, a long flat boat was bobbing on the waves, and soon it was almost beneath the window.

"I'll find the old boat-hook," said Margaret, "and then we can reach it without leaning out."

"Hurry, it's coming faster," called Essa after her, but in a moment Margaret was back, and safely drew out the treasure from the sea. It proved to be a boat—evidently once the plaything of some child in a far-off land—for Shetland children did not have such toys—with painted keel and varnished deck and a stub of a mast still remaining despite its perilous journey.

"You know," said Essa, laughing in glee, "it is shaped like the gondola in the picture. Wouldn't it be fun to put some one in it and let it drift to shore?"

"Nancy might fall out and get wet," said Margaret, glancing at her doll reposing in the rocking chair. But there's Timmy Tinker," and she produced the jolliest little fellow made from a clothes-pin. He had wide-open eyes and a merry mouth painted on his round head, and he wore a little knitted jacket and blue trousers.

"Just the person for a boat ride," continued Margaret, "and if he falls out he knows how to swim. Only he might take a notion to float and go off in the wrong direction, so I guess I'll tie him in."

"And couldn't we have a gondolier?" asked Essa. "He wouldn't have to be dressed up so much."

That seemed a sensible proposal, so Margaret got another clothes-pin, and by the aid of a pencil he was given a countenance, and a few bits of bright wool made him a sash.

"His face looks queer," said Essa doubtfully, then she added cheerily, "I suppose they do, anyway, in those countries."

The gondolier, not being encumbered with clothing, was able to cling by his legs to the mast and as the boat touched the waves a tiny breeze waved the ends of his cash in a most seaman-like manner. Both he and Timmy Tinker looked very sporting and gallant and well worth admiring.

Evidently gulls thought so too, for a pair hovered about inquisitively, then one of them alighted on Tommy Tinker's head. The little girls screamed with laughter, but the gull did not mind in the least, and they finally had to twitch the string to make him fly away.

Just then they saw their mothers coming up the road, and they concluded that Timmy Tinker had been quite far enough for one day. Besides, they were interested to know the contents of all those bundles.

"We'll save the gondola," said Margaret. "I'll call it Venice and paint a V on it."

"And we can make a Viking ship out of it if we want to," agreed Essa, "and the V will be just as good. Let's put Timmy Tinker in the chair beside Nancy, so that he can tell her all his adventures.

"Perhaps he'll say he was in Venice and a dove sang on top of the mast," suggested Margaret.

"And when it's bedtime perhaps he'll tell her about Noah and the ark," continued Essa. "Be sure to bring him to my house when you come, and I hope that something just as exciting happens the next time that Timmy Tinker takes a sail."—May Whiting in Zion's Herald.

* * *

FAIRIES AND ELVES.

Eight little fairies and two little elves
Didn't know how to amuse themselves;
They ran up and down on the piano-keys
Until somebody said, "Don't do that, please."
They danced up and down on the window-pane
Until somebody said, "Please don't," again.

Then eight little fairies and two little elves
Discovered some work on the nursery shelves;
For, oh, what a mess those shelves were in!
They scarcely could tell just where to begin.
They laid all the toys in tidy rows,
A place for these and a spot for those.

Eight little fairies and two little elves,
Perhaps you have guessed who they are for yourselves.
So do keep them busy, for if you shirk,
Old Man Mischief will give them work.
But if they have plenty of work and play,
Old Man Mischief will keep away.

—Author Unknown.

Classified Advertisments and Notices

All notices and advertisements, excepting positions wanted, will be inserted in this department at a rate of 20 cents per agate line each insertion. Special raes to contracts of any length. A rate of 15 cents per line is made to persons seeking positions. No advertisement accepted for less than 50 cents.

Copy for this department must be received not later than Tuesday of the week in which it is intended that the first insertion shall appear.

SPECIAL NOTICES.

CHURCH VESTMENTS.
Cathedral Studio, Church embroideries, Altar and Pulpit Hangings. Stoles from $6.50. Burse and veil from $10. Surplice from $8. Send for complete line of pure Irish linens by the yard. Silks, fringes and gold thread. Embroidered emblems ready to appy. Altar Guild Handbook, 50c.

L, V. MACKRILLE
11 W. Kirke St., Chevy Chase,
Washington, D. C.
Telephone Wisconsin 2752.

RAZOR SHARPENER.
SHARPENS ANY STRAIGHT RAZOR, or safety razor. Guaranteed by manufacturers, and I guarantee it to please you. 50 cents per cake, or 3 cakes for $1.00. I take subscriptions for all magazines published at publishers' rates, or less. Sold by a wheel chair invalid. Edward P. Broxton, R. F. D., Blythe, Ga.

FOUNTAIN PENS.
A FOUNTAIN PEN AT A 1933 VALUE, with the Spencerian quality and smooth writing ease famous for seventy-five years. Guaranteed. Points fine and medium. Colors, gloss black, green and gold, Burgundy, blue and black, grey pearl. Price $2.00. Sold by a shut-in wheel chair invalid. Edward P. Broxton, R. F. D., Blythe, Ga.

HOUSE OF THE NAZARENE; SAINT AUGUSTINE, FLORIDA; offers rest and quiet in comfortable and pleasant surroundings. Invalids requiring nursing cannot be received, nor those with mental difficulties. Apply to Sister-in-Charge.

MONEY IN OLD LETTERS.—Search your old trunks and send all old envelopes used before 1880. Highest prices paid. George Hakes, Belvidere, Illinois.

MY SISTER IS A "SHUT-IN" AND would greatly appreciate orders for counterpanes and table mats, both of which she crochets beautifully and quickly and very reasonably.
MRS. FENTON NOLAND,
Beaver Dam, Va.

THERE'S MONEY IN YOUR ATTIC.
I buy Confederate Stamps, Old U. S. Stamps, and Envelopes mailed before 1880. Send or write to J. R. Morton, 1509 Irving St., N. W., Washington, D. C.

SITUATION WANTED.

NURSE, GRADUATE, MIDDLE AGED, EPISCOPALIAN, wishes position in school. Home for aged. Mission hospital, or other Episcopal institution. Moderate salary. Address M. Rudkin, 51 W. High St., Gettysburg, Pa.

DEATHS

MRS. MARY WHITE CORMACK.

At the Protestant Episcopal Church Home on Friday, March 1, 1935, there entered into life eternal MARY WHITE CORMACK, the mother of William Cormack, of Richmond, Va.

This beloved woman had for twelve years been the superintendent of the Home. With gentleness but firmness she administered the affairs of that large household, and made it not a refuge, but a home, where kindness and consideration for others drew strangers together into one great family. She had in rare measure that great gift—an understanding heart—and the frailties and feebleness of old age found in her a depth of patience and unselfishness that was unexcelled.

Through her capacity for the administration of the Home and her wisdom in its guidance, she won the confidence and affection of its Board, who record her loss with deepest sorrow. Such devotion did she bring to her labors, such peace and rest to her charges, truly might it be said of her—

"Well done, thou good and faithful servant,
"Enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."

MRS. OSWALD OGDEN.

MRS. ALYS MACGILL DREWRY OGDEN, wife of Oswald Ogden, of New Orleans, La., died at her home in Bay St. Louis, Miss., on Monday morning, February 18, 1935, at 5:30 o'clock, after an illness of a few days.

Mrs. Ogden was born at "Mineola", Chesterfield county, Va., on April 18, 1875, at the home of her parents, the late Dr. Samuel Davies Drewry and Alice Macgill Drewry, and was related to many prominent families in this section of Virginia and in Maryland.

She was a granddaughter of the late Henry Tandy Drewry and Martha Amelia Davis Drewry, of "Falls Plantation", in Chesterfield county, Va., and on her maternal side was a granddaughter of the late Dr. Charles MacGill and Mary Ragan Macgill, of Richmond, formerly of Hagerstown, Md.

Her girlhood was passed in Richmond, where she attended Miss Mary Johnson's school and the school conducted by the late Professor John H. Powell, and where she had made many friends, and will be remembered for her unusual beauty and charm.

Mrs. Ogden married Oswald Ogden, of New Orleans, son of the late Judge Robert N. Ogden and Sara Beattie Ogden, of that city. Mr. and Mrs. Ogden for some years resided in New Orleans, but in recent years they had made their home at Bay St. Louis, Miss.

Mrs. Ogden is survived by her husband, two daughters, Mrs. E. Bruce Fergusson and Mrs. Sara Beattie Ogden Paredes; two sons, Samuel Davies Drewry Ogden and Oswald Ogden, Jr., and two grandsons, Oswald Ogden Paredes and Oswald Ogden III. She is also survived by four sisters, Miss Mary Macgill Drewry, Mrs. Frederick Olia Bertrand, Mrs. B. Frank Deford and Mrs. John E. Deford, and a brother, Cooper R. Drewry.

Funeral services were held from her home in Bay St. Louis, Miss., on Tuesday afternoon, February 19, 1935, at 3 o'clock, the Rev. Mr. Girault Jones, of Christ Episcopal Church, officiating. Burial was in the family lot in Bay St. Louis, Miss.

CHURCH INTELLIGENCE.

(Continued from page 17.)

terial possessions with under-privileged people. The Church must address itself to this root cause or else accept continual defeat in the face of the problems of modern life.

The Rt. Rev. Henry K. Sherrill, D. D., Bishop of Massachusetts, closed the meeting and spoke of the need for systematic, and practical devotional habits in preparation for Lent. He admonished the clergy concerning the need for regular reading, and to beware of falling into a dull routine in their parish duties. Particularly he advised not to over-emphasize the Church's failures which is easy to do, but to set forth the positive, the glorious, the sacrificial, the triumphant and radiant aspects of her life.

SOUTHERN VIRGINIA.
Rt. Rev. A. C. Thomson, D. D., Bishop.

Vestrymen's Association of Tidewater Virginia.

At a dinner held in Old St. Paul's, Norfolk, Thursday night, March 7, the vestrymen of Norfolk and Princess Anne Counties, including the cities of Norfolk anld Portsmouth, organized the Vestrymen's Association of Tidewater Virginia. In the By-Laws, which were adopted, it was stated that the purpose of the organization is to enlist the activities of men in all matters pertaining to the welfare of the Church. Eligible for membership are all vestrymen, ex-vestrymen and the clergy canonically resident in the designated territory. Colonel Mann, who presided at the dinner, was elected President. The other officers were: Vice-President, E. W. Maupin; Secretary, Rufus Parks; Treasurer, E. B. Kyle. An executive committee was also elected. An inspiring address was given by the Rev. Dr. Henry D. Phillips of Columbia, S. C., his theme being Christian Discipleship as applied to present-day conditions. About 135 men were present.

N. E. Taylor.

MARYLAND.
Rt. Rev. E. T. Helfenstein, D. D., Bishop

Mass Meeting of Church School Children.

The Rt. Rev. Frank W. Creighton, D. D., Suffragan Bishop of the Diocese of Long Island, was the speaker at the pre-Lenten Mass Meeting for the Church School children of the diocese, held in the Church of St. Michael and All Angels, Baltimore. The church was crowded and the meeting a great success.

Remarkable Record.

Bishop Helfenstein was the preacher at the noonday Lenten service in old St. Paul's Church, Baltimore, on Ash Wednesday.

On the same evening, the Bishop preached for the thirty-fourth consecutive Ash Wednesday in St. Anne's Church, Annapolis. This is quite a record and a splendid congregation greets him each year. It is one of the things he looks forward to from year to year.

It is with much regret that the Diocese of Maryland records the death of one of its leading laywomen—Mrs. John S. Fulton. For over twenty years Mrs. Fulton has been the Diocesan Chairman of the United Thank Offering, and her untiring efforts have always led to the success of the offering in Maryland. She will be greatly missed.

The Rev. Ernest C. Earp, of Bryn Mawr, Penn., conducted the Meditations and Prayers at the annual Quiet Day for the Clergy of the diocese on Friday, March 1, in the Church of the Redemer, Baltimore. His addresses were most helpful and about seventy-five clergy benefited by them.

At one o'clock the clergy were guests of the Bishop at luncheon.

Dr. Larkin Glazebrook has just completed a Mission in the Church of the Resurrection, Baltimore. The Rev. Chester L. Hults is priest-in-charge.

Miss N. Evelyn Parsons.

The Standing Committee of the diocese, chosen at the late Convention, consists of: President, the Rev. Benjamin B. Lovett, D. D.; Secretary, the Rev. Roger A. Walke; the Rev. Robert S. Chalmers, D. D., the Rev. Noble C. Powell, D. D., Dr. Joseph S. Ames, Mr. Herbert M. Brune, Judge Henry D. Harlan, Mr. Blanchard Randall.

NORTHERN INDIANA
Rt. Rev. Campbell Gray, D. D., Bishop

The Rt. Rev. Campbell Gray, D. D., Bishop of Northern Indiana, called the clergy of the diocese together at St. James' Church, South Bend, for a day of devotion and conference, March 4. Following the Holy Communion, Bishop Gray gave two meditations on the Life and Work of a Priest. The remainder of the day was spent in a round-table conference on the Forward Movement. Plans were made for taking part in the Movement throughout the diocese.

The following committee on the Forward Movement was announced: The Very Rev. Earl Ray Hart, LL. D., Chairman; the Rev. Frs. W. J. Lockton, L. C. Ferguson and J. McNeal Wheatley;

Messrs. J. A. Johnson, Secretary; Duncan J. Campbell, James H. Haberly and Walter Crandell.

Mrs. Torrence Leaves Bequest.

Gethsemane Church, Marion, Indiana, the Rev. Henry L. Ewan, rector, has received a bequest of $2,000 from Mrs. George Paull Torrence, who died on February 23. Mrs. Torrence was the widow of a former rector of the parish and had long been active in the life of the parish, particularly the Woman's Auxiliary. A daughter, Mrs. Rebecca Torrence Standring, is a missionary at Soo Chow, China. For many years Mrs. Torrence had made her home with another daughter, Mrs. Archie Price of Marion. The bequest has been added to the Endowment Fund of the Parish.

A. L. Schrock.

BETHLEHEM

Rt. Rev. F. W. Sterrett, D. D., Bishop

The New St. Mary's Chapel.

The new St. St. Mary's Chapel of the Pro-Cathedral Church of the Nativity, Bethlehem, Penn., was consecrated at a service held March 5.

The new chapel is part of Building Program of Seventieth Anniversary Year of "Faith and Progress." The building program is operating on "Pay-as-we-go" basis and is over half completed.

The name is derived from the fact that we also have Old St. Mary's Chapel still in use. The new St. Mary's Chapel is built through the gift of St. Mary's Guild.

Participants in service of consecration were: the Rt. Rev. Frank W. Sterrett, Bishop of Bethlehem; the Ven. Harvey P. Walter, Archdeacon of Bethlehem; the Very Rev. E. G. N. Holmes, Dean of Leonard Hall and Associate Missions; the Rev. Merrill M. Moore, rector of Trinity Church, Bethlehem; the Very Rev. Walter H. Gray, Dean and Rector, Pro-Cathedral Church of the Nativity.

The chapel is to be open daily for meditation and prayer and to be used for smaller services.

MISSIONARY DISTRICT OF SPOKANE

The Rt. Rev. Edward M. Cross, S. T. D., Bishop.

Forty-third Annual Convocation.

"Launch out into the Deep" was the text and advice of the Rt. Rev. Peter Trimble Rowe, veteran seventy-eight-year-old Bishop of Alaska, to the clergy and laity of the Missionary District of Spokane, assembled in the Cathedral of St. John the Evangelist, Spokane, Washington, for their forty-third annual Convocation.

Bishop Rowe delivered the sermon at the opening celebration of the Holy Communion at 11 A. M. and again at the Evening Service at 8 P. M. At four in the afternoon he addressed the annual meeting of the Young People's Fellowship.

All this on Sunday, February 17. On Monday he was the main speaker at the annual banquet held in the crypt of the cathedral, with some three hundred and twenty-five present.

Five new clergymen were presented to Convocation at the morning session on Monday, and the District is now fully manner.

Youth markedly predominates.

Delegates elected to the Synod of the Pacific were: Clerical—Very Rev. Charles E. McAllister, Rev. Thomas E. Jessett, Rev. Donald Glazebrook; Lay—Messrs. L. L. Sterling, Jay W. Fancy, H. C. Whitehouse.

Tuesday was Woman's Auxiliary Day. Mrs. Alice M. Stevenson was re-elected President of the District Woman's Auxiliary.

Bishop Cross, Bishop Rowe, and Mrs. Edward M. Cross were the principal speakers to the women.

Ben Jones was elected President of the Young People's Fellowship at the Sunday afternoon session.

The Forward Movement was stressed by Bishop Cross, who is a member of the National Commission.

WESTERN MICHIGAN

Rt. Rev. J. N. McCormick, D. D., Bishop

The Forward Movement.

Bishop Hobson, Chairman of the Forward Movement, visited Grand Rapids on March 8, as the guest of the Rev. Lewis B. Whittemore and of the Council of Guilds and the Men's Club of Grace Church. At the suggestion of Bishop McCormick, an invitation was extended to the clergy and people of the Diocese of Western Michigan. Two hundred and thirty-five women attended the luncheon, and a little over two hundred men attended the dinner, representing most of the parishes in the diocese. In the afternoon Bishop Hobson met the clergy in conference. The Churchwide Communion was generally observed on the first Sunday in Lent with Bishop McCormick preaching on the Forward Movement in Grace Church. It was arranged to place an order for 5,500 copies of the proposed Easter-Whitsuntide leaflet and to request the clergy to distribute the leaflets among their people and to prepare for the proposed Corporate Communion on Whitsunday.

WESTERN NORTH CAROLINA.

Rt. Rev. Robert Emmet Gribben, Bishop.

Clergy Conference.

Bishop Gribbin presided at a Clergy Conference and conducted a Quiet Day for the Clergy of the diocese in Asheville, on February 26 and 27. The conference covered all phases of parochial life, from the Missions Quota to the parson's recreation. The discussions were animated, thorough, and stimulating. The Quiet Day in preparation for Lent, was largely based on the Ordinal.

The clergy met in the Parish House of Trinity Church. The Corporate Communion on the second morning was at St. Mary's Church, Grove Park.

A. W. Farnum.

PERSONAL NOTES.

(Continued from page 2.)

With his brother, the Rev. John A. Wright, rector at St. Paul's, Augusta, Ga., and his father, Dr. David Cady Wright, at Christ Church, Savannah, Ga., the continuity of the Wright family in the pulpit seems to be assured.

Ordinations.

The Rev. John W. Hardy was advanced to the priesthood by Bishop Thomas C. Darst in St. Andrew's Church, Columbia, N. C., on March 4. He was presented by the Rev. A. C. D. Noe. The sermon was preached by the Rev. Charles E. Williams. The Epistle was read by the Rev. Worth Wicker; the Gospel by the Rev. George F. Hill; the Litany by the Rev. Stephen Gardner. Other clergy present and joining in the imposition of hands were the Rev. Messrs. W. R. Noe, Sidney E. Matthews, W. H. R. Jackson and E. F. Moseley.

Mr. Hardy will remain in charge of St. Andrew's, Columbia; St. David's, Creswell, and Galilee Mission, Lake Phelps, where he has served as deacon.

The Rev. Edward C. McConnell was advanced to the priesthood by Bishop Thomas C. Darst in the Church of the Good Shepherd, Wilmington, N. C., on March 5. He was presented by the Rev. E. W. Halleck. The sermon was preached by the Rev. W. H. Milton, D. D. The Epistle was read by the Rev. David Yates; the Gospel by the Rev. W. M. Latta; the Litany by the Rev. John B. Gibble. The Rev. Alexander Miller was also present and joined in the imposition of hands.

Mr. McConnell will remain in charge of the Church of the Good Shepherd, where he has served as deacon.

R. GEISSLER, INC.
450 SIXTH AVE. NEAR 10th ST. NEW YORK
Church Furnishings
IN CARVED WOOD AND MARBLE · BRASS · SILVER FABRICS + WINDOWS

CHOIR VESTMENTS

Cassocks, Cottas and Caps. Special low prices. Samples and prices on request. Poplin Canterbury Caps, $1.00 each. Paper Patterns for Choir and Church. Vestments for sale.

HENRY HAYTER, 8205 Riverside Drive, Box 618, Rte. 1, St. Petersburg, Fla.

PARKER'S HAIR BALSAM
Removes Dandruff-Stops Hair Falling
Imparts Color and Beauty to Gray and Faded Hair
60c. and $1.00 at Druggists.
Hiscox Chemical Works, Patchogue, N. Y.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LITERATURE

Following the Improved

INT. UNIFORM LESSON TOPICS
Quarterlies and Papers
Samples on Application.

Address
UNION GOSPEL PRESS
Box 680 Cleveland, Ohio.

NOTICE—The "Bible Expositor and Illuminator," an Advanced Quarterly of 192 pages, in monthly parts but still a Quarterly, price 30 cents a quarter, $1.00 a year, payment with order. Sample lesson on application.

...Successful aid in PREVENTING Colds

At the first nasal irritation or sniffle, apply Vicks Va-tro-nol—just a few drops. Used in time, it helps to avoid many colds entirely. (Two sizes: 30¢, 50¢.)

VICKS VA-TRO-NOL

Educational

The General Theological Seminary

CHELSEA SQUARE, NEW YORK

The next Academic year begins on the last Wednesday in September

Special students admitted and Graduate Courses for graduates of other Theological Seminaries.

The requirements for admission and other particulars can be had from THE DEAN, 1 Chelsea Square, New York, N. Y.

SHENANDOAH VALLEY ACADEMY

Certificates accepted by universities, colleges, West Point, Annapolis. The Academy's experienced teachers, cultural atmosphere, limited numbers, military discipline enable it to prepare boys to succeed in college. For catalogue write: Col. B. M. Roszel, Supt., Winchester, Va.

ST. MARGARET'S SCHOOL

TAPPAHANNOCK, VIRGINIA.

A Church School for girls. Boarding Department limited to 70. College Preparatory Course and Intermediate Grades. Athletics. Very moderate cost.

Country life and simplicity without isolation. Beautiful grounds on Rappahannock River. Three dormitories for different stages.

EDITH LATANE, Headmistress.

ST. CHRISTOPHER'S

A Church Boarding and Day School Healthful, beautiful and historic surroundings. Boarding Department limited to 50 boys. Rate, $650. Reduction to sons of clergymen and missionaries. Illustrated catalogue on request.

REV. C. G. CHAMBERLAYNE, Ph. D., LL. D., Headmaster, Richmond, Virginia.

The Virginia Theological Seminary

ALEXANDRIA, VIRGINIA

For catalogue and other information, Address THE DEAN

The Beckford School

WOODSTOCK, VIRGINIA.

A school for younger boys. Second grade through Junior High School. On modern farm in Shenandoah Valley. Summer camp. Limited enrollment. Fifty dollars monthly.

EDMUND BURKE WHELAN, Headmaster.

The Bishop Payne Divinity School

The accredited Seminary of the Church for training colored men for the ministry. The curriculum covers the full course for Deacons and Priest's Orders. The degree of D. D. awarded.

For catalogue and information, apply to Rev. F. G. Ribble, M. A., D. D., Dean Petersburg, Va.

The Episcopal Theological School

Cambridge, Massachusetts.

Affiliated with Harvard University. Dean H. B. Washburn, 3 Mason Street.

THOUGHTS for the THOUGHTFUL

"The bigger the work, the greater joy in doing it."—Henry B. Stanley.

"We are not saved for safety only, but for service."

It seems to me that true faithfulness to grace is best proved by steadily facing one's actual duties.—Fenelon.

A dewdrop is shaped the same pattern as the globe of the earth, and the smallest rivulet is the Grand Canyon in miniature.

Teach Thou, and we shall know indeed
The truth divine that maketh free;
And knowing, we may sow the seed
That blossoms through eternity.
—R. W. Gilder.

A sober mind will comfort find
When frenzied hearts are riven,
And quietness will ever bless
With little hopes of heaven.

We know in our hearts that we cannot build the new world alone no matter how strenuously we live. But Paul told of a present Christ come into human life to help in just that struggle. Of Him the Church must tell, of His salvation which is available for men, for the saving of institutions as well as souls.—Dr. W. E. Brooks.

"O Master, from the mountain side,
Make haste to heal these hearts of pain,
Among these restless throngs abide,
Oh, tread the city's streets again,
Till sons of men shall learn thy love,
And follow where Thy feet have trod;
Till glorious from Thy heaven above
Shall come the city of our God."

Everywhere the Gospel bids the Christian to take sides against himself. He is to stand ready to forego his surest rights, if only he is hurt by so doing; while on the other hand, he is to be watchful to respect even the least obvious rights of others.

Do that which is assigned to you, and you cannot hope too much or dare too much. There is at this moment for you an utterance as brave and grand as that of the colossal chisel of Phidias, or trowel of Egyptians, or the pen of Moses or Dante, but different from them.—Emerson.

STUART HALL

An Episcopal school emphasizing best in Southern tradition and culture. Effective preparation for College Entrance Boards and for colleges admitting on certificate. General Course for Non-College Girl. Music, Art, Dramatics. Lower School. Courses for high school graduates in intensive college preparation and 1 or 2 years' Secretarial. New Academic building, gymnasium and tiled swimming pool. All outdoor sports. Riding the year 'round. For booklet, address Miss Ophelia S. T. Carr, Principal, Box J-S, Staunton, Va.

Christ Church School

MIDDLESEX COUNTY, VA.

A country school for boys; well located. College preparatory, moderate cost. Personal attention; scholarships. Apply to Wm. D. Smith, Jr., Headmaster(for information, Christchurch, Va.

The Ewart's Cafeteria

EXCELLENT FOOD
REASONABLE PRICES

Richmond, Va.
112-114 N. 5th St.
Norfolk, Va.
112-114 Market St.
Washington, D. C.
522 13th, N. W.

FLOWERS BY WIRE EVERYWHERE

Mosmiller Florist

115 E Main St.
424 E. Grace St
RICHMOND, VA.

Royal Laundry

and
BAND BOX DRY CLEANERS
UNEXCELLED LAUNDRY
and Cleaning Service
Richmond, Virginia.

L. T. CHRISTIAN

FUNERAL DIRECTOR

Boulevard-Park and Patterson Avenue
Richmond, Va.
Office Never Closed
Prices to meet depressed conditions

DURING LENT
Prepare the Altar Linens and Vestments
FOR EASTER
From our pure Irish Linen. Samples on request.
Mary Fawcett Co.,
812 Berkeley Ave., Trenton, N. J.

Some Important Facts in English Church History

EXAMINED AND REVIEWED

By

REV. W. P. WITSELL, D. D.

This is an illuminating and instructive review of the history of the Episcopal Church in England from the earliest records, with commentaries on the book with the above title compiled by the Rev. C. L. Wells, D. D., of Sewanee, Tenn.

As a digest of the records of the establishment and growth of the Church; its maintenance and continuity of existence as an independent religious body amid the vicissitudes of early English politics, and efforts of outside interference, this review affords a valuable fund of information to churchmen.

In pamphlet form,
Price, 25 cents
For sale by
SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN CO.
Richmond, Va.

DESIGNED FOR THE PROMOTION OF PRACTICAL PIETY, THE DIFFUSION OF RELIGIOUS AND GENERAL INTELLIGENCE, AND THE MAINTENANCE OF THE PRINCIPLES OF THE PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL CHURCH

Southern Churchman

DOMINUS ✠ FRUSTRA ✠ ISIN 1835

Vol. 100. RICHMOND, VA., MARCH 23, 1935. No. 12.

A SELF-QUESTIONING FOR LENT

Thy life was given for me; Thy blood, O Lord, was shed,
That I might ransomed be, and quickened from the dead.
Thy life was given for me; what have I given for Thee?

Thy Father's home of light, Thy rainbow circled throne
Were left for earthly night, for wanderings sad and lone.
Yea, all was left for me; have I left ought for Thee?

And Thou hast brought to me, down from Thy home above,
Salvation full and free, Thy pardon and Thy love.
Great gifts Thou broughtest me; what have I brought to Thee?

—Francis R. Havergal.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

The Massnutten Academy
Woodstock, Virginia.
Congratulations That Encourage.
February 27, 1935.

Mr. Editor:

I wanted to write you a brief note congratulating you upon the celebration of your anniversary some weeks ago.

I have been reading your paper for a number of years with a great deal of pleasure. I read several of the Church papers, my own included, the Reformed Church Messenger. I get a great deal of spiritual comfort from the reading of your pages, and I like your set-up very much indeed.

I just wanted to send you this little letter of appreciation, assuring you that I enjoy following the news of your Church, as expressed in the Southern Churchman, and I wish you every encouragement and success in the years which are to follow. The Church paper has a difficult road to travel, but it serves a magnificent purpose in the grand scheme of spreading the gospel and good will.

With kindest regards, I am,

H. J. Benchoff.
Head Master.

Personal Notes

Ordinations.

Priest.

The Rev. Robert W. Woodroofe, Jr., deacon, was ordained to the priesthood by the Rt. Rev. Herman Page, D. D., Bishop of Michigan, at a service in Christ Church, Bloomfield Hills, Michigan, on Saturday, March 16, at 10:30 A. M. Mr. Woodroofe's father, the Rev. R. W. Woodroofe, D. D., formerly rector of St. John's Church, Detroit, and now residing in Woodstock, Ontaria, presented the candidate for ordination. The sermon was preached by the Rev. Gordon Matthews, rector of St. Andrew's Church, Detroit.

Following the service, a luncheon was served in the parish house, to which all clergymen in the Diocese were invited.

Mr. Woodroofe is a graduate of the University of Michigan and the Episcopal Theological School at Cambridge, Mass. He was ordained to the diaconate last June by Bishop Page. At present he is attached to the staff of Christ Church, Bloomfield Hills.

Deaths.

The Rev. William Edgar McCord, seventy-seven, former chaplain of New York's famous Seventh Regiment, died at his home at Southern Pines, N. C., March 15, after an illness of several months.

A native of Vandale, Ill., Mr. McCord went to New York after graduating from Blackburn College and was ordained in the Presbyterian ministry after studying at Union Seminary. After years of settlement work in New York's East Side, he was ordained an Episcopal minister by Bishop Vincent of Cincinnati, where he served in the pro-Cathedral until becoming assistant to Dr. Rainsford at St. George's Church in New York.

He later had parishes at Bayside, L. I., Windsor, Vt., and Rock Hill, S. C.

He served as chaplain in France for the New York regiment, and later as service chaplain of the Twenty-seventh Division, A. E. F.

His widow survives. Funeral services were held Monday, March 18, at Emmanuel Church, Southern Pines, with burial at Bethesda cemetery, near the tomb of Walter Hines Page, wartime ambassador to England.

CONTENTS

Letters to the Editor 2
Personals 2
Editorials 3
Church and World Problems as Others See Them 4
The Thousandfold Page—Archdeacon Neve 5
Christianity As a Religion of Redemption—Rev. Albert T. Mollenger 6
An Open Door in Japan—John W. Wood 8
Reality of the Unseen—Bishop Freeman 9
The Macedonian Point of View, Mary F. Goodwin 10
Woman's Auxiliary 10
Third Sunday in Lent—W. E. Callender 11
Book Reviews 11
Y. P. S. L.—Rev. R. F. Blackford 12
Church Intelligence 13
Family Department 18
Children's Department 20
Thoughts for the Thoughtful 24

Southern Churchman

SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN COMPANY,
Mayo Memorial Church House,
110 West Franklin Street,
Richmond, Va.

Officers.

President, RT. REV. H. ST. GEORGE TUCKER, D. D.
Vice-President, E. OTTO N. WILLIAMS.
Secretary-Treasurer, MR. JOHN H. COOKE.

Board of Directors.

RT. REV. H. ST. GEORGE TUCKER, D. D.
REV. CHURCHILL J. GIBSON, D. D.
REV. GEORGE P. MAYO, D. D.
REV. CHARLES W. SHEERIN.
MR. CARL H. NOLTING.
MR. ALEXANDER W. WEDDELL.
MR. E. RANDOLPH WILLIAMS.
MR. LANGBOURNE M. WILLIAMS, JR.
MISS SUSANNE C. WILLIAMS.

Voting Trustees.

RT. REV. ROBERT CARTER JETT, D. D.
RT. REV. H. ST. GEORGE TUCKER, D. D.
MR. JAMES M. BALL, JR.
MR. ROBERT B. TUNSTALL.
MR. LANGBOURNE M. WILLIAMS, JR.

Editors.

REV. CHARLES W. SHEERIN.....Editor
REV. F. W. NEVE, D. D.,
Associate Editor
MRS. CONRAD H. GOODWIN,
Associate Editor
REV. SAMUEL B. CHILTON,
Associate Editor
MRS. R. TATE IRVINE.....News Editor
JOHN H. COOKE..Secretary and Manager

Entered at the Post Office in Richmond, Va., as second-class mail matter.

SUBSCRIPTION PRICE.

$3.00 a year in advance. To the Clergy, $2.00. Six months, $1.50. Total subscriptions, three months, 50 cents; 10 cents a copy. Foreign postage, $1.00 additional.

For the convenience of subscribers subscriptions are continued at expiration unless otherwise ordered. Notice of renewal, discontinuance or change of address should be sent two weeks before the date they go into effect.

RECEIPT OF PAYMENT is shown in about two weeks by change of date on address label. If date is not properly extended after each payment, notify us promptly. No receipt for payment will be sent.

Notice post office address. The exact post office address to which we are directing the paper at the time of writing MUST ALWAYS BE GIVEN. Our mailing list is arranged by post office and not alphabetically.

Make all checks and money orders payable to the Southern Churchman, and not to an individual.

ADVERTISEMENTS.—Rates quoted on request. For classified see head of that department.

Representatives wanted in each Parish; liberal commissions.

News concerning the Church at large always welcome.

Edwin S. Gorham, Inc.

Publishers and Booksellers.
Established 1900.

Church Literature and Art, Bibles, Prayer Books and Hymnals, Devotional Books, Parish Requisites.

Catalogues and Information on request
18 West 45th Street, New York.

SONGS OF THE SPIRIT

By
MRS. GENEVIEVE SCOTT WRIGHT.

A book of inspirational verse that will make a welcome present to relative or friend.

Price $1.00.

For sale by
WM. S. FREEMAN & SON,
317 Granby Street, Norfolk, Va.

CONFIRMATION PAPERS

By
CANON F. E. HOWITT

1. Confirmation and Baptism.
2. Baptism and the Christian Covenant.
3. The Baptismal Covenant—Repentance.
4. The Baptismal Covenant—Faith and the Faith.
5. The Baptismal Covenant—The Faith.
6. The Baptismal Covenant—Obedience.
7. The Lord's Supper.
8. The Means of Grace.

A series of informing pamphlets compiled by Canon F. E. Howitt. They have an inestimable value in instructing those who contemplate membership in the Church, and for impressing the already confirmed with the sacredness and meaning of this holy ritual.

Price, single pamphlet, each..... 5 cents
Complete set of eight.....25 cents

Order from

SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN COMPANY
Richmond, Va.

MURPHY'S HOTEL
RICHMOND VIRGINIA

An old Richmond landmark that has kept the pace. In the heart of that portion of the city most interesting to the traveler.

Write

A. GERALD BUSH, Manager.

SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN

Catholic for every truth of God; Protestant against every error of man.

EDITORIALS

Vol. 100. RICHMOND, VA., MARCH 23, 1935. No. 12.

A Really Great Man.

In the death of Michael Pupin, America loses one of her really great men.

When we calmly ask a telephone operator to connect us with some very far off place and hear distant voices as though they were in the next room, we have grown so accustomed to such phenomena that we forget it was only a few years ago that long distance was a proverbial joke. We also forget, or perhaps do not know, that it is due to the work of Michael Pupin that this great boon has been granted to us.

Generally speaking, we think of practical scientists as men with little or no religious life in the ordinary acceptance of the word. But on investigation we find that Pupin was one who felt that in all of his discoveries he was growing nearer to God and was guided by His Spirit. In fact, Professor Pupin often told the story of the time he was to preach at the Chapel of Columbia University and, walking over, he met one of his women pupils. When he told her where he was going, she expressed astonishment that he should be going to church and even about to preach, and then he realized how many foolish young people thought of religion and science as incompatible.

Pupin always felt that the real discovery of any life would be the discovery of God, and his influence will live on in the reverence with which he always approached a scientific problem, because he felt that he was indeed in touch with the Author of the Universe.

But Pupin was an example of something else. He was the immigrant boy who contributed his all to America, his adopted country, and proved that when given proper welcome and environment, we could have a rich addition to our land from the multitudes of nations and tongues that have come to our shores.

There is a feeling, even with civilized people, that all crime and disorder comes from the foreign element. As a matter of fact, statistics prove that the "good old Anglo-Saxon" stock furnishes us our leading criminals, but even so, we are apt to distrust the foreigner. Pupin was a foreigner. He grew into one of our best and finest Americans to whom we owe much in comfortable living. He proved that from those who came with dreams of opportunities, America could be enriched physically and spiritually. He was truly a great man.

Perhaps when we learn to surround the foreign element with opportunities for decent recreation and education, we will learn that it, too, will make great Americans.

What America Is Reading.

In the current "New York Herald Tribune Books," Thornton Wilder's "Heaven's My Destination" tops the fiction list with "The Forty Days of Musa Dagh" second. In the non-fiction list Alexander Woolcott's "While Rome Burns" is the leader, with Dr. Douglas Southall Freeman's marvelous biography of R. E. Lee second. It is all very revealing.

We have heard many comments about all of these books, and they probably reveal Americans better than anything else. We are puzzled over George Marvin Brush and wonder at times if Wilder is making fun of Christians in general, or does he really admire his hero? We wonder also if the success of Brush is not due to the same reason that we want to read about R. E. Lee.

Not for a moment do we think Robert E. Lee was a George Marvin Brush. But it isn't always that an expensive book, well written, is a best seller, and the quality that Lee and Brush have in common is the quality of sturdiness. That is something America admires, even though she realizes it is a quality rare and seldom met with in actual life. Brush was impelled from one compelling motive and Robert E. Lee was the ideal that we wish our boys could become, but which we fear they will not ever be.

"While Rome Burns" is what is fashionable today. Smart chatter in which the quip is greater than the thought and in which as we read we like to think Woolcott is admitting us to his own clever level of conversation and being witty and interesting for us at someone else's expense. It has all the flavor of the refined man who can afford to be vulgar, as we in our smart moments wish we could be and which we never have made a success in being.

So our reading list shows us in our various dream worlds. At best we would be Lees. In simplicity we admire Brush, in real practice we would like to assume the attitude of Woolcott. In actuality we are none of these.

Are we naive or simple when we hope that some-day on the best seller list we can find such books as "What Did Jesus Think?; Studies in the Mind of Christ," or Archbishop Temple's "Nature, Man and God"? America longs for virtue and she longs for brilliant minds. We like to think of a past hero in possession of truth that makes men free, and we secretly admire the strength of our modern Don Quixote, but we know little about the depths behind either of them. Some-day we may know how to read—admirable as the present reading may be.

Church and World Problems as Others See Them

The Witnessing Church.

Church of England Newspaper, March 1, 1935.

If a call to penitence is to sound in the ears of the nation there must first be penitence in the Church; and perhaps this year that should be the main concern. We have been torpid and supine while the people drifted away from God.

We see with thankfulness a changed attitude in the new "youth" of today, who show a concern for the things of God at least as great as is apparent in any other section of the community. Surely these could be trained to become teams of messengers.

Why should not a team of witness go from one parish to another to join in a campaign of witness, just as they go to play football or cricket? They would need to be coached; so do the cricketers. The clergy, who cannot deliver the testimony themselves, except on rare occasions, could often find time to coach them; they would give their freshness, their enthusiasm, their challenge to the sluggishness of the complacent. It may be hard to stir to this activity those who are set in a shyness of speaking about God which (let us acknowledge it) has its roots in reverence. But the young could be trained and sent out; and what a torrent of spiritual eagerness might be released.

We have become so anxious about correctness: What will the Church Union say? What will the Church Association say? What will Rome say? Why should we care? An orthodox preacher who makes the Gospel dull shuts the gate of salvation to many; an accidentally heretical prophet who makes it thrilling throws that gate open. It is not dreadful that crude expressions should be used if the Church is not committed to them. Why cannot we see the Good News carried in every direction by young knight-errants who believe in it and mean to let it guide their lives?

If what is done is to be effective it must be seen and felt as an activity of the official Church in diocese and parish. Free lance movements may do much; we should thank God for them. But England will be converted only when the real Church, the regular church-going folk, become witnesses not only to the faithful by their loyalty, but to the indifferent by their testimony. It is not asked that every Church-member should actually preach in open places or elsewhere; it is asked that every congregation should be a fount of testimony from which the witnesses go forth, knowing that its hopes and prayers are with them.

May the Spirit once more, like a rushing, mighty wind, descend upon the waiting Church, giving it, as of old, the gift of utterance!

Burning up Money.

Presbyterian of the South, March 6, 1935.

Cigarettes in the lips of men and women are being smoked at a rate that is almost inconceivable. According to late Government reports, during the year 1934 there were consumed in this country 125,611,000,000 cigarettes. This is a number beyond comprehension, but a better idea of it may be had when we realize that this means just about 1,000 cigarettes for each man, woman, and child in this country. Though vast numbers of men, and a great number of women are smokers, it is still true that there are more people who do not smoke than there are who do.

Among the non-smokers of cigarettes are many of the older men, very few women past middle life are smokers, and then the great multitude of small children are still free from the habit. It is probable that these classes of non-smokers make up at least half of the population. This means, therefore, that those who smoke must consume double the number of the average for the whole population, or an average for the smokers of not less than 2,000 a year.

Think for a moment of the cost of this smoking. At the low average of 10 cents a package they cost $1,256,110,000. Saving that amount and using it for the necessities and beneficial comforts of life would aid very greatly in relieving the financial stress of the country.

It is interesting to see what the cost of those cigarettes could have paid for.

2,000	Churches at $5,000 each	$ 10,000,000
2,000	Manses at $2,500 each	5,000,000
2,000	Preachers' salaries at $2,000 each	4,000,000
2,000	Preachers' automobiles at $750 each	1,500,000
2,000	School buildings at $2,000 each	4,000,000
2,000	Teachers' salaries at $1,200	2,400,000
500,000	Suits for men at $20	10,000,000
500,000	Women's dresses at $15	7,500,000
1,000,000	Pairs of shoes at $4	4,000,000
500,000	Children's outfits at $10	5,000,000
100,000	Homes at $2,000	200,000,000
500,000	Barrels of flour at $10	5,000,000
500,000	Families, other food, at $1,000 a year	50,000,000
100,000	Education for year at $500 a year	50,000,000
100,000	Horses and mules at $125	12,500,000
100,000	Cows at $50	5,000,000
1,000	College endowments at $100,000	100,000,000
Benevolences:
	Foreign Missions	200,000,000
	Home Missions	200,000,000
	Christian Education	100,000,000
	Ministerial Relief	100,000,000
	Endowing 100 Church papers at $100,000	10,000,000
	General Relief	150,110,000
	Total	$1,256,110,000

What a conflagration! Smokers, what do you think about it? Are the cigarettes worth it?

Pupin Envisaged Life Beyond Grave.

The New York Times, March 14, 1935.

In his straightforward manner, as if he were stating an axiom of mathematics, he affirmed his belief in God: "Wherever science has explored the universe, it has found it to be a manifestation of a coordinating principle, a definite, guiding principle which leads from chaos to cosmos. I choose to believe in this coordinating principle as a divine intelligence rather than that the cosmos is the result of haphazard happenings. We can place utmost faith in this divine intelligence. There is dependability, continuity everywhere present in the universe."

"Where do you think this divine intelligence resides?" he was asked.

"In the soul of man. In that great world within us divinity resides."

"Then you don't believe science is drawing men away from God?"

(Continued on page 8.)

THE THOUSANDFOLD PAGE

ARCHDEACON FREDERICK W. NEVE, D. D.

What God Can Do Through Our Human Nature

The present state of things in the world at large, seems to prove conclusively that man by himself is quite incapable of controlling and guiding human events in such a way as to promote the general good. Men have tried to bring about a better state of things, but the present situation proves that some wiser and better guidance is needed to solve the problem. It may be that God has left men free to manage things for themselves in order that they may realize their own helplessness in the matter and their need of His help.

God Working Through Human Nature.

For God has shown by His sending His Son, Jesus Christ, into the world, that our human nature can be used by Him to accomplish far greater things than men can bring about by themselves. He has also shown that man's nature is capable of being linked with His own in such a way as to raise it far above the ordinary level. The Incarnation is the most wonderful proof of this, because it shows that God, in the Person of His Son, was able to unite Himself to our human nature so that He became Man and lived a human life. Jesus Christ was the Son of Man as well as the Son of God and He used His human nature to reveal God to men and to make known His Will with regard to them. It was through His human nature that He demonstrated the fact that God is Love, both by words and loving deeds of kindness and mercy and also by His Death upon the Cross as an atonement for the sins of the whole world. He also gave us a perfect assurance of a future life by His Resurrection from the dead and by His Ascension into Heaven. All this was carried out through His sharing our human nature and thus revealing to us its kinship with the Divine.

Man's Kinship With God.

God evidently created man with a capacity for union with Himself, and with the possibility of sharing His mind and purpose and also of being able to grow in likeness to Him. For Christ Himself said in His Sermon on the Mount:—"Be ye therefore perfect even as your Father which is in Heaven is perfect." St. Paul also says:—"We all, with open face, beholding as in a glass, the glory of the Lord, are changed into the same image, from glory to glory, even as by the Spirit of the Lord." 2 Cor. 3:18. All this shows clearly that we have the power to rise above the ordinary level of human nature and to exert an influence which would go far beyond that which is possible to men not thus inspired.

Human Nature Raised to a New Level.

It has been often said that you cannot change human nature, but when it is linked to the Divine Nature and is influenced by the sanctifying power of the Holy Spirit, then human nature is endowed with possibilities, the full extent of which cannot be measured. For instance, who would have thought it possible that Simon Peter, the humble fisherman on the Sea of Galilee, would, by associating himself with Jesus Christ, become the chief among the Apostles and the leader of the greatest spiritual movement of all time? Or who would have dreamed that Saul of Tarsus, a Pharisee of the Pharisees, and the chief persecutor of the early Christian Church, would become the Apostle of the Gentiles, spreading the influence of the Gospel throughout the Roman Empire?

God Can Use Human Nature as He Did Then.

These are but instances of the way in which God can use this human nature of ours to further His own ends, and to bring about a transformation of world conditions. If human nature is always the same, it is just as capable of being used by God to fulfil His purpose now as it was in the first century of the Christian era. But we must be ready and willing to be used by Him and to believe that He can use us as His instruments for making the world what He wishes it to be. The Christian Church is powerless to do this, because her members, and even her leaders, have not the faith and courage to believe that God will support them with the necessary power to make their efforts effective.

Christianity Could End War.

Christianity certainly could end war if those who profess to be followers of the Prince of Peace, were sufficiently imbued with His Spirit, to insist upon His Will being done, no matter what the consequence to themselves might be. St. Paul wrote in his Epistle to the Romans:—"If any man have not the Spirit of Christ he is none of His." But the Spirit of Christ implies Christian Brotherhood and there can be no true brotherhood where men are willing to kill their fellowmen and to take part in the dreadful inhumanities which were only too common in the Great War. For the facts which have been revealed, especially of late, with regard to these inhumanities, prove that there can be nothing in common between Christian Brotherhood and modern warfare. It was a shock to men's minds that the Church was not able to prevent the Great War, and that shock still lingers in men's minds, as Bishop Mann has recently written.

Christianity and the Future of War.

What is being done to prevent the manufacture of poison gases intended to be used by bombing planes in poisoning the atmosphere of whole cities without regard to the fact that women and children will also be the victims of this diabolical kind of warfare? It has been often said that another great war like the last, with its still more effective weapons of destruction, will destroy our modern civilization. What, then, is going to save civilization if it is not the religion of the Prince of Peace? God has clearly and manifestly shown that He can use human nature in such a way as to raise man above himself to heights never before realized, except in the case of Jesus Christ and of the greatest of saints. And yet, with this vision clearly revealed to us, we seem to be ready to tolerate and submit to the degradation of our nature to a level of brutality and barbarism hardly equaled even in former times. God calls us to rise above ourselves to that loftier level where Christ has led the way. Why, then, should we take the downward path which leads to destruction?

Christianity as a Religion of Redemption

By

The Rev. Albert T. Mollegen, Sometime Instructor in the Virginia Seminary.

THERE are two ways by which we may approach our subject. We may see it only as another article amid thousands of articles in religious magazines, and hence only a piece of literature, interesting or not as the case may be. Or we can see it realistically as the pivot point of a universal drama about which turns all that is meaningful in life which has been, which is, and which shall be. The latter view deeply involves us, as we have been, as we are, and as we shall be eternally. From such a point of view we become a part of the hordes of men who have thronged the face of the earth for half a million years or more, and, like them, we frame our question and put it to the universe, "What shall we do to be saved?"

Naturally, men have meant a variety of things by the "salvation" which they have coveted because their concept has been necessarily shaped and colored by the historical peculiarities of their age and their immediate status in that age. Thus Israel in bondage to Egypt looked for redemption from the tyranny and land of Pharaoh; in Canaan from the enemies which surrounded her there; and later, in Babylon from Assyrian oppression. Again men have hoped for escape from demons and satans, disease and catastrophe, poverty and injustice. But the Prophets of Israel penetrated closer to the heart of the matter when they understood that men's need was escape from the Wrath of God who holds all things in His hands. Nor was it difficult for them to understand that, insomuch as God was righteous and just, the real need of men was to be redeemed from their own sin by which they earned the Wrath of God. A profounder answer to the problem of redemption has never been given, for it meant that men were not only redeemed from something, the punishing hand of God, but also to something, the favor of God. The idea and the experience which underlies it has been plumbed for its deeper meanings by the Christian religion, but the original insight has never been forsaken. It is popular to maintain that Jesus abolished the fact which the Prophets called the Wrath of God but the idea is without foundation except in the wish-thinking of poor sinners. The fact still remains as any one can see in the world about him at the moment. Nor was it neglected by Jesus. If we read the Gospels without a blind spot in our eye we will find that a large part of Jesus' teaching has to do with penalties which inevitably follow certain attitudes of life and courses of behavior. "The Kingdom of God shall be taken away from you, and shall be given to a nation bringing forth the fruits thereof" (Matt. 21:43), symbolizes an inherent part of the teaching of Jesus. What Jesus did do in reference to the fact of inexorable punishment for sins was to make some men understand that it is not the Wrath but the Love of God which is made manifest. Only when men confuse one kind of indulgent human love with Divine love does there arise a contradiction between punishment and love. Many persons have never dreamed of a Lover who punishes the beloved for the beloved's salvation, although the act is more painful to the Lover than the loved one. But even a superficial survey of the present collapse of Western Civilization ought to awaken them more surely than any words, even our Lord's about the "outer darkness," or St. Paul's inescapable pronouncement, "the wages of sin is death." The sure fact of such a love is set down by Bishop Tucker in his recent book, "To forgive where there is no sufficient penitence or moral change shows not a higher but a weaker quality of love, which, because the sentiment of affection is not balanced by a regard for righteousness, neglects the real good of its object. Such love is in reality selfish, when in its yearning for a quick reconciliation with the loved one, it shrinks from the stern and painful task of insisting upon penitence as a condition of forgiveness." (Providence and Atonement, p. 79-80). It is not an obsolete religion which knows that "the fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom." The "Good News" of our Lord began with "Repent ye." The Kingdom of God was at hand and repentance—that is, a "change of life" not merely "contrition"—was the necessary condition by which the few would enter into that Kingdom.

BUT such words as "sin," "repentance," "Kingdom of God," "eternal life," and "redemption" are meaningless unless they have actual content for us. That they have lost meaning for our age is quite evident in a thousand ways, one of the extreme cases of which is the good lady who assured a minister that she was worried only about her one great sin, that of driking two cups of coffee a day. Christianity is no less free from those who would escape sharp issues by refusing to see them than is the secular world which has made necessary the psychiatrists. The major criticism of our age is that we have to pay people to be honest with us about what we are. Christianity, nevertheless, is the only social force which has an absolute definition for such words. That absoluteness lies in the historic figure of our Lord from which such life values as those which lie behind our words take their meaning. No other figure remotely approaches Jesus of Nazareth as the incarnation and personalization of love, it is true. But also no other figure brings the clear and concrete judgment upon us that He brings. Before Him the demonic in us cries out that He is come to destroy; the sinful part of us begs, "Depart from me; for I am a sinful man, O Lord." And this is not because of any mysterious and incomprehensible aura of holiness that strikes us with awe in His presence but because of a simple and comprehended moral quality which He possesses. The Incarnation does not condem men in that God is a better God than men are gods, but in that God is a better man than men are men.

And here the real issues arises. Are we willing to let Jesus teach us what He is; or are we, like Judas Iscariot, going to attempt to force Jesus into the mould of what we think He ought to be? The latter behavior has been the habit of Christianity which is responsible for its present social impotence. Whatever else we do, let us cease to soften and blur the clear figure of the Gospels. His meaning can be put simply without robbing it of any of its absoluteness. Jesus affirmed all of human life more than He affirmed His own. And He laid that obligation upon all men to the degree that they are able to bear it. God, He preached, loves all men without regard to the cost of such loving. And imitation of God is the obligation of all men; they must love each other like that. "Be ye perfect even as your father in heaven is perfect." To fail to understand this is to fail to understand the fundamental nature of our Lord, his God, and the religion we profess.

THERE are two great dangers in stating Christianity so simply and so starkly. The one is that the great demand—because of its very absoluteness—shall be deemed hopelessly idealistic and impossible. This is the attitude of most Christians today. The other danger is that the inevitable cost of meeting such a demand shall cause many to shrink back and becloud the issue with subtle rationalizations, or withdraw from the ranks altogether. Multitudes of persons are symbolized by the rich man who understood Jesus too well, "but his countenance fell at the saying, and he went away sorrowful." The price of redemption was too great. He is the symbol of Jesus' whole race which would not cease to regard its religion as a "special privilege" and see it as a treasure entrusted to the race by God in order that the race might share it with the world. He is also a symbol of our world which shares nothing, not even the fruits of its fields and its industry except at a "profit."

If we desire to be real and honest about our religion it is necessary that we face the fact that its cost has always been great. That is not the greatest nor the most significant fact, but it is a fact quite undeniably. It is not for nothing that a Cross stands at the heart of our history and our Gospel. It has two messages, one glorious, one terrible. The first is "God loves to the point of such a sacrifice." The second, "The world hates God this much." The Cross says very plainly that the life of God cannot be fully lived out upon this earth as it is now, because we will slay it rather than face it. So far in history, it is profoundly true that "Incarnate God is a murdered Jesus." The mental agonies of theologians and preachers who seek to obscure this fact have but made it clearer. How lightly we concur in the pulpits' generalization that "we daily crucify Jesus" and how very little we understand this in concrete fact. At least we can be frank if we will. For instance, we share in a high standard of living while many of our brothers at home and abroad live in poverty and dire lack of any kind of opportunity to become persons. That standard is maintained by American imperialism and the cruelty of our whole system of economic distribution. Again, we share the opportunities of a self-appointed "chosen people," the white race, which has miserably rejected the obligation which God has laid upon it in regard to races of other colors. We have helped to confuse the issue by identifying racial brotherhood with such ideas as racial commingling and intermarriage which are not necessarily involved. We have participated in and will again participate in international warfare to promote or conserve our economic interests. These are not radical and wild theories, they are living facts of history. The sooner we face them frankly the better we shall be able to cope with them. Honesty is the first step in any redemption which Christ may offer us.

OF COURSE these are only a few of the "things" that we mean every Sunday when we say, "We have left undone those things which we ought to have done." The Prayer Book knows us better than we know ourselves and, many to the contrary, it is we and not it which must be changed. A Christian may say as realistically today as ever that the remembrance of his sins is grievous, the burden of them intolerable. "But these are not my sins," we protest. They are when we acquiesce in their existence and reap their fruits, when we affirm them by continuing them without an effort to change them. In fact they are our sins until we protest against them to the uttermost of our energy, spiritual and physical. It is not enough merely to register verbal protest. That is what Jesus called lip service to God.

We can never be redeemed without concrete recognition of from what and to what we desire redemption. We can be clear about some of these things and we become increasingly clear about God's will and our failure to meet it once we have resolved to be honest.

Honesty with ourselves and God about such facts as we have mentioned prepares us to understand two profound ideas of redemption which are to be found in the New Testament. St. John saw redemption as being from "the world" to the society in which the Risen Christ was present by the Spirit as leader and ideal. St. Paul saw that redemption was from "fleshy," "natural" man to "spiritual man" in fellowship with the Christ who dwells within the faithful man by the Spirit and sits at the right hand of God. These are deep insights but not obscure ones. Simply put, they mean that our redemption must be from the habits of the race and from ourselves. But although it can be put simply, it is obviously not a simple task. Immediately that we seek to work out our salvation the simplicity shatters into the bewildering complexity of life itself in all of its variety and confusion. Can we escape from the world and its habits? Can we step out of our own moral skins?

AND here again lies a great danger; perhaps the greatest danger of all. Too often perceptive persons have seen that redemption is from the race's corporate sin and from their own nature and have tried to be free from these corruptions, because they know that they should. That is a subtle variation of seeking salvation by Law, which St. Paul knew to be impossible. One sees what Jesus did, what He demands of us and then seeks to meet those demands as though they were legal exactments. The Law condemns, but it does not save. And we have not escaped the truth merely by setting up the external pattern of Christ in place of the old Law. It is well to remember that Jesus' commands were addressed to the whole man not to his will, "Love thy neighbor," He said, not, "Act as if you loved him." Absolute pacifism, asceticism for asceticism's sake, and some of our radical social and economic reform programs in the name of Christianity have made external legal behavior the Christian ethic. They are wrong. Such an interpretation of Christianity is evident in a more tragic form in those who have made a law of sacrifice. "Sacrifice is inevitable for the Christian, therefore he who makes sacrifices is a Christian," is their logic. But they, too, are wrong and have created a new category for psychology, "martyr-complex." They seek the Cross, because they find it in the first century, but they fail to understand that historically and forever the Cross is a strategic means to an end which is worth the terrible price. The most precious thing that a person holds in stewardship for God is his own life. It is a talent to invest wisely, strategically, and effectively for God's cause. To sacrifice our time, our energy, or our very life's blood in vain is to violate a sacred trust.

It is certain then that we may never accomplish our redemption by any fiat of our own. And here we have discovered the basic truth of religion, especially of Christianity. I cannot save myself, my redemption must come from beyond me. Salvation is not of men's making. "With men it is impossible, but not with God." (Mark 10:27.) Thus our problem of redemption becomes increasingly baffling. Perhaps there is but one answer for a Christian, and here the discussion must take the form of the first person. I see only one answer for Christians, although I see other nearly Christian answers. That answer lies in the Christian Church. "For the time is come that judgment must begin at the house of God." (1 Peter 4:17.) If we are to be redeemed in this age, it must be through the redemption of our Church. The Church is the Body of Christ only so long as it keeps Christ as its head and soul. It is the continuation of the Incarnation only so long as it is the instrument of the Spirit. It is the New Israel only so long as it does not reject its Messiah as the old Israel did. It is corrupt and human and blind and perverse as well as Divine and it is always possible that the human may drive out the Divine so that God will be forced to raise up a new spiritual race. Not to see that is to rest upon our chosenness, to tempt the Almighty God Himself. The prophet's message to the chosen people is always that there is nothing mechanical about their position of favor. "Be

(Continued on page 9.)

An Open Door in Japan

By John W. Wood, Executive Secretary of Department of Missions.

IN KYOTO, JAPAN, there is a section known as Nishijin. It is densely populated. Most of its people are engaged in silk weaving. There are numerous factories, of course, but probably the larger part of the work is done in the homes of people under highly unsanitary conditions.

When our Church began work in this region, the only place it could find for a base was a small Japanese building tucked away behind what looked like an unbroken row of shop fronts. Here the Church of the Resurrection began its endeavor to make known the good news.

Four years ago, under the courageous leadership of the Rev. J. Kenneth Morris, whom Bishop Nichols had recently assigned to that work, the mission, having grown as far as the narrow limits of its physical equipment would permit, managed to break away from the contracted quarters, succeeded in purchasing sufficient land for a church, parish house, and rectory in the same general region and took on new life and new hope. A small building was erected for a few hundred Yen as a combination church and parish house. With renewed vigor, Mr. Morris and his congregation began to minister to the physical and spiritual needs of the people in ever widening circles. The building was enlarged by tacking on quarters for a kindergarten, all too small, but better than nothing. Then a tiny dispensary was added. One of our Kyoto Churchman, a member of the Standing Committee of the diocese and one of the leading physicians of the city, Dr. Fujino, gives certain time each week, assisted by a public health nurse trained at St. Luke's Hospital, Tokyo, to caring for the health and other social needs of the people of the neighborhood. If you happen to be in the tiny church when Dr. Fujino arrives at the clinic to begin his work, you will see him first of all, kneel before the altar to ask Gods blessing upon what he is about to undertake. The memory of that simple hearted devotion coupled with the desire to consecrate one's medical skill, is something that does not fade way.

THE church is always crowded when services are held. When a service is over, the chancel is shut off by a screen and the part of the church that has been used by the congregation becomes a small parish hall used for all sorts of purposes. Architectural plans have been prepared for a church and parish house. Mr. Morris and his people are looking forward eagerly to the day when these buildings may be erected, but they are doing more than that—they are giving money themselves and they are asking their Japanese friends to lend a hand, especially in the building of a parish house on the grounds that, although all its work is done in a Christian spirit, it is distinctly a service for the community. The fund grows slowly and Mr. Morris has been sadly disappointed in his hope of securing help from the United States.

Writing recently, he said:

"My last thought and prayer before retiring at night and my first on waking in the morning is, what can I do to get that money for the building? To whom shall I write today? to whom shall I appeal?

"Is there no source from which it can be obtained? Then I say to my wife, 'Well, I think I shall write so-and-so today, perhaps he will reply. Or do you think if I called on Mr. Tanaka he would help us?' It is the subject of our daily prayers. We have talked about what we could sell of our household goods. But we have so little of any value that all would bring in but a few yen. But we have decided to sell my Karuizawa Desk and a Wilton rug we brought from America, and put this in the building fund. There is no limit to what can be done here with a new and efficiently arranged parish building. (They call it a social center because non-Christian Japanese do not understand the term, 'parish house'). It will cost about $6,000. Half of this we expect to raise in Japan.

"The Church will cost about $9,000. Some of this will come from Japan, but we cannot expect our non-Christian friends to help our congregation build its church. A goodly share of the money for the parish house will come from those who are not yet Christian. In addition, fifty business men, only a few of whom are Christian, have agreed to give 30 Yen a year for our social service activities. We call them our Patrons Committee and they are adding steadily to their members. This means that the social service work centering in the parish house will not become a heavy charge upon the Church in the United States:

"We are desperate. The floor of our present small building has got to be strengthened again. Last summer we put concrete supports under it. But there are literally hundreds of people using it during the week and it simply cannot stand the strain. The walls buck out in places. We are determined to get some sort of building started this year regardless of the sacrifice. We are facing a great opportunity and cannot, must not let it go by.

"The work continues to expand. Soon we expect to add another nurse, and to open a new sort of work. The new nurse will be a mid-wife and will care for cases of child birth in the homes of the people. For each charity case we will receive Y5 from the Prefecture. This work is greatly needed among poor people who cannot afford hospital care and are too ignorant to go for regular examinations to a doctor and also too poor.

"So you see how the work advances. There is no holding it back. That is why I am fighting, praying and striving for that new building. As soon as we get it the way will be open for a day-nursery. There are those who would give to that project now if we were ready to undertake it.

"We are asking all the churches of our Communion in Japan to help us with the building fund. We are trying the Washington Cathedral scheme, but we are not selling stones or bricks, because we will build in concrete. So we are selling cubic feet."

* * *

CHURCH AND WORLD PROBLEMS AS OTHERS SEE THEM.

(Continued from page 4.)

"I can truthfully say that, in my own case, science has greatly strengthened my religious faith," he replied.

"The real purpose of science," he went on, "is not merely to make material things, inventions to increase wealth and comfort. If science does not help to give me and others a better faith to live by, a better understanding of the Creator, a closer relationship of God, so that I can better carry out the divine purpose, then I am a failure."

A final question as to what state the soul would occupy when it progressed to what he called the real world, brought this answer:

"The soul of man is the highest product of God's creative handiwork. Now, after God has spent untold time in creating man and endowing him with a soul, which is the reflection of His image, is it reasonable to suppose that man lives here on earth for a brief span and then is extinguished by death? That the soul perishes with the physical body? That it existed in vain?"

Reality of the Unseen

By James E. Freeman, Bishop of Washington.

Bishop Freeman

TALKING intimately with one who controls a large industry concerning the vital forces that have influenced and dominated his life, he said to me: "As I look at life today, I believe that the greatest influences that affect both my judgment and my habits are unseen and possibly undefinable. I have the profound conviction that spiritual forces are more potential than the material agencies that we see and handle." Possibly no passage in the New Testament so expresses what I have in mind as the words of St. Paul where he says: "Faith is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen."

The observation of this captain of industry was the more remarkable because of his large material interests. He was evidently appraising his life and measuring both its efficiency and satisfactions by standards other than those that he applied to his vast enterprise. In his estimate of himself and of the values of life, he thought of his development in terms of spiritual values. We were reminded of the words of the great Master where He said: "As thou hast believed, so be it done unto thee." That our religious faith has a definite and practical bearing upon all our life's interests is demonstrably true. The wise man of old said: "As a man thinketh in his heart, so is he."

We find it difficult at times to define what we hold of faith. We express our belief in terms that are quite inadequate, but notwithstanding this fact, to use the language of St. Paul, our "faith is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen." Possibly the pressure of material forces, and the exactions of our occupational life have a tendency to make us less reflective concerning the unseen realities. It often takes a crisis of some kind, a staggering misfortune or a crushing sorrow to make us conscious of the place that faith occupies in the scheme of life. It has been our observation that the realization of the need of trust in the unseen grows out of conditions where faith becomes indispensable to our peace and sense of security. Men have difficulty in understanding creeds and systems, but there is something within them that calls for and demands the satisfaction of the deeper apirations and hopes of life. Our situation is somewhat like that of the boy who was flying his kite on a densely foggy day in a London street. The fog was one of those impenetrable yellow mists peculiar to London. Presently, a man passing along the street saw the boy holding the string of the kite and prompted by curiosity asked him: "What are you doing, my lad, holding that string?" Promptly the little fellow answered: "Don't you see, I'm flying my kite." "Flying your kite?" queried the man as he looked up through the fog, "I can't see any kite; how do you know the kite's up there lost in the mist?" to which the boy replied: "You can't see it, but I know it's flying, because I can feel it pulling on the string." The evidence to the boy of the kite's existence was that it was "pulling on the string."

It may be difficult for any one of us to give an adequate explanation of what our faith means to us, but we can with confidence affirm that there is something within us that responds and responds definitely to the appeal of the unseen. Job of old asked: "Canst thou by searching find out God? Canst thou find out the Almighty unto perfection?" A later prophet declared: "No man hath seen God at any time; the only begotten Son, which is in the bosom of the Father, he hath declared him." Another great seer affirmed that, "the things that are seen are temporal, but the things that are not seen are eternal."

The reality of the unseen we may not be able to prove and language may fail to adequately define it, but like the kite pulling on the string we have the realization that, "faith is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen."

CHRISTIANITY AS A RELIGION OF REDEMPTION

(Continued from page 7.)

gin not to say within yourselves, We have Abraham to our father: for I say unto you, That God is able of these stones to raise up children unto Abraham." The modern version would run, "Say not that you have Christ for your Master and are therefore redeemed, for God is able to raise up Christians outside of your narrow boundaries."

And yet precarious as is the position of the Church with its Master in these troublesome days, I believe it is our only hope. There is nowhere else a deeper and wiser social vision than is to be found among its prophets, few though they be. There is again being enacted the drama which began in the eighth century of Israel's history. Prophets are wrestling with a race for that race's redemption. Amos, Hosea, Isaiah and Jeremiah did not prevent the Exile. Jesus did not prevent the Great Rejection. Our issue remains as yet undecided. There are three predictions about its outcome. Always the great majority are complacent and sleep upon their Abraham claims. We are not without them today. Again there are those who would dogmatize by saying, "Men have always rejected God, they will now." The evidence is always on their side. But the honest realist has a third answer. God may not always have to win by raising up new races, His chosen people can be redeemed and they may be.

CHRISTIANITY is a religion of redemption, then, today as always. Redemption has always meant and it still means that we must break with the habit of the race and with our acquiescence in that habit; or, to use old words, we must be redeemed from both original (racial) and actual (personal) sin. Our redemption is not yet sure, for we are far from being either a redeemed Church or redeemed individuals. But our fate is not yet sealed and our repentance may purge our Church so that it becomes the New Creation that once it was, a fellowship in the strength of which we may overcome the world. There, it seems to me, lies our only hope of standing outside of ourselves. "Ye are bought with a price, be not ye servants of men." If we had not determined to pursue an utterly honest course, we might close with a message of hope. As it is we end on the note of potentiality. God's full powers and favors belong to the Mystical Body of His Son which is the blessed company of all faithful people. But those powers and favors are appropriated to us only by our acceptance of the obligation intrinsic to them. "Bring forth therefore fruits worthy of repentance." And then is our redemption sure.

The Macedonian Point of View

By

Mary F. Goodwin.

WE WONDER how far we church members are from appreciating the enthusiasm of recent converts in foreign lands?

It is hard for us to realize the change which is wrought in a man's life when he turns from the hopelessness of heathenism or the uncertainty of the more advanced religions of the East to the "certain religious and holy hope" of the Gospel of Christ.

It may be hard also for such converts to understand the attitude of indifference which many Christians take towards the spreading of a gospel of love and hope. If we could truly see ourselves as we must appear to these babes in the Faith, we would with shame take a lower seat and learn anew the meaning of the "Come ye—Go ye" of Christ.

A few years ago, when missionary apportionments were being cut so disastrously, a missionary bishop in Africa said he wished he could chain himself to a pillar in a public place in London and cry, "Why? Why? Why?" until the Church was compelled to answer in all honesty why he was not supplied with the means of carrying on the work of his Master. We doubt not but this is the feeling many a missionary has when he is obliged to return home to beg from an affluent church.

The following incident was told by the late Bishop Collins of Gibraltar. An old man, one of the few native Christians in a village in India, told a visiting missionary that he had composed a hymn which the congregation had learned and would sing for him the next morning. When he heard this hymn, he found it contained only the two words, "Go on, go on, go on," sung endlessly, and yet with enthusiasm. "Not a hymn suited to congregational singing," said the Bishop, "but yet the very secret of the Christian life."

Last summer, when it seemed probable that the work in Alaska would have to be closed, a missionary teacher inside the Circle told her people of this possibility. An old Indian said to her, "Tell them," meaning the authorities in New York, "Tell them that it would be better to close a church there, as they could go to another, but if this one is closed, we have nowhere to go." In his simplicity this seemed an easy solution of the problem.

Such incidents might be multiplied indefinitely. Had we the enthusiasm of the new convert, and the faith in our fellow-Christians which new converts feel, we, too, might become a Kagawa or a Stanley Jones. Had we the power to orientate ourselves so as to look at this matter of missions from the Macedonian point of view, there would be no occasion for the missionary to cry, "Why? Why?" from the market place, instead, the time would come swiftly when "no man need say to his neighbor, 'Know the Lord,' for all would know Him from the least even to the greatest."

* * *

THE WOMAN'S AUXILIARY

FOURTEEN DIOCESES REPRESENTED IN CONFERENCE.

Sixty officers and other leaders of the Woman's Auxiliary, from fourteen of the fifteen dioceses in New England, New York and New Jersey, came to New York for a conference with the national staff of the Auxiliary, March 12-14. The purpose was to discuss ways of making the program, which was outlined at the triennial convention of the Woman's Auxiliary, effective in diocese and parish during the next three years. The group included a number of recently appointed officers, young potential leaders in women's work. Practically the entire cost of the conference was borne by the dioceses. Plans are being considered for five similar regional meetings in other parts of the country.

With general agreement on the principles involved, the conference proved a good opportunity for exchanging advice on methods of work, asking help in special problems and sharing any ideas that have been worked out. Among the subjects emphasized were: The Necessity of Making a Program Locally, Developing It Out of the Particular Needs of the Parish or Diocese Concerned; The Necessity of Using Many Kinds of Program Material, some very simple, some more advanced, according to the ability of the women who are to use it; The Value of Adult Education in Modern Terms, not the mere reading of a book, but independent thinking, based on study, leading into constructive action. A somewhat discouraged report was quoted from a leader, who said her parish study class each year found the same women reiterating the same prejudices, while another leader told of a series of discussions which she felt had been worth while, because at the end one woman who had been cherishing a prejudice admitted she was not entitled to it.

Another idea emerging from the conference was that churchwomen should not only have a concern for social welfare, but should know how to secure social action wisely. The educational value of supply work and of the United Thank Offering was emphasized and also, especially, the need for definite teaching and practice of prayer for individuals and groups.

Frequent reference was made to the Woman's Auxiliary booklet called "Program Building", and to suggestions contained in the new mimeographed collection informally known as "The Rainbow" from its many-colored pages.

The Forward Movement, presented by Bishop Washburn, occupied the last session of the conference. A tea to meet any missionaries then in New York brought people from the Philippines, Liberia, China, Japan and Puerto Rico.

Among the Auxiliary officers attending were the presidents of most of the diocesan branches: Mrs. J. Ralph Jacoby, New York; Mrs. Henry D. Waller, Long Island; Mrs. C. E. Hutchinson, Newark; Mrs. Franklin Chambers, New Jersey; Miss Jennie Loomis, Connecticut; Mrs. Charles E. Binney, Rhode Island; Miss Eva D. Corey, Massachusetts, who is also a member of the National Council; Mrs. F. L. Everett, Western Massachusetts; Mrs. Henry D. Rodgers, Albany; Mrs. James H. Dyett, Western New York. Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont and Rochester were represented by other officers. Miss Mary Louise Pardee, of New Haven, a member of the national executive board, was present; also Mrs. Henry K. Sherrill, of Boston. Educational secretaries, U. T. O. treasurers and supply secretaries were all present in good numbers. Miss Grace Lindley presided.

BOOK REVIEWS

REV. STAMO S. SPATHEY, Editor.

A CHRISTIAN YEAR: by George P. Hedley. 1934. New York. The Macmillan Company. Pp. 254 with Index. Price, $2.

This book presents fifty-two meditations, some relating to the major Christian festivals and Saints' Days, some based on the Gospels and Epistles for various Sundays of the Church year, and some suggested by the observance of Mother's Day, Independence Day, Labor Lay, Armistice Day, Thanksgiving Day, and Hallowe'en. The writer, Dr. George P. Hedley, was born in China and was recorder and photographer of the Tell-en-Nasbeh expedition to Palestine, 1927-29. He has lived and taught in California and at the Hartford Seminary Foundation.

Many controversial questions are raised and outlined in this book from both fundamental and modern viewpoints, but Dr. Hedley shelves the distraction of argument and unfolds the inner meaning and spiritual values of the debated issues. He also has interesting and challenging things to say about war, infant welfare, prostitution and other current problems.

The book will be of value to the minister who is on the lookout for a handbook of preaching material, and to the thoughtful layman or laywoman who is wise enough to follow the observances of the Church calendar in his private devotional life.

Ivy Watkins Smith.

SOCIAL AND RELIGIOUS PROBLEMS OF YOUNG PEOPLE: By Sidney A. Weston and S. Ralph Harlow. New York. The Abingdon Press. Pp. 288. Price, $1.75.

This "handbook for group and individual use" calms the fears of one who picks up this kind of work for young people's groups, by its sanity and its close relation to actual fact. The authors are well-known for their contributions to discussion material for young people. Dr. Weston contributes the first half on social problems; Dr. Harlow the second half on religious problems. There are discussions in the first half on ethics, lies, loyalties, relationships, conventions, recreation, citizenship, war, and the racial question. In the second half are discussions on the meaning and source of religion, the problem of evil and suffering, prayer, the divinity of Christ, the place of the Bible, purpose, and death. All of them are dealt with in the consciousness of the modern difficulties caused by changes in thought and society.

The method of presentation is interesting in the extreme. The case problem study method is followed, giving an outline of the problem to be dealt with and the objective to be reached. Then a typical discussion from actual use is reported. Still more valuable is the addition of quotations from representative authorities on the subject and a list of further reading matter, selected with judgment and a breadth of outlook which makes it really useful. Every discussion is fruitful of ideas and suggestive of the best approach. The results are, as a rule, inconclusive and remind us of the difficulty always encountered in this sort of work—that most young people's groups are not equipped to discuss the problems and the leader must both keep a strong control and supply them continually with background material. This book emphasizes this need and goes part of the way in showing how it may be supplied. No leader of a discussion group of modern youth should be without this volume. The outlines and the bibliographies alone are worth the having.

Charles W. F. Smith.

WHAT IS THIS CHRISTIANITY? By the Rt. Rev. Edward S. Woods, Bishop of Croydon, London. 1935. New York. Harper and Brothers. Pp. 211. Price, $2.00.

This book has an interesting history. It was to have been written by Bishop Wood's brother, the late Theodore, Bishop of Winchester. The Bishop of Croydon has completed the task. The title-question is answered in seven chapters. This Christianity is an event, an experience, a fellowship, an adventure, a victory. And epilogue sums up the situation as it confronts the Church today and pleads for a closer application to what God wants done in order that we may derive more power from God.

The style is graceful and extremely readable. It is not a book calculated to answer the doubts of sophisticated young people, but it will clarify the thinking of Church people and those who seek the realities of the faith, and inspire them with the impressive force of our religion. From time to time we need to review the whole sweep of the Christian faith and here it is admirably done. It is likely to appeal to people of many different ways of thinking, because it stands solidly in the middle of the road and leans to no extremes. It represents what has been and still is the sane, wholesome atmosphere of the true Church of England and the genius of our own Church.

Here and there throughout the book are passages of great insight and acute analysis. The two chapters on the fellowship and the adventure are splendid for their clear view, and should appeal with readiness to young people. We may read this book and take heart.

Charles W. F. Smith.

* * *

WORTHY HIS HIRE. A Biblical play in one act. By Ralph P. Claggett. Art paper; pp. 32. Published by The Abingdon Press, New York City.

A neatly planned drama involving the times of our Lord and His own teachings. Its ethical value and the oriental configuration are to be commended. Given all the appointed accessories indicated in the production notes, it will stand well in the eyes of an appreciative audience. Our Lord does not appear, but the influence of His personality is seen and felt in the essential climax.

Kenneth MacKenzie.

* * *

THIRD SUNDAY IN LENT.

This collect is taken from the Sarum Missal, 1549, the words, "in Lent" were added in 1604. The collect for last Sunday deals with a recognition of our helplessness, and that for today prays for defence against all enemies, both spiritual and temporal. We pray that Almighty God will save us from our most forceful and dangerous enemies—the world, the flesh and the devil. If we take together the collect, the Epistle and the Gospel (Ephesians 5:1; St. Luke 11:14), we find the common idea to be that we are surrounded by so many powers of darkness, superhuman powers, so the assistance of Almighty God is invoked in order that we may not only combat these powers, but combat them effectually. Not only must we rely upon a supreme power, but we must also "watch and pray." At all times our prayer should be that we may be on the watch against the temptations which so easily beset us. Especially are we taught in the Gospel and warned of the necessity of decision in our Christian profession. Also we are warned of the dangers before us, unless the assaults are prepared for. In this connection it is well to refer to the Gospel for today, wherein we find Christ performing His works of love and kindness, and yet He was taunted by the people with the words, "He casteth out devils by Beelzibub, the chief of the devils." Is it not true that a similar spirit exists today? How often when good and kind deeds are done, ulterior motives are ascribed to the one responsible for the Christ-like spirit of helping others? Some evil spirit blinds from seeing the good. The spirits of evil are deadly enemies to the Christian life. Our life is influenced by the Spirit of God or by the powers of an evil spirit. Moses worked by the power of God; the Egyptian magicians by the power of magic; Jesus Christ by the Finger of God. What power controls your action and mine? One more thought comes before us, "The hearty desires." Prayer should mean the laying bare of our hearts before God, remembering that He is a discerner of hearts (Hebrews 4:12; Psalm 26:2). How can there be a real confidence between our God and ourselves, when we have some desire which we cannot place before Him? How important, then, is our prayer, "Look upon our desires." There are some desires which we can only ask Him to forgive; there are some which we ask Him to grant or withhold; there are others which we want to have strengthened because we know they are His as well as ours. Our chief desire should be to be imitators (Greek, mimetai) of Him.

William E. Callender.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S FELLOWSHIP SERVICE LEAGUE

The Reverend Randolph F. Blackford

NAAMAN.

Characters.

Lady Naaman.
Hebrew Maid.
Gehazi.
Servants.
Naaman.
King.
Elisha.
Soldiers.

Scene I.

Naaman's home, Lady Naaman seated on a bench or couch. The Little Hebrew maid fanning her.

L. N. (rising and pacing the floor): My Master! My Master! If I could only do something for him. How long can he keep up this brave front? It is only a question of time until he will have to leave us.

H. M.: My mistress. Oh, if only thy husband could go to the prophet in Israel he would heal him of his leprosy.

L. N.: I wish I could believe you. But it is impossible. (Seats herself.)

H. M.: Oh, but he has done far more wonderful things.

L. N.: Do you really believe he could help him?

H. M.: I know he could heal him.

L. N.: Tell me about some of the people he has healed. (The King and Naaman heard approaching.)

L. N.: Leave the room. (Maid leaves the room.) (Enter King and Naaman.)

K. (bowing): Greetings, my fair Lady. (Sits down.) Sit down, Naaman. How are you feeling ?

N.: Oh! I feel all right. If we have the success in the next campaign we had in this, we will have those provinces well in our control.

K.: Things have gone well with us. You had better take a rest.

N.: I have to watch that northern province. I am afraid of some trouble up there.

K.: Listen, are you doing all you can for yourself?

N.: There is nothing I can do. I am not very bad.

L. N.: O King, may I speak? He is in awful shape and I am so worried about him. But I have news, O King!

K.: Say on.

L. N.: Just before you came, my little Hebrew Maid said there was a prophet in her country who could cure Naaman of his leprosy.

N.: It could not be.

K.: Call the maid.

L. N. (calls): Miriam! (Comes in and bows.)

K.: Do you know someone who could help thy Master?

H. M.: O King! I know that if he went to the prophet that is in Samaris, he could heal him of his leprosy. He has healed so many. He has even brought the dead to life. Oh! do send him.

K.: You shall go at once.

N.: There is nothing to it. Why waste the time.

L. N.: O King! Do send him.

N.: There is not a bit of use.

K.: You shall go. I shall write a letter to the King of Israel.

L. N.: I will get you writing material. (Exit.)

K.: Who do you want to go with you? We must send gifts. What shall we send? You had better take ten talents of silver, six thousand pieces of gold and ten changes of raiment. I would give five times that to have you well.

N.: I would, too, but I have little hope.

(Lady Naaman brings in writing material and King writes.)

Curtain.

Scene II.

Before the King of Israel. As curtain rises the King of Israel is seated in the center of the stage, servants all about. A messenger brings letter from King of Syria. King reads scroll.

K. I.: Am I a god to kill and make alive that the King of Syria sends his greatest general to me that I may cure him of his leprosy? (He descends from his throne and begins pacing about and gets very dramatic.) He is a spy. They are doing this to pick a quarrel with me. I see through it. This means war. I see through it. Oh! What shall I do? We are in no shape to fight with Syria. (He may rave on as much and as long as desired.)

Elisha (enters with calm dignity, goes up to the King and lays his hand on his shoulder): Calm yourself. Why do you fret and rend your clothes? Send Naaman to me. (Leaves with the same dignity.)

Curtain.

Scene III.

Before Elisha's dwelling. Naaman with all his attendants and servants comes up to Elisha's door.

Gehazi (comes out and bows): My Master says, "Go and wash in the Jordan seven times and thy flesh shall come again to thee and thou shalt be clean. (Goes back inside.)

N. (Becomes very angry and storms about): The prophet never even came out to see me. I thought he would at least come out and call on the name of his God, and strike his hand over the place and heal me. Are not the rivers of Damascus better than this old muddy Jordan. I can wash in them and be clean. (He raves on.)

A Servant (goes up to Naaman): My friend, don't be angry, if the prophet had bid thee to do some great thing, would thou not have done it? Why don't you try this easy thing. Wash and be clean. You have come so far. Do try what he says. (Returns still talking.)

Curtain.

Scene IV.

Same as Scene III. Naaman and his train come in as before. Elisha comes out to speak to him. Naaman is all humility and gratitude.

N. (dropping on his knee): Behold! Now I know that there is no God in all the earth, but in Israel. Now, therefore, I pray thee, take a blessing of thy servant.

E.: As the Lord liveth, before whom I stand, I will receive none.

N.: I beg of you to take something.

E. (shaking his head): No.

N.: Take just the gold. May I ask a great favor of you? Henceforth, I will worship no god but the God of Israel. So, if it is not asking too much, may I have two bags of dirt, so I may have some of the land of the God of Israel on which to worship and offer sacrifice and burnt offerings.

E.: Gehazi, take the young men and help them get the dirt.

N.: O thou man of God, I must ask one other thing.

E.: Ask on.

N.: Will the Lord your God pardon thy servant, because when the King goes to the temple of Rimmon to worship he leans on my arm, and when the King bows down in the house of Rimmon, I must bow down, too. Will the God of Israel pardon me?

E.: He will pardon you. Go in peace. (Goes inside. Others exit as they entered. When they near the exit Gehazi runs to catch them. Naaman sees him coming and turns back to meet him.)

N.: Is all well?

G.: All is well. My master has sent me to tell you that two men, sons of the prophet, have come from Mt. Ephraim. Would you give them talent of silver and two changes of garments?

N.: Be content; take two. I am glad to help. (Fixes two bundles, calls to servants.) Carry these back to the prophet. (All leave as seems best.) (Gehazi takes his bundles very stealthily.)

Scene V.

In Elisha's dwelling, Gehazi comes in.

E.: Where have you been?

G.: I went nowhere, Master.

E.: Didn't my heart follow you when you ran after Naaman and asked for gifts? Is this a time to ask for gold and silver and garments? The leprosy, therefore, of Naaman shall cleave unto thee and unto thy seed for ever.

(The room should be slowly darkened. Gehazi puts powder on hands and face, then comes out center with spotlight turned on him. He is looking at hands, terrible agony shown in his face and actions.)

It would be well to read the Bible story and add where you think best. The costumes are of Bible times.

This was written by a group of young people from St. Peter's League, St. Petersburg, Florida, assisted by their counselor, Miss Tulane.

Young People's Fellowship and Young People's Service League each has a meaning that we must not forget, For many years in a certain mission the young people of our Church had no provision made for them outside of Sunday school. Then a diocesan organization was formed for Young People. Some of them in the Mission heard of it and attended a meeting of the new organization. All pepped up, they returned to spread the good word. It was the Fellowship that did it. Then the idea of Service was stressed. Where locally the zeal fell down, outside help from neighboring Leagues came in and the Church benefited in the entire five fields of service.

Programs were a bother in the diocese, so that a kind of Library of Programs was arranged with each League contributing its "Prize Programs," and an award being given each year for the best at the Camp. This has been a great help.

The Mission has grown into a Parish. The Parish League is a part of the Diocesan League and is inspired by its contacts, standards and prayers. So the Parish is enriched by the League's fourfold ideal of Worship, Service, Fellowship and Study. This, we believe, to be the normal story of a League's life, and is told as a suggestion for places where there is no League. Many more spectacular stories can be told in these columns if people knowing them will send them in. So let's have them.

The Editor.

CHURCH INTELLIGENCE

ONE DEPARTMENT OF WORK AT 281.

Here are the numbers of orders filled by the Church Missions House Book Store during the last week before Lent, and also the Shipping Room figures for the last three days when the Lenten Offering boxes were being shipped. The figures refer to distinct separate orders. As the Shipping Room handles all the Book Store orders as well as other shipments, the total, 2,725, represents the number of separate packages sent out by the Shipping Room in the week.

	Book Store Orders.	Orders for Lenten Offering Boxes.
Monday	125	800
Tuesday	154	761
Wednesday . .	229	92
Thursday	207
Friday	250
Saturday . . .	107

Mr. H. L. Dederer is head of the Shipping Room.

* * *

SOCIETY FOR THE CHURCH'S WORK WITH STUDENTS.

In January of this year, at the invitation of the Rev. Howard C. Robbins and the Rev. W. Brooke Stabler, a meeting was held in New York to found a society for the promotion of college work. Its name is the Society for the Church's Work with Students. The purpose of the Society is "to establish a fund for the purpose of promoting knowledge and acceptance of Christ's religion and in other ways to strengthen the work of the Protestant Episcopal Church in college and university centers." The Society has no organized connection with the National Council except that its secretary is also its National Council's Secretary for College Work. The officers of the Society are the Rev. W. Brooke Stabler, president; Rev. C. Leslie Glenn, vice-president; Dr. Thomas S. Gates, president of the University of Pennsylvania, treasurer; Rev. Theodore O. Wedel, secretary. The National Council at its recent meeting commended the purpose of the new Society.

* * *

THANKSGIVING SERVICE, FIFTIETH ANNIVERSARY OF THE DAUGHTERS OF THE KING.

Fifty years ago the Order of the Daughters of the King was founded from a Bible Class having that name, at the Church of the Holy Sepulchre, now the Church of the Resurrection, New York City.

The Order has but two rules—Prayer and Service—and Bible Study is the cornerstone of the Order. The first National Council meeting of the Order was held at St. Bartholomew's Church, New York City in 1891, and it has steadily grown until there are now approximately six thousand Daughters, seniors and juniors. All Chapters are planning to observe the fiftieth anniversary by holding a Thanksgiving Service, either as diocesan, convocational or Chapter organizations. The Daughters in the Dioceses of New York and Long Island have planned to join together for a service of Corporate Communion and sermon by Bishop Larned, and for an evening thanksgiving service. with Bishop Washburn as the preacher, on April 4, which fifty years ago was Easter Even, at the Church of the Resurrection, New York City. In the afternoon of the same day a Conference Tea will be held at Trinity Chapel, which the National Council of the Order will attend during the sessions of their spring meeting.

Ada Loaring-Clark.

* * *

Alaska.

Out of the Arctic wastes around Tigara (Point Hope), Alaska, comes word from Archdeacon Goodman that there have been plenty of whales this winter, which means oil, light, heat and some of their food, to our Eskimo Church people.

They are so keen to go to church that if there is a howling wind and the cold many degrees below zero, they walk backward, and when that becomes impossible they get down and crawl on all fours, the better part of a mile to the church.

This is Archdeacon Goodman's tenth year at Tigara.

* * *

The Under Thirty Movement.

A new movement in the Diocese of London has been working into form in the past two or three years, and now emerges as the "Under Thirty Movement". It is composed of young lay members of the Church of England, who believe it is their duty to play their special part in the life and work of the Church.

The main object of the Movement is to stimulate the interest of their own generation in the activities of the Church.

The chief means of doing this is to form a group of young people in every parish with some, or all, of the following objectives:

To study Christianity and to learn how to pass on its message.

To learn how to live and enjoy a true Christian life.

To apply Christianity to all the activities of life.

To bring real neighborliness into the forefront of their lives.

To encourage interest in church government, and to serve on the various councils when called upon to do so.

To do some definite work for the parish.

To look up young people who have lapsed from churchgoing since their confirmation, and bring them back into church life.

To sponsor confirmation candidates.

To find means of keeping young people in the Church after the Sunday School leaving age.

If all these are already being done in the parish, to supply helpers to other parishes who are in most need of this kind of assistance.

The secretary of the movement is Miss S. Beresford-Peirse, 49 Lancaster Gate, W. 2, London.

VIRGINIA.

Rt. Rev. H. St. G. Tucker, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. Frederick D. Goodwin, D. D., Coadjutor.

The Annual Service of The Huguenot Evangelical Society.

The inspirational Sunday service of the Huguenot Evangelical Society of Richmond was held March 3 in the Second Presbyterian Church, Richmond. The pastor of the church, the Rev. Wm. C. Hill, presided. He is also president of the Society, and made an appeal for our work before introducing the preacher of the evening, the Rev. B. D. Tucker, D. D., rector of St. Paul's Church.

Dr. Tucker, after calling attention to the first recorded incident of converts sending help back to a mother church—the Christians at Antioch who took up collections for the church at Jerusalem—spoke of the fitting work of the Society in maintaining a pastor in France, the home of the emigrant Huguenots who came to Virginia over two centuries ago. The salary of the Rev. Mr. Dunant is paid by this Society. He has a large field around Maubeuge, where he ministers not only to his own congregation, but also seeks out all Protestants who may be in that section of the country.

Before the end of the service Dr. Hill read a report from Mr. Dunant in which he thanked the Society for their interest in his work and gave them some account of his activities. His church has classes of instruction in the church for adults, the results of which have been additions to his members. They also have many gatherings of a more social nature, meetings for mothers, "conversations" for the young people, where moral questions are discussed; this work is bearing fruit of a gratifying kind. There are also Bible study groups in which much interest has been shown. In acknowledging the receipt of the contribution from Richmond, the treasurer from Paris wrote: "We are very thankful for your check for the work at Maubeuge. Please give to your members the assurance of our great gratitude. The difficulties through which all countries are passing has made people think, and this has brought good results in evangelistic work."

The Huguenot Evangelical Society is interdenominational and membership is not confined to descendants of Huguenots, or to residents of this city or state. Any help which can be rendered through this Society for the Protestant work in France will be gratefully received and forwarded to the proper authorities. General membership fees are $1 a year, in addition there are Sustaining Memberships of $5 or $10. The salary of Mr. Dunant, which we provide, is $520 a year.

The treasurer of the Society, Mrs. J. B. Halyburton, 1628 Park Avenue, Richmond, Va., will be glad to give any further information pertaining to this work which may be desired.

Revised Plans for Conducting the Challenge for 1935.

Owing to a variety of circumstances, "The Challenge for 1935" campaign, which was to have been conducted throughout the diocese March 24-31, has been postponed until after Easter. It will probably be held about the middle of May, according to an announcement made by the Rev. Lewis Carter Harrison, rector of Emmanuel, Brook Hill, diocesan chairman of the undertaking.

According to the revised plans, not only has the date of the campaign been changed, but its scope has been enlarged. Instead of coming before the men and women of the church with an appeal for $20,000, the asking will be for $25,000. Of this amount, $6,500 will be used to off-set the deficit in the budget of the St. Paul Normal and Industrial School for Negroes at Lawrenceville, the original object of the campaign; $13,000 will go to wipe out the deficit in the budget for mountain missions, and the remainder is to be spent for enterprises within the diocese, for which other arrangements had been made.

Both Bishops and a number of clergy decided that it would be far more practical to conduct one campaign to raise sufficient funds for all the needs of the diocese, instead of making other appeals. Under the prevailing plan, there will be no Whit Sunday offering, except in certain isolated sections of the diocese to which the campaign project would not penetrate. Certain tentative arrangements had been made to secure money for small diocesan requirements, but now these will not be carried out.

Meantime, Mr. Harrison is planning the details of the campaign, which has assumed such proportions that a large and closely organized force will be needed to put it into proper operation. Committees are being formed in the cities and larger towns of the diocese with clergy and laymen working closely together.

An office is being maintained in the library of the Mayo Memorial Church House, where clerks are receiving names from the various parishes, and sorting and tabulating them, so that everything may be ready to start at the appointed time. The Rev. Robert W. Patton, D. D., Director of the American Church Institute for Negroes, of which the Lawrenceville School is the oldest and largest unit, will be in the diocese through the spring months. He will confer with committee chairmen at various points, and will make a number of addresses, in order that the people may know more of the actual work of the school, and what it is doing toward bringing about a better relationship between the races.

Vera Palmer, Publicity.

NEW YORK.

Rt. Rev. Wm. T. Manning, D. D., Bishop
Rt. Rev. A. S. Lloyd, D. D., Suffragan
Rt. Rev. Chas. K. Gilbert, D. D., Suffragan

The Goal for the Program of the Church.

The Report on "Expectancies" for 1935, now issued by the National Council, shows that the Diocese of New York is the only one among the larger dioceses which has held its Goal for 1935 up to the full amount of the Objective, which its Bishop and Clerical and Lay Deputies accepted tentatively during the meeting of the General Convention at Atlantic City.

After consultation with their committees at home all the other dioceses which accepted large Objectives, have felt it necessary to reduce the amounts which they accepted at the Convention. In the Diocese of New York, however, the Committees, after careful consideration and discussion, voted unanimously to sustain the action of the Bishop and the other representatives at Atlantic City and to accept as the Goal for 1935 the full $200,000, which was tentatively accepted at the General Convention. This action was endorsed by a mass meeting of clergy and laity of the diocese held in Synod Hall on December 10.

The Bishop has issued a statement expressing his own great satisfaction, and that of all concerned at this action, with a reminder that the achievement of the Goal which has been accepted will demand the sincere, faithful and unremitting interest and effort of the clergy and laity in every parish and mission of the diocese.

Harrison Rockwell.

Librarian From Oxford University Visitor to Seminary.

Rev. Humphrey Beevor, librarian of Pusey House, Oxford University, conducted the annual Lenten quiet day meditation at the General Theological Seminary on Wednesday, March 13. Mr. Beevor, who is a visiting lecturer this year at the Berkeley Divinity School, spoke to the General Seminary student body in the Chapel of the Good Shepherd at both afternoon and evening sessions.

The Very Rev. Hughell E. W. Fosbroke, dean of the seminary, began the series of Monday evening Lenten sermons on Monday, March 11. The Rt. Rev. Thomas Campbell Darst, Bishop of East Carolina, was the Monday evening Lenten preacher on March 18.

General Theological Seminary students have formed a number of Lenten meditation groups to meet weekly during the season. Every student in the Seminary is a member of one of these groups, the average enrollment of which is six members. Each student in turn prepares and conducts the group's weekly meditation. The Rev. Theodore P. Ferris, a tutor, is supervisor of the meditation groups.

Dr. Silver's Bequests to the Seminary.

The General Theological Seminary is beneficiary under the will of the late Rev. Dr. H. Percy Silver, rector of the Church of the Incarnation, New York, Rear Admiral Reginald Rowan Belknap (U. S. N., retired), Treasurer of the Seminary, has announced.

Dr. Silver's library of more than 1,500 volumes has been left to the Seminary library, while the institution will also share in the estate, according to the will. Dr. Silver, a graduate of the Seminary in the class of 1894, and a trustee for more than evelen years, died last December.

The Rev. Dr. Marshall B. Stewart, professor of Dogmatic Theology, was the Lenten chapel preacher last Monday.

* * *

CHICAGO.

Rt. Rev. George Craig Stewart, D. D., Bishop.

Order of Pencemen.

One hundred years to the day of the founding of the Diocese of Illinois, March 9, a new organization came into being. It is the Order of Pencemen of the Diocese of Chicago, devoted to the cause of the Bishop's Pence.

The organization meeting, held Saturday afternoon, March 9, at the Dental and Medical Arts Building, Chicago, was attended by 125 clergy and laity from all parts of the Diocese. The purpose of the new order is to promote the Bishop's Pence idea generally. All pencemen and their assistants, numbering about 500 in the Diocese, are eligible for membership.

Mr. C. S. Watkins, of St. Bartholomew's Church, was elected president. Other officers are: First vice-president, B. R. Williams, Park Ridge; vice-presidents, Layman Sandine, T. R. Ellis, Wilbur Attridge, George W. Lloyd and Mrs. C. M. Black; secretary, Mrs. George Hitch; treasurer, Robert Holmes.

Bishop Stewart addressed the meeting on the importance and accomplishments of the Bishop's Pence in the Diocese. Approximately $37,000 has been raised for diocesan and parochial work through it.

Laymen Hold Meetings.

An unique project, which provides for laymen's meetings in all sections of the city, embracing every parish and mission, has been undertaken by the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, in cooperation with other laymen's organizations of the Diocese of Chicago. The meetings started March 17, with zone sessions at the Church of the Holy Spirit, Lake Forest; St. Elisabeth's, Glencoe; St. Luke's, pro-cathedral, Evanston; St. Mary's, Park Ridge; Grace Church, Oak Park; St. Ann's Church, Chicago; St. Mark's Church, Church of Redeemer, St. Margaret's Church and All Saint's, Roseland.

A team of three laymen and one priest address each meeting. Topics discussed are: What Is a Layman? The Church From the Viewpoint of the Layman; The Centennial of the Church in Illinois; The Forward Movement, and the Possibilities of Laymen's Organizations.

On March 24 another group of parishes will be visited. Directing the program, which is patterned after a caravan through the southern deanery recently, are Paul Bruyere, president of the Brotherhood; Archdeacon W. H. Ziegler and George Kubitz, secretary of the Brotherhood.

Historic Gathering: The Centennial Fund Incorporated.

With nearly one hundred clergy and laity of the diocese in attendance, the Centennial Fund, Inc., of the Diocese of Chicago was formally organized on March 6. The meeting was held at the Union League Club on Call of Bishop Stewart. All of those present were invited to sign the incorporation papers and fifteen trustees were elected to operate the new corporation.

At a meeting of the trustees immediately following the general session, Mr. John D. Allen, of Glencoe, was elected president of the corporation; Mr. Alan C. Dixon, of St. James' Church, vice-president; Mr. Wirt Wright, St. Luke's Pro-Cathedral, executive vice-president; Mr. Ernest Reckitt, secretary. Mr. Fred A. Cuscaden, of Trinity Church, Highland Park, is expected to serve as treasurer.

Bishop Stewart termed the gathering an historic one, since it marked the inauguration of a movement, which will direct the observance of the Centennial of the Diocese and which is expected to clear the major portion of the diocesan debt. The Bishop is ex-officio a member of the executive committee of five which will actively direct the fund.

